Our readers must have been gratified to read from time to time of the encouraging results of the mission that is being conducted in Ireland by Rev. John McNeill. A friend in Dublin, who is connected with the Moody-McNeill Mission for Ireland, writes that at the present time there is difficulty in raising funds to carry on the work. Many who sympathise with Ireland in her spiritual need will doubtless be glad to lend a helping hand now. The Dublin branch of the mission has its office in the Christian Union Buildings.

The Pastors' College Conference opened on Tuesday morning, when the lecture hall was crowded. Friends generally will be glad to hear that on the motion of Pastor T. W. Medhurst, seconded by Pastor Archibald G. Brown, Dr. James A. Spurgeon was re-elected president for the ensuing year. We are thankful that a question on which some had feared that dissension might arise, has thus been happily and amicably settled.

The discovery by Mrs. Lewis and her sister, Mrs. Gibson, in the convent at Mount Sinai (where Tischendorf discovered the whole of the New Testament in Greek in 1844 and 1859, of a Syriac text of the four Gospels) will aid scholars still further in their work. Particulars must be waited for; comparisons will then be made by many minds; and gradually a consensus of opinion will allocate the latest recension to its due place amongst the ever-growing treasures which illustrate the greatest and most precious book in the world. The wisest of all the teachers whom God gave to the Pilgrim Fathers, John Robinson, reminded them that "God had yet more light and truth to break forth from his Word;" we may add, "Yes, and more light and truth about his Word." The broad solid facts of history, found in stone, on brick, on papyrus, on the coffins of the dead, in MSS., which ignorant fanaticism has guarded for centuries, shall be made to serve as illustrations of the truth of Scripture.

The discovery of this Syriac document hardly comes as a surprise, because the East has of late years furnished us with so many literary treasures, but it certainly awakens keen interest and satisfaction. In the early years of our era two versions of the Scriptures held positions of authority, one belonging to the East, the Peshito, or "simple" Syriac, the other belonging to the West, the Old Latin. The Peshito was received in the fourth century by all the sects of the Syrian Church, just as the denominations in England have uniformly followed the Authorised Version. Dr. Westcott says that there is "no sufficient reason to desert the opinion which has obtained the sanction of the most competent scholars, that its formation is to be fixed within the first half of the second century. The very obscurity which hangs over its origin is a proof of its venerable age."

The Peshito is the same collection of sacred books as our Bible, except that it wants the second and third Epistles of John, the second of Peter, the Epistle of Jude, and the Apocalypse. Ancient as it is, there is good reason to believe that we have some remains of the Gospel more ancient still. In 1858 Dr. Cureton published the "Remains of a very Antient Syriac Recension of the Four Gospels in Syriac, hitherto unknown in Europe." These Gospels are arranged Matthew, Mark, John, Luke, and many parts are wanting. It is thought that the author or authors of the Peshito consulted it. "Probably it was a local version made for private rather than public use; perhaps in Palestine."

We draw the particular attention of our readers to Mr. Josephine Butler's pathetic and powerful letter to be found on page 23. We have seen a statement of facts, published privately, descriptive of the state of matters in our Indian cantonments with relation to the provision deliberately made by the army authorities for the unutterable degradation of native women in ministering to the worst vices of a pampered soldiery. We do not wonder at Mrs. Butler's indignation at the contempt shown by the Indian army authorities towards the resolution passed by the House of Commons. If the Christian sentiment of the country will rise to the occasion, and express itself in proper terms, we doubt not these horrible "regulations" will be short-lived.

The Indian census of 1891 appears to have brought to light a very remarkable fact. According to Mr. H. Morse Stephens, who writes in India:—

> Even more striking than the increase of the population in British India is the enormous increase in Native States. During the period between 1881 and 1891 the population of feudatory India has increased by 15½ per cent., or almost four times the increase made between 1872 and 1891. Part of this apparent increase may be due to more thorough enumeration in 1891. But this cannot account for the whole of the increase. It seems as if the better government of the native Princes of to-day is attracting inhabitants from the British districts. If this increase continues, and economic reasons cannot be alleged, it seems from these figures that native rule is becoming more congenial to the people of India than British rule. It is too early to generalise on this subject.

Perhaps so, but it has long been contended by some Englishmen whose patriotism does not consist in praising and backing their country whether right or wrong, that, whatever benefits we have brought to India, and they are many, the natives suffer exactions they cannot endure, and are under a system which is repulsive for its cast-iron hardness. We shall now hear a good deal more on the subject. Will the Government tell us whether our conduct in the matters of the opium, of liquor, and of vice, has anything to do with native preference for native rule? It will be a strange comment on our Christian profession if the very heathen flee from the plague of our rule.

We are delighted to gather from the pages of The Philanthropist (New York), that the friends of social purity in America are full of activity and vigour. They keep a sharp eye on all bills proposed either for municipal or state government, in order to see whether any clause contains powers to work a system of legalised sin; they have aided in preventing the passage of several bad measures. They have just had a share in putting down an infamous bill, which has long been pending in the Missouri Legislature. "In the Tennessee Legislature, a question of absorbing interest in the present session has been 'age of consent' legislation." It has been standing at ten years of age! After a prolonged and earnest discussion a bill has finally passed the House by a vote of sixty-six to twenty-nine, fixing the age at sixteen years and one day, but the fate of the measure in the Senate is not known yet. "The general tendency of the discussion was indicative of progress in the direction of a higher moral standard." We hope so. Fancy a number of men needing to discuss such a subject at all! Why did they not settle it in five minutes?

Should any of our readers attend the Chicago Exhibition, let us advise them to reserve June 2 to 4, or parts of those days, to attend the World's Congress on Social Purity, where papers will be read and addresses given on subjects of far greater importance than the latest discovery. "The Double Standard of Morality," "Social Vice and National Decay," "The Unity of the Moral Law," these and similar subjects will be handled by well qualified men and women. It will be an opportunity for those who are fighting one of the hardest battles of our age to shake hands and to know each other, so that henceforth they may have a deeper and warmer sympathy with each other. Let us also add that we are grateful to the friends at Chicago for warning young girls and their parents and guardians against alluring advertisements and other devices to draw recruits into the army of sin. English people will do well to be on other guard, for the wretches who do this devilish work will compass sea and land for a beautiful victim.

The illustrious Roman Catholic gathering which met at the table of the Lord Mayor of London marked, no doubt, a kind of social triumph for the Roman Church; but we do not think it will make her power stronger, or further her designs among us. Englishmen never did quietly tolerate Papal arrogance, and they will not submit to it now. To place a portrait of the Pope behind the Lord Mayor's chair above the sword and mace, and to give the first toast "The Holy Father and the Queen," will not predispose the average Englishman in favour of Rome; it will either amuse or nettle him; it will neither awe nor win him. It may lead a great many ordinary Christian folk, who believe that the Kingdom of God cometh not with observation, to inquire why all sorts and conditions of professing Christians seem so anxious to go to the Mansion House, which is sacred to great dinners? If they have work to do, or counsel to take, why not meet on their own premises? The disciples met in an upper room in Jerusalem, and from that place went forth a company on whose heads were cloven tongues like as of fire.

No sooner had the Lord Mayor and his guests drunk to "The Holy Father and the Queen" than the secular press began to jibe. The man at Rome had the greatest portion of the speech and the most honours attributed to him, but English common sense could not accept the absurd flattery of the Pope when he was described as "seated on Roman heights, in the incense-laden atmosphere, as the great husbandman, who kept a watchful eye on every portion of his flock, and raised his voice to lead them in all emergencies, and sent forth as he had done to them a careful shepherd to carry out his wishes. To him they owed their princely guest"—Cardinal Vaughan. This bombastic nonsense only makes men say that Leo has his eye continually on the tiny temporal sovereignty, which he longs for as a child for a toy, and that his dear flock is quite a secondary consideration. This witness is true. If the plottings of the Vatican were revealed, they would show that political power as an earthly sovereign is the great object sought.

INDIA'S WOMEN.—The April issue of Regions Beyond contains some very readable excerpts from the diary of Miss E. E. Fooks, who recently settled at Sundur, near Bellary, to work under the auspices of the London Missionary Society. She writes:—"In the native town we saw a Brahmin widow draped from head to foot in scarlet (their distinctive costume), leaning sorrowfully against the door of a house, looking out into the world with such sad, despairing eyes. She was young, and had a sweet and striking face, but stamped with the seal of an irrevocable grief. It was a most pathetic sight,—the busy streets, the chattering, interested people, the hum of life all round, but standing alone, forlorn, untouched by anything in life except its pain, unreached by any of its joys and interests, the mute, motionless, closely draped figure, with eyes of unheeding sorrow, watching the solemn sky from which the sunset light had fled. It was hard to leave her to her grief and loneliness without a word of sympathy or comfort, but alas! unavoidable. Oh to know the language, to be able to reach such love-forsaken lives! They lead incredibly wretched lives, these crushed, despised, most miserable beings."

Letters to Dorothy.—1.

Dear Dorothy,—

You remember when we lived in Paris among artists in the Latin Quarter (one sigh for the dear gay life when I thought I was so happy!) what devotion to their art those students showed—some of them half the time hungry, as we suspected, but for ever happy. Every moment not spent at the easel or in an art gallery was given to art-reading. Who could have thought that I would ever find another group of students to remind me of them—as devoted to their calling, as full of enthusiasms, and that the one Book we neglected for the art books should be the only one they study?

By the way, there's ever so much in this very Book for art lovers. Only last week I began a course of reading on the four Holy Houses of which God was the architect—the Ark, the Tabernacle, and the two Temples. With this as a nucleus there is no lack of parallel reading. It's surprising to find how much has been written by men who discovered long ago the value of the Bible as an art book. They all agree that the loveliness of the Temple must for ever be the despair of earthly architects.

I begin to believe there's something for everybody in this wonderful Book. Of course the artist mind was not forgotten.

You know how I grieved when called out of the art life. My aim, Sister Dorothy, is to try to make real to you what I was afterwards called into; and don't you say anything until in my roundabout way I've told the whole of it.

I've thought a great deal about things lately. Did it ever occur to you, Dorothy dear, how little time we used to give to thinking? What made those art students so happy?

They were developing a part of their nature—training the mind and eye to the perception of form and colour, and the hand into obedience to the mind and eye, in the hope of one day being able to create the beautiful.

Here we do for the spiritual nature what we then did for the æsthetic.

To make it very simple, Dorothy dear, I'm giving to my soul what I used to give my æsthetic faculties—food and work, and letting it grow.

First, about the food. Of course everybody asks, "Don't you get tired of studying the one Book?"

It must be the divineness of it; but one does not tire. What other book could be read continually without weariness?

Indeed, all I found in all the books, when at one time the intellectual nature called for nutriment, and I read fiercely in a reference library, I found again, or the root of it, in this one Book.

"Of making many books there is no end;" but the Maker of this Book put all in one. Of reading many I for the time have made an end. Oh, the simplicity of it—the one Book, and all in it!

My little shrivelled soul expands. It had hungered long for its own food. I wonder why our girls, who wish to be symmetrically educated, and take college courses to develop the brain, training in Delsarte for the physical and perhaps special lessons to strengthen some native talent, should plan so little for the systematic education of the soul-powers.

We study the Book, too, from such different points of view that monotony is impossible.

God bless Dr. Gray, of Boston, and his synthetic method! It was he who told us to read Genesis at one sitting, then re-read it two or three times, if possible, before meeting him.

In the lecture-room he drew from us a crisp word-analysis, which fastened the chain of ideas in mind; then elaborated it somewhat, adding general suggestions and a mention of striking texts, types, or lessons.

Next day Exodus, and so on, nearly through the Old Testament in three weeks—rapid yet thorough work. So we gathered up the outline facts—sure foothold for all to follow. It is wonderful what mere continuous and repeated reading reveals. With each reading a book shines out the clearer, as if from a dissolving cloud-mist, until it stands a bold outline in memory. The relation of book to book grows plainer, and the Bible as a unit, is ours in a new way.

Can't you hear our old art-master say, "Don't niggle!" It's good advice for a Bible student, too. Learn to see broadly first, details afterward.

Of course, after such "telescopic" work, Professor Weidner, with his "microscopic" study of Genesis, is delightful.

On that little diamond, the Third Epistle of John, we're glad to spend hour after hour of patient, loving study, to dive again and again into the fathomless depths of the Epistle to the Ephesians, or with Professor White, of Xenia, make an exhaustive study of Jeremiah, each student taking a chapter and giving a report upon it.

Sometimes, with the guidance of different teachers, we track one thought of doctrine throughout the Bible.

I have a whole book of Bible readings, with a memory of some character (for as we study the Word we study our teachers too) fastened to each.

In all study our one guide is the Holy Spirit. Acquaintance with the Author of the Book, who alone can interpret its heavenly language, is shown us to be an absolute necessity.

Mrs. Capron tells us: "Never take the Word of God into your hands, dear children, without asking the Spirit's aid. Then you have only to put a portion of its truth into your hearts as trustingly and unconsciously as you would take a piece of bread for your body's need. The Holy Spirit will see that it is assimilated and nourishes the soul. How often He has proven it by flashing upon us in an hour of need the meaning of some word which at the time of reading was but faintly understood."

How different, after all, people know and teach the Bible! You remember that guide who showed us through the Antwerp Cathedral? He knew all about it, didn't he? He rattled off its history and pointed out all the beauties.

Dorothy, that's the way some people know the Bible; but I would rather join those students who are taught to feel what they know, as the sensitive visitors to the cathedral feel what the guide never divines, and are pointed constantly to the Great Architect of the cathedral, who can explain it to the heart.

But in all this variety of study, so satisfying to intellect and soul, the desire is born and grows to know something about the Bible because we must tell others.

I will tell you by-and-by about that other half of our life, when we meet the friendless poor or the "poor rich," not "rich toward God," and try to help.

SOLDIERS IN FERMOY.

Miss Williamson, who in 1890 was led to open a Soldiers' Home at Fermoy, and whose work among the redcoats has been much blessed, had her attention called last year to the opportunities for Gospel work presented by the gun practice carried on at Glenbegh, co. Kerry, a wild desolate region well adapted for artillery practice, but affording no facilities for moral or spiritual improvement. Here each battery in Ireland spends annually and in succession about ten days, and hence it is a point d'avantage for Gospel work.

Mr. George F. Trench writes: "Miss Alice Williamson, who founded and takes permanent charge of the Soldiers' Home at Fermoy, gave herself entirely, during the two months of the camp establishment, to the Glenbegh work, and was helped in a marked manner, both in regard to finding a suitable vacant farm house in which, with some alterations, to start the Home, and in having earnest helpers raised up to preach to the men. The results have been most blessed, and many souls have, we believe, been turned to the Lord; while letters from the men bear witness most encouragingly to the lasting fruit of true conversion to God in their trying barrack life.

"We are now preparing for this year's camp. It has been suggested that if a wooden building were put up to contain the necessary accommodation for the work and the workers, a great saving of expense would be effected, for thus both the rent of the home and that of the workers' lodging would be saved; and as the latter could not be found nearer than two miles from the camp, the hire of a pony and cart will also be saved. The building, it is estimated by Mr. Price, a Christian civil engineer at Glenbegh, could be erected for about £130, and will contain reading room, bar, meeting room, kitchen, and three or four small bedrooms." Address, Miss A. P. Williamson, The Soldiers' Home, Fermoy.

The Present Position.

Beneath the bitter antagonism which now divides political parties, there is at least one common desire—the well-being and contentment of Ireland. In all controversies the bitterness would be ameliorated if each party tried to look at the question from the other's point of view, as well as from his own. If in the present case a joint committee had been appointed, representing the various interests involved, in order to define to what extent they agreed, and to what extent they differed, the position would be very different from what it is. It is an evil thing that the interests of parties should dominate the interests of the country.

Such a committee would have defined the very ambiguous and misleading term "Home Rule," which means Separation, or Independence, or Local Government, according to the wish which is father to the thought. That the present Bill, in its present form, cannot become law, is, we presume, the conviction of all parties. Is it impossible that when it goes into committee, the discussion on all sides should be ruled by a supreme regard for the permanent interests of the nation; for our children and our children's children; rather than for the temporary interests of the ins or outs. The Home Secretary on Friday night said: "The truth was that one of his right honourable friends was ready to do in 1886 what another right honourable member, to his credit, was ready to do to-day, and which all the opposite side would be perfectly prepared to do to-morrow, as soon as the exigencies of party permitted." But in so saying he equally condemned his own party; for certainly neither party is less affected with partisanship than the other. A keen old American politician was asked by an Englishman on the eve of a Presidential election, what was the difference between Republicans and Democrats? The American replied, "One is in and the other out." How can there be righteous government under such circumstances? "He that ruleth among men must be just, ruling in the fear of GOD."

The greatest calamity that ever befel Christendom was the Paganising of Christianity, with Roman Popery as the result. The chief peril of Anglo-Saxondom to-day is the aggression, at once stealthy and blatant, of this lamb-like, dragon-like wild beast; but neither party in the State, nor Royalty itself, can be regarded as trustworthy in defence of the Protestant Constitution.

In this particular respect we have little confidence in the late Premier, still less in the present one. Mr. Gladstone is in many ways a typical Englishman, of whom we are all, more or less, proud. We owe to him much enlightened and advanced legislation. We are also indebted to him for his often able advocacy of Scripture truth. He is, however, not only versatile but variable. In 1875 he seemed suddenly to wake up with horror to the inherent paganism of the Romish Apostasy. Yet he has always been advancing on Ritualising and Romanising lines, with one remarkable exception. And though for a moment his eyes were opened he has never taken one important step to justify the writing of the tracts on Vaticanism, but he has steadily and incessantly wrought in the interests of Rome.

One of the false issues pressed in the Irish controversy is the assumed equality in evil of Protestant and Roman ascendancy. It is asserted that Protestant ascendancy has long been paramount in Ireland, and that Romish ascendancy is now to have its turn. But the two things are as unequal as oxen and wolves. Tyranny is the nature of Romanism, liberty is the nature of Protestantism. The one enslaves and degrades, the other emancipates and elevates. Travellers and historians have often dwelt upon the contrast between the Roman Catholic and the Protestant portions of European countries under the same Government. Persecution there has been, and there is, among Protestants, in contravention of their principles; but Romanism exists to persecute. The Inquisition at Rome, the Quemadero at Madrid, the fires of Smithfield, are no less her boast than her shame.

Protestant ascendancy is the open secret of Britain's foremost place among the nations. The ascendancy to which Rome is creeping and leaping amongst us is, we believe, a sure sign of England's decadence, and of the judgment of God for her sins against China and India and herself.

We entirely disbelieve the statement that the Irish people hate the English, unless it be those who are stirred up by priestly and other agitators. Nor is it the Irish priesthood that is to be feared so much as the conclave of Jesuit intriguers who manipulate the wires at Rome, and their agents all over Europe and in our midst, in pulpits and in families. Under their direction it is very likely that not only open-air preaching would be forbidden, but that the preaching of the Gospel would be interfered with in every direction.

There is, however, another side even to this. Latimer at the stake encouraged his fellow-sufferer with, "Be of good comfort, brother Ridley, and play the man; we shall this day light such a candle by God's grace, in England, as I trust never shall be put out." What would Latimer think if he could revisit his beloved England now? He would find, perhaps, fewer professed Roman Catholics and more professed Protestants than in his day, but he would perceive that the Protestantism is honey combed with Romanism, that it is as thin as an eggshell, and as dead as the moon. And he would say, "Brother Ridley, a few more candles must be lighted at the Roman stake, for that which we lighted is going out."

We deeply sympathise with the Protestant Churches in Ireland, and with the individual Christians scattered here and there,

> "Fair as a star when only one
> Is shining in the sky."

Let them stand fast IN THE LORD. Property and commerce and life itself are not the Kingdom of God. "The blood of the martyrs is the seed of the Church." The Gospel does not flourish most when there is most liberty to preach it. And as for civil war, whoever else may talk of it, to those who follow the Lamb the Holy Ghost would say, "Let it not once be named among you, as becometh saints."

There is still One whom the opened eye of Faith sees sitting on the throne. It still sees the Lion in the Lamb as it had been slain. Might lies in weakness. "He was crucified in weakness, but He liveth by the power of God." The seven Spirits are still before the throne. He that hath the seven Spirits holdeth also the seven stars in his right hand. The seven Spirits are seven lamps of fire burning before the throne. In the midst of the throne and of the four living beings, and in the midst of the elders, still stands the Lamb having seven horns of power and seven eyes which run to and fro—the seven Spirits of God sent forth into all the earth to show Himself strong on behalf of all who trust in Him.

BISHOP TUCKER IN UGANDA.

The following letter from Bishop Tucker has been received by Rev. H. E. Fox:—

Mengo, Buganda,
December 28, 1892.

Just a line to tell you of our safe arrival here on the 23rd after a wonderful journey. No accident; no sickness. God's blessing has rested upon us from beginning to end. Christmas Day was an ever memorable day. I preached in the new church to a congregation numbering over 5000 souls. The King was there, and all the great chiefs of the country. God be thanked for the wonders of his grace.

The remains of Bishop Hannington will be buried in the chancel of the new church on Saturday. The King will be present, and the native Christians. Once more I say, thank God for his wonderful working. The fourteen loads of books that I brought up country with me will be sold to-morrow. They will go like a puff of wind. There are 8000 copies of the Scriptures in Buganda. The people are full of joy; they are nearly beside themselves with delight. I expect many thousands more books in a few weeks by the other road. The stream must be kept up. The country, I feel sure, is safe. It cannot be abandoned. Uganda seems to me to be the hope of Africa. To abandon it to anarchy and bloodshed would be more than a blunder—it would be a crime.

RESTORATION.

One Sabbath eve, in the bygone years,
A mother bent o'er her kneeling child,
The dimpled hands folded, the blue eyes raised,
As she lisped, "Dentle Desus, meet and mild."

Only two years had the darling seen,
Only two lines of the hymn could she say,
But the mother knew that the chirping voice
Through the joyous anthems of heaven found way.

With loving caresses, with tender touch,
The white-robed treasure was laid in bed;
"Now a kiss for papa in his Indian home,
And one for me, darling," the mother said.

The kisses were given, the blue eyes closed,
And then with a smile they were opened anew,
Low-whispered words thrilled the listener's heart,
"Me will div oo a tiss for Desus too."

Marvel not that, amazed, she shrank
In conscious guilt and unworthiness;
Then with a sob of deep, wondering awe,
Kneeling, she suffered that holy kiss.

She, a sinner, He knew how great,
Had been kissed by those innocent lips for Him.
In self-abasement, in reverent joy,
Long time she knelt in that chamber dim.

She prayed that her child, in the coming days
Might ever to faith and love be true,
Might yield up her heart and her will to God,
And render Him service glad and true.

. . . . . .

Mother and daughter, for twelve long years,
Walked in faith's paradise, side by side,
Holding sweet converse of things unseen,
Striving to follow the Crucified.

Then came bright visions of worldly joy,
Dazzling the young and the eager eyes,
False voices promising gold and fame
Lured her to seek for their offered prize.

In spite of a mother's prayers and tears,
In spite of a warning voice within,
As years passed onward, the maiden's feet
Strayed far in the paths of falsehood and sin.

. . . . . .

The seed has been sown, and the harvest reaped;
The golden head has been bowed in shame.
Together once more, at the sacred feast,
They plead the power of the Holy Name.

Though the mother weeps o'er her vanished hopes,
As she thinks of her darling's childhood sweet;
Yet she knows, whatever befall them here,
They shall kneel together to kiss his feet.

THE LATE MR. C. M. SAWELL.—The funeral of this active L.C.M. leader took place on Friday at Hanwell Cemetery. A service was held in Allen-street Chapel, which was attended by over 400 City missionaries, as well as many mourning friends. Rev. T. C. Udall gave an address, sketching Mr. Sawell's long and laborious career, and indicating how greatly he would be missed in the London City Mission.

Christ and Circumstances.

NOTES OF AN ADDRESS

BY REV. H. C. G. MOULE.*

The same day at evening, being the first of the week, when the doors were shut where the disciples were assembled for fear of the Jews, came Jesus and stood in the midst, and saith unto them, Peace be unto you (John xx. 19)

I could not read to you a more familiar passage than this; and it is one which at this blessed season, when multitudes of Christians have been commemorating the risen Saviour, specially stands before us in very particular ways. We seem as if we had been there. It is as if we had ourselves been admitted to examine the upper room; to realise in some faint degree what the room looked like and what the sounds in the room sounded like, when that evening, on a sudden, the blessed Lord stood in the midst. But I shall not make any feeble attempt at painting with words this afternoon. We do not assemble here for a picture, but for the Lord; and so, in the barest and simplest way, I remind you of the wonderful fact that after that day of so many tears and joys, so many alarms and unbounded discoveries of blessing, most of the scattered disciples were gathered together in that upper room. There they were. They had been having a meal; some of the food was still on the table. They were talking one to another, when on a sudden there was a hush; the Lord was there!

How He got into the room we do not know; and we never shall know until He tells us Himself. But that is not very important. The important thing was to know that He was there. He came and stood in the midst, though the doors were shut, and shut for fear of the Jews. And it was just then that He said unto them, "Peace," and showed them his hands and his side; and gave them a boundless joy, and gave them the Holy Spirit, at least in pledge and promise; and gave them such a wonderful work to do for Him—to go, all of them, the Church, the whole company, and be to the world his messengers for the remission of sins.

There is much that might be said upon every detail of the narrative; and, therefore, in our brief solemn time to-day, I speak of one point only, making no attempt to gather up the fragments of glorious blessing that remain. Jesus came when the doors were shut where the disciples were assembled for fear of the Jews, stood in the midst, and said, "Peace be unto you." His first word to the collected company of the disciples after the resurrection was "Peace." They had so recently forsaken Him, and fled—all the leaders in that room anyhow had forsaken Him. Yet to them He comes, and without a reproach—except, as Luke intimates, a loving reproach that they had not sooner believed his victory and his return—about their forsaking and denying Him, He came and showed them his hands and his side, and spoke "Peace" and gave joy.

If I may do so for once, I would this afternoon take this mighty miracle as a precious parable. The doors were shut, and it was when the doors were shut, and, in this instance, in spite of the doors being shut, that the Lord Jesus Christ came. There are times when we may say that He comes because the doors are shut. He bids us go into our chamber and shut our door, not to shut Him out, but to shut Him in. Do not let us forget that in the midst of Christian life and work; especially I would say to all dear honoured friends here who are very specially and markedly engaged in active work for the Lord Jesus Christ, do not forget the word of the Master to enter into your chamber and shut your door and speak to Him who is with you there. Let us remember that not even gatherings like these, not even gatherings in the house of God itself, or round the table of the Lord, can do the work which is to be done by the shut door of the disciples in their chamber. In such cases it is rather because the doors are shut that the Lord Jesus Christ comes, when his follower humbly claims the promise of the Holy Spirit. But you see in this case it was in spite of the doors being shut that the dear Lord Jesus came. The doors had not been shut for any pious purpose; it was for fear of the Jews—a very prosaic and unsentimental reason. For all they knew, there was the city up in arms, so to speak, all around them; a very fanatical population ready to spill their blood. So, evidently they thought, but in the providence of God the fear seems to have been without foundation. When Caiaphas and his friends had got rid of the Lord Jesus, as they thought, they really seem to have thought little about his band of followers. And, if the Lord Jesus Christ is out of the question, the world thinks very little of his followers still. The rulers do not seem to have troubled much about Peter and John, and would hardly have taken pains, as far as we can gather, to burst into the upper room and disturb their helpless meeting. But the disciples were evidently feeling that they were in great physical danger, in the midst of such a multitude as a Passover population in Jerusalem. So they shut themselves in and shut their enemies out. They imprisoned themselves.

It was all, as it happened, in the line of God's will. It was evidently not our Lord's will that till after Pentecost they should go out and tell the world of his precious Name. But the reason why they were there was not any deep-seated regard for the Lord's will; it was for fear of the Jews. They were shut in, so to speak, by circumstance, and then it was that the Lord Jesus Christ came. And they had a wonderful time. Into the midst of that imprisonment and surroundings there came the Lord. And without any elaborately drawn-out reasons for it, the evangelist leaves us to see that, of course, there was peace for them, and joy for them, and there was the courage of hope for them; and they would then wait God's appointed time to go and tell the world of Him.

Do we not see in this scene a parable and a lesson of many a possible condition of the believer's life? How many a life, which does indeed desire to give itself to the Lord, may well be compared to those disciples when the doors were shut round them by hostile circumstances. We will not press the parable into every detail, but here we have a picture of life hemmed in by unfavourable, unfriendly, and it may be greatly dreaded circumstance. And the precious incident of Easter evening tells us that it is the delight of the Lord Jesus Christ to despise such doors; to make light of such bars and locks; to come and stand in the midst at precisely such a time; to show Himself; to show the finished work of which his hands and side were symbolical; and to pour forth the power of the Holy Ghost with the breath of his promise.

In what sense may we say that the doors are shut for us? Do your circumstances seem to be just an imprisonment around you? It may be that you seem to be imprisoned by broken health. You cannot do what you did. Your animal spirits seem to run low; the limbs refuse to do their old work. It may be it is some disease, from which you shall be so divinely healed hereafter, that is upon you; or it may be that old age, from which in God's time you will be delivered, and filled with eternal youth, has shut the doors around you. These things are absolutely nothing to your Saviour. It is his delight to treat them as though they were not there. Will you by faith welcome Him into the imprisoned chamber of sickness, or of age, or other circumstance that seems to shut you in?

There rises up at this moment before me the thought of an earnest Christian friend, young in age, but singularly shut in by circumstance from going out in any active way in the service of the Lord Jesus Christ. It is a typical sort of life—a life lived in a family where means once much more abundant became almost nothing; in which the whole duty seems to be, morning, noon, and night, helping in the house; and that house in a little country town, like many another such town that seems as if everything were half asleep; with absolutely nothing in the natural surroundings to help a life into vigour of purpose and to spiritual power and fulness. And that life, though it may not precisely describe any life here, is typical of a great many in which it is so intensely easy and tempting for a Christian, younger or older, to say, "I am simply hemmed in; I cannot do this or be that; it is as if I were reduced to almost nothing of opportunity for serving the Lord Jesus Christ." Dear friends, such doors can be despised by the incoming Lord. He can stand in the midst of a life so shadowed, so devoid, apparently, of interest and of opportunity, so hemmed in, not fanciedly or self-willedly, but really, by unsympathetic surroundings. He can come into that life in his living power, and stand in the midst of it. And be the room ever so narrow, the windows ever so small, and the walls ever so dingy, the Lord Jesus Christ's presence can make the darkness light, and turn the imprisonment of circumstances into a palace with Him.

In the life of that blessed saint of God, Madame Guyon, who was literally shut up at last in the Bastille, there is a striking passage in which she speaks of having learned the deep secret, with all her intense wish to work for God, of that higher happiness of being willing for God's will, when in a most tremendously literal sense He bade her be shut up. "The stones of my prison," she said, "seem to be rubies, when I realise the will of God and the presence of the Lord." There is many a Christian to whom their surroundings almost seem to be as a prison wall. Then cometh Jesus to his servant who knows Him to be the risen Saviour. The disciples that evening could not call Him that, because most of them did not know it. But we do; we can call Him in; we can appeal to Him to treat the doors as if they were air; and He will respond in the midst of the hampered, troubled, burdened, and it may be bitterly disappointed life, and will make all things new by showing his hands and his side; and saying, "Peace," and breathing the Spirit's power.

One further lesson I will point you to from this passage, connected with what we have been thinking of. It is the Divine simplicity of the secret of the soul's liberty, peace and power. Let us thank God for everything that we clearly and definitely know of the doctrines of Christ. It has been one of the great efforts of my life, such as it has been, to try and make any whom I can influence remember the importance of doctrinal truth. Let us thank God if we have got a clear view of the atoning sacrifice. Let us thank God for a clear, sharp, definitely drawn view of justification by faith; so that we know what it means; that it is no mere phrase, but a thing that we recognise even when it comes dressed in different words; knowing it by its face and not by its clothes. Let us thank God if we know something definitely of what the Bible says about our union with our Head; of the promise of his dwelling in the heart by faith; and of the blessed theory of victory and liberty through faith. Let us thank God for the truths which specially gather us together, on occasions like this; and let us pray for definiteness and distinctness in our grasp of these truths. But, dear friends, what are all these things? They are just so many lines of light, pointing us to Him who is the radiating Centre of them all.

There are times when the Christian's greatest need is to reaffirm a doctrinal truth to himself or herself. There are times when the Christian's greatest need is to take all that for granted, and to grasp the living hand of the Lord Jesus Christ. It is always the time for that, whether it be the time for the other or not. What this passage seems to say, as with the voice of the Lord Himself, is "It is He." Do we want peace? Do we want joy? Do we want the Holy Ghost? Do we want power to step through what seem fast-shut doors into the path of following the Master? Then it must be Jesus in the midst; the Jesus of the Bible, with all the precious creed built upon it; but the living Jesus that we continually have to do with, telling Him, touching Him, employing Him, looking into his face with the inarticulate prayer, "Lord, this work is for Thee: I am thine evermore."

Sure I am that a hundred perplexities of the life of faith are cleared away when, if I may dare to say so, we put life and faith behind the living Object of the living faith. Faith is very seldom strengthened by studying faith. The way to strengthen it is to study and to use the Lord Jesus Christ. You do not feel confident that you are on a firm rock by studying the laws of gravitation, but by taking a fresh look at the immensity of the rock, or by feeling it beneath your feet. And so, in the things that make up the Christian life, day by day, if we are perplexed in our theory of faith, the sure way to the recovery and simplicity of it is, "Jesus in the midst." When the disciples saw Him their fears were gone; as one of them tells us, "Then were the disciples glad when they saw the Lord." They were going to do a great deal for Him another day, and say a great many wonderful things about Him under his own inspiring guidance. There was one there going to write the Epistles of Peter, and another going to write the Epistles of John. Thanks be to God for it, there was the author of Matthew's Gospel there; and some think the author of Acts and of Luke was there also. But what made them happy then? It was just that He in whom all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge, as well as of power and life, are laid up, was there in the middle. They saw Him, and their eyes were rested and filled, seeing Him. And it is when we see the Lord Jesus Christ by faith, taking that Word, and using "for the next thing" Him of whom it speaks, that the doors and the walls of circumstance seem ever to melt away; or to turn into a glass through which we see the wonderful prospect outside the gates of the city, in the distance; and meantime, better than the gates of the city, the Lord of the city with us.

So I close our little time of meditation together by gathering up these two golden treasures which seem to me this Easter time to have been afresh disclosed from this sweet verse. First, that the Lord Jesus Christ not only can, but delights to, make light of circumstances of discouragement and difficulty in the case of his servant, in coming to manifest Himself in spite of them all. Do not some of us present here know what it is to make most delightful discoveries of the Lord Jesus Christ when we were at the lowest turn? It is his wonderful divine generosity. If I am speaking to anyone who feels spiritually depressed this afternoon, may I not dare to say that it is when the evening shadows have fallen, and the doors are shut, and it seems as if a hostile population of difficulties were around you, that Jesus Christ is just outside, and surely will be inside to meet the longing of your heart, despite the doors. He will not stop to open them, but will be at your side.

Then our last thought will be this—that Divine simplicity into which is gathered up all that we know about Him in our deepest, fullest, and most thorough creed of spiritual life—our union with Christ, the indwelling of Christ, the impartation of the power and peace of Christ: all that is embodied, for instance, in that wonderful hymn so dear to some of us, "Jesus, thy life is mine"—all that is for us to use by the humble touch of faith. It is He; it is He. And our life by thefaith of the Son of God is just summed up in this—the life which uses the Son of God in every direction, step by step, in the patient path of his present will.

JEWISH EVANGELICAL MISSION.

The report for last year of the Jewish Evangelical Mission under the superintendence of Rev. Aaron Matthews, of Newcastle-on-Tyne, shows good and varied operations. In an occasional letter Mr. Matthews says:—

"We hardly allow ourselves to dwell upon the dark side of the Jewish mind, and the obstacles it presents to our progress. But we cannot avoid altogether the raising of the veil, so as to permit our Christian friends to see for a moment the weight of opposition we have to contend with. The divinity of our Lord Jesus forms the stumbling-block which prevents the passage of the Jew over to the conviction which forms the basis of the true Christian faith.

"Many of the claims which we make are freely conceded, but this one proves too much for them, as it does also for many who are not Jews, and who would fain be Christians without admitting the truth in question. Therefore, when a young man turns his attention towards the doctrine which we preach, if he is still under the guardianship of his parents, he has a most fearful ordeal to go through. Similar trouble arises more or less in all cases, for there are few who are absolutely free from control on the part of their friends, in regard to their beliefs.

"To the Jew, whose soul is wrapped up in the hope of posterity, and perhaps more especially to Jewish mothers, the loss by the departure of a son from his own religious community to another is a heart-rending sorrow, and one which it is impossible not to regard as entitled to a certain honourable sympathy. Such a case occurred not long ago in our mission. We have had to bear the bitter reproaches and to witness the extreme distress of parents who felt as if we were guiltily robbing them of their dearest possession. And this was not in private, but openly and before all who were present in the Mission House at the time."

Communications to Mr. Matthews should be addressed to 63, Fern-avenue, Newcastle-on-Tyne.

EVANGELISING IN JAPAN.

The work of the Presbyterian missionaries in the island of Shikoku has been one of the most remarkable and successful of all the efforts made for the evangelising of Japan. It was fortunate in the beginning in having the active sympathy and support of men of national reputation and influence. Some of these have become leaders in religious matters, as they have likewise been in political life. With their advice and hearty co-operation a special effort has recently been inaugurated for the extension of the Gospel in that part of the field.

Rev. Dr. Verbeck was invited to open the campaign by a series of meetings lasting for five weeks. He began these services at Kochi, on the night of the 13th November, and went through the whole programme that had been prepared for him without a single break. With the exception of one day (which was required for travel only) he preached twice on Sunday and once on all other days during the whole time. The most of the meetings were held at night, and the days were occupied in travel. Much of the journeying was done on foot, and often up and down steep mountain paths or through the soft sand of the sea-shore. Some of the places he only saw by moonlight, as he reached there just in time for the evening service, and left at the close for the next place to be visited. Some of these journeys were not completed until after midnight.

The meetings were invariably attended by deeply interested hearers, and when time allowed, inquiry meetings were held, showing real earnestness on the part of both old and young. The audiences differed greatly in size and composition; and the places of gathering included not only churches and preaching places, but private houses, hotels, club-rooms, and even theatres.

In some of the places visited the influence of Buddhism is very strong, but at Kochi neither Buddhism nor Confucianism is prosperous. The minds of the people were, therefore, unoccupied, and ready to receive religious teachings. So great was the interest in and influence of these meetings, that counter efforts were made to draw the people away and prevent their being turned from their old and false systems to embrace the new and foreign doctrines. At one place a Shinto lecturer held forth at one end of the town while Dr. Verbeck was preaching at the other. It is reported that the Shintoist ranted like a crazy man, and in the midst of his discourse tore some leaves from a copy of the Japanese Bible which he had brought for the purpose and then stamped upon them.

During the services at the town of Kochi the Saviour was burnt in effigy as a method of expressing hatred and contempt for the Christian religion. This is an indication how much Christianity is feared, and how futile are the means employed to check its progress. It is said, however, that the best and most sensible of the people have no sympathy with such demonstrations, and in not a few instances such foolish conduct has led persons to inquire seriously into the truth of Christianity, and eventually to their conversion.

The result of these meetings was a conviction in the mind of Dr. Verbeck that whatever may be the condition of the people in other parts of Japan, the island of Shikoku is ripe for the harvest. Since his return to Tokyo a most pressing invitation has been received to return and conduct another series of evangelistic services similar to the first. It is to be regretted that the educational work in which he is engaged does not permit his absence. It is to be hoped that by other means and with other labourers the good work may be pushed forward.

In a recent copy of the Japan Mail is a synopsis of an article by the Rev. Mr. Tsunashima on "The Evangelisation of Japan." The article says: "There is a remarkable display of confidence throughout the Christian Press as to the future of their faith in this country. The comparative insignificance of the results of Christian propagandism so far are not concealed by any of the writers; the imperfections of church organisation, and of the lives of professed believers, are frankly acknowledged; the formidable character of the obstacles to Christian progress are freely admitted; but these notwithstanding, there seems to be no discouragement or faltering."

Mr. Tsunashima declares that Japanese Christians lack independence, are poor, and do not labour for their faith as they should; that there are many intellectual differences among them; that they are more like scattered groups of weak soldiers than like an army. But he believes, for all that, that there is no fear justified concerning the issue. As Japanese society advances he sees all the more a place in it for Christian influences. The social problems of this people can find solution only through religion. The Christianisation of Japan, however, must include more than the salvation of the souls. To save this nation really social and political interests should be brought under religious guidance.

In an article by the president of the Doshisha, Rev. Mr. Kozaki, on "New Japan and Christianity," the author begins by quoting Franklin's saying at the founding of the American Republic: "Unless the country is established by the aid of God, it will be like a bubble." Nations founded by force, and for force, fail. The Christian civilisation of the world has never failed, and is steadily progressive. The revolution that inaugurated the present Government in Japan astonished the world, but with that revolution religious and moral power decreased, and in large part became impotent here. Religion is the conscience of the nation. Japan has not yet undergone its true revolution.

The great work of establishing the new Japan lies still in the future. A noble ideal for the nation is necessary. Like the Puritans we must aim to establish an ideal kingdom. Although in one sense old, as a member of the fraternity of nations, Japan is young. The finest parts of Western civilisation are at our command. Here, too, is an opportunity to establish the Kingdom of Christ. The Christians of the land are as yet few in number, but the few best are always the soul of society. In old times the samurai (the scholars and soldiers) were the gold of the realm. Let the 40,000 Christians but dedicate themselves to the welfare of the country, in politics, business, and social life, in all its relations, and the true new Japan will be founded.

Among the Buddhist writers the tone of the articles is generally very different. They are mostly "hopeless, combative, and complaining." The contributors to the Bukkyo Koron take matters very seriously, and see but little light for anything anywhere. The annual retrospect is like a look into a ravine whose gloom is dense, and whose dangers are horrible to remember. A Mr. Suzuki writes thus:—"The light of morality is gone, the nation's spirit is corrupt. All are conspiring to ruin the country. The national destruction has already begun. Cannot Diogenes find one man?"

One Buddhist writer, Mr. Nakanishi, exalts Christ as the world's great moral teacher. "It is," he says, "the glory of mankind that Jesus lived. Much that Christ taught will never decay. Sometimes the wonder arises, Did Christ's teaching come from man or from above man? Every word, every phrase, of Christ's should influence us. In the four Gospels the noblest and wisest morality of the world appears. So simple is it, so easily understood and applied. 'Love God and love man,' as central principles, suffice to regenerate society and lead man to heaven. Christ's character and teachings stand forever."

With such views of Christ and his teachings, how short is the step to true and complete discipleship!

NAVAL WORK.

Dear Sir,—We are expecting a visit from a French fleet of fourteen ships to this harbour in the beginning of May, and would much enjoy fellowship with many Christians who may be on board. We should be very grateful if any of your readers could furnish us with the names, rank, and ship of any believers in this fleet.

The British Channel Fleet has been here for about a month, and the Christian men on board have encouraged the Spanish believers here. On Sunday afternoons, when leave was granted, we had most bright and happy united meetings of English and Spaniards, everything that was spoken in one language being translated into the other. It is helpful to the believers here to meet others who, though situated differently, have many trials and difficulties.

We are glad to see any Christians passing through this place that we may have mutual encouragement.

Yours truly,

George Mackinlay.

Apocalyptic Scenes.

XIV.

THE SIXTH SEAL.

Thus far the key of history has unlocked the successive doors of the chambers of prophecy. One by one we have seen them open to its touch. The prominent characteristics of the days of the Roman Empire—the fourth wild beast of Daniel—have been depicted for us by contemporaneous historians, and then by the involuntary, nay, the unwilling, hand of the infidel narrator of its Decline and Fall. The correspondence has been marvellous. And as each lock yielded in its turn, the presumption that the master-key was in our hand was fortified by the weight of cumulative evidence. If one apparent coincidence, or a few, had been discovered here and there, this might have been ascribed to accident or fancy. But when, in due and exact order, the events selected as most important by the secular historian have corresponded, one after another, to those prefigured as salient by the pen of prophecy, the weight of evidence has increased in geometrical ratio. Epoch after epoch, described by symbols, has passed before the seer's gaze. The periods of triumphant prosperity, of civil war, of fiscal oppression, of famine and plague, connected with the fourth great world-empire, and then that known as the Era of Martyrs, have each in their turn been described by the most appropriate symbols.

And now the sixth seal is opened; and a scene of the most appalling convulsion of the powers of nature is witnessed. The symbolic heaven stretched over the earth is darkened; the sun is eclipsed, the moon becomes blood red, stars fall on every side, mountains are moved, and islands are engulphed by a mighty earthquake; armies led by kings are seen fleeing, all classes are overwhelmed with terror,—a terror produced by the conviction that the catastrophe which has overtaken them is the consequence of the action of the Crucified One, that "the wrath of the Lamb" has fallen.

All, or almost all, these expressions are symbolic, not literal. That "the Lamb" is a symbol needs no argument; that the stars falling to the earth cannot possibly be understood literally is equally evident. The first question is therefore, What is the meaning of these symbols?

The answer is not far to seek. The Scriptures themselves supply it.

The heaven, the sun, moon, and stars denote the ruling powers. "The heavens do rule" (Da. iv. 26). The sun and moon "rule" (Gen. i. 16). With the stars they represent the heads of a people or race (Gen. xxxvii. 9, 10), rulers spiritual or temporal (Is. xiv. 12, 13; "the King of Babylon," v. 4; Dan. viii. 10, 24, and Rev. i. 20 and ix. 1). "The star" and "the sceptre" prefigure the coming King (Nu. xxiv. 17).

Their extinction or fall are repeatedly used to describe the overthrow and ruin of a nation or polity, the downfall of "the powers that be." I ask careful attention to the following passages, where every symbol employed in the sixth seal is used to describe some great national convulsion or catastrophe:—

The shaking of the heavens, the quaking of the earth, the darkening of sun and moon, the falling of stars, set forth the overthrow of Chaldean rule in Babylon by the Medes, called "the day of the Lord," (Is. xiii. 1, 6, 9, 10, 13, 17, 19); see also ch. v. 25, 30, and the destruction of Edom, in ch. xxxiv. 4. The darkening of the sky, the eclipsing of sun, moon and stars, the terror of kings and peoples, represent the conquest of Pharaoh, king of Egypt, by "the sword of the king of Babylon," (Ez. xxxii., 2, 7, 8, 10, 11). The desolation of the earth, the obscuration of the heavens, the oscillation of mountains and hills, prefigure the approaching ruin of the Jewish polity, as seen in vision by Jeremiah (ch. iv., 20, 28). And many of the same symbols are used elsewhere to depict the same event. "Her sun is gone down, while it was yet day" (Jer. xv. 9), "the earth shall quake, the heavens shall tremble, the sun and moon shall be dark, and the stars shall withdraw their shining," describe "the day of the Lord" coming upon Judah and Jerusalem (Joel ii. 1, 10, 11). "The sun" is "to go down at noon" and "the earth" is to be "darkened in the clear day" (Amos viii. 9), "a day of wrath, a day of darkness and gloominess, a day of clouds and thick darkness," the "day of the Lord." (Zeph. i. 14, 15, 18).

The agonising cries of those upon whom these judgments were to fall are almost word for word the same as those uttered by the fleeing hosts of the sixth seal. Refuge is in vain sought in the "clefts of the rocks" and "the caves of the earth" in that "day of the Lord," which Isaiah predicted as shortly to come upon Jerusalem and Judah (ch. ii. 19, 21; iii. 1, 8); and Israel in Samaria, when her desolation came upon her, was to "say to the mountains, Cover us, and to the hills, Fall on us" (Hosea x. 5, 7, 8, 14), words which our Lord told the daughters of Jerusalem would be used by them and by their children in the rapidly approaching days of their national destruction by the Romans. "Then shall they begin to say to the mountains, Fall on us, and to the hills, Cover us" (Luke xxiii. 28-30).

The foregoing passages are quoted at some length—and other instances of nearly similar language may be found here and there in the prophets—because it has been so commonly held that the portents of the sixth seal are so tremendous, so appalling, that they can possibly prefigure nothing less than that which is generally called "the day of judgment." In every one of these passages the identical symbols of the sixth seal have been used to denote, as I have said, some great national convulsion, the complete overturning of an existing order of things. It is therefore evident that the symbols and language employed there do not of themselves compel their application to "the day of judgment."

The place of the sixth seal in the prophecy, moreover, forbids such application. On the assumption that the scenes witnessed under the first five seals have been rightly interpreted as exhibiting the events occurring in the commencing three centuries of the Christian era, the application of the sixth to the final "day of judgment" would require that a gap of at least sixteen hundred years (possibly more) should intervene between the fifth and sixth; and, further, would introduce the prefiguration of that day at what is almost the beginning of the prophecy. Anything more dislocatory of the beautiful order of the most orderly-arranged book of the Bible, or more calculated to confuse the minds of its students, I cannot conceive.

We are, then, I believe, constrained, first by the explanation of the symbols given in other parts of the Scriptures, and next by its place in the book, to interpret the sixth seal as denoting some political revolution of surpassing magnitude, such a subversion of institutions, and fall of governing powers as would induce in the minds of all classes, from kings on their thrones to slaves in their servitude, universal dismay, and the overwhelming conviction that the agency which had wrought the catastrophe was none other than that of the Crucified One, the Judge and Ruler of all.

The question then is, Was there any event of such transcendent importance, occurring soon after the period exhibited under the fifth seal, as could, with any propriety, be described in symbolic language of the kind employed?

Undoubtedly there was such an event, one of such supreme magnitude that it is almost impossible to overrate its importance. It changed the whole face of affairs over the wide extent of the Roman earth; it affected to an extent hardly to be estimated the course of the world for every successive generation down to this day. A revolution took place, described as "one of the most memorable and astonishing facts of history," and referred to by Dr. Adam Clarke as constituting, together with the final destruction of Jerusalem, the two "greatest events that have ever taken place in the world." What was it? It was an event referred to in terms almost borrowed from the Apocalypse by Gibbon, when he says, "The ruin of the Pagan religion is described by the sophists as a dreadful and amazing prodigy, which covered the earth with darkness and restored the ancient dominion of chaos and of night."

This revolution in the Roman Empire occurred almost immediately after the era of the Diocletian martyrdoms. The conversion of the Emperor Constantine (whether real or not), the adoption by him of the Cross as his ensign, the rout of army after army, emperor after emperor—no less than four being vanquished, Maximian, Maxentius, Maximin, and Licinius—are among the best known facts of history. Of the last-mentioned monarch Gibbon says: "Licinius felt and dreaded the power of the consecrated banner, the sight of which, in the distress of battle, animated the soldiers of Constantine with invincible enthusiasm, and scattered terror and dismay through the ranks of the adverse legions." Galerius, on his deathbed, asked the prayers of the Christians in a public proclamation, and Maximin, in his last agony, called on Christ for mercy.

"Thus," writes Elliott, "in the political heavens had the sun of pagan supremacy been darkened, the moon become eclipsed and blood-red, and of the stars not a few shaken violently to the ground. As Constantine advanced in life he issued edicts for the suppression of pagan sacrifices, the destruction of their temples, and the toleration of no other form of public worship but the Christian. His successors followed by attaching penalties of the severest character to the public profession of paganism. And the result was that before the century had ended its stars had all fallen to the ground; its very heaven, as a political and religious system, vanished, and on the earth the old pagan institutions, laws, rites, and worship had been all but annihilated."

To some it may perhaps seem that the symbols and language of the sixth seal are too tremendous to permit of their being applied to such an event. But it should be remembered that it is very difficult for those living fifteen or sixteen centuries later to appreciate the importance of events occurring so long ago. It may possibly aid such to try and imagine what a similar event would mean in the present day. Imagine, for instance, a parallel occurrence in England; not only the national Church disestablished and disendowed, but every form of Christianity proscribed and penalized, every place of worship turned into a heathen temple,—the religion which had prevailed for fifteen hundred years, and had permeated and influenced the whole social fabric and life of the nation from the cradle to the grave, abolished—and replaced by Mahomedanism! How would men speak of such a politico-religious revolution? There would not be a periodical or a history that would not describe it—if employing metaphorical language—by expressions similar to those which are used in the Apocalypse to depict, in the well-known symbols of the ancient prophets, the overthrow of the powers that had hitherto held sway and the victory of the Crucified.

In order, however, to appreciate the force of the argument employed above, namely, that the prophets of the Old Testament and our Lord Himself, made use of the very symbols and language of the sixth seal to describe, not the end of all things, but national convulsions and catastrophes, the passages to which reference has been made should be attentively studied. In a paper like this it has only been possible to quote a few of them, and those by no means in full. They need to be most carefully examined, together with their contexts, and with a knowledge of the facts of history to which they indubitably related, if their value as an exposition of the symbolic language of the sixth seal is to be apprehended.

I would, therefore, most earnestly urge the readers of this paper, some of whom may be indisposed to accept the interpretation which it advances, to adopt the course recommended before arriving at definite conclusions on the subject. I believe myself that the weight of Scriptural argument afforded by the passages in question can hardly be overrated.

MISSIONARY PENCE ASSOCIATION.

This modest "help" to missions continues its useful work, as our contribution column from time to time testifies. Two leading missionary societies have lately received £15 between them, and many others have been helped in smaller sums. One member has collected nearly £9 in her first year, mostly in pennies. A subscriber has contributed his weekly penny for the whole period of his Christian life—amounting to nearly £4. Who will follow his example? Members and subscribers can nominate any foreign mission to which their entire gift will be sent.

Having successfully passed the experimental stage and raised nearly £200 in less than a year, the Pence Association has been officially attached to the Missionary Bureau as part of its work. It has been closely connected with the Bureau from the first. This will further strengthen the Association for its simple, but real, work of gathering in the missionary pennies. Those willing to help should write to the hon. sec. and founder, Mr. John Jackson, 186, Aldersgate-street, London, E.C.

A YEAR OF BLESSING IN CHINA.

The past year having been one of great blessing in our work here, and as many of your readers are praying for us, it is only right that I should tell them how the Lord has been working, that they may join us in our note of praise.

At the beginning of the year the prospect was very bright, and inquirers were steadily on the increase. So many are anxious to hear the Gospel that in some of our out-stations the chapels are being crowded out, and ere long we shall have to provide more room. But this work is not a sudden development, as there has been a steady increase for some years. The Gospel has been faithfully preached in our ten stations and out-stations. Two colporteurs have been at work in the district, so that a good number of books and tracts have been sold. Although we knew this, and that much seed had been sown for more than twenty years, yet we did not expect such an ingathering as we have had.

In the spring I was laid aside with influenza, which unfitted me for active work for several months, but the work still went on, and seventy persons confessed Christ by baptism. As soon as the hot weather was over I was able to visit our out-stations, and found that there was decided progress in all except one. There is a greater desire to hear the Gospel than ever before on every hand, but opposition is also becoming more strong. There have been more cases of persecution this year than for at least ten years before; but, in face of this, where persecution has been the strongest, there our inquirers have been the most numerous.

After visiting four of our out-stations in one district, the received candidates all came to one place to be baptized; so that on Sunday, Nov. 13, I had the joy of baptizing forty-nine persons, the largest number yet baptized in this district. In the afternoon about ninety of us met round the Lord's Table, to remember his death. It was a solemn time; and even the onlooking heathen were quiet for once. This all took place in what was once a heathen temple, but now a chapel. The result of the year's work is 141 baptized, for which we do from our inmost hearts thank God, and take courage.

Perhaps some may be led to ask, "Have you not made some special effort, or tried some new plan to secure this ingathering?" No special effort has been made, nor a new plan adopted. The "Old, old story" as been told out, as usual, and has proved itself—and of itself—to be the power of God unto salvation to every one who believeth, yes, even to the heathen Chinese.

But it is interesting and encouraging to see how these converts have been brought in. Not a few have been hearers of the Gospel for years, again proving that, "In due season ye shall reap if ye faint not." But the majority of them have been brought in by our native Christians. One hears the Gospel perhaps in the chapel, goes home and tells others, who come and hear for themselves; and so it spreads. In some cases it is through a book or tract. One case of this kind is of special interest. In the Chinese first month (our February) a young man bought a small book for less than a farthing, took it home, and read it. Seeing the name of our chapel on the cover, he came to hear more, and to get other books, which he read to his neighbours. Some of them came to hear for themselves, with the result that twelve persons have been baptized, and there are quite a number of inquirers.

Our evangelist and colporteur visited the district several times, and gave very encouraging reports. One of Mrs. Rudland's Bible-women has been staying there a week at a time, with the result that quite a number of women have come for several Sundays five miles with their little feet to hear the Gospel. Then came the offer of an idol temple for a chapel, that a station might be opened, so as to enable those who cannot come so far to hear the Gospel. I have been to see the place and the people, and was requested on all hands to open a station without delay. The place offered is situated in the centre of a cluster of villages, nestling at the foot of a range of hills. A notice has been put up at the temple door stating that the place is to be opened as a place for Christian worship on a certain day, and that those who have any objection to make are to do so before the time fixed. Up to the present no one has made any objection, but many have expressed their pleasure. Should no serious difficulty arise we hope to have the opening services in about a fortnight.

It is an easy thing here to open stations, but not so easy to find workers to put in them. This is our difficulty just now. We have quite a number of young men who would gladly give themselves to the Lord's work, but they need at least a few months of Bible teaching before they are fit to teach others. I have had two here for about a month, but being single-handed I cannot give more time to that work for some months to come. Our "native missionary society" has given the money for four students to come here for study for three months, but there is no one to teach them. May the Lord of the harvest send forth labourers into this harvest-field, and that soon.

A DAY IN KENTUCKY PRISON.

BY JAMES B. WOOKEY.

Kentucky State Prison is in Frankfort, Ky., a very beautiful though somewhat backward city, with quite a large negro population, nearly the whole of the adults having been slaves in the dark long ago. Now they are not only free, but large numbers of them are honourable and useful citizens. In religion they are chiefly Baptists, having a large church splendidly appointed and equipped, entirely supported by themselves. From all I heard during my stay, I doubt whether there is a more aggressive church in the city than theirs. And no wonder; they have been emancipated in a double sense, and are able to realise the value of the blessings of the Gospel for the life that now is, as well as the life beyond.

On Good Friday afternoon, our little party, consisting of ten orphan boys, Mr. Henry Arron, and myself, paid a visit to the State Convict Prison, at which I had been invited by the chaplain to conduct an afternoon service. There were nearly one thousand men in the prison, not a few of whom are undergoing life sentences. Contrasted with English prisons, there were many things in which they were far behind us, and in others far ahead. The cells were miserably small and wretchedly lighted, yet often occupied by two persons. There is no classification: consequently a young boy admitted for a first offence comes in close contact with old criminals.

I inquired of the chaplain respecting two very bright-looking boys, between twelve and fourteen years of age. Their histories are peculiarly sad. A grown-up half-brother, who had often ill-used them, one day savagely flogged them both with a whip for some trifling offence. The boys found him soon afterwards asleep; one took an old gun and loaded it, the other fired and blew the brother's head almost from his shoulders. For this they are here undergoing a three years' sentence.

The chaplain and officers do not hesitate to speak of the prison as a school of crime for children, owing to the fact that existing rules and regulations do not admit classification, and that the men and boys can and do mix together without let or hindrance. All the workers feel the time has arrived for the old prison to come down and give place to another and a better, where it would be possible for every prisoner to have a separate cell, and where the friends of the prisoners could carry out many much-needed reforms.

There is a large Sunday School in connection with the prison, attendance at which is quite voluntary. It is cheering to learn that quite eight hundred out of the thousand men habitually attend, teachers being drafted from almost every church in the city. Quite a number of the prisoners have been converted and baptized, and there can be no doubt but that much good is being accomplished by the devoted workers, who devote hours every Sunday either in taking classes or paying personal visits.

For our accommodation, a platform had been erected in the large dining-hall, on which stood our ten little musical boys in their bright attractive uniforms, ready to discourse sweet music on their peal of ninety bells. They gave the "Village Chimes," introducing such hymns as "Abide with Me," "How Sweet the Name of Jesus sounds," and "Our Bless'd Redeemer e'er He breathed," and "Home, Sweet Home," to the great delight and astonishment of the prisoners. I noticed one man near the platform bury his face in his hands, and guessed by the moving of his face that he was sobbing. I found afterwards he was an Englishman in captivity; sin had brought him thither, but he has shown signs of true repentance toward God and man. At the close of the bell ringing, God enabled me to speak about the triumphs of the Cross. I think we all felt that the Holy Spirit was present, and can but trust that not a few of the men were enabled to look to the Lord Jesus for salvation and deliverance from the bondage of evil.

We were deeply touched at the close by the number of poor prisoners who came to us offering their pennies towards helping Dr. Barnardo's work. One wonders whether, if some Christian philanthropist had taken them in hand while they were young boys, they might not now be leading Christian lives, instead of sighing behind prison bars On saying good-bye to the prison officers, there came very vividly back to my mind an experience of my own many years ago. I had not been converted long when I visited one of our large English convict establishments. I was deeply and terribly moved by all I saw and witnessed, but mostly so in the hospital, where there lay dying not a few men, some of whom were evidently very young. I requested the deputy-governor, who was a personal friend of mine, to let me speak to them about their souls. "Only the chaplain can do that," was his answer. "Is the chaplain a converted man?" I asked. "He does not profess to be; neither has he any sympathy with evangelical truths." I pleaded again that I might be allowed to tell these dying men of Jesus, but the answer was, "Don't try to do the impossible, but do that which you may do. Go out into the world and try and prevent any more from coming here." This is the work we believe we are, by God's help, doing in Dr. Barnardo's Homes. As Miss Ellice Hopkins has it, "Better the fence at the top of the precipice than the ambulance at the bottom."

LITTLEHAMPTON HOME OF REST.

Five years ago Rev. W. Darlow Sarjeant took a cottage at Littlehampton as a quiet resting-place for tired Christian workers. In a few months time the work was removed to a larger house, then a second one was taken, and soon after a third was added. This evidenced the need for such a "Rest," and ere long Mr. and Mrs. Sarjeant had to consider a still further enlargement.

About this time a unique structure, embracing several buildings, was offered for sale. Prayer was answered, and the work at the other three houses was transferred to the roomy chamber of the building now known as "The Hillyers," Littlehampton.

During these few years four thousand weary souls have found rest, refreshment, and restoration, within the portals of these homes. In the words of the last report, "The main object of our work at the Home of Rest is to put within easy reach of our fellow Christians physical rest, heartfelt sympathy, and spiritual help." And many are the testimonies to the full achievement of this gracious aim.

An important consideration is the high value of the Christian lives of those who here receive rest and restoration. They are not idlers, but hard-working Christians, whose physical failure or restoration often implies the failure or success of important centres of Christian work, and nothing but the numerous letters Mr. Sarjeant is continually receiving could give anything like an adequate idea of the value and utility of its ministry. It is emphatically undenominational. Clergymen, ministers, and Christian workers, of the several churches have been equally welcomed. A Home for Ministers only has been added, and is situated at Wokingham a healthy locality.

While visitors are admitted who pay moderate or full fare, the numbers freely welcomed who can afford nothing, or only a little, renders the life and ministry of the home dependent upon the gifts of the Lord's people, and, observe, affords those who give the privilege of having a share in doing all the good which is accomplished quite as much as if the Home were to that extent their own.

The present building is now found to be too small for the many weary ones seeking rest, but the nature of its construction affords the opportunity of adding eight additional bedrooms at the moderate cost of £750; of this £100 has been received. The facts need, surely, only to be made known to touch hearts who are now looking forward to their own times of refreshing, to remember their brethren and sisters toiling in the shoals and shadows of life's trying scenes.

GREENLAND AND ITS PEOPLE.*

Greenland is a land of snow and ice. There is only one month in the year when snow never falls, and that is July. In September there is ice. In summer the snow melts in the valleys, and then grass and flowers appear in a few spots, while the rest are covered with white moss. Snowland would be the right name for this country, and it was its first name. It was a deceitful man who gave it the name of Greenland, to persuade the people in Iceland to settle there.

The Greenlanders use every method to keep themselves warm: yet very hard they find it to avoid being frozen in their beds. Several families live in one house, and the rooms are divided like stalls in a stable; each family has a stall where all its members sleep at night and sit in the day. The house is built of large stones, and roofed with planks cast on the shore by the waves. There are no trees in Greenland large enough for planks, but God has arranged that trees from other countries shall be brought by the waters to this country.

How was the Gospel made known in Greenland? There was a little Danish boy named Hans Egede. He had read that there once were Christians in Greenland, and he wanted to see whether there were any there still. He could not go while he was a boy, but when he was a man he did. He went in a ship lent to him by some merchants, and he took his wife and his four little children. The ship, having conveyed him, left him there.

He built a hut of stones for himself and his family, and began to try to learn the Greenland tongue. He went to live in one of the Greenland houses for a month, and let his two little boys come with him, knowing they would learn faster than himself. How uncomfortable he must have felt in one of those close and noisy abodes! But he bore all for Christ's sake. Afterwards he took two orphans into his house, hoping they would help to teach him while he taught them, but when spring came they left him, and, like Noah's raven, returned no more.

He was often in want of food, though ships from Denmark sometimes brought it. As he could not catch seals, he could not provide for his own subsistence. For twelve years he laboured, but saw no Greenlander turn to the Lord. Great was his joy when two Moravian missionaries arrived to help him. Their names were Matthew and Christian Stack. They came from Hernhutt, in Prussia, and they called the place where they settled "New Hernhutt."

The new missionaries were not better treated by the Greenlanders than Egede. When they visited the houses they were often asked when they meant to go. The people, indeed, returned their visits; but it was only to see what presents they could get, or what things they could steal.

A dreadful calamity now befell this wicked nation. A Greenland boy went in a ship to Denmark, returned home, and fell ill of the small-pox. The disease had never been known in Greenland before. It spread rapidly. Numbers died, and no wonder; for the sick used to go out in the cold air and drink cold water. Some, impatient of the burning fever, plunged into the sea and perished there.

All the missionaries visited the dying, but in many houses they found only dead bodies. They received also all the sick people who came to them into their houses, and nursed them with tender care.

In one year two thousand people died of the small pox (nearly half the people in the land). It might be expected that those who recovered would be grateful to the friends who had shown them such kindness. Far from being grateful, they continued to treat them with scorn. Their cry was, "We must have seals, fishes, and birds. If your God will give us these, we will serve Him; but we care not for your heaven. It might suit you, it would not suit us."

The stupid Greenlanders had no god, not even an idol, but they talked of one, Torgarsak, who lived under the sea, feasting upon seals' flesh, and to him they thought all good seal-catchers would go when they died; but they did not worship Torgarsak, nor call him "god"; they were "without God and without hope in the world."

Matthew Stack spent a whole month in a Greenland house, as Hans Egede had once done. He found the people one day kind, another day cold; one day they were willing to listen to a Scripture story, the next day ready to laugh at it. During two whole nights there was a ball in the house, when one hundred and fifty people danced and drummed and bellowed.

None but the little children cared for the good missionary, and they ran after him and clung round him, and seemed to love him like the little children who loved Jesus when He was upon earth, and sang Hosanna to his name.

But the time of mercy came at last. One of the missionaries, named John Beck, was seated in his house writing out one of the Gospels in the Greenland tongue, when a little company of natives entered. These people came from a distant spot, and had never heard of the Gospel. The missionary began to teach them. He read to them out of his book the history of Christ's sufferings in the garden. They listened attentively. Suddenly one of them, after hearing of the Saviour's agony, arose, stepped up to the table, and exclaimed earnestly, "Tell me that once more, for I too desire to be saved."

The missionary had never before heard a Greenlander utter such words. He was filled with joy. Tears ran down his cheeks while he described the love of the Father in giving up his Son, and the love of the Son in laying down his life.

All the savages were moved, especially Kajarnak, who had spoken first. They left the house, promising to return soon. Many of them did return. Kajarnak showed signs of a change of heart. He delighted in being with the missionaries, and he persuaded his countrymen to come and hear them. He turned away in disgust from the noisy feasts of the heathen, and was often speaking, even with tears, of the love of Jesus. His whole family believed, and were baptized, as well as himself.

While the missionaries were rejoicing over their first convert, they saw with pain that his health was declining. Kajarnak was attacked by a cough and a pain in his side, and in a few months he felt death approaching. But he was not alarmed, he said to his weeping family, "Grieve not, I am going to my Saviour."

The missionary brethren buried him in their burial ground, and knelt down on the snow to thank God for their first-born son in the faith.

After the death of Kajarnak many Greenlanders turned unto the Lord. New Hernhutt became a Christian village. Some friends in Holland sent over a wooden chapel, which was set up near the dwellings of the brethren. The people, though scattered on their fishing excursions, hastened to assemble in this building, the largest they had ever seen.

John Beck preached the first sermon, even as he had, by the power of God, converted the first Greenlander. Adjoining the chapel are schoolrooms and the dwellings of the brethren; before it lies the missionary garden, with its turnips and lettuces; around are the Greenland houses.

Every morning early the people assemble in the chapel to pray, and to hear a text explained. The children attend school in the morning, but they assist their parents in the afternoon. In the evening, when the men return from their fishing and seal catching, they assemble again in the chapel, and a few Greenland boys lead the hymns to the sound of the flute, the violin, and the guitar. How different from the wild dances and howlings of past times are these sacred employments!

The conduct of the Greenlanders is changed. Widows and orphans are not left to perish as they used to be, but each fatherless family is received into a Greenland house, and supported by the inhabitants. A baby that lost its mother used to be buried along with her, because no one would take care of it; but now such a baby is always nursed by some kind-hearted woman.

There are now six Christian villages in Greenland, containing altogether two thousand people. There are also six missionary stations on the opposite coast, which is called Labrador, and which is colder than Greenland, though it is much further south.

This bulky and compact volume contains descriptions of Oceania, Africa, and America, with maps and many illustrations. The young will revel in the pages of the book, which will doubtless also prove useful to some children of larger growth. (5s. Longman & Co.)

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—April 23, S., 1 Peter v. 1-14; 24, 2 Peter. i. 1-11; 25, i. 12-21; 26, iii. 1-9; 27, iii. 10-18; 28, Psalm, cvi. 1-18; 29, cvi. 19-33,

THE CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.

On Thursday afternoon and evening the anniversary meetings of this Union were held in Exeter Hall. Rev. E. A. Stuart presided at the earlier gathering. After prayer, Mr. T. B. Bishop gave an outline of the work, and referred to many tangible tokens of decided progress in many parts of the world. In Tinnevelly, for example, the C.S.U. has found its way into sixty-nine schools and villages, and a native evangelist is supported by the branch. In Japan also a very remarkable work is going on, the effort is actually being made to send a C.S.U. leaflet and a portion of Scripture into every house in some districts of Japan. At home the work was going on well, and it was evident that God was pleased to own in a very marked way this endeavour to woo and win the little ones to read, love, and study the Word of God.

Mr. Eugene Stock, who was warmly welcomed on his first public appearance since his return from the East, recalled the early beginnings of the special services mission in efforts to reach children at St. Jude's, Mildmay Park. Looking back to these early days and pondering the marvellous results, he could not help feeling that there is scarcely any work in existence which had been so wonderfully blessed. During his own recent tour he (Mr. Stock) had seen C.S.U. work in various parts of Australia, also in Bombay, Calcutta, Cairo, and elsewhere. In fact almost everywhere he had come on traces of this Scripture Union work. Study the Bible, exclaimed Mr. Stock in conclusion; that is the secret of blessing and of power.

Rev. E. A. Stuart believed that the Scripture Union might be regarded as the centre and pivot of the whole work of the Children's Special Service Mission. That Union was not antagonistic to or in competition with other workers for children—such as the Sunday-schools or home training; it was merely auxiliary to or supplemental of these efforts. Having incidentally mentioned the bereavement which had fallen upon him in the death, three days ago, of his beloved father, Mr. Stuart proceeded to expound practically the story of the widow and her pot of oil, which failed not until every empty vessel was full.

Rev. F. Bayliss, of the C.M.S., said that his experience had taught him that there is no part of one's parochial work one has to thank God for more than this Scripture Union work. He was also profoundly thankful for the spiritual character and results of the C.S.U. efforts. He might put that all in a nutshell by saying, Be early in the field and be fairly in the fight. Children are never too young to learn to love the Word of God. The speaker proceeded to adduce instances in his experience in college in Christian work as an examiner, and in foreign missions, of the value of leading the young to love and search the Word of God.

Mr. Edwin Arrowsmith began by referring to his approaching visit to America. Passing on to dwell on the dangers lying around children, he called earnest and serious attention to a painfully unscriptural, superstitious, and deadly book now being sold publicly as a manual for children in the Church of England. Many are living in a fool's paradise, and have not the least idea of the soul-destroying work being done by the ritualists amongst children. Mr. Arrowsmith went on to plead for Bible classes on behalf of the upper-class children, who are, alas! frequently in dense ignorance as regards the Bible and the simplicity of the Gospel. He trusted also that everyone present had made up their minds fully to throw themselves into the seaside campaign this year.

Rev. W. R. Mowll said he had been a member of the C.S.U. since its first formation, and therefore he sympathised most heartily in its work, and was delighted to bear unhesitating testimony to the value and usefulness of Scripture Union work which had led many to find in the Word of God the Saviour whom it reveals.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, APRIL 23.—2 CHRON. II.

Hiram, the Gentile, is summoned to help in temple-building, and in doing so is immortalised. The one thing which makes the names of the Apostles live is their share in laying the foundations of the New Jerusalem. If a woman but give her alabaster box of very precious ointment, her name is spoken through the world. It is direct spiritual work that tells. Let us see to it that we do not let our days run to waste in busily doing; but count each day lost in which we do not contribute some gold, or silver, or precious stones to the temple of God, the Church. Ah, how wonderfully great will that Church be which is to be a habitation of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ through the Spirit! "This is my rest for ever; here will I dwell."

This chapter reminds us of Isa. lx. 13: "The glory of Lebanon shall come unto thee, the fir tree, the pine, and the box-tree together, to beautify the place of my sanctuary." No one type of character will suffice. For each there is a niche in the temple, for each a special function. Art thou fir, or pine, or box? There is room for thee in the temple of God."

It was good that Hiram was altogether free from jealousy. He was sincerely glad that David had a wise son, endued with discretion and understanding. And this was due to his great love and reverence for Jehovah. When God is first with us, and his honour our supreme thought, we are glad if He be worthily served, even though we are not specially concerned in the act of adoration or service. The patriot loves to see his fatherland prosper, though he be unable personally to aid its cause. Would that such love for God and his cause might make us oblivious to personal interests, and only eager to see his temple rise.

MONDAY, APRIL 24.—2 CHRON. III.

Moriah was designated to Abraham for the offering of Isaac. It was the site of the Temple and Altar. It is now covered by mosques, which make sacrifice impossible. The type has been forcibly put an end to, because the substance has come.

The foundations were massive. Huge blocks of stone have been disinterred, touching the living rock, and reminding us of the foundation of Apostles and Prophets, impinging directly on the Rock Christ Jesus. The gold and precious stones, which are calculated to have been worth some three or four millions of our money, and which were so lavishly laid on the walls of the temple, make us think of the fire and file through which they had passed. The trials and disappointments of our lives are the smelting-furnace and the lapidary's bench, where we are being prepared for our destiny in flashing back from every part of our character that glory which, ere long, is to fall on us from the face of Christ.

The cherubim, representing redeemed creation, remind us that the work which Jesus did for us has sent blessing to the uttermost limits of space, and affected all in heaven, and on earth, and under the earth. "Bless the Lord, ye his angels: Bless the Lord, all his works: Bless the Lord, O my soul."

TUESDAY, APRIL 25.—2 CHRON. IV.

The brazen altar tells us of the Cross where Jesus died, and reminds us that we must present our bodies as living sacrifices, on the altar. The molten sea, where the priests performed their ablutions, sends our thoughts to John xiii. There must be daily washing. Cleansed and kept clean up to our light. It has been suggested that a fountain rose from out of the centre of this great bath. If so, how beautiful the symbol of the ever-springing life of love in Jesus, which summer cannot staunch nor winter freeze. The increased number of the candlesticks was due to the growing requirements of the temple, for which the one seven-branched candlestick would have been insufficient. In the clustered light of seven such candlesticks the Son of Man stood in the apocalyptic vision (Rev. i.). The Church is to be the light of the world. But every part of her must be of pure gold, "perfect gold" (21 R.V.). Even the snuffers, spoons, and firepans must be wrought of that same precious metal. We must give God the best. "To Him shall be given of the gold of Sheba." And we must give without stint. "The weight of brass was not searched out." The riches of Christ are unsearchable, and our gifts to Him should not be measured with a stinting, meagre hand.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 26.—2 CHRON. V.

This was the last removal of the sacred Ark, which, with the faded remnants of the Tabernacle, was conveyed to the new temple, and remained there until destroyed by fire at the downfall of Jerusalem. The Ark was emptied of the budding rod and the pot of manna, for these pertained to events long past, but it held the tables of the law, because the law can never pass away. It lies ever at the base of God's dealings with men.

How rapturous must have been that outburst of praise! The white-robed choristers, the musicians, the 120 priests sounding with trumpets! Heman in the central place, flanked with Asaph on the right, and Jeduthun on the left. And the one refrain, which so often rings through the Psalter, "The Lord is good, his mercy endureth for ever." That is true for ever. It may not always seem so. But we must dare to believe that it is. Happy are they who do not wait to see it demonstrated by the course of events, but who dare to proclaim it, in dark and lonely and sad days. Come, weary heart, you do not feel it so, but frame your lips to say it; say it again and again, go on repeating it, and ere long you will find that your emotions have caught up the strain, and repeat it with glad acclaim. It is then that the glory of the Lord fills his house. The praise of God is sure to introduce the consciousness of the presence of God. O, Shekinah of God, bearer of the Father's glory, make haste to visit me!

THURSDAY, APRIL 27.—2 CHRON. VI.

The moment and hour are coming, when concerning each word on which we have been caused to rely, we shall be able to say, "The Lord hath performed the word that He spake." "I am risen up, as the Lord promised." God does keep his covenant and mercy for his servants, that walk before Him with all their heart. Write that down on the tablets of memory. "He cannot deny Himself." He does keep with his servants that which He promises. What He speaks with his mouth, that He fulfils with his hand.

But on these convictions, we pile up further petitions; "now keep that which thou hast promised" (16). There is surely no argument which avails better with God, than one deduced from his dealings in the past. Thou didst give manna, now give water; thou hast given water, now give fire.

In every possible circumstance in which we may find ourselves, in our plea for justice from our persecutors, in defeat, in drought, in famine or pestilence, in battle and captivity, there is no such resort as prayer. We must turn towards the altar, where the blood speaks for us. There sin must be confessed, and deliverance sought. Thence the deliverance of God will issue to restore us, and maintain our cause.

FRIDAY, APRIL 28.—2 CHRON. VII.

Fire! The emblem of purity and intensity. The symbol of the Holy Ghost! Our hearts await it with eagerness, for nought else will suffice. Though the temple be reared, and the prayer made, of what avail is it, so long as the fiery baptism tarry? Spirit of burning, come! And though there be something terrible in thy coming, we will be able to cry with more rapture than ever before, "The Lord is good." Before that fire fell, the priests only sang that song, but afterwards the whole congregation joined in the strain. Thus Peter's words were anticipated "Sons and daughters prophesy, young men see visions, and old men dream dreams."

Another blast of sacred psalmody rent the air, and even David, the sweet singer, seemed to be amongst the people again, praising through the minstrelsy which his holy genius had created. "David praised by their ministry" (6 R.V.). And then all Israel shared the contagious joy with feast and shout of song, until the people went to their tents, joyful and glad of heart. We need more of these great convocations to express our love, and incite our praise.

Step by step God went through his servant's prayer. Ah! He remembers even when we forget. Moreover, He assured him of his willingness to do as he had asked. The prayer itself had been originated by the Spirit, who knows the mind of God, because He is God. And that which comes from Heaven is sure to prevail with Heaven.

SATURDAY, APRIL 29.—2 CHRON. VIII.

Again we are borne forward to the glowing words of Isaiah: "Strangers shall build up thy walls" (lx. 10). As Solomon made the remnants of the heathen peoples contribute to the splendour of his reign as bondservants, so even those who cannot be reckoned in God's family of free-born ones are contributing, in one way or another, to the advent of his kingdom and the building of his Church. We, the true circumcision, are not slaves, but sons. The Son has made us free. Our Master has told us all things that Himself doeth. His slaves are promoted to serve Him as priests.

Solomon's wife could not dwell within the hallowed precincts of Mount Zion, because at the most she was but a Gentile proselyte. It is interesting to find Egypt here. The former land of oppression now contributes to the glory of Israel! Surely there are foreshadowings of the presence and work of Gentiles in Him in whom all are one.

The right ordering of the ritual of the Temple was attended to in accordance with the injunctions of David, "the man of God." Yes, notwithstanding his failures and sins, David still lived in the love of his people as one of God's men. Proud title, that! Plenty give themselves to serve their age and their fortunes. Well is it when men give themselves to the interests of God, organs for the accomplishment of his purposes. In doing this they best serve their generation, and are most lovingly and gratefully remembered.

Wisdom's Warnings.—Prov. i. 20—33.

Golden Text: Heb. xii. 25.

In the Book of Proverbs we are permitted to read, in brief pithy sentences, the counsels of the man whose wisdom was received as a direct gift from God. Recall the interesting story as told in Kings iii. 5—12. This book does not contain all his proverbs, which are said to have numbered three thousand, and to have dealt with a great variety of subjects (1 Kings iv. 32—34). The Spirit of God has selected those which concern the conduct of man towards men, and his relation towards God, because it is upon these subjects that instruction is most needed.

The book of Proverbs has been described as containing "the laws or heaven for life on earth." One writer speaks of it as "the book of divine commonsense—that is, a book of instruction concerning behaviour in the common transactions of life—in which the thought of God and his continual presence holds the chief place." No mention is made of the mere ceremonialism of religion; it is a book of practical Godliness.

Verses 20—21: See (1) Who speaks?—"Wisdom," not a mere attribute, but a person. The words were written by Solomon, but a greater than Solomon is here. To none but the son of God can the description of wisdom in chapter viii. apply (see 1 Cor. i. 24). Who would despise a message from such a speaker? (2) How? "Crieth," "uttereth the voice." It is the voice of One who means to be heard, whose message is evidently of supreme moment. It is spoken in loud piercing tones so that none may fail to hear, and is repeated with great urgency. (3) Where? See 20, 21 R.V. The most public places were chosen, where the crowd would most surely be found. Wisdom's method of reaching the masses was by going to them. Every part of the city is a place of temptation; therefore the message is needed to give warning and direction.

Verses 22, 23. Three kinds of persons are addressed:—The simple are those "whose leading characteristic is the absence of good rather than positive activity in evil."—Arnot. They are thoughtless, inconsiderate, ignorant, therefore become an easy prey to those who would tempt them to sin. Scorners are considerably advanced upon the course of evil. They have learned to scoff at and deride the counsels of wisdom. The habit of scorning has become a sort of luxury; they love it, and are unwilling to forsake it. Fools—the term is applicable to both the other two; but in its deepest meaning it describes those who "are hardened, obstinate, perverse, hating the knowledge they have rejected"—Plumptre. Wisdom's message to these is not one of severe denunciation, but of earnest entreaty, accompanied by rich promise (23). Turn you—that is, in Gospel language, repent. Now, the face is from God and towards evil; to repent is to turn the face from evil and towards God. All the reproofs of Scripture are designed to lead to this. My Spirit and my words—both are promised, the first to make the turning possible. He who commands repentance also gives it (Acts v. 31): and, next, to satisfy the heart-longings of those who do return. Compare this word with Jno. vii. 37-39. Do not overlook the union of Spirit and Word. They are inseparable. The Word is the chariot in which the Spirit rides to his victories:—the Spirit is the power by which the letter of the Word is made living and life-giving.

Verses 24—31.—The call was enforced by the outstretched hand to help, to impart a blessing, to entreat. When men have been guilty of rejecting such appeals, then follow these solemn words of warning. How terrible is the judgment! How hopeless it is! Wisdom, from whom alone help could have come, is as one that laughs and mocks. May they not appeal to Him? Yes, now if they will (Isa. lv. 6), but not then (Luke xiii. 24—29). And, most of all, it is self-caused (29—31). It is no arbitrary infliction, but the deliberate choice of the men themselves. They reap as they sowed (Gal. vi. 7) Sin is hell in the germ; hell is sin in the fruit. He who would escape judgment in the future must avoid sin, and heed the counsels of Wisdom in the present.

Verses 32, 33.—The two courses are here presented to us. Against the one we are warned (32). The wicked may have some prosperity, but even their prosperity shall become their destruction. "What is the value of this estate?" said one, pointing to a fine mansion surrounded by fair and fertile fields. "I do not know its present value," was the reply, "but it cost its late possessor his soul. He began business life as a professed disciple of Jesus; as he prospered and grew rich the cares of this world choked the word. Just before he died he said: 'My prosperity has been my ruin.'" Against this are placed the safety and rest, for time and for eternity, of the man who heeds the voice of Wisdom (33). One of these two courses is ours—which?

THE SALVATION ARMY IN INDIA.

By COMMISSIONER BOOTH-TUCKER.

We have now in India 111 corps or central stations, 186 outposts or sub-stations, eight training homes for the reception and preparation of native officers, three rescue homes, two prison-gate homes, one labour bureau, and a farm colony, consisting of 556 acres of land, besides five homes of rest for sick officers and several elementary schools for our converts and their children. The work is largely self-supporting, and contributions from England, which only amounted last year to about £5000, are devoted especially to homes of rest, sick furloughs of English officers, training of natives, and building of barracks. These last are urgently asked for in view of the late rapid advances, and if our friends would remember that they cost only from £3 in the case of temporary palm-leaf structures to about £15 or £30 in the case of more substantial buildings, we are sure they would be encouraged to help. The converts in each case contribute freely land, material, money, food, or labour.

The condition of my dear wife's health rendering it impossible for us to return at present to India, we are nevertheless privileged as far as possible to direct the Army's operations there, and we only wish it were in our power so to carry its burdens and voice its needs as to obtain all that financial assistance which would ensure the most rapid advance. Not able to go ourselves, however, it has been a joy to us that our dear sister, Miss Lucy Booth, has taken these nations on her heart. She sailed for India last year, and her letters are brimful of love, and hope, and faith for the people. True in years she may be but "a stripling," yet already it is evident that David's God is with her!

The report for the year, entitled A Handful of Corn, is full of thrilling interest. It has been penned by one of our English officers, who, previously to joining us, had laboured for some years as a missionary in Orissa. From it we select the following items:—

C. B.—a Roman Catholic of French extraction, a drunkard, and a jail-bird, going to such excesses that he had to leave his island home, came to us destitute and helpless; has got saved, and for some months has held a position of trust as one of the staff of workers on the Labour Yard.

A Parsee, who ran away from his country, lived a wild life, and became a Roman Catholic, came to us as a last resource, professed to get saved, and obtained a situation of responsibility.

A French Roman Catholic, a Mohammedan, and a Eurasian, sworn in as soldiers at one meeting.

Two high-born Jaffna Tamil ladies, who used to decorate themselves with costly jewellery, now wear S. A. uniform, their mother also having found salvation.

One convert, who used to spend Rs. 10 a month on drink, now banks that amount, besides donating the Army handsomely.

A Hindu walks eight miles to get salvation.

A young man who has spent some reckless years in Burmah, gets soundly converted.

A captain stays at a house and wins three of the inmates over to Christ.

One city corps reports: We have two fine Brahmin cadets, recent converts.

Four of the stoutest drunkards in a certain town saved during a series of special meetings.

A backslider who in his wild days spent thousands of pounds in drink and sin, now rejoices in the blessing of holiness.

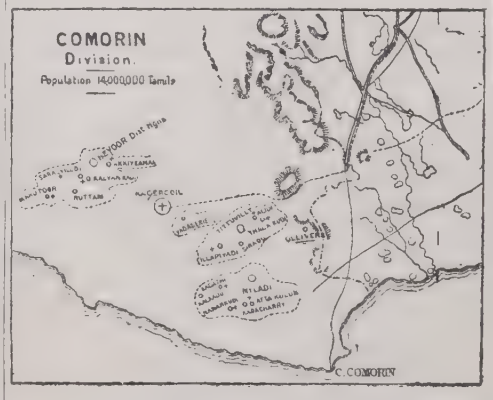
A Sivite belonging to a theatrical company, decides and testifies for Christ.

A slave to drink and a terror to his family, saved and kept for nine months, and can pass any liquor shop, and has been the means of leading his whole family to Christ.

A rich Hindu comes, like Nicodemus in a quiet way, reads the Bible, seeks and obtains the forgiveness of sins.

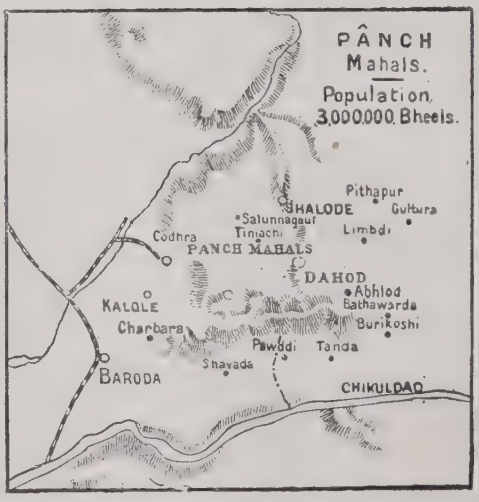
A Mohammedan speaking four or five languages, for years a secret disciple, won at last and becomes a cadet.

A pariah, saved at a poor, small corps where there is plenty of rowdyism, is now an officer.



A Mohammedan gharry-walla, once a fierce persecutor, now helps to roll the old chariot along.

The son of a Hindu merchant, through much persecution and suffering, fought his way up to the rank of officer.



A young Gordon Highlander finds the light in a S.A. officers' quarters, and a sick sailor is saved in the hospital.

A prodigal wanderer, fourteen years an exile from home and friends, is drawn by the happy rejoicing crowd to the barracks where he finds peace and pardon, and leaves this land to gladden the hearts of the sorrowing ones at home with his presence.

Since the issue of this report, however, still more remarkable intelligence has reached us. A cablegram bears the gladdening news that during the last week in March, as the result of a special effort which had been put forth during the month, no fewer than 9700 professed conversions had been recorded. To some these numbers may appear almost incredible. But it has long been the opinion of our most experienced missionaries that when India accepts Christianity she will do so en masse.

Will contributors to the Salvation Army please note that all contributions for India or any of the various branches of the work should be addressed to the Financial Secretary, 101, Queen Victoria-street, London, E.C., and the particular fund for which the subscriptions are intended should be specified?

MAJOR WHITTLE AT WOOLWICH.

Sunday last was a high day with us at Woolwich. Major Whittle was announced to preach in the afternoon and evening in the Drill Hall, and those who believe that "Christianity is played out" must have had an unpleasant awakening. In the afternoon when Major Whittle commenced his address every chair was filled, at least 2,200, and in the evening the hall was packed before the hour to begin. It was a grand sight to see over 2,500 people assembled to hear the old old story, and a splendid testimony to the value of the previous visits of Major Whittle. He can never be forgotten by us; many owe to him the greatest debt they can owe to another, for it was through his ministry they received life eternal.

His text in the afternoon was "Jesus Christ, the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever." He said: "I come to you with the same message which I delivered in 1884 and in 1890. Many things have changed since then. Some of the friends who were with me in 1890 are not here to-day. All things change here, but He is the same." Then he earnestly and tenderly entreated us to trust the unchanging Christ. It was a word fitly spoken.

The evening sermon was, however, the most impressive. He took for his text John's definition of God, "God is love," and before he had finished one felt everybody must believe it. The word seemed to descend like dew upon the hearts of the multitude. At the close twenty-four expressed a desire "to know and believe the love that God hath to us," and there were others the Major did not see, and many more we believe whom God alone could see. The day will declare it.

Miss Whittle's singing was a splendid auxiliary to the preaching. I have heard most of the singers, and place Miss Whittle among the very best. The music is now thrilling my soul as I write:—

"Though your sins be as scarlet,
They shall be as white as snow."

J. Wilson.

MESSRS. McNEILL AND BURKE.

These brethren began a mission in Cork on Sunday, April 2, and brought it to a close on Friday evening last. Two meetings were held each day, except Monday and Saturday. Four of the afternoon meetings each week took place in the Assembly Rooms, South Mall, which is convenient for the merchants and business men, whilst all the other meetings were held in the spacious circus in King-street.

To describe these meetings with accuracy would be almost impossible. The attendance was large from the first, and continued to increase day by day. The circus at the last meeting was filled in every available spot. Every grade of society was more or less reached. In the same meeting there were present the rich man and the beggar; the merchant and the shop assistant; the student from college and the corner-boy; the Roman Catholic and the Protestant. These all listened with attention, and it is hoped with profit to the Gospel preached so graphically and earnestly by Mr. McNeill. The spirit and power of truth which pervaded the mission were Pentecostal. There is no doubt that many were brought to a knowledge of the truth, and certainly those who had already believed were quickened and very much blest. Every congregation in Cork in some measure has received a spiritual impetus by means of Mr. McNeill's labours amongst us. The feeling is fairly general, and by some strongly expressed that Mr. McNeill should return as soon as may be to do the Master's work amongst us.

All the ministers of the Presbyterian, Methodist, Baptist, and Congregational churches co-operated with Mr. McNeill, and several of the Evangelical ministers of the Church of Ireland attended and took part in the meetings. Mr. J. A. Bailey, of the Y.M.C.A., conducted a prayer meeting at noon each day the last week of the mission, which many attended. We wish Mr. McNeill and his colleague, Mr. Burke, much blessing and success in their work.

The Late MR. HENRY REED,

OF TASMANIA.

THE great family of God includes rich and poor, learned and unlearned, some whose lives are an incessant and visible effort on behalf of their fellows, others whose task it is quietly to "watch and pray" away from public view. Our portrait this week outlines the features of a "man greatly beloved," who is no longer with us, but who during many years toiled in the cause of Christ, and heartily encouraged the devotion and exertions of others. His life was eventful in a high degree. Though for a time he earnestly served sin and Satan, during the greater part of his career he hungered for "a closer walk with God," and sought by all means in his power to promote his glory in the earth.

Henry Reed was born at Doncaster in 1806. His father died when he was but five years old, leaving him to the care of a godly and intelligent mother. At the age of thirteen, he entered a merchant's office in Hull, and served his apprenticeship there. In 1826, he sailed for Tasmania, then known as Van Diemen's Land, which had recently been severed from New South Wales, and constituted a distinct colony under the British Crown. For a good many years Tasmania had been a penal settlement, and immigrants who penetrated the island did so at the risk of being robbed and murdered by exasperated natives or escaped convicts.

Arrived in the colony, the young man obtained a situation as clerk in a business house at Launceston. A war of extermination was going on against the blacks, and settlers were kept in a state of terror by bushrangers—criminals wandering at large, and armed for desperate work. Mr. Reed passed through striking adventures, and experienced some hairbreadth escapes during the earlier years of his residence in the colony; none of these however, caused him to think seriously of eternal things. In 1831, having occasion to return to England, he sailed in a vessel called the Bombay. It was the middle of winter, and, when off Cape Horn, in a climate so cold that two men lost their lives through the frost, a heavy gale was encountered, with high seas. When the ship became helpless, and was expected momentarily to be engulfed, the wayward passenger was humbled in the presence of God and pleaded for mercy as a sinner. Telling the story afterwards, Mr. Reed said:

It was during that night that God met with me. I went down into my cabin without any thought of eternity or my soul; but when I had shut the door, and was alone, in a moment my whole life appeared to pass in review before me. Things that I had forgotten came vividly to my mind; events that had transpired long before, and had apparently been blotted out of the book of remembrance, came back with wonderful vividness. I saw all the mercies and all the deliverances; and when I saw them, how astonished I was at the ingratitude of the wretch who had been watched over by that loving God, and had not even thanked Him! I saw now that it was God who had delivered me from shipwreck, and bushrangers, and natives, and sickness, and venomous reptiles (for I was badly stung by a scorpion), and for the first time in my life I realised in that cabin that there was a God. I professedly believed it before, but had never known it, never realised it.

Mr. Reed afterwards saw that God was drawing him to Himself in answer to his mother's prayers, and he remembered her solemn words:—"Henry, I always felt that I had hold of thee, however distant; for I was conscious that I had hold of God, and that God had hold of thee." Conviction of sin was ever present with him, and the fear of death. In this state of mind he arrived in England, and in a few months, having married in the meantime, he returned to Tasmania, determining with all his might to serve God. He found sin and iniquity rampant in the colony, and concluded that he should never be able to find rest for his soul amid such surroundings. So he determined to return to England, in order to seek peace with God.

Accordingly he bought a ship, choosing a crew and captain who were to be absolutely under his command; and, forbidding swearing on board, he induced the men to attend religious services, and again started for the homeland. They had not been long at sea when Mr. Reed discovered that the captain had allowed the chronometer to run down; in fact he was quite unfit for the post he was occupying. Retiring from his position, the man yielded the command into the hands of Mr. Reed, who, steering by lunars, brought the vessel home in good time. He had no nautical education, but the voyages in those days being tedious, he had employed his time in observations and practised the use of the sextant.

On landing in England, he took a house in Regent's Park, and wandered about from church to church, seeking rest for his soul. Then it was made clear to him that he had done wrong in leaving Tasmania to seek God, and so back he went, having literally circumnavigated the globe in his anxious desire to find peace! Not by works was he to find God or to please Him. Gradually light penetrated his mind, revealing the love of God to sinners, but with it there was much doubt and fear. At length his health became impaired with continual fasting, and long seasons of prayer. He has described this period thus:

I commenced reading the Bible on my knees, weeping and praying, and crying to God as I read it. I prayed until large sores formed on my knees, and I had then to lean against the wall, and there cry out to God for mercy. I came to the conclusion that it was his will that I should have what my heart longed for—the witness of the Spirit to the fact that I was "born of God." I sought also for this assurance by signs. . .

One night I rose and left the house to meet two converted convicts in a schoolroom, for several at this time had got awakened and been saved. During that night, between two and three o'clock, while in prayer to God for light, I had such a view that it is "by grace we are saved," grace—free, unmerited, "without money and without price"; and that I must have no secret trust in my fastings, prayers, or tears, in sufferings of body, in having forsaken all, gone round the world and been persecuted; there must be no dependence in any or all of these things: but I must go naked, helpless, and having nothing, and look to Jesus for all. I saw it, I looked, and I lived! Christ took possession of this poor, weary, troubled heart. The storms had come, but I found Him not in them; the fire had passed over me, but I found Him not in the fire; but when "the still small voice" came, then I wept for joy; and I have never since had even a temptation to doubt the reality of the work then wrought in my soul by the Holy Spirit. I could now praise God, and say, "Father, Father; my Father!"

After this his career became a very remarkable one. In the midst of abounding depravity and wickedness, a grand work of conversion commenced amongst the most abandoned men, both convicts and settlers. Mr. Reed visited men who were condemned to death for murder, on one occasion spending the last night with seven of them. Amongst such characters the grace of God was manifested in mighty power, and glorious were the testimonies of some, ere they passed away on the scaffold. There are still living in Tasmania old men and women who, in those early days, were brought to the light. Having found rest and peace, Mr. Reed joined himself to the Lord's people, becoming, in 1835, a member of the Wesleyan Church, in whose mission work in the South Seas he had come to take a warm interest. For several years he was earnestly engaged in work for God in the colony, often walking twenty miles on a Sunday, and preaching three times. His exertions brought forth abundant fruit, the people declaring that "if Mr. Reed were to preach on the mountain top he would get a congregation." The secret was, the people believed in him; he lived what he preached, and knew how to deal with the souls of men, as well as negotiate in worldly concerns.

We find him in England again in the year 1840, but he only remained a short time. Coming again in 1848, for the last time, he remained over twenty-five years. He lived a good while in Yorkshire, where he preached with much power and success. Afterwards he resided in London for a few years, and when settled at Tunbridge Wells, where his house and grounds there were used in various ways in the Master's service. In a summer trip to Scotland in 1868 he was the means of a blessed work in Fifeshire. Then the Lord led him to Harrogate, where a very remarkable revival took place from the year 1870 to 1873, when the call came to him once more to "arise and depart" to the Antipodes.

An excellent man of business, Mr. Reed was also possessed of indomitable energy and unflinching courage; and his zeal for God and the well-being of souls made him a marvellous instrument of blessing wherever he went. Among his greatest friends in later days must be mentioned Rev. William Taylor, of California (now Bishop Taylor of Africa), whose work he followed with deep interest, helping him largely out of his ample means. In one of his books Mr. Taylor has related this incident:—While on voyage with his family in 1840, Mr. Reed stayed at Capetown, when a terrible outbreak of small-pox occurred, communicated by a slaver which had been captured and brought into the harbour. So great was the panic that all business was pretty well suspended, except that of doctors, nurses, undertakers, and grave-diggers. Two pious soldiers waited on him one day to inform him that hundreds of patients were dying, spiritually uncared-for, in an extemporised hospital outside the town; would he come and visit them and tell them of Jesus the Saviour? At first the keeper of the boarding house where he was staying remonstrated with him for venturing to go into the midst of infection, with the risk of bringing it amongst his family and household. Nothing daunted, but in simple faith, Mr. Reed took up the work, and spent his time in going through the wards of the great hospital, until the epidemic abated. The house he stayed in was one of the few that escaped all infection!

Mr. Reed devoted himself to helping forward the Lord's work among the Wesleyans specially, whilst he took also much interest in General Booth's work, the China Inland Mission, and other evangelistic operations conducted on what he considered to be the simple lines of faith in God and prayer. He was intensely opposed to all the modern methods of raising money, such as bazaars, raffles, concerts, entertainments, and again and again his voice and pen were employed in denouncing these, and in exhorting his brethren to abstain from them, and betake themselves to waiting on God. He also had a great abhorrence of debt, and could not bear to hear of Christian men being in debt, nor of churches being involved. He gave large sums privately to free both persons and institutions from debt, on the understanding that such would never again be permitted. To him the Wesleyans are greatly indebted for many buildings which he enabled them to erect for the Lord's work, either providing the site or the building; but in every case his contribution was given on the stipulation that no debt was to be incurred—that the work should remain unfinished rather than there should be an overdraft at the bank.

His care for the Lord's poor was another special feature of his character. During a time of great distress in the East of London he wrote to a friend labouring there to "see that every godly person was clothed and fed," and he went himself to see how many such there were of that class. It was a surprise to the visitors to find, amid all the deep distress, how few there were of the really godly needing help; in fact, it was a long time before the first £100 was disposed of, so sure is the Scripture promise of God's gracious care of his people. Not that Mr. Reed restricted his charity to this class. His soul was too big for any strait-jacket that sects or creeds could make. On grounds of humanity he gave to the needy everywhere and always in their privations, however foolish and wicked.

Tunbridge Wells and Harrogate were the places in England in which he chiefly resided. In the former his large house with beautiful grounds known as Dunorlan,* was the resort of many a wearied worker, and also a place where large gatherings were held of the East-end poor, who were invited to spend their annual outing in those beautiful surroundings. Spiritual refreshment was as much expected on these occasions as purely physical recreation; and many were the times of blessing granted to these poor of the earth, as they listened to his burning words of love and sympathy. In his home in Harrogate a great work was done for the Lord, both among residents and visitors, and by and by hundreds will greet him in the glory as the one used of God to lead them into the light.

Mr. Reed was a champion of the cause of the Lord's Day, maintaining that the Golden Rule alone should lead Christians not to use public conveyances on the Day of Rest. His interest in, and love for, foreign missions was manifested in many ways. In 1874 he became acquainted with the needs of New Guinea, and was practically the father of the mission started by the Wesleyans under the lead of Mr. Brown, supporting the first band of missionaries, and supplying them with a steamer, named after himself, without which they would have been unable with safety to prosecute their work.

Thus God used his servant to spread the knowledge of his truth in many ways and in many lands, the fruit of which remains to this day, whilst numbers whom he led into the light are still bearing witness to others. In 1873, as already intimated, he finally returned to Tasmania with his family. The following day found him in the open air preaching the Gospel; afterwards the Lord opened the way for a mission work especially amongst the poor in the lowest part of the town. It was first commenced in a public-house which Mr. Reed purchased; the work grew rapidly, numbers were saved, and a new building had to be put up to accommodate the growing congregation; this too was soon found too small. There now stands the largest church in Launceston, as the memorial of his work, with a large membership, and a steady stream of blessing overflowing to the town and neighbourhood through it.

In 1880 his health failed, and it became clear that his days of active service were numbered. The closing months of his life were times of wonderful manifestation of the presence and glory of God. His room was as the ante-chamber of Heaven, and his words, amid acute suffering, were full of the Lord whom he loved and served so faithfully. On August 20, 1880, he wrote his dying testimony, in which he bore witness once more to the fundamental truths of the Gospel, the necessity for personal holiness of life, together with a protest against all worldliness and unsound doctrine, and the modern practices of raising money for the Lord's work, as well as the desecration of the Lord's Day. On October 10 he entered into rest, in his home, Mount Pleasant, Launceston, and his remains await the morning of resurrection in the mausoleum erected in a lovely corner of the grounds. "Devout men carried him to his burial, and made great lamentation over him."

* Hence the name of his booklets, "The Dunorlan Tracts," four in number, largely made up of biographical matter, entitled, Christ is All, Incidents in an Eventful Life, "Be Filled with the Spirit," and Closing Experiences in an Eventful Life. (6d. the set, post free. Morgan & Scott).

A MISSION TO CILICIA.

Writing from Narash, viâ Alexandretta, Asia Minor, March 15, Rev. Krikor Behesnilian, of the Tarsus Bible Teaching Mission, describes in part a missionary tour he has made through Cilicia. On his return from London to his native country he visited Messina, the port of Tarsus. If the people of Messina are to be evangelised it must be (says the writer) through the instrumentality of an educational institution. The Protestant pastor is an aged and experienced person. He preaches on Sabbath days and visits houses and shops on week days. If a Christian and zealous teacher should accompany him the work will further progress in Mersina.

At Tarsus Mr. Behesnilian stayed about ten days, during which he took week-day evening and Sabbath-day services. He also had several meetings in connection with the St. Paul's Institute. The Sabbath-schools carried on in connection with the Institute are very promising. There are about thirty young men and boys at the day-school. Most of them are earnest Christians and zealous in their studies. The work of God at Tarsus is making progress through the instrumentality of the institute. The young men, who come from several parts of Cilicia, obtain education there, and on their return home during summer vacation preach in their towns and villages.

The hon. secretary of the Tarsus Mission is Mr. C. Perrott, 10, Essex-road, Watford, Herts.

CAPE GENERAL MISSION.

It is just four years ago since our mission was founded, on the basis of work begun in the colony by Mrs. Osborn-Howe, and in response to a request made to Mr. Spencer Walton that he would settle in South Africa, God having unmistakably owned his evangelistic tour in blessing numbers of souls.

Now we have a spacious hall in Cape Town, a large book-room, and several branch meeting places. The four years have rapidly passed away, during which trial has been experienced and wisdom gained; to-day, looking back and around, our hearts go up in praise and thankfulness to God for the wonderful way He has led, and the abundant success He has given.

Two of our party have been promoted to glory—Mrs. Spencer Walton and Mr. Malcomson; two have returned; one has gone to labour in China. Yet we number over fifty missionaries and workers, paid and honorary, whose lives are wholly given up to work for God in the Cape General Mission. The colonial branches have been signally owned of God, bringing definite blessing to some of our most earnest workers. The soldiers, sailors, policemen, postmen, railway-men, have all been cared for, whilst the slum work has not been neglected. Crowds have been addressed Sabbath by Sabbath in the open air, Malays taught in Sunday-school, and drunkards sought and reclaimed. A band of seven nurses, under the superintendence of a sister, are fully engaged in ministering to the sick.

But it is the heathen of this darkest Africa, 200,000,000 of whom are unevangelised, that we are seeking more than ever to reach; already we have laboured, by God's grace, to establish the following stations:—Bethany (in memory of the late Mrs. Spencer Walton), in Swaziland, surrounded by over 50,000 Swazies. Barberton, in the north of Swazieland. Basutoland, where we support several native evangelists in connection with the excellent French Protestant mission. Kimberley, the great diamond centre, with its compounds, in which are thousands of raw heathen representing many tribes, who came far away from the Zambesi. Pretoria, the seat of the Government of the Transvaal, where we do both European and native work. The Transkei, where we have two mounted missionaries. Vryheid, in the Transvaal, where our station was started in memory of the late C. H. Spurgeon. Johannesburg, the great gold centre, destined to be the London of South Africa, has been the sphere of labour for some months, and if the means are forthcoming we hope to extend our efforts there. The gathering of all nationalities, the hurtful temptations of wealth, and the increasing employment of native labour in the mines, make this a most important centre.

So many of our workers have devoted themselves to missionary labour in Swazieland, that we have decided to make Pretoria our training home where they may learn Zulu. We have a missionary there who will teach Zulu, and in the night school for the natives our workers will have constant and golden opportunities to master the language. We cannot over-rate the importance of this new arrangement. Five hundred pounds spent there would be better than two thousand spent on training at home. Through the generosity of a friend there who has built us a hall, we have good accommodation for meetings, but for our deaconesses we must build rooms. May the Lord lay this pressing need upon the hearts of dear ones in England.

While directing the holy zeal of our beloved workers into this channel, we desire to use more than ever native agency, because of the better facility these converted Africans have in making known in their own language the Gospel, and the greater ease with which they endure the climate. We have already four or five Zulu evangelists, and others desiring service. Our last enrolled helper, Philip, has a splendid opening in the Transvaal, about 120 miles north of Pretoria. When up in Pretoria I saw Philip, and questioned him about his conversion, and about his field of labour. He told us there is one great chief with 10,000 followers who has actually invited him to settle there. When asked, did they know anything of God, he replied, "Nothing." Were there any witch doctors there? "Plenty," he said. Did I listen to these answers lightly? No, surely; and oh, how will our friends in England regard this statement? Do they know what it means "without God," and yet "with demons"?

I have returned with our director from this long journey of 2000 miles there and back, and I have seen heathenism face to face—in their miserable huts by the rail line, in their locations, their kraals, by the evening fire seated in their blankets round their kettle, or in the hot sunshine trudging on the veldt, the women carrying their babes tied to their backs, or through the streets, the wives carrying loads as the lord and master saunters along, grandly using his white umbrella to shade himself from the glaring sun.

Two things surprise me now that I am in Africa—the vastness of the work, and the feebleness of the effort put forth by God's people at home to send the means to do it.

Never shall I forget the joy I had in giving my first address to these sons of night; speaking through an interpreter, I asked if any would like to be prayed for. One young man rose, and then prayed for himself. Oh! what a prayer! "Great God, who made me, I thank Thee for the favour of coming to a place where Thy Word is preached. I come with a great burden of sin." Before we left, he had lost his load at the cross.

Many in England want to come to share our joy, but they have not the means. Mr. Arthur Mercer, 2, Berkeley-terrace, Wimbledon, will give all information.

FROM HERMANN WARSZAWIAK.

It has encouraged me many a time to see the sincere interest of many of the readers of The Christian in our work for the Jews here. Since my return to New York with my beloved wife, God has been remarkably blessing our work. I have only held since my return fifteen so-called "chief meetings," which are held every Saturday afternoon from two to six o'clock; but each of them has been, as ever before, well attended by our Hebrew brethren and sisters, the largest being attended by 1040 and the smallest by 515 (with the exception of one Saturday afternoon, when we had only 385 Jews listening to the preaching of the Word, the weather being very stormy that day).

The desire amongst a large part of the 250,000 Jews here to know the truth concerning Jesus the Messiah is, indeed, extraordinary. The daily newspapers of our city have been awakened by our work for the Jews, and notices are to be found now and again in almost every paper of the city.

The Christian people here are realising how great is the demand for the "glorious Gospel of Christ" among our Jewish brethren of all classes, and have thus started several other Hebrew missions right in the neighbourhood of the "De Witt Memorial Church," where I am still preaching, until God shall enable us to build the proposed "Christ's Synagogue," for which about £14,000 is still needed. I am now trying to unite all the Jewish workers of this city in one union and fellowship, and I enclose you a copy of a letter I sent out to everyone of them just a few days ago. My prayer is that I may succeed:—

65, Avenue D, New York, March 9, 1893.

Dear Brother and Fellow-worker in the Gospel of Christ,—Knowing your true interest in our dear Jewish brethren, and earnest efforts to bring them to the knowledge of the truth of our dear Lord Jesus Christ, I beg to invite you to attend a meeting of all the Jewish missionaries in New York, as well as some others who are interested in the cause of Israel, where we may, by mutual conference and prayer, devise methods of work that shall be helpful in our labours among God's people in this city. This meeting will be held in the parlour of our "Home for Persecuted Christian Jews and Enquirers," at 65, Avenue D, on the first Monday of April, at 2 p.m. precisely.

Its object will be to talk over Jewish work in general, as well as our mutual help, and prayer for God's blessing on the work in which we all are so deeply interested.

Your fellow-workers, whom I do not know individually, are, of course, invited with you, as we seek to bring all the workers together. I myself, if time will permit (or my brother and assistant worker, Mr. Jas. K. Cruickshank), will call on you meantime to converse with you particularly on the subject, and to assure you that we only desire to acquire by this more love and friendship among ourselves, as well as to seek the outpouring of God's Holy Spirit on the work so dear to the hearts of us all, which I think you realise the need of as well as I.

Sincerely yours,
Hermann Warszawiak.

For the last two months I have held every Saturday afternoon, at the close of the preaching, a regular "inquiry meeting" in the Christian Endeavour Hall next to our church, and, glory be to the Lord, this has proved to be of the greatest blessing of every effort we have tried. Hundreds of anxious souls have come in; the meeting lasts for more than an hour, and is chiefly for testimony, praise, and prayer. Everyone who speaks in our "inquiry meeting" has to urge the hearers to decide for Christ, and above anything speak of the way of salvation as clearly and plainly as possible. As a result a great many have become believers in the truth as it is in our blessed Lord Jesus, and only last week I was asked to receive twenty-three Israelites by baptism. Several "Masters in Israel" have also been recently communicating with me, telling me of their conviction that the "Nazarene Jew"—Jesus—was indeed Israel's Messiah.

The work of the distribution of New Testaments, which our beloved brother Wilkinson has put into my hands for this side of the Atlantic, is also blessed of God indeed. During the past year we have distributed in our city and neighbourhood nearly 10,000 Hebrew New Testaments, and about 45,000 Gospels in Judeo-German. For every copy we have given away, we have "a ticket of receipt," with the receiver's full name and address, so that afterwards we may visit these people and instruct them in the truth. We also stamp a notice on each copy that "this Gospel is preached every night and Saturday afternoons in the De Witt Memorial Church, 280, Rivington-street." This year brother Wilkinson has sent me 5000 copies of the New Testament and 25,000 Gospels, to be distributed all over the States, and I hope that ere six months will have passed not a single copy will be left.

Our people are very anxious to unite as a congregation when "Christ's Synagogue" will be built (D.V.); and we have commenced to learn the singing of psalms and hymns in our meetings. A choir of twenty-four Jewish children regularly sings at our meetings, and this makes a great impression on the audiences.

Mrs. Warszawiak is a great help to my work, and I am praising the Lord from all my heart for the re-union, after we had been separated for six years because of Christ. But she suffers greatly on account of the loss of our dear children for the sake of the Redeemer we have accepted. Will you not remember us in prayer from time to time?

Hermann Warszawiak.

DEACONESSES AT TOTTENHAM.

I recently paid a visit to the Deaconesses' Institution. One of the sisters conducted me over the building, pleasantly situated on Tottenham-green. The wards are lofty, light, and airy, and bright with flowers and many texts, and there is a tone of cheerfulness and pleasantness about all the arrangements.

Some of the rooms are for private patients. In one of these I saw a lady who had been there for sixteen months, after an accident. She looked very happy, and said it was "more a home than an hospital." In another room I saw a young woman who had undergone an operation very successfully, having "left it all to the Lord," as she said, and the doctor's testimony was that her Christian calmness was a great help to her recovery.

In another room lay a young man, with a "cradle" to raise the bedclothes from his suffering limbs. He had been in the hospital several months and could not move, but spoke unmurmuringly of the sad trial "which had blighted his earthly life." Everywhere there was the same tone of cheerful resignation; and the brightness of the sisters in charge seemed to impart itself to the patients.

There were many patients in the free wards, and all looked equally well cared-for. I was specially interested in one room set apart for services and prayer meetings to which visitors are invited with the patients.

I was sorry to learn that some of the wards are unoccupied from want of funds. Such an institution should be widely known and well supported, and I feel sure if some could visit the hospital and see it as I have seen it, they would gladly help; and many sufferers would avail themselves of an institution whose arrangements are so homelike and whose officers are so Christ-like. A. E. G.

IF WE WOULD KEEP ENGLAND in any sense at the head of the nations as the country of free institutions, of willing loyalty, of strong family ties, above all of a pure and enlightened faith, we must look to our homes and our children.—Dean Vaughan.

Y.M.C.A. EXTENSION.—III.

Stormy weather and a tempestuous sea rendering it perilous to attempt a landing at Jaffa, together with the earnest entreaty of the workers that he would remain longer with them, combined to prolong Mr. Holmes's stay at Alexandria. The newly-formed association there commenced its career amid rumours of war, a regiment of British soldiers having just disembarked to strengthen the garrison, in consequence of the political disturbance created by the Khedive's action in the appointment of ministers without previous reference to the British Government.

JAFFA

was reached on January 30. Mr. Holmes's fellow-passengers from Port Said thither included Bishop Smythies, of Zanzibar, and several other Christian ministers, all bound for Jerusalem. The greater proportion of the party, numbering upwards of thirty, mostly English, to the grief of Christian residents, evinced little regard for the Lord's Day, and continued their journey direct to Jerusalem on the Sunday afternoon.

Heavy rains had rendered the streets of Jaffa almost impassable from accumulations of mud, and macintosh and top boots were in constant requisition. On arrival Mr. Holmes learned that the old association had long since ceased to carry on its work; and during his stay he held two meetings of young men in the house of the resident missionary, the Rev. Mr. Woeters, who is pastor of the only Protestant church at Jaffa; and a third meeting at the mission house, at all of which he urged upon the young men the importance of banding themselves together for mutual help in the spiritual life and for active Christian service. Seven young men professed a desire to see the association re-formed, and a weekly meeting was organised.

JERUSALEM.

On reaching this city, Mr. Holmes went direct to the association, where he found about twenty-five young men assembled, including Arabs, Anglo-Hebrews, and English, who gave him a warm welcome. He had taken them by surprise, having arrived a day before he was expected, and thus deprived them of the pleasure of attending in a body to meet him at the station. The meeting in progress proved to be the first of a course of lectures given by a young doctor, a member of the association, upon "First Aid to the Injured." Mr. Holmes writes: "I notice here that all meetings, whether lectures or others, begin with prayer and a portion of Scripture, and conclude with prayer."

The association thus visited by Mr. Holmes—which now numbers sixty-four members—was formed by Mr. Hind-Smith during his visit to Palestine in the autumn of 1890, since which time a very valuable and useful work has been maintained. It consists of two sections, viz., Anglo-Hebrew and Arabic. At first the work was carried on in rooms kindly lent by private individuals, but in 1891 the association moved to more permanent quarters in the New Greek Buildings, which occupy a conspicuous position in Jerusalem near the Jaffa Gate. The rooms occupied, though not large, are enough for the present requirements of the work. The largest room is used for meetings and as a reading-room, while the adjacent smaller room serves for an occasional overflow and as a refreshment room. As a rendezvous for young men of different nationalities, the association helps to counteract the attractions and evil influences of the low drinking saloons which abound in its locality, while its directly religious meetings are the means of pointing the young men to Christ for life and salvation. Open-air services have been carried on by the members for a considerable time past, with very much success.

On the day after his arrival, Mr. Holmes called on the Bishop of Jerusalem, who received him most kindly, and expressed his willingness to help the work for young men, so far as he was able to be of any service thereto. Personal calls upon leading representatives of the two sections showed that an adjustment of organisation was necessary to the harmonious working of the association, and this, it is believed, through the co-operation of the missionary-secretary, has been effected.

A difficulty arose here, as at Cairo, Alexandria, and elsewhere, in regard to raising the necessary means to meet the cost of renting premises for the work. No fewer than four appeals for financial help for this object have quite recently been laid before the National Council at Exeter Hall, to which, however, it was found quite impossible to respond. The Council could only promise the workers at the centres named to make these needs known, in the hope that individuals interested in such efforts for the spiritual and moral elevation of young men will be willing to aid. Any gifts sent to Mr. Victor Buxton, treasurer of the Fund for Foreign Y.M.C.A. work at Exeter Hall, will be duly forwarded.

Correspondents have been appointed at Bethlehem and Hebron, and at the time of sending his last letter home, Mr. Holmes was on the point of visiting Nazareth, Beyrout, etc.

In another article we hope to give some particulars of the work of Mr. McCann, missionary-secretary for the Bombay Presidency.

THE NOON PRAYER MEETING.

HOLY GHOST POWER.

At the historic gathering place for prayer at noonday in Aldersgate-street, the address last Thursday was given by Major Whittle. Having taken for a text, Paul's question (Acts xix. 2), "Have ye received the Holy Ghost since ye believed?" the Major emphasised the absolute need of the Holy Ghost to the believer, not only for the reception of the new life, but for the understanding of God's revelation, for efficacy in prayer, for victory over indwelling sin, and for power in testimony and service. For the supply of this need Christ provided by his ascension and session at the Father's right hand.

Major Whittle further urged that as the result of this Holy Ghost power in the Christian, there will be separation from all that is "of the world;" and the evangelisation of the ungodly. With this Divine power moving in the heart, how easy it is to work; how impossible not to work. In this connection the speaker alluded to the service faithfully rendered by the late Mr. Thomas Stone in regular daily visitation of the patients at St. Bartholomew's Hospital for twenty-one years. He said he had been at St. Bartholomew's Hospital the previous day just to have the privilege of treading the wards where Mr. Stone had so long ministered spiritual counsel and comfort to the sick and suffering. Such a record should humble ordinary Christians, in considering what the Holy Ghost can do in helping a man to live so devoted and fruitful a life. Another timely allusion by the Major was that made to the festive meeting of Roman Catholics at the Mansion House on the preceding evening, when the Lord Mayor coupled "the Holy Father" with the Queen in proposing a toast, and described the Pope as the vicegerent of the King of kings. To one like himself, who was of Puritan descent, such a circumstance in Protestant England seemed very strange. The only remedy for the inflow of the Romish revival is the filling of true believers with Holy Ghost power.

After prayer, Miss Whittle sang with rare sweetness and power that simple but very thrilling song, "Christ is all."

THE GOSPEL IN AUSTRIA.

On Friday, Rev. Dr. Pindor gave an address on very interesting operations in which he bears an important part, at Teschen, Silesia, Austria. Having glanced at the remarkable history of Protestantism in the Province, he spoke of the poverty and devotion of his people, who support their religious institutions in addition to paying public imposts. The churches are few but very large. On Sunday morning at seven o'clock, at Teschen, the Polish service begins; at ten o'clock the German service; and at mid-day there is another Polish service. Many people come from a great distance, and in order to be in time some have to leave home as early as four o'clock in the morning.

There are twenty cemeteries within the parish, and the Gospel is preached at nearly every funeral, sometimes in rain and snow. Dr. Pindor visits about 300 sick persons in their distant homes, and inspects twenty-five schools. When he stands in the pulpit, it is before audiences of from 5000 to 6000 souls. When the Spirit of God helps him to touch their hearts and lead them to Christ,—when he sees the brightened eyes and the flowing tears, and hears expressions of gratitude,—he is fully rewarded for his arduous labours. The Protestant Poles are very fond of religious books, and Dr. Pindor has written and translated several: including Merle-d'Aubigné's "History of the Reformation," Thomas à Kempis' "De Imitatione Christi," and Baxter's "Saints' Everlasting Rest."

The people of the village of Trzyniec in some cases go to church on Sunday, after having spent all the previous night working in the iron factory. When they return home, it is in order to resume their night shift. These workmen are in a very difficult position; on the one hand Roman Catholics, and on the other Socialists, endeavour to turn them away from their faith. Occasionally services are held in this village, and as there is no suitable place, the inhabitants meet in the entry of the public schoolhouse. Occasionally about 800 persons are crowded together, standing for hours on the stairs and in the passage. The wish of these poor people is to have a church of their own. For this purpose they set aside one day's wages at the end of every month. In this way, being assisted by their neighbours, they have already collected a fund of £1000. But they need much more, because large churches are necessary in manufacturing districts.

RABBI LICHTENSTEIN AND MR. BARON.

During the present week a series of addresses is being given by Rev. David Baron. On Monday, under the title "A Testimony Meeting in the Cave of Adullam," Mr. Baron put Psa. xxxiv. alongside of 1 Samuel xxi., and expounded the psalm as David's testimony borne at a meeting held in the cave—a meeting at which various men who had gathered round him narrated instances of God's protecting care. Looked at from this point of view, this psalm, which has cheered and helped thousands of God's choicest saints, was found once more to be full of precious meaning.

Rabbi Lichtenstein, who was present, followed in a brief address (interpreted by Mr. Baron), introducing himself as a Jew not merely after the flesh, but after the spirit. Referring to Jesus under the figure of the "Star out of Jacob," he spoke of the cradle at Bethlehem, the cross of Calvary, the empty tomb, the resurrection and coming again of Jesus, the Lamb of God. The venerable Rabbi pleaded earnestly for much prayer on behalf of his people and his own work among them.

NORTH AFRICA MISSION.

Dear Sir,—It will be gratifying to the many friends who so kindly came to the help of Mr. Patrick, in response to his letter in The Christian, to know that the whole of the amount he needed was forthcoming by the date it was required, and also a goodly sum was sent in towards the erection of a permanent building. For this prompt and generous response we praise God.

Mr. E. H. Glenny is at present visiting the stations of the Mission in Algeria and Tunis. On his return he will be able to give particulars of the condition of things in those lands. I would now like to lay before them a few facts regarding the Mission, which call for prayer and practical effort.

When the Mission was extended to Egypt in the autumn of last year, we confidently expected that a warm interest would be taken in the spiritual condition of the five or six millions of souls inhabiting the Delta, who are now practically British subjects, and that this branch of the work would be self-supporting. It has not, however, evoked such a generous response as we anticipated, and the funds of the Egypt branch threaten to show a deficiency of considerably over £100, unless further help is speedily sent in.

The Tulloch Memorial Hospital has now a goodly number of "beds" provided for, through the kindness of Christian friends in England; but money is still needed for the expenses of the medical work, which is, to some extent, overdrawn.

The general fund of the Mission is, however, in the greatest need of help, for while many special objects are liberally sustained, the receipts for this are altogether inadequate to meet the many calls which are constantly being made upon it.

We estimate that to send out further supplies to the missionaries for their personal support, and also for expenses of rent, etc, both of which are much needed to meet the various home claims, and to provide for the overdrafts on the "Egypt" and "Hospital" funds, something like £500 is required to close the current year.

I commend these facts to the prayerful consideration of the Lord's people.

Yours in his service,

Wm. T. F[illegible]t, Assist. Secretary N.A.M.

THE OPEN-AIR MISSION.

The fortieth annual meeting of this Mission was held on Thursday evening in Exeter Hall. As might be expected, the whole proceedings were chastened and toned by a sense of double loss, inasmuch as during the past year the two men most closely and constantly associated with the revival of the practice of open-air preaching in this land have been called to their rest—Mr. John MacGregor (Rob Roy) and Mr. Gawin Kirkham.

Lieut.-Col. Phayre (hon. sec.) read an outline of the report, which began by paying a touching tribute to those who have gone, recalling the origin and growth of the Mission, showing the early difficulties, and intimating that now open-air work is fully and fairly recognised as abundantly successful in the winning of souls. At present the members number 1,115, all of whom give time and strength to open-air preaching, and most of whom are leaders of bands of Christians who give themselves to this form of effort. Details followed, illustrated by many incidents of special work, carried out by paid agents set apart for the purpose, on racecourses, fairs, regattas, and similar assemblages of careless and reckless pleasure-seekers. It is to be feared that few who have not studied the subject are fully aware how many thousands of men practically spend their lives in going to and from race meetings and sporting gatherings of various kinds. These men are wholly devoted to betting, and if they are to be reached at all it must be by workers having the peculiar gifts and graces necessary to enable them to encounter and endure the chaff and ridicule certain to assail them when in such gatherings they seek to give away tracts, speak words of personal warning, or hold Gospel services.

Mr. F. A. Bevan, who presided, gave an earnest and sympathetic address, showing himself thoroughly at home in the matter of open-air preaching, and touching practically and helpfully on various phases of the work. One constant discipline imposed on the open-air preacher is the need for holding and interesting his congregation, who otherwise speedily move off. This was not altogether evil, for it compelled the speaker to be at his best at the street corner. In closing, Mr. Bevan said emphatically that this was one of the most economical missions he knew of.

Rev. A. C. Thiselton, of Shrewsbury, spoke on "These forty years" as typical of the history of the Open-air Mission. This mission was only forty years old, but open-air preaching was 6000 years old; and all through the ages men of God had witnessed to Him under the blue sky. From the example of Jesus Himself, as well as of Moses, Elijah, Peter, Paul, and in later times Savonarola, Luther, Latimer, Christmas Evans, Wesley, and Whitefield, the speaker drew useful and practical lessons for open-air preachers.

MR. MEYER TO PREACHERS.

Rev. F. B. Meyer began by remarking that he and they were about the same business. He had learned in college and they in the street; but, after all, some of the most useful things he had learned he had picked up in the streets of Leicester. Now, they had met not merely to celebrate an anniversary, but to reconsecrate themselves to God. The longer and the better we have served Him, the higher becomes our ideal, and the more conscious are we of our need of Him. Be not afraid to put yourselves into your sermons. Sometimes we are tempted to keep back something good—for if we put in all, what shall we have left for the next time? No; no. Throw your best, your all, into every address; and rest assured that as you give out a fresh supply will flow in.

Then one most important essential in service is to keep ourselves clean. As in hospitals they keep the surgical instruments in carbolic acid, lest when used any germ of disease be found on them, so let us be kept holy unto God. "Be ye clean that bear the vessels of the Lord."

There is no text in the Revised Version which has been more blessed to me than that in Rom. xv. 18, in which the Apostle says, "I will not dare to speak of any things save those which Christ wrought through me for the obedience of the Gentiles." There are three sorts of men:—Those who work for God; those who work with God; and those through whom God works. Which are you? I was at the first long enough; the second was better; but the third is best of all, and I would not go back for worlds. Let God work through you; let his word flow through you; be you a channel for his grace; seek to be open at both ends—upward, that God may flow in, outward that the blessing may flow to men. What peace, what joy to realise—it is not my work to worry about, but his work: let Him carry it out as He will.

You need such power, for you have peculiar difficulties at present. On the one side you have the publicans, who naturally are not in the best of tempers just at the moment; and, on the other hand, the sceptics glorying in new and telling arguments from the latest Christian books. You want to be Holy Ghost men; you must carry the Holy Ghost Book, the Bible illuminated by the Spirit of God; and you must remember that He Himself is your best ally in reaching the hearts of men.

A few warm words from Mr. W. H. Seagram, and the proceedings concluded. The Open-air Mission Male Choir sang several pieces, and lent brightness to the gathering.

MISSIONARIES FOR PERU.

The Missionary prayer meeting at Harley House on Friday afternoon last took the form of a special gathering, for the purpose of bidding farewell to Messrs. A. R. Stark, F. J. Peters, and J. L. Jarrett, who have been trained in Harley College, and are going out as a pioneer band to carry the glad tidings to this needy country, which, with its three millions of people, has only one Protestant pastor within its borders. These three brethren have had Peru specially laid upon their hearts, and they are going out in faith, unconnected with any society, but assured that He who has led them to consecrate their lives to South America, and who cares for that Continent's needy millions, will not fail to open to them a door of entrance there.

At the meeting on Friday they were specially commended to God in prayer, there being present, in addition to the band of Harley students and deaconesses from Doric Lodge, a number of friends from different London centres, including some from the East End, among whom these brethren have been working during their sojourn at Harley House, and to whom they have greatly endeared themselves, as well as to all their fellow-students and those connected with the Institute. Dr. Grattan Guinness presided over the meeting, and after prayer and praise and a few well-chosen words by Rev. J. S. Morris, the senior tutor of the college, Miss Lucy E. Guinness gave an address on existing missionary work in the neglected continent of South America, and the need for many more labourers for this vast region. In a few simple, touching, earnest words the three brethren told of the way the Lord had spoken to their hearts, and laid the needs of Peru upon them, and of their determination to go at his bidding, looking to Him for all the needed grace, guidance, and help.

They left for New York on the following morning by the s.s. Chester from Southampton Docks, where they hope to find an open door for pleading the needs of South America, and to go forth to their distant sphere, possibly in connection with some of the churches whose pastors were formerly students of the Institute; possibly in association with one of the American Mission Boards, or in some other way as the Lord may guide.

Full and interesting details of this proposed effort are given in the April number of Regions Beyond, which can be had from Messrs. Partridge (3d.), or from Harley House, as also in a pamphlet just issued entitled "The Land of the Incas," by Miss Guinness, which can be had from Harley House for 9d. a dozen, post free.

We specially commend these brethren going forth in the name of the Lord to Him, and to the prayers and fellowship of his people. Any communication upon the subject of the work, or for the brethren themselves, may be addressed care of Dr. H. Grattan Guinness, Harley House, Bow, E. E. A. T.

WHEN OUR BOYS get to a certain age we let them drift and go to the bad. There is a hole somewhere in the net of the church work where we lose hold of our lads at such an important time. This must be remedied.—Rev. L. H. Gwynne, Nottingham.

"THE LORD'S RETURN."

"The world's history as told in Scripture," says a thoughtful writer, "may be described as a series of God's epiphanies and man's apostasies." In these days, when events social, moral, and ecclesiastical seem heading up towards the last great apostasy, it is well that the "glorious appearing of our Lord and Saviour" is ever more prominently kept before his Church. Such was the object of the meetings held on 11th and 12th inst. at various parish-rooms and mission-halls in Clifton.

On Tuesday afternoon, the chair being taken by Rev. Horace Meyer, Rev. J. Gossett-Tanner (vicar of Emmanuel Church, Maida Hill) gave an address on "The State of Professing Christians at the Coming of Christ." In the evening the subjects were "Signs of our Lord's Coming" and "The Coming Antichrist," when Canon Fausset, of York, spoke with his usual force and animation.

On Wednesday afternoon the same speakers gave addresses on "Signs of the Consummation of our Age" and "Spiritualism Paving the Way for the False Prophet." The same evening, at Clifton parish church, Rev. J. Gossett Tanner took for his subject "Christ on the Throne of David"; and on Thursday, at 11.30, Canon Fausset closed the series with a lucid and Scriptural sermon on "The Millennial Kingdom."

Thus the whole field of prophecy referring to our Lord's return and its effects on the Church, the Jewish nation, and apostate Christendom, was surveyed, not controversially, but in a general and practical manner. It must have repaid those who arranged the meetings to see them not only attended by numbers, but by earnest Christians of all denominations.

On Wednesday, at the Memorial Hall (Royal York-crescent), Rev. Nevile Sherbrooke invited to breakfast fifty or sixty of the neighbouring clergy, and very few were absent. Amongst those present were Bishops Hellmuth and Marsden, Revs. H. Dening, Hugh Falloon, James Ormiston, F. Bishop, A. B. Hutchinson (late C.M.S. Mission, Japan), and others. Canon Fausset, basing his remarks on Rev. i. 1—3, pointed out that as the prophecies, like the histories of Scripture, illustrate the grace and righteousness of God, the prayerful study of prophecy cannot but have a sanctifying effect. As the sixteenth century was marked by the Reformation of European Churches, the eighteenth century by a great spiritual revival in Evangelical bodies, so was the close of the nineteenth century marked by meetings for prayer and the study of Holy Scripture in order to promote personal consecration and readiness for the Lord's return. The Church of God had in all ages been a witness for truth in the godless world. Whenever, forgetting her Divine mission, she had formed unholy alliances with the world (as Judah and Israel with heathen powers) the world had become, in God's hand, her chastiser. Our Lord Jesus, having refused the kingdoms of the world when offered by Satan, will hereafter rule them with undisputed sway; and if the Church of Christ will in like manner refuse the dazzling bribes of worldly glory, she shall at her Lord's return reign with Him over the nations. After the address prayer was offered by Revs. H. Dening and H. Falloon, a hymn was sung, and the meeting closed with the Benediction.

THE HOMERTON BOOK DISTRIBUTION SOCIETY is in need of religious periodicals, books, etc., so that its work of gratuitous distribution of religious literature in the homes of the people of Homerton, which has been actively carried on for the last ten years, may be continued. The society is now distributing between 500 and 600 books, etc., weekly, besides which a large number of tracts are sent out. Our funds are small, being subscribed solely by the members of Mr. C. Button's Bible-class.

A REST FOR CHRISTIAN WORKERS has been conducted for the past five years by Mrs. Bell, at 5, Alexandra-terrace, Cliff Town, Southend-on-Sea. Numerous visitors testify to the comfort and cheerfulness of the "Rest," as well as to the benefit derived from the bracing air of this delightful resort. The improvements effected throughout the town have rendered this place attractive and popular; whilst its nearness to London and the moderate charges at which Christian workers can be accommodated make a holiday possible to many who could not otherwise afford a change of air. Mrs. Bell is anxious to extend the premises, which are not large enough to meet demands.

MR. GOOCH AT WEST NORWOOD.

Opening of Lansdowne Hall.

In the most auspicious circumstances, the new hall in which Pastor Fuller Gooch is to conduct his ministry, for a season at any rate, was opened by two public meetings on Wednesday last week. The iron structure is at once pleasing to the eye and comfortable in its accommodation. In addition to the main hall, there are accessory rooms for varied forms of church work, so that the pastor and his helpers mean to carry on a well-equipped and aggressive effort for the spiritual well-being of the neighbourhood. The meetings held on Wednesday afternoon and evening were largely attended, and the success of Mr. Gooch's independent ministry is well assured from a numerical point of view.

In the afternoon Mr. J. E. Mathieson presided, and spoke some warm words of sympathy and goodwill to Pastor Gooch in this new sphere of service. Addresses were also given by Rev. S. Wilkinson, Dr. Bullinger, Col. Morton, and Rev. James Douglas; all these friends expressed their high esteem of Mr. Gooch, and their cordial approval of the unsectarian work on which he had entered. Pastor Gooch, in an interesting address, gave utterance to his heartfelt thanksgiving to God for past leading and blessing on an untried path.

Lord Radstock presided over the evening assembly, and was surrounded on the platform by a number of brethren who had come to show sympathy. Other friends sent letters expressing regret at not being able to be present.

In a short statement of principles and plans, Pastor Gooch said that they would gather around the name of Christ without reference to party names, or to any distinctive name whatever. Their sole objects, as given in a little doctrinal manual he had prepared, he declared to be "the glory of God in the maintenance of revealed truth, the union of believers as members of the one body, and the salvation of souls." Touching on matters financial, Mr. Gooch said the new hall and its appointments, with freehold site, had cost between £2300 and £2400; towards this he had received £1700. It was not intended to have pew rents or to make formal collections in the hall; for the support of the ministry they would depend on the freewill offerings of the people by collections taken at the doors. God had marvellously helped them in the past, and they would trust Him for the future. They prayed that He would give many tokens of blessing in the salvation of souls. The thankful nature of Mr. Gooch's statement constrained the chairman to suggest that at that stage the doxology should be sung; this was very heartily done.

A number of excellent addresses followed, in which cordial good wishes for Mr. Gooch were mingled with practical exhortations to the assembled company. Dr. Neatby spoke on the rewards promised (Rev. ii. 17) to overcomers. Dr. McKilliam dwelt on the spiritual character of the true Church, and the need of separation from the evil world. Mr. C. R. Hurditch said that such work as was being carried on at Norwood was a continuation of the Acts of the Apostles. Mr. R. C. Morgan said he believed that some of the simplest and purest and best work of the Church is being done in such halls as this. He was glad to believe that Mr. Gooch's aim would be to feed the saints and to win souls. A great need of the day is the perfecting of the saints for the work of ministering, and this would be attended to under Mr. Gooch's pastorate.

The speaking closed with a delightfully clear and simple gospel appeal from the Chairman, based on the words "Take every man a lamb."

Malagasy Slaves.

Writing from 50, Leamington-terrace, Edinburgh, Mrs. Peill, of Madagascar, says:

I have opened an account at the Royal Bank here, for "Redemption of Malagasy Slaves," with the money received since the £20, which was forwarded to Miss Bliss for Rajamaria. It has £8 16s. 6d. to credit, and £5 16s. 6d. from Jamaica will bring it to £14 13s., which will go a good way towards redeeming Rajamaria's sister, if that be decided upon by the subscribers. We are constantly coming across cases of hardship endured by poor slaves, often very pathetic ones, in Madagascar, and a small fund to use at our discretion for their help would be a great boon in many instances.

HARROW GREEN, EAST LONDON.

This neighbourhood is situate midway between Stratford and Leytonstone. It is densely populated, the people being mainly poor and migratory. The "Welcome" Mission and Ragged School, an unsectarian effort in Cathall-road, has done an excellent work since its establishment ten years ago, and its usefulness is extending in various ways. For the past five months a room has been open each evening in the week in which several young women have met and found comfort and companionship which are seldom afforded in their own homes. These meetings have been superintended by ladies who have the moral and spiritual welfare of the girls at heart, and will, it is believed, prove a great blessing to the district.

The following incident gives some idea of the spiritual darkness of some of those who are brought under the influence of these meetings. A few weeks ago a girl in conversation with one of these ladies referred to her "young man." She was asked if she loved him very much. "Yes," she said, "I do," and pulling up the sleeve of her dress said, "I've got his name up here. Some time ago I was very ill, and thought I was going to die, so I had his name 'pricked in' on my arm. I thought I should like to take his name with me!"

The building in which the mission is carried on consists of a "converted" public-house containing seven rooms. The largest—probably at one time the billiard room—is occupied by the boys' school; that which was formerly the bar is used for the girls' classes; a large room on the ground floor is set apart for the young women's class; another for the infants; the remaining three rooms being utilised as class-rooms. For some time there appeared little result from the efforts of the teachers; in fact, it is said that the display of rowdyism frequently made it impossible to impart instruction. Still, the earnest labourers toiled on, and continued in prayer, until "showers of blessing" fell abundantly. Some of the youths who had caused the teachers much sorrow were now heard to exclaim, "What must I do to be saved?" The burdened hearts were led to Jesus by those who had long prayed for their salvation; and, confessing their sins, they entered into eternal life.

Some of those converted at the "Welcome" are now earnestly working for God; some have crossed the river of death; but it is a most gratifying fact that three are now engaged in the place of their new birth in pointing others to "the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world."

The annual meeting of the mission was held last week, presided over by Rev. J. T. Dunn, of the Metropolitan Tabernacle. Messrs. H. E. Lester, J.P., G. J. Hoon, and F. Bennett were amongst the speakers, and sacred songs were rendered by Miss Gillingham. The mission is heartily commended by Rev. Colmer B. Symes, B.A., Rev. J. Bradford, both of Leytonstone, and other ministers. The secretary is Mr. George Gain, 1, Fairlop-terrace, Leytonstone, who will be happy to forward the annual report to any who would like to become acquainted with this effort.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR.

The annual meeting of the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavour at Corsham was held last week.

A Young People's Society of Christian Endeavour has recently been formed at North Shields, under the presidency of Rev. C. Stanley. One good result is the organisation of a "Mission Bank" from its members, and on Sunday, March 26, the Central Hall, Stephenson-street, was opened for weekly evangelistic services in connection with it. Happy results have already appeared.

A ten days' mission of the Chester societies (eleven in number) has been conducted by Mr. Henry Thorne. This is probably the first United Gospel Mission under the auspices of local societies of Christian Endeavour in England. The services on the Sundays were held in different churches—Methodist, Baptist, Congregationalist, Presbyterian—and on week evenings in the Music Hall. Afternoon Bible-readings were held in the Presbyterian church, and were well attended. Over 100 persons, principally associate members, entered the inquiry room. On Good Friday a "Sunrise" prayer-meeting was held in the Methodist New Connexion Chapel, when upwards of 150 were present.

EDINBURGH FREE BREAKFASTS.

The annual meeting in connection with the Edinburgh Sunday Free Breakfast Mission was held last week in the Mission building, Old Fish-market Close, High Street—Rev. Dr. J. H. Wilson presiding. There was a large attendance.

The Chairman said that the report was one of the most interesting, he thought, that had ever been issued since the movement began. It showed that the mission was as necessary as ever, and that the workers were as enthusiastic and self-denying and devoted as ever. He was afraid that so long as the public-houses were kept open there would always be material for the Sabbath morning free breakfast. Perhaps one movement most likely to bring that to an end would be something like the carrying of the bill at present before Parliament, for the shutting up of the public-houses. Until they could go the whole length—have no drink either made or sold—and that was far in the distance, he was afraid—they might make up their mind to have their important work to do.

Mr. Robert Wilson (superintendent) submitted the annual report, from which it appeared that the attendance for the past year at the Sabbath morning breakfasts in the Drill Hall, Forest-road, was: men, 19,296; women, 8473; children, 16,262: total 44,031. A noticeable feature, as compared with the previous year, was stated to be the great increase in the attendance of men—19,296, as against 16,501—which told of widespread distress from want of work. Upwards of 350 children were in attendance during the winter months at the Sabbath school, under forty teachers. Reference was also made in the report to other schemes carried on by the mission.

Rev. Arthur Gordon, St. Andrew's Parish Church, said that unfortunately people in Scotland were so constituted that it required a lot of driving to take the idea out of their head that a certain standard of dress was necessary before they would be welcomed in the place where rich and poor met together—the church. He did not mean that there should be no self-respect, but only that because a standard of dress could not be reached attendance at church should not be neglected. Among Roman Catholics such an idea in regard to dress did not prevail. Until, however, the thought as to dress was removed, the mission would have work to do. The mission was doing a splendid work, dredging into the depths, getting hold of people in the lodging-houses, and people that the ministry of all their churches did not succeed in reaching.

From the printed report of the mission (which has been sustained for eighteen years without intermission) we observe that in addition to the relief work among the young, there are mothers' meetings, Bible-classes, Band of Hope, lodging-house work, savings bank, etc. The address of Mr. R. Wilson, superintendent and treasurer, is 3, Queen-street, Edinburgh.

THE GREATEST FIGHT IN THE WORLD.—This address, delivered by the late Mr. Spurgeon, is being translated into Italian for the Baptist Society at Turin, with a view to its circulation in Italy. Some help is needed towards the expense; fuller information may be had from Signor E. Martinucci, 5, Eastern Quadrant, Brighton.

HOXTON CHRISTIAN INSTITUTE.—Earl Compton, M.P., paid a visit to the Christian Institute, Hoxton Market, N.E., on Saturday afternoon, to open the new Working Lads' Guild. After visiting the coffee bar, soup kitchen, baths, and workshop, his lordship proceeded to the large hall, which was crowded with friends of the movement, and the lads of the guild. The guild superintendent, Mr. Hubbard, read a report of the work and objects of the guild, which had enrolled 130 lads, and started a gymnasium, reading and recreation rooms, night school, cricket club, library, Bible classes, etc., the subscription being one penny per week. Lord Compton expressed his lively interest and admiration for the work, which it was almost incredible to think was being managed entirely by volunteers. He addressed some kindly words to the lads, entreating them to avoid the three peculiar evils of their youth—drink, gambling, and immorality. Mr. Robey, treasurer, announced that £10 had been promised towards the debt of £150, which had to be raised very quickly in order to avail of a promised £100. Further particulars may be had of the hon. sec., Mr. W. A. Procktor, at the Institute.

LEGALISED VICE IN INDIA.

Dear Sir,—A question has been asked to-day in the House of Commons concerning the iniquitous Cantonment Acts in India—Acts involving the full system of the legalising of vice. The fact, known to us for some time past, will shortly be known to the public generally, that this system has been carried out continuously, in spite of the resolution of Parliament in 1888, based on the expressed conviction of the people of the United Kingdom.

I wish to make an appeal, with your permission, to your readers—to all who fear God and respect his laws—and I am convinced that this appeal will not be in vain. I ask that they will use their voice and influence, in every way that it may be open to them to do so, against this great wickedness, and I pray that their hearts may be moved as the heart of one man.

My appeal should have, I hope, some weight, as coming straight from the heart of one who was called of God nearly twenty-five years ago to take courage and stand in the breach, when as yet the country was scarcely aware of that evil thing which, by being legalised, had come to be acknowledged as a necessary and an integral part of our social and national life. I am now growing old, and feeling the effects of years of arduous work; I am also bereft of the support of the noble and beloved fellow-worker and companion of my life, my husband. I am unable to work actively as formerly, but if anything could renew my youth, and give me hope to be able to make yet another effort, it would be the terribly vitalizing force of the indignation which I feel against the Anglo-Indian and military authorities who have so contemptuously and arrogantly ignored the mandate of the British Parliament, and added to my deep compassion for the oppressed native women of India, of whose treatment by the Anglo-Indian Government the public will shortly be made aware.

A Departmental Committee, as you are no doubt aware, has now been appointed, at the instigation of our devoted friends in Parliament, Mr. Stansfeld and Mr. Stuart, "to inquire into the rules, regulations, and practice in Indian Cantonments and elsewhere with regard to prostitutes—in order to ascertain and report how far they accord with the Resolution of the House of Commons, 5th June, 1888." The Department has undertaken to afford all facilities for the production of evidence, whether of witnesses, papers, or records; that the Committee will report to the Secretary of State; that the business will be expedited so as to dispose of it and obtain the judgment of the House of Commons during the present Session; and that the proceedings will not be public, but all the evidence is to be laid before the House of Commons, with the Report.

Judging from past experience, it is to be feared that, in spite of the engagement above expressed, there may be delay, and a dragging on of the inquiry, unless those who are upholders of the condemned system can be made to feel that there is a serious and even threatening weight of aroused public feeling—especially religious feeling—in the country, ready to manifest itself in an agitation which these persons are not at all willing or able to meet. Hence my appeal to the Christian press and Christian people of our land.

My own private conviction is strong that a Parliamentary victory only, won by the courage and skilful strategy of our friends in the House, cannot have the full moral and spiritual force of such a victory vitalised by a great wave of expressed conviction and determination on the part of the people outside.

A powerful expression, once more, of the people's will on this subject is much to be desired. The arousing and expressing of that will is, in itself, a purifying and elevating influence; and the sound of the voice of the people penetrates to other lands, and appeals to other consciences throughout the world, more powerfully than a mere act of justice on the part of the legislature, although such an act is the grand and needful crowning and seal of the people's will. Hence, I pray God that the hearts of the people may once more be deeply moved on this question.

It is a great and even terrible question, sir; for the facts which will shortly be before the public, constitute an overwhelming element in what I must frankly call the misgovernment of India. No Government can stand which ignores the first principles of morality. The outward forms of government may be good but where such abominations as the opium and drink traffics and organised harlotry are sanctioned by a Government, there can be no health, moral or physical, in the unhappy people so misgoverned.

The question before us is therefore the question of our great Indian Empire, of its near future, and of its ultimate destiny. Catastrophe and bitter chastisement may be at hand. But God is merciful, and will hear the cry of his people if—awakened to their full responsibility in this matter—they will now prove themselves strong in the strength of the Lord, in protest and in action.

Yours, on behalf of justice and of the oppressed,
April 17. Josephine E. Butler.

P.S.—Your prayers will not be wanting for our leaders in Parliament, who in the past have set aside, and are again setting aside, all considerations of personal or party interest, in their fidelity to this just cause.

EVANGELISM IN AUSTRIA.

Mr. P. W. Reinmuth and his wife, whose work in Austria we have several times brought before our readers, write:—"Mr. W. McCluer, 6, Balfour-road, Highbury New Park, London, N., has offered to fill the place left vacant in the ranks of our helpers by the death of Mr. Gawin Kirkham, in receiving and forwarding contributions for the evangelistic work we have been privileged to carry on for over twelve years in various parts of this vast and neglected empire.

"We should like to remind kind friends that the work is not only being continued, but is increasing on all sides. Our centre is Gratz, the capital of Styria, 120,000 inhabitants, from whence we carry on a system of itinerant evangelisation, correspondence, and distribution of Gospel literature. In Gratz itself, we have two Bible nurses tending the Protestant sick poor in their houses, and four resident patients in our little Home. We also have weekly Bible-readings, singing, and prayer-meetings, Dorcas Society, Y.M.C.A. and Y.W.C.A. gatherings, a monthly missionary meeting, and some rescue work in connection with our little Home for working girls and servants.

"As all these meetings have to be held privately, we are under the necessity of building a house to accommodate them; hired premises sufficiently commodious cannot be had for such purposes. Some kind friends have helped us with advances at low interest, and we have purchased a very suitable site. If God will, we commence building next month, one Christian gentleman having already given the first £100 of the £1000 required. We desire earnestly to be able as soon as possible to refund the advances, so as not to be burdened with interest, but to be free to extend the work as God opens doors."

Communications may be addressed to 28, Leechgasse, Gratz, Styria, Austria.

ASIATIC LANGUAGES.

An important meeting of the Victoria Institute took place on Monday, at Adelphi Terrace, the president, Sir Gabriel Stokes, Bart., in the chair. After the election of several new members and associates, Major C. R. Conder, R.E., D.C.L., read a paper on "The Comparison of Asiatic Languages," in which he dealt with the ultimate relationship of the great divisions of Asiatic speech, forming the separate families called Aryan, Semitic, and Mongolic, and the affinities of the oldest monumental languages in the Akkadian and the Egyptian. After describing the accepted principles of internal comparison of languages in each group, Major Conder urged that the roots, to which philologists have referred all words in each family, run—in a large number of cases—through all these families, probably indicating a common source of language. He proceeded to draw results as to the primitive condition and original home of the Asiatics, and pointed out that Egyptian was grammatically to be classed with Semitic languages, and Akkadian with Mongolic speech. A comparative list of some 4000 ancient words, from the languages in question, accompanied the paper, which was listened to throughout by a large and appreciative audience, several of whom took part in the discussion which followed.

A CHILD'S FANCIES may be fleeting as the clouds that veil the skies; but its capacities for receiving and retaining moral truths are as abiding as the heavens which are above the clouds.—W. A. Simcox.

JEWS IN PERSIA.

Rev. Charles Harvey Stileman, of Julfa, writing to the April issue of The Messenger, quarterly paper of the Emmanuel Missionary Union, Wimbledon, announces the baptism of a Jew named Benjamin. He says: "Though he has been much persecuted, he stands firm as another witness for Christ among the Jews of Ispahan. A week before his baptism the enemies of the Truth made a great effort to put a stop to the work: a crowd of Mohammedans, instigated probably by the unbelieving Jews (Acts xiv. 2), assembled outside the little room in which I was conducting the service, and one of them, a Seyyid (i.e. descendant of Mohammed), who brandished a spear, was even threatening to kill me, and abusing everybody in the most unmeasured terms.

"The Jews, some seventy or eighty in number, who had been listening to the Gospel, dispersed in great terror, and two or three of the converts came over to Julfa in the evening, to tell Dr. Bruce that they were in great danger, and did not dare to remain in their own homes. Dr. Bruce informed the Governor what had happened, and he at once took the matter up, and gave orders that our work was not to be interfered with. About thirty Jews came to hear the Gospel the following Saturday, but a week later, in consequence of Benjamin's baptism, the Rabbis succeeded in keeping them all away. I had, however, a very happy hour of reading and prayer with the converts, and the next week some twelve or fifteen of the other Jews again joined us; and on the last Saturday of the year (Dec. 31) there were again about thirty present, which was decidedly encouraging, as the Rabbis had apparently tried very hard to keep them away.

"Since then, I regret to say, they have again been prevented from coming, but by going regularly on Saturdays to read with the converts the door will be left open, so to speak, for the others to return by degrees, and in the meantime it is a very great cause of thankfulness that for more than six months we have been able to preach Christ to his own nation after the flesh."

AUSTRALIAN ABORIGINES.

Dear Sir,—Knowing that many of your readers are interested in Mr. Gribble's work, I enclose a letter from my son, who is now in charge of the Bellenden Ker Mission. My husband has been ill for the last six months; malarial fever and pleurisy, brought on by over-work and hard living, have culminated in lung disease (tuberculosis), and the doctor gives no hope of a permanent recovery.

If you would kindly publish the letter in The Christian, Mr. Gribble will feel that, though he is laid aside from active work, the aborigines and their real needs are before the public. May the Great Father touch the hearts of some of his people to support this work, which needs so much and has so few helpers.

Yours truly,
Mary A. Gribble.

Upper Silver-street, Manickville, Sydney, March 4.

BELLENDEN KER MISSION.

The letter by Mr. Gribble, jun., is dated Jan. 11. He says:—

"You will see that I am again at the mission. I stayed a week in the hospital bad with malarial fever and rheumatism; they wanted me to stay another week, but I was anxious to get back to the station. There are between fifty and sixty natives camped here. They are all very quick at learning, the majority of them knowing the alphabet and can count up to ten, and they all can sing 'Jesus loves me.' I have an hour's school every afternoon from one to two.....If I had not been laid up I would have had the little timber I still require, and thus I could have finished the school, but I am stopped for the want of a few feet of weather-boards and the flooring boards.

"I am in great want of small clothing, for boys especially. I have about forty women's dresses still left, but no children's clothing at all. Boys I cannot provide for, as the makers of the clothing sent seem to forget that there are likely to be boys here. I am still very weak, and cannot do half as much work as I could before.

"The mission has changed since you left on both sides of the creek: there are two villages or clusters of native huts, and coming into the bay in the boat, they look just like African villages. Cairns at the present time is deserted by the natives, and when they go there they only stay a couple of days; then back they come. Mr. Chand, of the Customs, was out here, and was greatly surprised at such a number of children. He told me when he left, that he would do all that he could for the mission in Cairns.

CHARING CROSS VIGILANCE WORK.

The report of the Charing Cross Vigilance and Rescue Committee abundantly proves—if proof were necessary—two facts, viz., the need for such work, and its efficacy. The operations of the committee are embraced under two heads, Rescue and Repression. The Rescue department, carried on by a committee of ladies, has been instrumental, in the five years of its existence, in accomplishing a great work amongst the unfortunate girls of the district. In April, 1888, a shelter was opened where young women could be received and cared for, and since the home was established 277 persons have passed under the care of the matron, Miss King.

The report truly says it is impossible to "accurately tabulate the results. We trust that in many cases which we are compelled to record as unsatisfactory an impression may have been made, which will bear fruit in due time. We firmly believe that earnest sympathy and active efforts are never altogether lost, and we want to carry on the work patiently, hopefully, and trustfully, believing that God will give his blessing to those who go out to seek and save the lost."

The department charged with the Repression work has pursued its course during the past year with diligence and greater success than in any previous period. The list of convictions obtained number 50, the fines inflicted amount to £497, and the punishments awarded evil-doers make a total of seventeen and a-half months imprisonment with hard labour. In certain cases the convictions were obtained by the vestry, which had been moved to action by the committee, and it is by no means the least valuable part of the committee's work when they are able to stir up the duly constituted authorities.

In addition to the definite results above referred to the committee are able to report that "already a different feeling on the subject is spreading over the district, encouraging to the workers and repellant to the promoters of evil." The offices of the committee are at St. Martin's Church Vestry Hall, Charing Cross.

"ONE MORE YEAR'S WORK."

Under this title Miss Child has issued a little paper giving an account of the "Welcome Home," which, she says, is "a Christian Temperance Home" for seamen, where they can be led away from bad influences. We praise God for the many during the past year who found this to be like a haven sheltered from the storms without. The coffee room is also an important factor, and has proved a great blessing to many. The principal work of dealing with souls is carried on in the nightly meetings. What a record will be found in heaven of meetings of prodigals with their friends—of people of affluence and position with those on a "lee shore"—or (in the very lowest scale of society) of the Saviour with sinners of all classes and nationalities. Our "Book-bag Mission" proved last year a great blessing. Any sailor who leaves the Port of London can receive, free of charge, a bag of good books and papers. Another important item is the "safe keeping of the money" earned by our sailors. In addition very many letters have been sent to sailors, and received from them.

From the very origin of the work, an indispensable item has been that of doing as much as possible for the destitute seamen, who need our sympathy even more than most people are aware of. Many of them arrive in this port perfect strangers, when they are captured by landsharks, by whom they are fleeced, and afterwards left in a miserable plight. Thus it has been known in many cases that men have become utterly destitute in a few days, yea, less than that. We have even known men, who came home after having been away for months, and having been paid off with £40 or £50, losing their all within a few minutes of receiving it. In order to help such as these, we have been able, through the kindness of sympathetic friends, to give free suppers and any relief that was necessary. Communications to be addressed, Miss R. Child, Sailors' "Welcome Home," 173, St. George's-street, Ratcliff Highway, E.

ROBERT LUSH lived with his mother, who kept a little shop for stationery. His first place was an errand boy in a solicitor's office. He cultivated diligence, uprightness, and an obliging disposition, and he lived to be Sir Robert Lush, one of the Lord Justices in Her Majesty's Court of Appeal.

WHEN A PASTOR is vexed with the cares that come to him in his work, or weary with its disappointments, or sad at heart at the indifference or inconsistencies that he meets with, let him come into contact with the bright-hearted sunny-faced boys and girls that have always a welcome for him, and he will soon learn that the greatest joy and hope of his work lies in his ministry to the young.—Benjamin Clarke.

THE Y.M.C.A.

Mr. J. A. Noble has resigned the secretaryship of the Leeds Association.

The Geneva Y.M.C.A. is about to build an institute which will cost 240,000 francs. Already more than one-half this sum has been collected.

The Sunday Afternoon Straight Talks at Exeter Hall have lately been well attended; while the Sunday Evenings for the People have proved most encouraging.

Rev. H. L. Hastings has been giving in Ottawa telling lectures to young men on the inspiration of the Bible, the influence of the Bible, and the condition of the world without Christ.

A large congregation assembled in St. Mark's Church, Wolverhampton, on the evening of the 12th inst., when the Archdeacon of London preached on behalf of the recently formed association in that town.

At the close of Mr. Kennedy's Hull mission, a testimony and praise meeting was held, addressed by Rev. J. F. Simmonds, Mr. J. Willis, Rev. J. C. Brown, and others. Evidence appeared of a great and abiding blessing.

The Y.M.C.A. at Bury is forming a District Tract Society, in order, during the summer, to visit the villages and fairs in the locality. The secretary would be thankful for supplies of books, papers, and tracts suitable for such work.

Steps have been taken for the revival of the work of the Lincoln Association, and a new general secretary is to be appointed. Mr. Hind Smith, on behalf of the National Council, has co-operated in the effort that is being made.

On Sunday week, a special sermon to young men, under the auspices of the Rochester Y.M.C.A., was preached in the Wesleyan Chapel by Rev. M. P. Gilbert, who chose as his subject, "Esau, who sold his birthright for a morsel of meat."

The annual meeting of the Wakefield Association was held last week, and was attended as speakers by Messrs. E. J. Kennedy and D. A. Black. There was a large audience, and a high spiritual tone pervaded the meeting, as the result of which half a dozen young fellows were led to decision for Christ.

The committee of the Lydd Y.M.C.A. are arranging their programme for the summer, and ask prayer that God may abundantly bless all the meetings. Hundreds of soldiers who are encamped in the town during the summer months have the special opportunity of attending the Y.M.C.A. gatherings, and great effort is exerted to reach and benefit them.

The German Y.M.C.A. celebrated its eighth anniversary in their association rooms, 28, Finsbury-square, E.C., on Thursday last. Colonel J. F. Morton, Mildmay, presided. The president, Mr. J. P. Werner, welcomed the friends present. After which the general secretary, Mr. W. Müller, gave the report of the work done during the expired year, which was both interesting and encouraging, and gave clear evidence that the work was steadily progressing.

The building now being erected for the Chicago Y.M.C.A. will cost about £145,000, and will be one of the finest and best-equipped in the world. The first seven stories of this great building will be used almost exclusively for Association work, and the upper five stories will be rented for offices. On the first floor there will be constructed a great swimming-tank. When the new building is completed, the Association will introduce a very much wider range of work than its present accommodations would permit.

The thirty-seventh annual meeting of Chelsea and Brompton Y.M.C.A. was held at the rooms of the association on the 11th inst., Mr. F. A. Bevan, presiding, who gave a very earnest and practical address on the work of the year, and of the need of all doing their utmost in forwarding the work. An eloquent address followed by the Rev. W. Muncaster, the recently-appointed minister of Trevor Congregational Chapel. The report of the association speaks very well of the continued interest in the Bible Studies held from week to week, and of the blessing attending the Gospel services carried on. There is a deficit, however, of £14 in the balance-sheet, which the committee are desirous of clearing off.

Says The Association News, the Aldersgate-street organ:—Notwithstanding the fact that the days are now lengthening, members are reminded that the Monday Evening Gospel Meeting is a permanent fixture amongst our Association engagements. During the past two or three weeks the attendance has shown some signs of falling off; and this has doubtless been caused by a somewhat decreased attendance of workers. It cannot be too frequently stated that the success of these meetings depends upon the presence and energy of the workers' band. We most cordially invite all Christian young men anxious to take part in the special work of seeking to win their fellow young men for Jesus Christ, to enrol themselves as workers in connection with this meeting. The Workers' Prayer Meeting is held at 7.30 p.m., after which slip distribution takes place.

IRISH NOTES.

The Presbyterian Orphan Society has added 208 children to its roll.

The anniversaries of the Wesleyan Missionary Society have been held throughout Ireland. About 200 centres were visited by the deputation.

Successful evangelistic services have been held at Derg by Rev. F. W. Gason, of Dublin, and at Magheragall, co. Antrim, by Rev. Geo. Garrett. In each case the results were very satisfactory.

The amount of work accomplished by the Irish branch of the Evangelical Alliance last year was very cheering, and did much towards bringing the various Churches into closer contact with each other.

The Belfast Town Mission, which employs about twenty agents, who paid during the past month nearly 5000 visits and which is doing an excellent and useful work, finds intemperance to be the great obstacle to its progress.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

The Aberdeen Licensing Bench have, during the past week, reduced the drink licences in that city by twenty-three.

Rev. Robert Reid, senior F.C. minister, Banchory, has died at the advanced age of eighty-two. He has filled the pastorate at Banchory since the disruption.

Mrs. Baeyertz has been holding a Gospel mission in Edinburgh, amid many tokens of large and fruitful interest. The meetings continue throughout this week.

Dr. McCosh, of Princeton, N.J., has invested £200 to provide a bursary for the scholar attaining the highest eminence at the Patna School, Ayrshire, his native county.

The Little Barefeet Fund in Glasgow is closed for the winter season. The "Amateur Vagrant" states that he has given relief to every deserving family who have applied to him.

The Free and U.P. Churches are suffering somewhat from divergent views on the question of Home Rule and the action of some who are taking a leading part in public agitation on the subject.

The Glasgow United Evangelistic Association has sustained its work during March with unusual interest and much blessing. The young men of the Bible Institute have been very helpful in the Bethany Hall work.

At the closing session of the U.P. College in Edinburgh Rev. Dr. Black, Moderator of the Synod, gave an address on the relation of science to revelation. He maintained that Nature and the Bible are both revelations of God, and they cannot be contradictory; but the domain of the Bible is that of moral and spiritual truth.

Selected.

The real victory of faith is to trust God in the dark and through the dark. Let us be assured of this, that, as the lesson and rod are of his appointing, and that as his all-wise love has engineered the deep tunnels of trial on the heavenward road, He will never desert us during the discipline. The vital thing for us is not to deny and desert Him.—T. L. Cuyler, D.D.

Envy is acknowledged by all people to be the most ungenerous, base, and wicked passion that can enter into the heart of man. And is this a temper to be instilled, nourished, and established in the minds of young people? I know it is said that it is not envy but emulation that is intended to be awakened in the minds of young men. But this is vainly said. For when children are taught to bear no rival, and to scorn to be outdone by any of their age, they are plainly and directly taught to be envious. For it is impossible for anyone to have this scorn of being outdone, and this contention with rivals, without burning with envy against all those who seem to excel him or get any distinction from him. So that what children are taught is rank envy, and only covered with a name of a less odious sound.—William Law.

TO EACH SCHOOL IN QUEENSLAND there is attached about twenty acres of ground. The children are provided with tree roots and flower seeds every year. They plant them in their own plots, and they tend them with jealous pride.

The Book World.

Quaker Ballads and Lyrics, being selections from the poems of John Greenleaf Whittier. (E. Hicks, jun.) These compositions include beautiful lines on Barclay of Ury and Joseph Sturge, also a picture of "The Quaker of the Olden Time." The poem on "The Eternal Goodness" gives an essentially one-sided view of God.

The Most Certain Fact in History is the expressive title of a little volume of addresses on the resurrection of Christ, by Rev. T. P. Ring, rector of Hanley. (Skeffington and Son.) The aim of the author has been to supply a popular answer to infidel questions and theories, and he has succeeded in producing a book that admirably fulfils its high purpose.

The Arsenal of Devotion. By Paul Parfait. Translated from the French. (3s. 6d. Paternoster Press, 29, Paternoster-row.) Here are chapters on Romish superstitions in the very language of devotees and apologists. Scripture-instructed and reasonable people will conclude that the mere statement of Papal belief, or credulity, is a good argument against the entire system.

Palestine: Its Historical Geography, with Topographical Index and Maps. By Rev. Archibald Henderson, D.D. (2s. 6d. T. & T. Clark.) The second edition, revised, of this handbook is a comprehensive work, affording ample evidence throughout of careful compilation. The results of recent research have been admirably digested, and we cordially commend the book to the attention of students.

Herbert Fry's Royal Guide to the London Charities is a very useful handbook, edited by Mr. John Lane. The new edition, for 1891-92, shows in alphabetical order the names, date of foundation, address, objects, annual income, chief officials, etc., of a host of charitable organisations and missions. An introductory chapter deals with the greater medical charities of London. Provided with a full index, the "Guide" is an excellent work of reference. (1s. 6d. Chatto & Windus.)

Rome's Tactics; or, A Lesson for England from the Past. By the late Dean Goode. (3d. Nisbet & Co.) Rev. Dr. Bullinger writes a preface for, and edits with notes, this re-issue of a pamphlet of great controversial value, showing that the great object of Popery since the Reformation has been to subvert and ruin Protestant Churches and Protestant States, by dissension and troubles caused by disguised Popish agents. There is a brief notice of Rome's allies in the Church of England.

Christ the Central Evidence of Christianity. By the late Principal Cairns, D.D. (2s. 6d. Religious Tract Society.) Six of the valuable "Present Day Tracts" were from the pen of Dr. Cairns, whose decease twelve months ago many have not ceased to mourn. They are here brought together in a volume by themselves, and well worthy they are of the distinction. Devoted to evidential arguments of supreme importance, the pages have grip, weight, and force, and will, we trust, have many readers.

The Message of Quakerism to the Present Day, by Evelyn M. Noble. (2s. 9d. nett. E. Hicks, jun.) After developing a theory of inspiration which we are unable to endorse, the author writes very thoughtfully upon George Fox, first as seeker, then as preacher. There is an account of the Friends' "Book of Discipline," and a statement of the "Message" such as will interest many outside the Quaker community. The author's views would, in some points, require considerable modification if the Scripture standard were strictly applied.

The First Book of Kings, expounded by Archdeacon Farrar, is a substantial addition to the useful "Expositor's Bible" series. (7s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton.) In an introductory chapter, the Archdeacon goes out of his way, as it seems to us, to eulogise the higher criticism; but throughout the work, it is gratifying to observe, he treats its assumptions and conclusions with characteristic independence and caution. Though there are some sections in which we fail to follow the exposition, and occasional extravagances of statement that have a depreciative effect, taken as a whole the work will prove of real service to Bible students. The Archdeacon brings wide reading and keen insight to bear upon his analysis of history as well as upon his interpretation of Scripture.

Early Independents. In connection with the tercentenary commemoration of the martyrdoms of Barrowe, Greenwood, and Penry, a series of six instructive penny booklets has been issued by the Congregational Union of England and Wales, with the following titles:—The Church in the Prisons, by Professor W. F. Adeney, M.A.; Separatists in the Universities, by C. Silvester Horne, M.A.; Penry, the Welsh Independent, by H. Elvet Lewis; John Robinson, by J. Guinness Rogers, B.A.; The Pilgrim Fathers, by C. Ray Palmer, D.D.: and Congregationalism: Old and New, by John Brown, D.D. The general editor is Dr. Alexander Mackennal, who has also written the preface to a compact bound volume (2s.) entitled Early Independents, containing all the tracts, in large type and with numerous illustrations.

Jesus and the Resurrection: Expository Studies on St. John xx., xxi. By H. C. G. Moule, M.A., Principal of Ridley Hall, Cambridge. (Seeley & Co.) These devotional chapters give the substance of addresses delivered in 1874 and 1875 in Trinity College, Cambridge. "At that time," says the author, "I had the happiness, while resident in the College as one of the Deans, to welcome a gathering of undergraduate friends to my rooms on Sunday evenings. We sang a hymn together, and knelt in prayer, and then opened the Greek Testament for half-an-hour of exposition." These grand resurrection chapters were among the Scriptures studied, and Mr. Moule deserves our sincere thanks for having issued them in this compact little volume. The pages will greatly help an intelligent and devotional study of a specially attractive portion of the Gospel story.

Records of the Past, New Series, vol. vi. (4s. 6d. Bagster & Sons.) It is to be regretted that this volume closes a valuable series of translations into English of the ancient monuments of Egypt and Western Asia. Professor Sayce, the editor, has done good service in bringing these instructive texts under the notice of the generality of Bible students and archæologists, and it seems a pity that circumstances should only too fully justify his remark, in the preface, that "the curiosity excited by the first attempts at the decipherment of the Egyptian and Assyrian texts appears now to be satisfied, and even students of the Old Testament are contented to allow questions which bear directly on Biblical history and interpretation to be settled by the small but enthusiastic body of workers in the fields of Egyptian and Assyrian research." This final volume of the series is specially attractive. Its contents include historical inscriptions of Rameses III., letters from Phœnicia to the King of Egypt in the fifteenth century B.C., and a translation of the celebrated inscriptions of Sennacherib. There are helpful introductions to each subject, also many explanatory notes.

Some Lights of Science on the Faith. By Alfred Barry, D.D., D.C.L. (12s. 6d. Longmans, Green, & Co.) These are the Bampton Lectures for last year, and they deal with a large subject with a grasp and power worthy of their distinguished author. The Apostolic statement that "the law was our schoolmaster to bring us to Christ," is interpreted more broadly than Paul intended or the Galatians could have understood, and from this starting-point Bishop Barry examines the philosophic and other theories of past times and the present day, in order to show that their laws and tendencies point to Christ. His survey includes evolution and heredity; and he advances to investigate positions in social science and criticism in regard to the supernatural and Holy Scripture. The argument, which makes all these to anticipate and emphasise the Incarnate Christ and the work of human redemption, is singularly strong, and sustained with remarkable vigour. Hence the book has many attractions for advanced students of the evidences of Christianity. While, however, we recognise the substantiality and admire the style of the work, we cannot follow the author in many of his concessions to scientific speculation, and to Biblical criticism of the destructive and conjectural order. On the one hand, also, there is a species of sacramental teaching, and on the other an elaboration of univeralist doctrine.

Blots on the Prayer-Book, by Rev. Charles Stirling, M.A., late vicar of New Malden and Coombe, Surrey, is a reprint of a letter which originally appeared in The English Churchman. (1d. John Kensit.)

Mr. Cheyne Brady's booklet, The Near Return of the Lord Jesus Christ (1d. Partridge), has had a large circulation. It gives much Biblical teaching, clearly arranged, in a small compass; and we trust that it will be still more widely disseminated.

Evening Communion: A Divine Institution, and not a Modern Invention, by Rev. J. J. Beddow, vicar of Drypool, Hull, is a pamphlet which many will be glad to peruse just now. Though on a keenly controverted subject, it is not written in a contentious spirit. (2d. Shaw.)

How do I know What is the Law and What is the Gospel? is a halfpenny booklet of the "How do I know?" series, which have been circulated by hundreds of thousands. The question proposed is admirably answered, and the booklet is well suited for general distribution. (Nisbet.)

The Prospects of the Principles of the Reformation in the Church of England is a manly deliverance by Archdeacon Sinclair. It has been reprinted from The Churchman, and will be specially welcome to Evangelical members of the Church of England. (1d. Elliot Stock.)

A capital penny booklet on an important question is Shall Gambling Slay Us? by Rev. Joseph Posnett. (1d. T. Champness, "Joyful News" Depôt, Rochdale.) As an earnest and practical "appeal to the English and American people," this little illustrated book is calculated to do much good.

The Narrative of the Early Life and Conversion of Rev. James Adler is a twopenny booklet of great interest, issued from the Mildmay Mission to the Jews Book Store, Central Hall, Philpot-street, E. The story was well worth telling, and should have many readers. There is a portrait of Mr. Adler.

Thoughts about Sunday, by Bishop Ryle, is a very valuable little book, dealing with the institution, privileges, and due observance of the Day of Rest. The Bishop establishes the intimate connection between the sanctification of the Lord's Day and a healthy and vigorous Christianity. (3d. W. Hunt & Co.)

Snowdrop Letters, edited by Mrs. Arnold Watson, of Southwold, Sheffield, is a booklet containing wholesome talks with girls on Sweethearts, Old Maids, Dress, Books, and other homely topics. They were primarily addressed to teachers and "Snowdrop Band" workers; but they are calculated to prove helpful to young women in general (The Book Society, 28, Paternoster-row.)

Letters to the Editor.

THE LIBERATOR RELIEF FUND.

Sir,—In these days of financial dishonesty, when thousands are suffering through having lost the savings of a lifetime in an unsound investment, I think that those who have been mercifully preserved from loss of this kind should be very thankful. Accordingly, I send with this a cheque for £10 towards the Liberator Sufferers' Relief Fund, for which you kindly receive subscriptions. I intend it as a thank-offering for having been saved from bad investments.

It has occurred to me that there may be other readers of The Christian, who have similar reason to be thankful, and who, if the idea were presented to them, might like to send some help on the same ground.

Yours truly,

A Clergyman.

MISSIONARY SUPPORT.

Dear Sir,—I beg to offer a suggestion arising from the letter of a missionary in your issue of April 6, on the question of books for foreign missionaries. It might be worked most simply in connection with each particular society. For instance, many of your readers, no doubt, support the L.M.S. Would not one of them undertake to despatch books, given by other friends of the society, to the L.M.S. missionaries throughout the world in rotation? Your correspondent may, and I hope will, as a result of his letter, be the recipient of several books; but a rotatory system would be impartial to all: necessitating a single manager; or a careful arrangement between a few friends to divide the society's list of foreign workers, each one managing the books for one section.

A few stamps for foreign postage should be forwarded with each book to the despatch-agent; or postage would be lessened by sending a reply postcard inquiring the name and address of the next missionary to receive a book, which would then be posted direct by the giver. Such a plan might voluntarily be established in connection with each society, without burdening it with new office-work.

Of course, the books should be of some real value, theological, devotional, expository, etc. Many of your readers must possess such, which they have read themselves, and which might be a real boon to their brethren and sisters in the vanguard of the army. Missionaries might name any book they especially desire, in case it be forthcoming. And information concerning the management, with invitations to friends to assist by gifts, would, no doubt, be published from time to time in the periodicals of each missionary society.

The Missionaries' Book Agency would afford a very delightful method of assisting the Lord's work, to some who have spare time and strength, without other talents available.

Yours sincerely,

H. M.

TURN FROM WRATH of every kind, as you would flee from the most horrid devil; for it is his—it is he, and his strength in you.—William Law.

Obituary.

PASTOR W. H. BROAD, LATE OF POPLAR.

Many who know of the useful work done for a few years, and while strength permitted, by this young pastor, will hear with sorrow of his death on Saturday afternoon. In 1885 Mr. Broad left the Pastors' College and settled at Cotton-street, Poplar, where the Lord blessed him greatly; but his health was feeble, and he was a frequent sufferer. As long as possible he continued to labour, but at length, last year, he was compelled to resign. He removed to Tavistock-crescent, Westbourne-park, where he has passed away at the age of 32, leaving a young widow and one child to mourn his loss.

MR. THOMAS STONE.

Through an oversight, we omitted in our last issue to record the lamented death of Mr. Thomas Stone, of the firm of Peek, Frean, and Co., well remembered by many Londoners as chairman of the committee that arranged Messrs. Moody and Sankey's first mission in London. For a long series of years Mr. Stone has sustained an active but unostentatious work of philanthropy and personal Christian effort. His daily visits to the patients at St. Bartholomew's Hospital are referred to elsewhere. Like his Master, he continually went about doing good to those who had special need, and his benefactions will be greatly missed.

MISS MARY POSTON ARMSTRONG, OF BRISTOL.

Numerous workers in Bristol feel they have suffered loss in the death of Miss Armstrong, who had laboured long and well in connection with Brunswick Chapel. She was in her seventy-ninth year, and for forty-one years had been connected with the Sunday-school as teacher. During that period she was very rarely absent from her post, being present in her class the Sunday but one before she died. There are many evidences that her labours have been used of God to the conversion of many souls. The superintendent on Sunday afternoon spoke of the example she had left behind, and of her earnest and faithful devotion to the work.

MR. JAMES STUART, OF ROXETH.

Many will deeply sympathise with Rev. E. A. Stuart in the loss of his beloved father, who, at the ripe age of seventy-two, passed to his rest and reward on Monday week. Mr. James Stuart had been quite laid aside for the past two years, but though he had been worse the last fortnight the doctor did not think it serious; and, in fact, such was his judgment five minutes before death, for he had only just left him when the heart's action suddenly ceased. He was the second son of Mr. Alex. Stuart, late writer to the signet in Edinburgh. In early life he went to Calcutta as a merchant, and whilst there took the greatest interest in the work of the Calcutta City Mission for Eurasians, the C.M.S., and the Zenana Society. On his return to England he joined the C.M.S. Committee, which he attended regularly as long as health would permit. Latterly he was made a vice-president of the Society. When the Church of England Zenana Society was formed, he became secretary, and remained so till incapacitated two years ago. On his devoted work at Harrow, or on what he was personally and in his family, it is impossible here to dwell. He was laid to rest on Friday in the churchyard of Roxeth Church, Harrow—a church he was mainly instrumental in building some thirty years ago, and which has ever since been a stronghold of Evangelical truth.

PASTEUR BERTHUEL.

Yet another void has been created in the ranks of the pastoral body of France, by the death, in his seventy-first year, of Pasteur Berthuel, of Arbois, in the department of Jura. Born and reared in the Roman Catholic community, he took priestly orders; and, in recognition of his intellectual attainments and teaching capabilities, was installed in the professorial chair of Philosophy and Sacred Oratory in the seminary of Romans, Drôme. Quite early in his career his mind was agitated by doubts as to Rome's fidelity to Apostolic doctrine and organisation; and when at length he faced the express teaching of the New Testament and the obvious lessons of history, he had no alternative but to break with Rome. This rupture involved him in many painful separations and steady resistance to tempting offers by dignitaries of the Papal Church. After a period of study he entered upon work in connection with the Reformed Church. He was associated successively with the Société Evangélique de Paris and the Société Centrale. He did sound missionary work for the last twenty-five years of his life, preaching the Gospel and defending the faith. During the past three years he had suffered much from physical weakness, and expected soon to depart. The end occurred peacefully on Easter Sunday. Feeling equal to some effort, he preached on that day to his little flock at Arbois from the words "Behold the Man!" The Lord's Supper was afterwards observed, and while the bread and wine were being circulated among the worshippers, he sank into the sleep of death. As M. Arnal writes in Le Christianisme:—"The communion which was begun on earth with symbols, ended in heaven with a vision of sublime and divine realities."

MRS. MILES.

To many of the readers of The Christian a few lines will be acceptable concerning one who has been suddenly called from a life of active, though unobtrusive, service on earth, into the presence of the King. Mrs. Miles, of Llanwystr, near Crickhowell, in South Wales, entered into rest on Sunday evening, March 26. The previous Sunday she was in church in apparent health and strength. During the evening service she was seized with cold and shivering. During the week influenza developed itself, but no anxiety was felt until the following Saturday, when the medical men began to think the case a serious one. So rapid was the progress of the disease, that on Sunday no hope was given. The beloved patient was free from all pain. On a favourite hymn being said, she joined in whispered tones with every line. From that time she sank peacefully, like an infant falling asleep. It might truly be said she never saw death.

Brought up in the fear and knowledge of God, it was not till the age of seventeen that she definitely closed with the offer of salvation, and accepted Jesus as her personal Saviour. Her brother-in-law, the late Rev. G. Albert Rogers, was the instrument of winning her young heart for Christ. Though surrounded with many temptations to worldliness, all around could take knowledge of her that she was true to the Lord. Some forty years ago a young nobleman, then a frequent visitor at Forde Abbey, their place in Dorsetshire, surprised her husband one day by remarking, "Well, Miles, if anything could make me a Christian, it would be the consistent life of your wife. She is a Christian indeed." Gentle and calm, and reserved in speaking of her inner life, she pursued the even tenour of her way with undeviating regularity. As a Dorcas, no less than as a friend, she will be greatly missed. Her nimble fingers were never idle, and her work-basket was ever at hand, filled with garments she was making for the poor and needy. Her weekly mothers' meetings and classes, her constant attendance at the village school, her care for the poor of the parish, her regular visits every week to the union workhouse, where she was ever devising schemes for the spiritual and temporal welfare of the inmates, will long be remembered. God had entrusted her with means, and these she liberally and unostentatiously dispensed, delighting in acts of sympathy and kindness. She had known many bereavements in her later years, but these had evidently been to her times of blessing. Five years ago she was led to attend the Keswick Convention, and this was a season of distinct spiritual advancement. Her remarkable health and strength seemed to mark her out for a prolonged life of usefulness upon earth. But the Lord who loved her had need of her in his courts above, and, while we deeply mourn her loss, we can but thankfully recall the grace which shone so brightly while spared to us below. E. R.

THE VOICE INFALLIBLE.

To hear a voice that never errs,
To understand its silent speech,
In all that to my life refers:
Is such a voice within my reach?

A million voices throng the air,
Of bards and prophets, old and new,
With words of hope and blank despair;
How can such voices all be true?

The Voice Infallible I seek,
For such there is if God be true;
And He will surely deign to speak
If I in love his Word would do.

A Speaker calm, in language sweet,
From slope of Galilean hill,
In temple-court and common street,
Sends forth a voice man's heart to fill.

He cannot err, for none beside
Is God in flesh, from heaven come down;
His word is all I need to guide
My steps through earth to heights unknown.

Thy voice is final, Son of Man,
For Thou art light, and truth, and life;
It ends for me through time's brief span
All doubt and clang of mental strife.

Attune my ear, O Spirit pure,
That Christ's own voice I hear and know,
Without his accents clear and sure
No single step dare I to go.

W. A. Essery.

Personalia.

Rev. Dr. Doudney is, we regret to hear, seriously ill. Many will pray for this venerable servant of Christ.

Bishop Bickersteth, now arrived from Japan, is insisting strenuously on the importance of extension in Japan, and the need of more workers.

Rev. J. T. Briscoe, whose work at Peckham Rye is so well known, is being urged to accept an invitation to Bradford. His decision is not yet announced.

Rev. Josiah Thomas, M.A., Secretary of the Calvinistic Foreign Missionary Society, has now recovered from a severe illness, and was able to preach on Sunday.

Rev. H. B. Macartney, of Melbourne, the well-known friend of the C.M.S. in Australia, has arrived in England. A few days ago he attended a meeting of the C.M.S. Committee.

Dr. A. T. Pierson, we understand, will not be supporting the evangelistic operations at the World's Fair. The statement in our last issue, that he would be amongst the distinguished workers in Chicago, was a mistake.

Mr. and Mrs. A. R. Fenn returned on Tuesday to their beloved work. Their address is now Leganitos, No. 1, Madrid. Mr. James Kingsmill, 31, Buckingham-place, Brighton, continues to act as English correspondent, and will gladly give information as to the work.

Mr. Charles Cox, who has laboured for seven years as a city missionary in Kentish Town, has been appointed organising secretary for the Northern Counties Auxiliaries of the London City Mission. very interesting farewell meeting was held on t occasion of his leaving his district.

Dr. A. G. Parrott.—Letters have been received from Dr. and Mrs. Parrott, while en route for China, reporting a most favourable voyage. They have had interesting work amongst those on board the Glenogle, and are now travelling into the interior from Shanghai. Dr. Parrott intends to found a medical mission in Sin-gnan.

"BETHESDA FAMILY MATTERS."

The second edition of this work is nearly exhausted. Of the 5000 printed, but 400 remain, and they are in the hands of the author (Mr. E. K. Groves), who says:—The help afforded by the earlier chapters of these "Conversations," in giving the readers Scripture for the "things that are most surely believed," and by the later ones in drawing "close" and "open" brethren together, especially in Canada and the States, is a cause of unfeigned thanks to God. More than seven years have passed since their first publication, and it is desirable to issue them again in a cheaper form. This, however, will not be done till the stock in hand is sold; by post 1s. 2d., cloth 1s. 8d.

"BETHESDA MISSIONARY MATTERS."

is the name given to a pamphlet just published. It is printed in bold type, so as to serve aged readers, in coloured wrapper, and contains thirty-two pages of matter. The object is fourfold—

(1) To give names and addresses of the twenty-eight labourers who have gone from this church into other lands with the gospel.

(2) To give a brief record of their service, and also some account of the various countries to which they have been called.

(3) To afford friends at home every information concerning postal rates and times of despatch of mails, remittances of money, parcels and boxes to all these countries.

(4) To state definitely their position, our responsibility, and also to give counsel to intending missionaries.

On sale at 78, Park-street, and at 11, Greenway-road, Bristol. Price threepence.

LONDON'S SPIRITUAL NEEDS.—A general meeting of the London Nonconformist Council was held last week at the Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, Rev. J. Guinness Rogers presiding. With reference to the recent Nonconformist Conference at the Mansion House, the council adopted a resolution endorsing the strong feeling then expressed that the Free Churches of London could accomplish, and ought to attempt, more for the evangelisation of the people of London. The council calls upon the Churches to make a united and determined effort during the next winter "to win all London for Christ." It is proposed to hold a public meeting in support of this plan of campaign in the City Temple on Tuesday, May 2.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we purpose giving a portrait and sketch of the late Mr. G. C. Barlow, Bolton, philanthropist.

Dr. Alexander Whyte, of Free St. George's, Edinburgh, will occupy the pulpit of Marylebone Presbyterian Church on April 30, morning and evening, in exchange with Dr. Pentecost, who goes to Edinburgh. Dr. Whyte's famous Bunyan lectures, as well as his other published utterances, will quicken the desire of many to hear him for themselves.

We are glad to note that the presidential addresses at the Baptist Union and English Presbyterian Synod—briefly reported elsewhere—are both strongly conservative of revealed truth. No burning questions of the moment seem likely to come up for discussion in either assembly; so much the greater will be the opportunity for solid conference on abiding principles and pressing work.

The conferences being held to-day and to-morrow at Exeter Hall, on Continental Evangelisation, will have, it is hoped, a stimulating effect on all kinds of Gospel work throughout the continent of Europe. The list of speakers is an unusually interesting one, including such men as Pastor Theodore Monod, Père Hyacinthe, and Mons. Eugène Reveillaud. We trust there will be large attendances.

Several correspondents write to us, protesting against our recent remark in these "Notes" as to Christians "losing money in building societies." Of course the reference, as we thought would be patent to the reader, was to the ill-fated Liberator Society. There was no intention to throw discredit on building societies generally; we quite agree with one correspondent who regards such societies as "laudable undertakings, encouraging thrift and sobriety."

Mr. W. T. Stead is a man very prolific in ideas, though we cannot say that they are always worthy of his powers. His ghostly researches seem to us quite a waste of intellectual strength, if not something worse in their tendency. But we can heartily commend to the best consideration of local authorities everywhere the article in the current Review of Reviews on "The Wasted Wealth of King Demos." It tells how Capt. Henderson, chief constable of Edinburgh, and his staff of police, have virtually constituted themselves a society for the social salvation of destitute children in the Scottish capital. If Captain Henderson, in addition to his local services, can inoculate other chief constables of large cities with his own generous and sympathetic feelings towards the helpless little children, he will be one of the greatest benefactors of his age.

Speaking in Exeter Hall on Friday, Dr. Harry Guinness used the following beautiful illustration of the fact that everyone can do something:—

When at Colchester lately, I was taken to see a poor woman in the workhouse. She had lain in that one ward, helpless on her back, for thirty-two years. For the first six years there was unrest, but then the peace of God entered her soul, and for twenty-six years there has been "rest, sweet rest." Not only was she bright and joyful, but I found she knew a great deal about missionary work and movements, and took a very deep and prayerful interest in these. "How do you know so much about such things, seeing you are an invalid and a close prisoner?" "People are kind to me, and send me The Christian every week, and Regions Beyond every month." So she was able to follow missionary matters in prayer and faith.

Thus the Lord's prisoner in the workhouse ward bears a sweet and potent testimony before the visitors, who marvel at her peaceful patience, and glorify the grace of God in her. Even in her helplessness she has found how to serve by prayer, and by collecting for missions. And the means used in awakening this interest was the sending regularly to her in her seclusion copies of two periodicals containing news from the mission field.

Amid all the labour strife at home and abroad, one thing may be noted as a warning, and one thing as a comfort. The warning is, not to carry temper into the struggle; for the side that shows temper, that is haughty and unreasonable, is sure to alienate sympathy, and injure its cause in the eyes of the public. The comfort comes from the London Conciliation Board, which, at a meeting of delegates, was able to say that between seventy and eighty trade unions were represented on the Board, and that it did a great deal of work in a quiet way. It had brought a strike to an end, and settled several trade disputes. Working men were beginning to see the value of settlements by conciliation. One thing will greatly promote the efficient working of all such bodies of men—the wider diffusion, by Gospel influence, of a peaceable and reasonable temper among all classes.

The Arbitrator is of opinion that the Bishop of Durham, who is being urged in some quarters to bring forward a resolution in the House of Lords in favour of International Arbitration, will commit "a serious tactical blunder" if he yields to the suggestion. We can see several reasons for asking him to do such a thing—his high character, his known attachment to the principles of arbitration, the suitability of a man of peace moving in so good a cause, the absence of pressure on the time of the Upper House; but per contra, The Arbitrator believes the resolution would be lost, and if lost it would "encourage every opponent and hostile critic in America, and on the Continent." For our part we greatly doubt the wisdom, because we doubt the rightness, of waiting on time and tide when we have a good work to do. The Kingdom of God may wait for ever, if it has to wait for the convenient time when no one shall be made more hostile.

The annual festival of the Homes for Little Boys at Farningham and Swanley has been held. One wonders, on comparing those delightful places with the best we can do at a workhouse school, why the waste boy-life of the country, the nation's most precious treasure, is not more carefully husbanded. For less than it costs the country to educate and keep a pauper boy, these Homes educate and keep a boy, giving him a splendid equipment for his life-work. He lives in a cottage home, one of a small number of boys under the care of a "father and mother"; he receives a good school education, and is technically trained as well; he sees all sorts of handicrafts practised every day, and has to take his share in doing some of the manual work of the place; he can hardly fail to go into the world with well-trained eyes and hands; he also has the advantage of earnest evangelical teaching. All this for a fabulously small sum of money, and in one of the loveliest spots in England.

A somewhat notable instance of the altered tone of the daily press towards religious movements was given last Friday by the Daily News, which had an article on the May Meetings full of generous appreciation. It acknowledged that the general purpose of the Meetings spreads far beyond any purely denominational object. "The effort is to seek for the benefit of every denomination and every class. The list of societies whose meetings are held at this season, and which have absolutely nothing to do with purely denominational purposes, is long enough to satisfy everyone that the May Meetings are a congress of philanthropy rather than a congress of conflicting sects....The May Meetings used to be pelted with some cynical ridicule at one time. They are pelted with no ridicule of any kind now. They have had their baptism of fire, and have come out unscathed, and have only now to go on and do their work." Yes, it does seem a long way and a long time since Macaulay sneered at the "Exeter Hall bray"; men who would have scorned to be seen inside such a place go to it now, and pay attention to the thought it mainly represents.

The burgesses of Portsmouth have been canvassed by the publicans for their opinion on the Direct Veto Bill, with the result that 4113 voted for it, 13,519 against it, and 5046 were neutral. Concerning which we have three things to say: First—Portsmouth, a seaport and a garrison town, is no guide as to other places. The feeling varies with the place. Some time ago a vote was taken on Sunday closing, but it embraced a great number of widely different places, and the result was strongly in favour of closing. Why did the publicans not yield to that expression of opinion? Second. The promoters of the Bill do not expect every place to adopt it; they only want two-thirds of the ratepayers in a parish, etc., to be able to close public-houses, if they desire so to do. Third. Why should the publicans mind the Bill if the people will not adopt it? It will be a dead letter at Portsmouth and every other place that is of the same mind as Portsmouth. The publicans know, however, that if the ratepayers once get the power a change of opinion will be more likely to take place.

It is said that another cure for "alcoholism" has been discovered. The more cures the better, provided they do not create a new disease. The unity of God's laws leads us to expect that physical causes will co-operate with moral in effecting a drunkard's reformation. "There is balm in Gilead"—of two sorts. The fear is lest in this treatment of disease, which often has its roots in a bad moral condition, there should not be due attention paid to moral force in the drunkard's regeneration. A drunkard who is one by hereditary tendency from generations of topers and drunkards has undoubtedly a depraved physical condition which must be dealt with, and we believe the pity of God for him is unspeakably more than any human pity; but he must be made to feel his responsibility, and an urgent call must be made to him to seek the grace of God for repentance and faith. He is never soundly reformed until he has thrown the energy of his will on to the side of God.

In its latest article on "Indian Affairs," The Times makes a fierce attack on the anti-opium movement. It is of opinion that what has taken place and what is to take place will safeguard "the Indian revenues against the assaults of the cheap philanthropy in which the thrifty British Pharisee loves to indulge....An overwhelming majority of the reformed Indian Legislature, official and non-official, European and native, would be perfectly aware that the prohibition of opium in India means the substitution of alcohol and the degradation of the Indian races." The violence of this language is a good sign; before the devil came out of the young man "he tare him." The difficulty as to money is not so great as is represented, and it would be further reduced if we exercised more economy in the government of the country. A reform in the Army would save a great deal. The drinking of the soldiers alone is a serious item; the immorality we foster is also a heavy money charge. Take the drinking away and dismiss the prostitutes, and a much smaller force would suffice. The alternative of opium versus alcohol is absurd, for "the Pharisees" blame the Government for both, and insist that both shall be removed.

The Shop Hours Act is beginning to tell in favour of boys in some places of business. Unfortunately the standard is unequal and is not uniformly applied, so that the full benefit of the Act cannot be enjoyed. But it is a beginning. The area of its operations will be sure to spread until all child labour that is burdensome and injurious is abolished. A curious instance of the way in which young and tender persons are taxed in work more than the strong and well-seasoned, was brought to light when a deputation from the Northumberland and Durham miners waited on the Prime Minister, and said, among other things, that "the hours of boys could not be reduced without doing harm to the interests of the district." The men work less than eight hours, but the boys ten, from bank to bank. The men want to reduce the hours of the boys, but at present they see no way of doing it. Very likely the country, which says that no man ought to be at work more than eight hours in a mine, will say, "No boy shall work more than seven."

A little mercy is, according to The Chronicle, going to be mixed with the severe treatment which Russia deals out to her political prisoners. Women will not henceforth be treated as beasts, if the regulations are carried out:—

> Women who are condemned to hard labour or to banishment to Siberia will not in future be flogged or chained to wheelbarrows at the mines. Convicts of the first class undergoing hard labour will be both manacled and fettered, but those of the other classes will be fettered only. Women sentenced to hard labour for an indefinite period will still be kept in manacles but of a lighter pattern. Generally speaking, it may be said that corporal punishment is abolished in the case of women, and refractory prisoners will be punished either by their sentences being prolonged or by temporary confinement in separate cells on a diet of bread and water.

Let us hope that the officials will not forget the alterations which have been made. What wonder that in a land of such terrible oppression, corruption, and ignorance as Russia appears to be, the Czar should have to be guarded in his journey to the south of his dominions by 120,000 men?

The persecutions in Turkey have not arrested the attention that the circumstances demand. Mr. Thoumaian, of Marsovan, in Armenia, whose Gospel work is well known to our readers, has been removed to Angora, to take his trial, with other prisoners, on the charge of having incited to rebellion. All who know anything of the limitations and disabilities imposed upon Christian life in Turkey will be satisfied of the absurdity of any such accusation. As a fact, the scattered believers in Christ are suffering from a display of Mohammedan brutality and zeal. Protestants in Armenia are in constant fear of their lives, owing to the ease with which false charges may be, at any time, brought against them, and the still greater ease with which false witnesses may be obtained.

The American missionaries have for years worked in this field with much success; and only a few months ago, as already reported, an attempt was made to burn down their college at Marsovan. Mr. A. J. Arnold, of the Evangelical Alliance, writes to us:—

> Diplomacy will, doubtless, do its best, for the Washington Government is making vigorous representations to the Sultan's Government. We hope that our own Government will be induced to send an official representative to watch the proceedings of the so-called "trial" at Angora. But, after all, our hope must be in God; and, therefore, we would ask your readers specially to remember in prayer our persecuted brethren—that God would deliver them from their oppressors.

Rev. R. J. Ward, of Madras, writing to The Independent, refers to the subject of the Decennial Conference, and says:—

> As the English mail arrives, bringing weekly tidings from afar, we out here are reading with considerable concern the accounts of the impressions produced by the Decennial Conference. Many of us felt at the time that the action of the Conference in withdrawing the resolution condemning State regulation of vice was most disastrous; but what we felt then we see now, with vision made even clearer through the corroborative testimony of so many witnesses. Standing orders and red tape were allowed, not for the first time in history, to triumph over principle and conviction. It is sad to think that occasion has been given to the enemy to blaspheme, that a new weapon has been put into the hands of the opponents of missions, and of those who are sceptical and indifferent in relation to missions, and that a stumbling-block has been cast in the way of many a simple and loyal-hearted follower of Christ. Now it remains for us who have it in our power to do what we can to counteract and minimise all this.

This important testimony justifies those who condemned the failure of the Conference on the great moral points. The consciences of our brethren have been roused, and no similar blunder will be made again. Mr. Ward goes on to point out ways in which he thinks the mischief caused by the Conference may be counteracted, and no doubt we shall in due time hear of their having been used.

Letters to Dorothy.—2.

Dear Dorothy,—To-day I am to tell you about the people. We meet them everywhere. We learn their soul-need. We feel that their comfort lies in that Book. We must get our knowledge into shape to carry.

As art students we did not study for the mere love of it, nor even for the development it gave, but to paint pictures; and we here have a final aim, so dear a one as Christ's own—to carry glad news to the people who wait for us.

The two halves of our life, study and work, are beautifully linked, as with a silver chain, by our lectures from Mr. Torrey, "How to use the Bible to help inquiring souls"—and that carries me back to the first impression I, as a stranger and outsider, received of the Bible Institute.

One night I went to a Gospel tent to hear Mr. Moody. How much I have learned since of these Gospel tents that I might tell you!

I brought with me a boy friend, who, though a Christian in his earlier boyhood, had wandered into sinful habits and quite forgotten God.

A few nights afterwards, to my great surprise, he asked me to go to Chicago Avenue Church with him.

At the close of the hour he said, "Shall we not stay to the inquiry meeting?"

I had prayed for him in a half-blinded way for some time. As we sat in the inquiry room I had my first look at Mr. Moody's workers.

Quietly all over the room they were meeting souls—grasping hands with the hesitating seekers for truth, explaining as if they knew the Word of God. I could see the faces of the seekers light up as new-found truth penetrated the heart and shone through the eyes.

Will anybody help my friend back to his forgotten God? I sat and hoped.

A young man came down to him soon, and gripped his hand in that right manly fashion which boys like.

He sat down, and with a sympathetic question or two drew from my friend the sorrowful confession of his wandering, and a mention of the barrier that kept him from return. Like a physician, he saw and prescribed. His Book was equal to the emergency.

The remedy was offered. Health of soul seemed again possible. In a few moments they were kneeling together, asking the Great Physician for healing and forgiveness. I, too, knelt in grateful tears that all was done, and the angels could rejoice over "one more."

How was it all done? I had talked, and tried to win him back; had recognised my failure, and retreated to my prayers, afraid lest they, too, lacked prevailing power. Here was a task for thinking. Knowledge of God's Word had done it—applied knowledge—usable knowledge. I had talked but my own talk. This worker talked only God's words. He presented a Saviour whom he knew, and to the sick soul a cure he had taken. Two sad truths walked home with me. I did not know God's words; I did not know God Himself. How could I bring my friend to God?

After that experience (for I was always restless there in the library, cramming my mind while starving my soul), I often wandered down at lecture hour to the Bible Institute, which I learned was the home of Mr. Moody's workers. There I found the happiest little company of people I ever met. I looked in vain for a discontented face; they were all shining—aglow with an inner fire! and I whispered to myself, No wonder! It must be joyous to lift a soul "out of darkness into his marvellous light," as that one did my friend. To have it for one's work of life would be blessed.

One after another spoke to the stranger, invited me into the ladies' home across the way, and before I knew it, Dorothy dear, my great desire was to get among those happy people to stay; and then again, before I knew it, I was there.

This would have made a very proper introduction to my letter-series, but if I didn't write "cart before the horse" fashion, it wouldn't be I, would it?

THE GOOD TEMPLAR ORDER is reported to be doing splendid work at Nairn. In a few weeks 200 members have been initiated. Many trophies have been won from drinking and misery to abstinence and happiness.

Sacramentarianism.

By Rev. ROBERT GRAVES WALKER.

The Epistle of Clement to the Corinthians is the first uninspired Christian writing. From internal evidence it has been inferred that it was written before the fall of Jerusalem, and before the whole of the books of the New Testament were completed. It is strangely in contrast with the spirit of the New Testament. Its feeble tone and want of tenderness and glow are very disappointing. It has other defects. Yet it decides many things as to the faith of the early saints. It is valuable as evidence against modern or mediæval assumptions.

On the identity of overseers, bishops, presbyters, elders or "leaders" sufficient has been said. I may pass away from it by distinctly asserting that the written Word, most of the Fathers, and sound Church of England writers, have exact concord in affirming that, in the words of Jerome, "the presbyter is the same as the bishop." Theodoret, in his commentaries, has proved it from the New Testament Epistles so conclusively that no modern can add to the force of his proof. The bishop of the early Church was not one of three orders and the chief one. Nor was he a prelate. He was, as the Epistle of Clement says, "appointed to minister to—not for—the flock of Christ." His function was not to rule "clergy."

But the Epistle of Clement utterly sets aside the sacramentarianism held and advanced by modern heresiarchs. In the whole of the Epistle there is no single reference to the Lord's Supper. This feature it has in common with the following early Christian writers:—Hermas, Polycarp, Barnabas, and the author of the Epistle to Diognetus who was "exceedingly desirous to learn the mode of worshipping God." In this absence of reference to the Lord's Supper the writers specified are in precise contrariety to all developing or developed reverend schismatics. But they are in precise agreement with the New Testament Word of God.

There are altogether twenty-seven books or parts of the New Testament, longer or shorter. Subtract the three first Gospels, which relate the institution of the Supper by the Lord, and there remain twenty-four books or parts; that is eight-ninths of the entire New Testament. Of these twenty-four books, or eight-ninths of the whole, twenty-one, or seven-ninths, make absolutely no reference whatever to the Lord's Supper. This is not the theory of man, but the wisdom of God.

One-ninth remains in which it is thought that mention is made of the ordinance, viz., the Gospel of John; the Acts; and the First Epistle to the Corinthians. John vi. teaches, as Clement of Alexandria, Origen, and Augustine expounded, the "perfect appropriation" by faith of the Lord Jesus, and his blood, his sacrificial death. Acts ii. 42, 46, I count more than doubtful in this connection, because there is no mention of "the cup." Where the Lord's Supper unmistakably is meant, I am myself satisfied the cup is always named.

The result is, that only one book, one twenty-fourth of the whole New Testament written after our Lord was glorified, refers undeniably to the Lord's Supper at all. Twice this Epistle to the Corinthians does so; the second time to correct its profanation, and on the other occasion to show the unity of the Lord's people, as the one bread or loaf of which they partake together. Its observance is not once urged, not once is it the object to magnify its grace. This is the voice of the Spirit—his voice in and by his medium, the Word now printed. And this is his indication of the true import of this holy ordinance.

It is of immense and of practical importance that in this "evil time" of its undue exaltation, the sheep of the Lord Jesus should be awake as to the proper place of the Lord's Supper in life with God. As an instance, I myself heard the evangelical secretary of an Open-air Mission Society say, in his preaching, "The Holy Communion to me is the highest means of grace." Here is the whole of Sacramentarianism in a nutshell.

Every believer on the Lord Jesus should be quite ready, thoughtfully, prayerfully, and scripturally, to answer the question: "What is the highest means of grace appointed by the Father?" They will be compelled to answer this in defiance of the utterances of many who present themselves as Evangelical leaders. As for example Rev. W. Hay Aitken, who in "The Official Year Book of the Church of England," furnishing "Suggestions as to following up a Mission." He said: "It is obvious that Holy Communion should be the centre around which the various agencies for the development of the spiritual should, as it were, cluster." Backsliding is obviated by being "regular communicants."

I repeat, this advice embodies ultimately advanced Sacramentarianism. And its effects on young, immature believers, and on the sons and daughters of the people of God, is to lead them away from the Lord Jesus Himself and from his written Word. Most tenderly I would urge my brothers and sisters in the loving mercies of our Lord Jesus to open their eyes to the fact, and let all faithful teachers of truth teach it—that the highest means of grace are "the Holy Scriptures; able to make them wise unto salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus." Cluster all round them, through them, round Him.

All shades of heresy are quite awake to it, that this is the key to the whole position. The contest to death lies in the answer to the question, "Is the life of God in the soul of his chosen sustained through the blessed Word or by the Lord's Supper?" Holiness cannot be created by attributing to the Lord's own precious ordinance a place and a power higher than He Himself gives it. As "of his own will He gave us birth by the Word of truth," so "the engrafted Word" carries on the life. It is his specified means; able to save our souls, and of doing it exactly to the extent in which we "receive it with meekness." Oh saints! beloved of the Father, study his Word for the fact, for your own well-being, and for the safety of those you may influence. Remember 1 Peter ii. 2, and retain "milk of the Word" against the new version. "Long for" it, and "grow unto salvation" by it.

One thing I must add. There is no revealed grander development of God in the life or in the person than in the Epistle to the Ephesians; there is no higher reach of the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ; there is no deeper, more mature progress, even in eternity; it is "Christ dwelling in the heart by faith," and it is knowing his love, which shall eternally overpass our knowledge "unto all the fulness of God." Yet, from its first verse to its last, there is in the Epistle not even one slight passing allusion to the Lord's Supper! It is to the lowly mind trembling at the truth, that this speaks! "But if any man be ignorant, let him be ignorant." His doom and his blood are on his own head.

The bearing of the Epistle of Clement on the dogma of a sacrificing priesthood is very conclusive. The object of the Epistle was to correct what Clement calls the unholy "sedition" of "the Church of God at Corinth" against "its presbyters"; urging submission. Now this is precisely the occasion and condition where any exalted claims or privileges of priests would have been put into the very front. The modern paganism which usurps the place of the service of the Lord Jesus, would meet the same state of things by a demand for submission to the mysterious dignity of those who make, or who offer, the body of the Lord; or by a less imposing claim as to conveying God's grace by their office. Clement is as far from any recognition of such priestly claims, as he is from the denial of the Scriptural position of leaders amongst them.

In another direction too, the same testimony is given. Clement speaks of "How to obtain God's blessing," and defines "what are the ways." Never once does he name sacrament, never once priest, but faith, obedience, righteousness, submission to their elders, and kindred graces. The innovations of paganism had not then corrupted the teaching of the early Church.

As on this subject I take my place by Mr. J. E. Mathieson's side. I belong not to those who are interested in replying to his question as to the insidious rise of a "pseudo-priesthood," or in affirming even a mitigated priesthood other than that of all saints. But the reply is ready at hand. It arose partly from ignorance. To that fact, this very Epistle of Clement testifies. Being, as he probably was, contemporary with some of the Apostles, he speaks of the Phœnix as a fact in natural history; he associates with the persecuted elect of God the fabulous Danaides and Dirce of heathen mythology; and quotes as the words of Moses what he never said. Then early Christian writers indulged their imagination. At their head Irenæus, on Gen. xxvii. 27, says strange wild things about the fertility of the earth after the rising from the dead; vines and grains of wheat and all fruit trees shall bear fabulous crops; for instance, every grain of wheat "ten pounds of pure fine flour," which fables Dr. Pusey, "mad upon his idols," said signified "sacramental eating."

But in inflated language chiefly was sacerdotalism nurtured. This probably reached its climax in the assertion of Gaudentius of Brescia; when arguing truly that "a figure is not the reality," he adds, apparently with the idea that the figure is called by the name of the reality—that "in the way in which they say man is the image of God, he may be also called God." Step by step it grew. Not at first supplanting, but growing by the side of, the truth. The prayers and praises and self presentations of believers were termed "the oblations." All saints were priests to God; by-and-by, all saints were priests at the Lord's Supper chiefly; then the presbyter became a priest; then only the priest might offer; then the priest "imitated" the Lord's death; and at last the priest repeated the sacrifice!

To Cyprian especially is due the dark dishonour of perverting the grace of the Lord's victorious dying word, "It is finished!" And dearly do Romanists and Ritualists love and revere his memory for it.

The devotees of this new paganism are remorselessly cruel to their own souls in the tenacity in which they confidently adhere to it. A parallel strong enough is found only in the words of the men of Judah, who knew that their wives burned incense to other "gods," when in the land of Egypt, in Pathros. To Jeremiah denouncing the wrath of the Lord for the "abominable thing that

He hates," they said, "As for the word that thou hast spoken unto us in the name of the Lord, we will not hearken unto thee. But we will certainly do whatsoever thing goeth forth out of our own mouth" (Jer. xliv. 16, 17).

The Greatest Enterprise.

A few years ago, in America, Mr. Kimball, upon whose conscience lay as a burden the debts under which many churches groaned, was led to the conviction that they could pay them off if they would. He accordingly visited various localities, and convened meetings to consider the subject. In many instances he urged immediate action, and declared that the debt could be wiped off by those present without their feeling it. Thus challenged and encouraged, in not a few cases the money was subscribed on the spot.

A far more reprehensible indebtedness lies upon the Church as a whole, and upon the churches severally—a debt to God and to the whole world—the obligation to preach the Good Tidings of the Kingdom of God in all the world to all the nations.

No testimony seems more needed than a visitation of all the churches, to urge upon them the greatest and most terribly neglected of all their responsibilities—the evangelisation of the world whose debtors they are. This will never be done upon the present lines. Organisations such as the existing missionary societies are absolutely essential, but these will never overtake the need unless the churches awake to their responsibility as the primary recipients of this Divine command.

The world will speedily be evangelised when the Church collectively and all its members individually rise to their personal duty and personal privilege of exercising this blessed ministry. And when this is done, the Church through all its membership will feel the thrill of personal and vital interest in the missionary and in the people among whom he labours.

There is in the nature of things a great difference between the method of putting money into a pool, out of which either the salary of the missionary is paid, or an amount sent according to the supposed need, where there is no fixed stipend; and on the other hand the method of the missionary being supported directly by the church. There is a like difference between reading the reports of a society, and being in direct correspondence with the individual missionary on the field. How eagerly Christians would gather to the missionary prayer-meeting to hear the monthly letter from their own missionary (especially if one of themselves), rather than to hear extracts read from the Society's magazine. Yet as the interest arose, instead of the magazine declining, it would increase tenfold; for as the people's hearts were drawn out toward their own missionary, the fervour would deepen and increase until it overflowed into a living enthusiasm in regard to the greatest of all enterprises—the Missionary Enterprise in all lands.

Every church surely ought to support a missionary in whole or in part; there are many churches which could easily maintain several; while a few poor churches might unite to support one.

But while churches could maintain the missionaries, they could not locate or supervise them. The organisation—the society—is necessary for this. Its work would be multiplied as the tide of Christian feeling and energy rose higher and higher. And the tone of a society representing and consisting of Christians on fire with the love of souls, and habitually bringing to God in private, in social, and in public prayer, the needs of the heathen world, and encouraged by constant correspondence with their brothers and sisters labouring there, would contrast more than favourably with the hard, secular, and business tone which sometimes characterises religious institutions; and which we are all liable to fall into, unless the heart is kept warm with the love of God.

To make such an advance as this, no revolutionary movement is required. Let us suppose a pastor animated with a missionary spirit, and therefore desirous of promoting the same spirit amongst his people. Probably he has found it difficult to do this. Let him take counsel with them, and make to any Society or Mission, of which he and they approve, an offer to undertake the support of a missionary in any part of the world in which they are specially interested. Let the amount decided upon be paid quarterly to the society for that individual, and let a monthly letter be sent by the missionary to the church, and by the church to the missionary. A missionary spirit would immediately be awakened in that church, and probably from among themselves would arise men and women, the choicest members of the church, who, having heard God's "Who will go for us?" would humbly yet promptly answer "Here am I, send me."

As the becalmed sea feels and ripples to the breeze, so would the older "Societies" and the younger "Missions" respond to a movement of this kind, and the churches, which can never rid themselves of their responsibility to evangelise the world, nor transfer it to a society as their proxy, would experience a revival unequalled since the Day of Pentecost. DESPOTISM VENEERED BY DEMOCRACY.*

The essence of the mystery of iniquity is the misleading and terrorising of the human conscience. God has implanted in man that faculty of discerning between right and wrong which we call conscience, and of which the law of God written in the heart is the arbiter. To supplant and overturn the throne of God by the throne of iniquity which frameth mischief by a law, and to pervert the conscience to obey this evil law instead of the law of God, is the power by which every false religion works. Thus every conceivable iniquity has been perpetrated, from the ancient sacrifices of children to the more modern tortures and murders of the Inquisition, and to the present denial by Popish priests of the right of private judgment—that is of the amenableness of man's conscience to the God who created him. This is Popery. It is the great peril of the present day on the side of superstition, and is the chief cause of the peril on the side of atheism, which is less a denial of the true God than of the false idea of God, which the mystery of iniquity has conceived and spawned upon the world.

The book before us claims to show how this tremendous power for evil works in politics, and its facts and conclusions ought to be weighed and tested by everyone capable of being intelligently interested in the present crisis in English history. We make one quotation:—"In some Roman Catholic countries, no doubt we see very free democratic institutions ruling quietly and peaceably. In the Tyrol, for example, and in a portion of Canada, the people obey the priest, or rather they partake of the priests' idea and sentiments in everything. But this is not freedom. It is despotism veiled under a veneer of democracy."

A SALE OF WORK, in aid of Miss Leigh's Paris Homes for British and American Girls, will be held in the Lecture Hall adjoining St. Paul's Presbyterian Church, Westbourne Grove-terrace, on Tuesday and Wednesday, May 2 and 3.

FRENCH MEDICAL MISSION.

The success of medical missions, both at home and abroad, is now so marked and manifest that no arguments need be advanced in their support. Perhaps, however, a simple illustration may explain their usefulness. We wish to take a certain impression for which we require both wax and seal. We have both; but in the one case the wax is hard, and no imprint is left; in the other case the wax is soft, but the seal is missing. When both the wax is melted, and the seal pressed firmly on its yielding surface, the desired effect results and remains.

So the Word may be brought near while the hear is hard, and therefore it repels rather than receives the truth. Or when sickness softens and saddens there may be no friend near to bring Scripture home to the prepared and penitent heart. But the medical missionary carries the message of grace to his patient at the most fitting and critical time. He brings at once healing to the body and health to the soul. Besides, his care, kindness, and skill, bespeak for him a ready, if not even a rapt attention.

In the case of the French Protestant Mission in London there is another advantage of no small importance. Practically, our neighbours from across the Channel find themselves in a foreign country. Their language is not ours. Consequently, when they are ministered to by compatriots speaking a common tongue, they respond to their kindness with the greatest readiness. Indeed, we can scarcely conceive of a more hopeful enterprise than this, which for so many years has been bravely and heartily undertaken by the Bayswater congregation of M. Du Pontet de La Harpe. Only it is not fair that the expense of carrying out such an experiment should fall on a small handful of people whose labours in other directions are so praiseworthy and abundant. Surely there are many friends of France who will gladly avail themselves of the opportunity to assist in an undertaking so rich in promise. This is the only agency of its kind in the Metropolis, although there is a French population of from fifty to sixty thousand. A correspondent who knows the work well writes:—

"Its aim everywhere is to evangelise the French-speaking foreigners in this country, and through them, who form a constantly moving population, to send the Gospel to the Continent, and to France especially. Two years ago, the loss of friends, and the heavy outlay caused by necessary expenditure on drainage, produced for the first time in thirty years a deficit of over £130 in the funds, while within the last few months fifty more supporters have died; so that unless a sum of £300 can shortly be raised, this much needed Medical Mission will have to be closed.

"The Dispensary now located in Oxford Mansions, close to Oxford Circus, was visited by 1667 patients last year, and there is an increasing demand upon it. As in all Christian medical missions, the time spent by the patients in waiting for their turn to see the doctor is seized on to tell them of the Good Physician both of body and soul, and to read to them some of his own words of life. The clear French texts on the beams of the reading-room were from the first a never-failing means of gaining attention and interest. 'The Word of the Lord is living and powerful'—a fact which is often strikingly exemplified among those to whom, like the Roman Catholic strangers in our land, it is unfamiliar. The Magnificat, which they so often hear sung in Latin without understanding it, thrills them when read from the French New Testament. 'Are these indeed the words?' they exclaim, and ask for a Gospel that they may read them for themselves. Gospels and even Bibles are freely distributed."

Communications regarding the work may be addressed to Rev. J. H. Du Pontet de La Harpe, B.D., French Parsonage, Bayswater, W.

INDIAN HEMP.—On Thursday last Brigade-Surgeon Pringle read a paper on this subject at the rooms of the East India Association, No. 3, Victoria-street, Westminster. After describing the effect produced on the natives by seeing the Government undertaking the special cultivation, preparation, etc., of the drug, Dr. Pringle maintained that indulgence in "ganja," under any conditions of life in India, to attain any desired object whatever other than its use as a medicine, most carefully prescribed and taken, is not only most dangerous to health, but most subversive of all that is moral and conducive to the public health and safety.

A Young Man's Religion.

AN ADDRESS AT EXETER HALL.

BY REV. J. STALKER, D.D., Glasgow.

I am not going to let out the secret to-night of how a Y.M.C.A. ought to be carried on. But I think I am not very far from it when I say that in an Association we ought to present to young men a conception of religion which will attract and impress them. So my subject will be: The religion of a young man: what it ought to be, and what it ought not to be. I am going to take three "heads"—a very orthodox plan, especially in the northern country to which I belong.

First of all, the religion of a young man should be

NOT A CREED BUT AN EXPERIENCE.

I have never been one of those ministers who run down creeds and systems of theology. This is a favourite pastime with some ministers, and it is supposed to be very popular with young men. But it has always seemed to me slightly vulgar and Philistine. Is it not vulgar to talk as if the thinking of the world had commenced with us, and to cut ourselves off from the piety and learning of past ages? Creeds and theologies are simply the efforts of men and bodies of men in past ages to put into their own words what they had learned from the Bible of the truth of God; and to make clear to themselves the meaning of God's dealings with their souls. If we are both Christians and thinkers this is the work we are doing ourselves, and the more keen our efforts are, the closer should be our sympathy with those who have gone before us.

A friend told me that when he was staying in the country he met a young student who, when in the city, attended the ministry of one of those preachers who are always running down theology and theologians. He asked how he was getting on, and the student replied: "Well, the session before last the minister taught me to disbelieve all the thinkers about religion who had existed before him; and last session I learned for myself to disbelieve in him. The result is that now I do not believe anything at all." I think that was a perfectly natural transition. If the thinkers of past ages have all gone wrong, what likelihood is there that we shall go right? We must believe that the seekers after truth who have preceded us were led by God into the truth.

And yet, in spite of all that, my proposition is that a young man's religion should not be a creed, but an experience. There is a right use of the fruits of the thinkers of the past, and there is also a wrong use. When they are imposed on us from the outside as a yoke, and we are asked to believe the statements of the men of bygone ages simply because they believed them, and are to be accounted heterodox if we do not do so, every manly and fresh mind rebels against the imposition. The right use of the theologies of the past is quite different. They are the testimonies of many witnesses handed down from the past, that in this confused life of ours they found a region of peace and power where they tasted and saw that God is good and Christ is precious.

It is a venerable and impressive testimony, which ought to make us go and seek for that experience ourselves, because it still exists, and it is as free to us as it was to them. God was in the ancient world, but He is in the modern world likewise. Jesus Christ was in Galilee and in Judea eighteen centuries ago, but Jesus Christ is in this nineteenth century. He comes to every one of us; his Spirit dwells in every one of us if we let Him enter. Our religion is then no longer a hearsay, for which we are dependent on the testimony of others, but an experience that no man can take from us. And while, in a sense, this brings us into closer contact with the thinkers of bygone ages, in a very important sense it makes us independent of them. We are able to say to them: "Now we believe, not because of your saying, but we have heard Him ourselves, and we know that He is indeed the Christ, the Saviour of the world."

Secondly, let me say that the religion of a young man is

NOT A RESTRAINT, BUT AN INSPIRATION.

I am afraid there are a great many young men who never think of religion as anything else but a system of restraint. It meets them here and turns them back; it meets them there and says: "You must not go that way." They think it is snubbing them, and seems to be standing in the way of all those pleasant things in life that appeal to young desire. If that is the conception of religion that a young man has, of course he dislikes it; because the instincts of youth are for liberty, and they do not want to be tied up in a strait jacket of prohibitions.

But I deny altogether that this is the true conception of religion. There is in it an element of restraint; we do not deny that. And every one of us knows how much it is needed. For there is in every man a wild beast that requires to be muzzled and tied up if the nobler part is to have any chance at all. But I deny that this muzzling and tying up is the characteristic thing in religion. Religion does not clip the wings of the fresh young spirit; it gives us wings. It does not devitalise us; it pours floods of new energy along our veins. It is not a restraint, but an inspiration.

There is a remarkable saying of St. Paul about this that has always seemed to me of great significance, since I understood the meaning of it. You remember he says in one place, "Be not drunk with wine, wherein is excess, but be filled with the Spirit." It is easy to understand these statements when taken separately; but it was a long time before I saw the connection between them. Yet it is in this connection that the point and the secret lie. Intoxication is simply an outcome of the desire for more life. Those who feel that to them life is grey and monotonous, and that in the channel the water has narrowed to a driblet, are tempted by wine. When they respond to the temptation it seems as if their life were doubled and trebled. The tongue becomes eloquent. The future shines in a rosy mist. The man feels himself strong, and, as Robert Burns said,

Ower a' the ills o' life victorious.

But the reaction comes, and then the mercury registers a lower figure than before; and the dryness of life is greater than before. And every time this resource is applied to the consequences are more tragic.

Yet the desire out of which it springs is a natural desire; in fact, it is the desire of man. As one of the poets of this century has said,

'Tis life, of which our nerves are scant;
'Tis life, not death, for which we pant;
More life, and fuller—that we want.

Intoxication is the deceptive answer to that desire; the true answer is Paul's answer: "Be filled with the Spirit." True religion gives the very exhilaration and the sense of strength which drunkenness pretends to give. I am reminded of a curious description of Cromwell, given by one who knew him very well. Richard Baxter, one of his private chaplains, says Oliver "was of such a vivacity, hilarity, and alacrity as another man hath when he has drank a cup too much." I cannot say if it was intended for a compliment, but it seems to me to correspond exactly to Paul's conception of a Christian. And is it not exactly what our Lord Himself meant when He said, "I am come that ye might have life, and that ye might have it abundantly"?

My third point as to the religion of a young man is that it is to be

NOT AN INSURANCE FOR THE NEXT LIFE ONLY, BUT A PROGRAMME FOR THE PRESENT.

This is very important; for I believe there is nothing keeps so many young men back from religion as the notion that its utility is for the next life only and not for this life also.

You know how it is put to us when we are young men. Eternity is described, with its endlessness. Then we are warned that our condition in that endless eternity will be one of exceeding weal or woe, according as we have embraced the salvation of Christ or not before we die. Then it is pointed out that we may die at any time. Life is very uncertain; at any step a trapdoor may open, and we may be sent out of time into eternity. Therefore we are adjured to embrace Christ now, so as to be ready for death whenever it comes.

I am not denying the solemn truth there is in all that; and there can be an appeal founded on it which I believe has led many to religion. But I venture to say that when religion is represented in that way there is a very great deal left out. There are some men, and these not the worst, who will never be affected by it. When religion is represented as a kind of unpleasant dose which a man must take before he dies, or there will be terrible consequences, the temptation is very great to put it off as long as it possibly can be put off; and there are many who will take the risk of doing so. I maintain that religion is misrepresented unless it is made clear that its utility is for this world as well as for the next world; and that it would be good for us to have it now, even if there were no next world.

I remember a friend of mine who had gone far into what is called "a life of pleasure," telling me, when he became a Christian, that what surprised him most of all was this—he had always looked on religion as a burden which he knew he ought to carry; but he found that it was something that carried him and his burden too. He said also that he had enjoyed in a single week, after he was a Christian, more real pleasure than in all the years he had devoted to what is termed the pursuit of pleasure. I am convinced this is the view of religion needed in a great city like London where the individual is lost in the multitude; and that there are many young men who feel that it does not matter how they live, or whether they sink or swim. Ah, but it does matter. It matters for ourselves; surely everyone of us would wish, to some extent at any rate, to justify his having been born into the world at all. And it matters for others. No young man can tell what the limit of his influence will be, if he is filled with the Holy Ghost. And it matters for Jesus Christ. He needs us. He wants us to employ our powers for his Kingdom, and to be a stone in the temple He is going to rear upon eternity.

When I was at college in Edinburgh, an incident happened that impressed us all profoundly. One of our number, a fine young fellow, was injured on the football field. He had to take to his bed, and it soon became evident that he would not recover. Some of those admitted to his bedside spoke to him about Christ and salvation. God opened his heart to receive the truth, but just when he was about to accept the offer of Christ, he turned with a smile to the man who was dealing with him, and said, "Would it not be a mean thing to take Christ and his salvation now, when I have given the whole of my life to the devil?" Well, I hope that did not stand in his way; but it was a true thought and sentiment. I trust there will explode in every young man here the notion of religion which would make a man spend all his life in sin, and at the very last come to Christ to try and make up for it. That is the meanest conception of religion that a young man can possibly entertain. Do not banish Jesus Christ to sick beds and death beds, and the feebleness of toothless age. He is with the old, praise be to his Name; but He is the lover of youth and health and manly strength. Give Him the flower of your age; give Him your young life with all its powers and possibilities. "Lord Jesus, I am thine now; wholly thine, and thine for ever."

"FEAR NOT."

Isaiah xli. 13.

Heart aweary and oppressed,
Trembling 'mid a shadow'd lot!
Soul, with weight of care distressed—
I will help thee; fear thou not!

None thy spirit-burden knoweth;
Yet for ever like a sea
Round thy life My mercy floweth—
I will help thee; trust thou Me.

Stormy winds are loudly sighing;
Tempest-voices sound anear;
Closer is the Love undying—
I will help thee; be of cheer.

Whatsoe'er to-day awaiteth,
Rest thou in the changeless Power
That in darkness Light createth;
I will help thee hour by hour.

Shrink not from an unknown sorrow,
Fear thou not the road before;
Trust Me through each coming morrow—
I will help thee evermore.

Guiding, guarding, and all-knowing,
Heav'nly care is round thee cast:
Grace for utmost need bestowing,
I will help thee to the last.

Never can thy name be moved
From the Heart that counts thee dear;
Still I hold thy hand, beloved!
I will help thee—hush thy fear!

Apocalyptic Scenes.

By Sir S. Arthur Blackwood, K.C.B.

XV.

GRACE AND GLORY.

The sixth distinctive epoch in the Christian era has passed in vision before the eye of the Seer. The powers of heaven have been shaken; the settled order of things has been overthrown. In the figurative language of Scripture, the earth has been removed and the mountains have been carried into the midst of the sea: a tremendous convulsion and overturning of the existing system has taken place; all classes of society have reeled under the blow, and it is universally acknowledged that the hitherto rejected One, the Nazarene, the Crucified, the Lamb of God, has conquered. The strongholds of heathendom have fallen, Paganism has been dethroned from its position of supremacy, and Christianity has been established in its place. The greatest national religious revolution the civilised world has ever seen, has changed the whole order of things.

All this has been depicted upon the theatre of prophetic action by symbols and figurative scenes, which, interpreted according to the analogous use of similar language in other parts of the Bible, and occurring where they do in the prophecy, could, it is submitted (however illustrative they may be of the Day of the Lord yet to come), have no other definite meaning.

Another link of remarkable strength is thus added to the chain of evidence in favour of the explanation of the seals here given; another ward in the lock of prophecy has yielded to the touch of the Master-key of history, and the truth of the system of interpretation adopted has thereby been increasingly and most strikingly demonstrated.

What is it that the prophet is now called to behold?

The scenes that are recorded in the seventh chapter take place under the sixth seal; they form part of the future history disclosed by its opening. For, although it is common to speak of the sixth seal as describing no more than the events we have just considered, the fact is that it consists really of three distinct visions: the convulsion of nature and society narrated in the sixth chapter, the sealing of the 144,000, and the manifestation of the great multitude before the throne. It is the last two that we now have to examine.

And it will be well before attempting to explain the symbols employed in the vision, to consider for a moment the state of things which succeeded the overthrow of Paganism and the establishment of the Christian religion.

The followers of Christ, hitherto proscribed and fiercely persecuted, were now the favoured ones of the State, and instead of hiding in catacombs and dens and caves of the earth, found that their religion was a passport to Imperial favour, a well-nigh certain means of advancing their worldly position. The change was amazing. Churches arose everywhere; instead of apostasies, candidates in throngs applied for baptism, and the state of things was such that the contemporary historian, Eusebius, only expressed the feeling of the times when he declared that "a day of cloudless serenity now shone on the Church," that "it looked like the image of the very kingdom of Christ, and was altogether more like a dream than a reality." It was almost believed that the Millennium had come.

The natural consequence of the irruption into the Church of the multitudes that now thronged her gates, was the wide substitution of profession for real faith in Christ, and at the same time an undue exaltation of the rites of Christianity. This was, in particular, the case with the introductory rite of baptism, to which a magical virtue was soon ascribed. It was called "the seal, the Lord's mark, the preservative, the investiture of incorruption, the salvation." In the language of an eminent bishop of the day, Cyril, it was "the ransom to captives, the remission of offences, the death of sin, the regeneration of the soul, the garment of light, the holy seal indissoluble, the chariot to heaven, the luxury of Paradise, the procuring of the kingdom, the gift of adoption."

On his reception of baptism, shortly before his end, Constantine, as recorded by Eusebius, said, "This is the time of my enjoying the seal that confers immortality"; thus, as the historian adds, being "regenerated and made perfect, having the Divine seal impressed upon him." "The Fathers of the Church," says Gibbon, asserted "the certain and victorious efficacy even of a deathbed baptism." Neander, Mosheim, Milner, and other Church historians, give similar testimony. The figment of baptismal regeneration spread on all sides; the outward sign was confounded with the inward and spiritual grace; the baptized were the "elect," the "regenerate," "the saints." A religion of sacraments rapidly supplanted the truth of the Gospel, and amidst much outward religionism the true doctrine of justification was scarcely seen.

Such, in the fewest words, was the state of things, with regard to Christianity, which succeeded the overthrow of Paganism, and extended throughout the Roman Empire (the "world" of prophecy), during the greater part of the fourth century.

It was at that period of the prophetic history which was being unfolded, that the vision recorded in the first half of the seventh chapter was shown to the Apostle. What were its main features?

A tremendous tempest about to burst is seen gathering, but ere the four winds sweep in desolating fury over the earth, an angel ascending from the East (the quarter of rising light), and bearing "the seal of the living God" bids the angels of the winds restrain the storm, till out of each tribe of Israel a specific, a definite number had been prominently marked off for preservation. The exact number is heard by the seer; "one hundred and forty and four thousand."

Is the meaning far to seek? The language, be it remembered, is symbolic.

The angels are the ministers of God's purposes—the winds are the destructive agencies He employs. (Is. xxi. 1, xxviii. 2; Jer. iv. 11, 12; Ezek. xix. 12, xxvii. 26; Zech. ix. 14. Notice the connection of the whirlwind and the trumpet.)

The tribes of Israel are the professing people of God. But "they are not all Israel, which are of Israel." The outward seal, impressed by human hands—the visible rite—does not confer salvation, God has his own elect; it is his sole prerogative to seal them for eternal life. This is the truth which must now be brought to light. No less than twelve times is that truth repeated and enforced. It is the living God who alone seals his own.

And what is the period chosen for the fresh revelation of this truth? Again let the infidel historian of the Roman Empire answer. He speaks—unconsciously no doubt—the very words of the Scripture. "The threatening tempest of barbarians," writes Gibbon, "which so soon subverted the foundations of Roman greatness, was still repelled, or suspended on the frontiers." "The tempest suspended"! It almost seems as if the man who scoffed at Christianity had been sitting at the feet of the Apostle in Patmos, transcribing the words as they fell from his lips. "The four winds of the earth" are held fast by Divine command, "that the wind should not blow on the earth"! The Goths, hitherto remaining practically outside the borders of the Empire, were about to arise in their strength and to sweep down upon its doomed territory. History records their overwhelming irruptions. "The fourth century," writes Hallam, "set in storms." But for a short time the tempest is restrained.

Meanwhile, another scene arrests the Seer's attention. Looking upward to the throne, he beholds "a great multitude, which no man could number, of all nations and kindreds and peoples and tongues, standing before the throne, and before the Lamb, clothed with white robes, and palms in their hands." What does he gather from the entrancing vision? First, that the blissful and blessed throng are those who have come, not from a life of easygoing and luxurious religiousness, but from battlefields, and out of the great tribulation; next that it is there, not here, that full satisfaction and joy are to be found; and then, above all, that they owe their glorious position to the alone blood of the Lamb, in which they have washed their robes, and made them white.

It is an anticipative glance at eternal glory. The 144,000 are but a section of the Church at any given period of her earthly history; the whole body of the redeemed are represented, later on, by the figure of the heavenly Jerusalem, a cube, whose height, and length, and breadth are equal; each living generation is only a square thereof,—144,000, or twelve times 12,000. Tribulation—"the great" indeed, for it reaches from the Apostle's day (ch. i. 9) to the end of the dispensation, already 1800 years—is their portion here, but their tears shall all be dried; the hands that clave to the sword here, shall wave the palm there, and the triumphant hallelujahs of the innumerable multitude shall echo round the throne.

Such teachings were those which the times specially needed. And they were vouchsafed. The light of truth, buried under the sacramentarianism and worldliness of the days of Constantine, burst forth again. It was the time of Augustine. That great master of Scriptural theology, "the light from whose writings," says Milner, "shone with moderate brightness at first, and afterwards glimmered through many ages, down even to the Reformation," taught pre-eminently by voice and pen (as in his "City of God") the doctrines of sovereign grace, electing, quickening, illuminating, preserving. The work just referred to was written to show, above all things, the difference between true Christians and the merely baptized. The former he calls "the elect Israelites," "God's sealed ones." He describes their long tribulation, their ultimate preservation, their final blessedness, in the terms of the prophecy, and, above all, exalts the finished work of the Lord Jesus Christ as the procuring cause of the glory of the redeemed.

With the fresh revelation of these truths, the last two visions witnessed under the sixth seal are occupied. And most strikingly do they, like the contents of the previous seals, correspond to the facts of history. "Then it was that those bodies of Christians began to be formed, which afterwards, in the East and the West, under the names of Paulicians, Albigenses, Waldenses, and other appellations, lived in deserts, and mountains, and dens, and caves of the earth, sealed with Christ's seal, and bearing Christ's reproach."

In these short papers it is of course impossible to do more than give the very briefest summary of those events. Well would it repay those who should devote a little leisure to a careful perusal of the exhaustive elucidation of the subject in Elliott's deeply interesting work, the "Horæ Apocalypticæ." But, alas, few in these days of haste seem able or willing to devote sufficient time to such study.

COUNT CAMPELLO AND HIS WORK.

In the midst of home interests and anxieties we may not all be aware how earnestly Count Campello and his colleagues are pressing on their good work, amid persecution, misrepresentation, and deep poverty. They have gathered together congregations that are attached to the simple Gospel, and have appealed with success to the patriotism of their fellow-countrymen against the Vatican, on the ground that true religion cannot be the enemy of national unity and life. The civic authorities receive them well, and frequently place public buildings at their disposal without charge.

The Italians are now intensely anti-Papal, but have, unfortunately, largely recoiled to infidelity. For this reason the Reformed Church of Italy fails to obtain support from among those Italians that have money. They have come to regard all religious movement with contempt; but that the Gospel does impress the upper classes is shown by Signor Bonghi's magnificent speech in the House of Deputies in support of Bible teaching in Government schools, and the fact that a proposal has been made to appoint a Presbyter of the Reformed Church instead of a Roman priest in parishes where the majority wish it. The adherents of the Evangelical movement are mostly poor, and there is a danger that the work may languish, and that, too, when, if funds were forthcoming to push it on, it would soon become quite national in extent.

A friend in England has kindly promised a contribution of £50 if we can raise £500 in a month. This seems a great deal to undertake, but we feel that those who are rejoicing in the freedom of a simple Gospel faith will sympathise with our struggling brothers in Italy.

JEWS IN ALGERIA.—M. Borloz, who labours at Oran under the auspices of the French Society for the Evangelisation of Israel, speaks in a recent letter of a young Jew who has confessed the Christian faith. Though not yet baptized, he has valiantly endured persecution, having been excluded from the synagogue and had a solemn curse pronounced upon him. M. Borloz has made an extended journey in the country, and enjoys the confidence of a large number of Jews.

THE LATE JOHN ANGELL JAMES'S FORECAST OF THE NEW THEOLOGY.

We cannot but think that the following extract, from a pamphlet by the late John A. James, of Birmingham, written more than thirty-six years ago, will be read with a deep interest, not only by members of that section of the Christian Church in whose ministry he was so conspicuous, but by many in other denominations who are looking anxiously at "the signs of the times," as regards Evangelical churches.

We make no comments, but content ourselves with italicising certain portions that may help to guide our readers to a decision whether this eminent servant of God, were he now to appear among us, would rejoice that his fears had been wholly unfounded; or lament that his vision had been that of a "seer of God." The extract is taken from The News of the Churches for 1856. Mr. James makes the quotation which forms the first paragraph:—

"'For years past there has been gradually forming among reading, thoughtful, and devout men, both in the ministry and out of it, an undergrowth of conviction, impatient of, if not hostile to, many of those metaphysical forms in which the teachings of Christianity have been distorted and stereotyped by the dogmatism of theological schools.'

"I am afraid the meaning of this is but too obvious, and that, if followed out, it will lead to a new theology, not only in form, but in substance. I am happy, however, in the conviction that the theological teaching of our colleges is the inculcation of a sound orthodoxy, and that, in the main, the doctrines held by our ancestors, the Puritans and the Nonconformists, are the divinity of our seats of learning. I believe the great body of our ministers still hold fast these momentous truths. But I will not conceal my apprehensions, and they are painful ones, that a few of our young ministers, in their anxiety to avoid a stereotyped phraseology, which, if the change be confined to this, would not be mischievous, are in some danger of giving up truths,* which were stereotyped nearly eighteen centuries ago upon the page of revelation, and were intended by the Author of inspiration to be stereotyped there for all ages and all generations. It is an age of liberalism and independent thinking, and this is finding its way into our ministry to such an extent that, in the anxiety to get out of the old and deep ruts, some add the danger of getting off the rails. It is one melancholy symptom of the age that orthodoxy, if by one party it has become almost a cant term, is by the other pronounced with a sneer, or made the subject of ridicule and satire.

"In some cases, where a sound theology is retained, it appears to me to be held with too slight an idea of its vast importance as the means of all spiritual life. It is maintained as a creed, or a kind of religious science, which cannot be logically disproved; but it is kept sadly in the background, as if we could carry on religion without it, and treated as a thing by itself, which has no vital connection with Christian experience.

"We hear, indeed, a great deal about 'spiritual life,' but it is a life apart from spiritual truth—a kind of religious, poetic sentimentalism, or of merely a zealous activity—a life and an activity that may be carried on upon almost any system of doctrine. A negative theology—I scarcely like to use a phrase so bandied about, yet it is a very expressive one, and I can find no substitute for it—is almost sure, if it be long maintained, to end in positive heresy. If the ground be not occupied by the plants of truth, the weeds of error will be sure to spring up. And I confess that, without being panic-stricken at all, I see many things, which way soever I look, that make me serious and sad. There is in some quarters, if not among us yet in other places, a mischievous operation going on, of chipping and filing, and edging away Christian truths, until they square themselves to their places in modern philosophies.

"But all these attempts to render 'Pauline notions' into the graceful equivalents of 'modern thought,' give us a philosophy which philosophers may well scoff at, and a theology which biblical theologians ought to denounce as little better than covert atheism. The whole Evangelical church is coming into a crisis, and all the great verities of religious belief, which we thought had been settled, are going to be tried over again. May God carry us all and others safely through the crisis! I bear in recollection that our body a century and a-half ago, had one great lapse from truth. Most of the Unitarian congregations which now exist sprung out of those that were once Trinitarian. And it can neither be denied nor concealed, that some of the periodicals sustained by that body are already rejoicing in the hope of another defection. May their hopes never be realised; and, in order that they may not, may a spirit of enlightened and holy zeal for truth be poured out upon our ministers, and especially the younger portion of them; and may a spirit of earnestness and importunate supplication pervade our churches for the preservation of sound doctrine among us."

LIGHTS AND SHADOWS IN CHINA.

Sir,—Two of the London Mission converts, Messrs. P'eng and Yen, have just returned from Changsha. They are both Hunan men, and, so far as we can see, earnest Christian men. They left us for Changsha on December 6, with the hope of being able to do some Christian work within the walls of the city. Though not in the employ of the mission, we were only too glad to second their attempt, and supply them with Christian books and tracts. On their arrival they found everything very quiet at Changsha; the anti-foreign excitement had died down, and they resolved on commencing operations without delay. All went well with them for several days. They sold Christian books openly in the streets of the city, and took in about six hundred cash a day. They also spoke of Christ and the Gospel in the tea-shops and other places without the least interruption. They happened to meet with two men engaged in the work of selling anti-foreign literature. They spoke to them about the illegality of their conduct, and both men at once apologised and begged forgiveness.

Mr. P'eng had received an invitation to visit Mr. Jen Chensiang, the hare-lip man who was cured at the London Mission Hospital some time ago. Mr. Jen is the son of the late Jen Siang-yüen, who at one time was major-general in the Canton province. Mr. Jen, who lives in a very large house, about 40 li from Changsha, gave my friend a right royal reception. He invited about twenty of his literary friends to dine with him, and to hear what he had to say about the Christian religion. All seemed highly pleased with what they heard, and my friend P'eng returned to the city with a heart full of gratitude and praise. Moreover, the Christians met regularly for worship at the house of Mr. Siau, one of the London Mission converts residing in the city of Changsha. At these services they prayed, read and expounded the Scriptures, and sang hymns, as we are wont to do at Hankow: several outsiders joined them in these devotions, and most expressed themselves as highly pleased with what they saw and heard.

This state of things continued for ten or fifteen days. By this time our old enemy Chou Han had become aware of the presence and doings of the converts, and an emissary of his appeared on the scene. This man's name is Têng Hien-ting, and he is a member of the Têng Mou-hua family. He seemed particularly anxious to know all about the Christian books they were selling in the city. Having made inquiries about the books, he demanded that Mr. P'eng should be produced and delivered to the mob to be beaten. Fortunately my friend was absent on the occasion. On the same day the head constable of the ward came to ask for copies of the Christian books, saying that he wanted them for the magistrate, who wished to have copies of each kind. The books were given, and on the following morning, long before the sun was up, a deputy from the district magistrate made his appearance at Mr. Siau's house. Having taken down the names of P'eng, Jen, and Siau, and having sealed the books which he found in their possession, he told them that they must leave the city within three days, and that during these three days they were forbidden to sell Christian tracts or preach the Christian religion.

On January 8, being Sunday, the Christians met as usual for worship, and everything was perfectly quiet. On the 10th, Mr. Siau and his family were put out of the city by the constable, and on the 11th Mr. P'eng had to follow. All the books were taken to the boat-house, and the Christians were ordered to leave at once, bag and baggage. But Messrs. P'eng and Siau felt it to be their duty to stick to the place as long as possible, so during the following four days they entered the city again and again. They found the people quite friendly, and were beginning to hope that their difficulties would soon be over. On the 15th, however, they were unfortunate enough to meet their old enemy the constable. He was very angry with them, thrust them out of the city, and told them that the orders of the magistrate were imperative, and that, if they did not leave the place immediately, they would not only bring themselves into trouble, but involve him in trouble also. As they dared not enter the city again, they took a boat, and started on the 17th for Hankow. Such is a brief account of the first attempt made by native Christians to carry the Gospel into the city of Changsha. I think many of your readers will agree with me that it was a brave attempt, and that these Hunan Christians have shown themselves to be men of great courage and downright earnestness.

I have often said that our difficulty is not with the people of China. The experience of these men shows that remark holds good even with regard to the people of Changsha. They had no trouble whatever with the people, and they might have been there still had not the magistrate himself ordered them away. How far the magistrate was influenced by Chou Han and the remnant of his clique I cannot say. My own impression is that the power of that mischievous coterie is pretty well broken, and that in this case Chou Han's emissaries simply acted as spies and informants. The Changsha district magistrate himself is responsible for the expulsion of these converts, and the action simply means that the profession and propagation of Christianity shall not be tolerated in the capital of Hunan. The new governor, Wu Ta-cheng, is supposed to be friendly; but this hostile act has been perpetrated under his very eyes, and, I fear, with his cognisance and approval.

I am, etc.,

MR. LETHABY'S MISSION IN MOAB.

In a recent circular letter, the London Council of the Kerak Mission urge the need for proper buildings in which to carry on the work. They state: "The buildings now available contain only one room each, about 30 feet square, the mud floor 8 or 10 feet below the ground level, and the roof a few feet above it. There are no windows or chimneys; the door is the only opening at which light and air can enter, and through which smoke, when a fire is lighted, can escape. Under such conditions the houses in some weathers are almost uninhabitable. These inconveniences and discomforts have, however, been cheerfully borne by the missionaries hitherto, but a due regard to their health requires that better accommodation should, if possible, be provided.

"In addition to this, the gradual enlargement of the work of the mission requires that separate rooms should be obtained for the schools, the dispensary, and meetings for public worship. During the past year Mr. Forder has been carrying on the last two departments of work in the one room in which he himself lives, and the school has been conducted in a small room adjoining, which is always liable to intrusion. It has been and still is impossible to have any retirement or privacy for prayer, reading, or meals. Everything has to be done from morning to night in the constant presence of the Arabs, patients, schoolboys, and visitors; the same is much the case in the other house, in which Mr. and Mrs. Lethaby and the other ladies live.

"This is very much to the discomfort of the missionaries, and a great disadvantage to their work. The only possible remedy is the erection of more suitable buildings. For these an eligible site has been found, and a native Greek Christian, who is very influential in Kerak, offers to construct them according to Mr. Forder's plans and designs, at his own expense, providing that £65 be advanced to him for the purpose, the mission recouping itself for this outlay by having the premises rent free for a certain term of years. The work of the mission is now in a very encouraging condition. Peace and harmony prevail between the missionaries and the people, and the troubles which characterised the early years of the mission, and which Mr. and Mrs. Lethaby had to bear, have in great part ceased."

The Council has sanctioned an arrangement for the needful accommodation to be provided, and trust that the needful cost (£150) will soon be forthcoming. The secretary of the mission is Rev. George Piercy, 276, Burdett-road, London, E.

CHRIST CHURCH, WESTMINSTER-ROAD.—Next Sunday morning Rev. F. B. Meyer will hold his first spring morning flower service for young men and women at 7 a.m. Breakfast 8.15, and a conference at 9, to be opened by Mrs. Hannah Whitall Smith.

For the Young.

PICTURES OF DANGER AND SAFETY.

By William Luff.

Pictures are always pleasing to young folks, so I am going to give you eight. As we cannot draw them upon this page, we must "draw upon our imagination," and perhaps some young artist may draw them upon a slate or in a drawing-book.

FOUR PICTURES OF DANGER.

Do you see yonder old hen, with a brood of chicks? How snug and warm they look, peeping from her feathers. But, hark, one of them murmurs:

"I don't like being shut up under my mother's wings. I want liberty."

So off he runs across the farmyard, under the wooden doors, and away as fast as his small legs will carry him.

Now look up. Do you see that bird, almost stationary in the sky? It is a hawk. He is looking for his dinner, and has seen silly Master Chick. Soon he will swoop like an arrow upon him. He is in a place of—— "Danger." Yes, you have guessed rightly. Wandering always leads to danger.

Once a mother rabbit told her children to be sure and not go into a certain plantation, for traps were set there. Her favourite bunny said to himself, "I wonder what a trap is like," and when his parents had gone to market one day, he dared to disobey and go to the forbidden spot. "Is that a trap?" said he. So he looked. Of course he was too knowing to get caught; but he ventured nearer and nearer, and at last—snap! He was done for. He had strayed into a place of——

"Danger." Right again. Public-houses, theatres, etc., are traps.

A sweet little lamb once complained of the shepherd's dog. "It worries me so! I never go a step away from the fold but that nasty dog is barking after me and driving me back." One noon, when the dog was asleep, this wicked lambkin ran away, got through the hedge, and wandered off upon the moor.

"What a mercy there are no dogs here," she said.

But an old fox saw her, and in the evening he crept near, and as there was no shepherd and no dog to drive him away, he soon had his teeth into her poor silly heart. She had gone into——

"Danger." Yes, a third prize guess. Lambs, leave not Jesus, the Shepherd.

A little boy was journeying with a caravan through a great forest. Fires were lit all round the camp at night, and by day they marched. "I am tired of this," said the boy; "I get no chance to play." So early one morning, before anyone was up, he crept under the canvas and away.

The tents were packed, and without missing him, the men moved on. He chased butterflies, picked flowers, ate berries, listened to birds all day; then, tired, lay down under a tree. That night a lion came to the place of the late encampment, and smelling the footprints of the boy, followed, and came up to him fast asleep. There was no wall of fire to keep off intruders now, so the boy was——

"In a place of danger." Right the fourth time.

Boys and girls, look at these four pictures:—

A chicken and a hawk.
A rabbit and a trap.
A lamb and a fox.
A boy and a lion.

Never wander from mother, Sunday-school, Band of Hope, Jesus, for there are many traps and enemies. Now,

FOUR PICTURES OF SAFETY.

Suppose I had a nice, pure, upright white candle, and I tell it I am going to take it out in the storm. It hears the wind and the rain, and despairs, but suppose I show it a beautiful lantern, and promise to put it inside. There, now let us go out with it. The wind waits at the corner and rushes upon it. No, only upon the glass. The rain says, "I will drown it," but the rain cannot get at it, for it is in a place of——

"Safety." Good once more. So Jesus hides us in Himself. We all have to go forth into a stormy world, but in Him we shall be safe.

Did you ever pick up a wee tiny shell by the sea and crush it between your thumb and finger? Suppose that shell was at the bottom of the sea. "Frail shell, a big ship is coming along." "I fear not," says the shell, "I am in a place of——"

"Safety." Yes, and so are we when hidden deep in the sea of God's love.

Look at that tall pear tree! I can reach these pears that grow on the low branches. Any naughty boys can pluck them; but they cannot reach the fine ones at the top boughs, they are out of reach, in a place of—— "Safety." Good again. Jesus is a high "branch," and those He holds and upholds none can snatch away.

I once saw an old lioness with a litter of cubs. They were very small; but as they nestled beneath their mamma's paws I could not steal one of them. Mrs. Lion would soon have taught me not to meddle with her babies: they were in a place of——

"Safety." Quite right. May we be like the candle, the shell, the fruit, the little lions, "Safe in the arms of Jesus."

"Little ones to Him belong,
They are weak, but He is strong."

A SERMON IN RHYME.

A short time ago one of the teachers in a Baltimore Sunday-school, the wife of a prominent physician, died. Before her death her husband asked if there was any unfinished work she wished attended to. It seems she had cut the following verses from a newspaper at some time; she desired that twelve copies should be printed, and one given to each of the girls in her class:—

If you have a friend worth loving,
Love him—yes, and let him know
That you love him, ere life's evening
Tinge his brow with sunset glow.
Why should good words ne'er be said
Of a friend—till he is dead?

If you hear a song that thrills you,
Sung by any child of song,
Praise it. Do not let the singer
Wait deserved praises long.
Why should one who thrills your heart
Lack the joy you may impart?

If you hear a prayer that moves you
By its humble, pleading tone,
Join it. Do not let the seeker
Bow before his God alone.
Why should not your brother share
The strength of "two or three" in prayer?

If you see the hot tears falling
From a brother's eyes,
Share them. And, by sharing,
Own your kinship with the skies.
Why should anyone be glad
When a brother's heart is sad?

If a silvery laugh is rippling
Through the sunshine on his face—
Share it. 'Tis the wise man's saying,
"For both grief and joy a place."
There's health and goodness in the mirth
In which an honest laugh has birth.

If your work is made more easy
By a friendly helping hand,
Say so. Speak out brave and truly
Ere the darkness veil the land.
Should a brother workman dear
Falter for a word of cheer?

Scatter thus your seeds of kindness,
All enriching as you go;
Leave them. Trust the Harvest Giver,
He will make each seed to grow.
So until its happy end
Your life shall never lack a friend.

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.

Mr. T. Lewes Sayer conducted services at the Presbyterian Church, Ealing, from Sunday, April 16, to Saturday, 22nd. The meetings were well attended by the young people of the district, who showed great appreciation of the addresses, and tokens were not wanting of distinct spiritual blessing. Most of the Evangelical churches in Ealing co-operated in the mission.

Mr. Josiah Spiers and Mr. Robert Westall have held a mission for young people in the Town Hall, Beaumaris. The meetings were well attended, and many of the children decided for Christ. It is eleven years since Mr. Spiers visited Beaumaris, and it is cheering to know that some of the workers at this mission were converted at the former visit. The various churches of the town worked heartily together. Mr. Westall gave a few Bible readings for adults in the Bible-class room, which were greatly valued. Towards the close of the mission Miss Radcliffe, of Liverpool, took part in the work, and at its close held a mission for four days for adults in the same hall; these meetings also were well attended, and proved times of great blessing.

MR. TOYE AND THE ORPHANS.

It is twenty-seven years since Mr. Henry Toye was constrained to open a Home for poor fatherless children in Millwall during a period of much distress. He and his little family shortly after removed to Lewisham-road, Lewisham, and there, ever since, he has been encouraged to carry on a much-needed work for the children, who, through death and misfortune, find themselves absolutely without shelter.

There were peculiar circumstances which induced Mr. Toye to take up the work, but whether he should continue in it was a question not easy to determine. He, however, came to the conclusion that if without solicitation on his part the needed supplies came in, his duty was clear to go ahead. If, on the contrary, the support fell short, and the little folk had to go supperless to bed, he was prepared to abandon the undertaking. In this mind Mr. Toye has continued, with the result that he has never lost faith in the Divine governance of his orphanage, and never once have the children under his roof had to lack for anything.

But it has not always been plain sailing. More than once the trial of faith has been right sharp, for the so-called storeroom has been guileless of stores, and no preparation was made for the next meal. But at the nick of time the needed provision has come. Carter, Paterson, and Co. have come to the door with supplies, in some instances already cooked. Never yet, says Mr. Toye, have we gone without our regular meals.

What Mr. Toye calls his report is a wonderful document. It is a copy of his diary for the past year, and therein, day by day, the welfare of this home for the fatherless may be followed. Up to the month of May it was evidently plain sailing, but opposite May 18 the following appears:—

"This morning, much tried in many ways, especially for the want of means to meet expenses, which is the first time since the commencement of the year. In the afternoon came £10 from Chiselhurst, for the support of a child for a year, and by the last post, £20, from a friend in Ryde; also from London, £1; thus our need was again more than met."

Opposite May 19 is an entry which many friends will read with pleasure:—

"From Woolwich, £1; from readers of The Christian, £70; box at gate, 4s. 11d.; Lewisham, a sack of potatoes.

"July 2. From the South of France, £10; half for the work, and half for my own use; Stockwell Crescent, £1; a basket of flowers from Lewisham High-road Church; 'special' from a friend, 16s.; Greenwich, twenty-six quarterns of bread; from readers of The Christian, £23; £20 as a thank-offering, will this kind friend please accept thanks? Greenwich, 4s.; box at gate, 4s. 6d.

"August 3. To-day I am 72. Thus far hath the Lord helped me along the journey of life; many tokens of love have come."

This record goes on from day to day acknowledging gifts, great and small, that many friends sent for the support of this large family of 150 girls. It is pleasant to read, as it must have been pleasing to Mr. Toye to write, that at the close of the year his storehouse was worthy of the name, and that sound health and the blessing of God rested on his work. On receipt of a note sent to 64, Lewisham-road, Lewisham, S.E., a copy of the annual report will be forwarded.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, APRIL 30.—2 CHRON. IX.

As the fame of Solomon attracted the Queen of Sheba to his throne, so does his name, which is as ointment poured forth, attract souls to Christ. Let us go to Him carrying with us all the precious things we have, to enhance his glory, and to shine in the light of his presence. Let us also tell Him all that is in our hearts, sure that He will answer all our questions and explain the mysteries that baffle us.

We first hear of Christ as the people of Sychar did, at second hand. We cannot understand what has so fascinated our old companions, but the glow shining upon their faces is so bright that we turn to the source from which it comes, and then discover that the half was never told. There is that in Christ's nature which is so infinite and illimitable, that the reality will always exceed the furthest superlatives of the tongues of men and angels. Would that we were wise enough to stand continually before Him, and to hear his wisdom! Jesus is what He is because the Father has delighted in Him, and because all has been entrusted to Him for us, that out of his fulness we might receive. As the Queen of Sheba returned laden with the gifts of Solomon, so does the soul which has given all to Christ receive from Him more than all which it administers for others.

MONDAY, MAY 1.—2 CHRON. X.

Solomon's splendour had cost the nation dear! It is not wonderful that the people asked for respite. What a contrast there is between the complaint as to the grievous yoke of Solomon, and the cry of the saint, "his commandments are not grievous;" and in contrast to the heavy yoke of the earthly monarch are the easy yoke and light burden of Jesus, the King of true hearts. Sometimes God does not make our service or yoke easier, but He gives us more strength, or He so fills our hearts with love, that what had crushed or fretted us becomes bearable. No soul, however, goes to God with its complaint and meets with the churlish refusal that Rehoboam dealt out to his subjects.

In ruling men, it is a good motto that the old men gave to the young king, "Be kind, speak good words," conciliate; this is the secret of securing the most devoted adherence. And we may not forget that the Lord Jesus is the King of men, because He saved not Himself, but humbled Himself to the death of the cross. Oh my soul, art thou giving Him all that He has deserved, love for his love, sacrifice for his sacrifice, devotion for his service? The noblest arguments these that can speak to human hearts.

TUESDAY, MAY 2.—2 CHRON. XI.

It did seem natural and almost right to endeavour to preserve the outward unity of Israel, but God's thoughts move on a wider circle than man's, and there were purposes to be served in the apparent dismemberment of Israel that were being fulfilled through the wild and lawless wills of men. "All is right that seems most wrong," and God's will fulfills itself by many means. When men appear to be wrecking God's plan, it suddenly appears that they are fulfilling it, and we hear the voice speaking from within the holy place, "This thing is of Me."

The influx of holy men towards Jerusalem from all parts must have been like the flow of oxygenated blood to the wasted tissues of the body. The whole country must have felt the sacred impulse of their character. We do not wonder, therefore, to learn that "they strengthened the kingdom of Judah, and made Rehoboam strong." Such should be the effect of our lives as Christian people in the midst of our fatherland. We should give it grit and strength, moral muscle and sinew. But this can only be the effect of our lives when we are strong in holiness, self-restraint, meekness.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 3.—2 CHRON. XII.

The old story, old as human nature, and new with every fresh life: when we are strong we forsake the law of the Lord. Nor can we sin alone; we drag down others, as Satan his host of satellites. Then must come chastisement. God loves us too well to leave us to reap the full harvest of wrong doing. He, therefore, suffers us to have some taste of the bitter cup we had mingled for ourselves, standing hard by meanwhile to notice the first symptoms of repentance, that He may hasten to deliver us from the full brunt of the penalty that we had incurred. Humble yourself, you who have brought upon yourself justly deserved trouble. Put your mouth in the dust, and say the Lord is righteous. Confess that you have done wrong, and seek forgiveness; then within a little God will grant you deliverance, and remove the stroke of his hand.

God permitted Judah to serve Shishak that they might be able to distinguish between his service and the service of others, but surely we do not need to learn that lesson in such a manner. What fatherhood is as compared to tyranny, what silken cords are as compared to iron bands, what the south wind of summer is to the searching cold of winter: that is the perfect freedom of the slavery of Jesus as compared to the bondage of sin. Oh, that we served Him with one-half the eagerness and devotion with which the thralls of Satan serve him.

THURSDAY, MAY 4.—2 CHRON. XIII.

The speech which Abijah made was wise and true. He went back on the covenant enduring as salt. This, of course, is the ultimate appeal for us all. In contrast to the allegiance of Jehovah, which was pledged to Judah, he placed the golden calves which Jeroboam had made for gods; and in contrast to the false priests of Israel he placed the sons of Aaron and the Levites in their work. In passing, there is a beautiful glimpse given to us of the holy service of the Tabernacle, maintained amid all changes in the state around. The burnt offerings and sweet incense every morning and every evening, the shewbread ordered on the pure table, the gentle glow of the lamps of the candlestick of gold, burning through the night. But how could Israel hope to prosper in opposition to a cause sealed with the divine sanctions? A man may well stop to think when he finds himself in collision with the most sacred emblems and associations of the religion of his fathers.

There was something more than sentiment in all this. Symbols commemorated a Real Presence, and God vindicated Abijah's trust in the battle. The children of Judah prevailed because they relied upon Jehovah the God of their fathers. Whatever may be your environments of difficulty and ambushments of perplexities, even though your mistake and sin are largely accountable for them, dare to rely upon God, and your deliverance will be as certain as the rising of to-morrow morning's sun.

FRIDAY, MAY 5.—2 CHRON. XIV.

Doing good and right in the eyes of the Lord always begins with taking away. There was a great deal to clear away from the city and land, but all was done with a view of doing law and commandment. There is no merit in putting away wrong things, except they prepare the way for doing right. The kingdom was quiet, emblem this of how the peace of God comes, and how war is absent when the Lord gives rest, the rest of his approval, the peace of his "well done." Whenever men seek God He gives them rest on every side, and rest times should always be building times. It was when the churches had peace that they were builded up (Acts ix. 31). And whenever days come when the birds of peace sit on the charmed wave, there should be the upbuilding of whatsoever things are just and pure and lovely and of good report.

Good lives are not stormless ones. Zerah comes in the reign of Asa, but his advent is only to draw out more conspicuously the faith of Asa, and the help of God. The victor is always the man who feels he has no strength. God's help is only sure to the helpless, but that cause must prevail which can use God's name as its battle cry. How lovely the mention of the Lord's host, as if there were two hosts engaged in the battle against the Ethiopians, one visible, and the other invisible (Josh. v. 14). And it was the latter to which the victory was due. There are more for us than against us, hosts in celestial armour encamp around the saints and fight for them. What spoils are ours then!

SATURDAY, MAY 6.—2 CHRON. XV.

The Lord is with us as long as we walk with Him, taking the direction of his march, falling into line with his purposes. Once discover these, and adjust yourself with them, and nothing can withstand you. If any should read these words who for long seasons have been destitute of the consolations of true religion, and to whom, therefore, there has been no peace, but great vexations, let them now return to God and seek Him, and He will be found of them.

Victory should only make us strong, like Asa, to pursue still further the judging and putting away of evil, and the renewing of the altar of consecration. To such a one others will always fall in abundance. There is a hunger in men which always discovers the man who has got the true Bread of Life.

This covenant resembles those acts of devotion which should have a place in all lives, in which, after great deliverances, we are led to supreme acts of renewed devotion. And in all this there is room for joy, "with shouting, and with trumpets, and with cornets." "All Judah rejoiced at the oath." When we seek God with our whole heart, He is always found of us, and in finding Him we find rest. Asa's heart was perfect, that is, he was whole-hearted. There was no reserve, no withholding, no striking of bargains, and one symptom of it was in the removal of his mother from her position as Queen. No tender emotions, no natural ties, were permitted to influence his entire surrender to the claims of God.

REV. J. W. HORSLEY states that as the result of his experience as prison chaplain, he looks upon crime as simply condensed alcohol, and that if it were not for drink there would be few prisons.

MAY 7.

THE VALUE OF WISDOM.

Prov. iii. 11—24. GOLDEN TEXT: verse 3.

Vers. 11—12. The frequent repetition of this counsel indicates its importance (see Job v. 17; Heb. xii. 5, 6; Rev. iii. 19). It teaches us that chastening is from the Lord; it is administered by Him as a Father; it is the evidence of his love. Josiah Conder, when at school, was much troubled because of the strictness of his French tutor. On one occasion he burst into tears before the whole class. The Frenchman responded at once, "Yon foolish boy, Josiah! Do you not see that it is just because you are the only boy in the school that I care for, that I am more severe with you than with all the rest?" Don't interpret God's chastening as being proof of his disfavour. There are two dangers to be avoided—despising and being weary. They are two opposites. One is making light of the affliction, hardening ourselves under it, refusing to recognise it as coming from God, and not asking the reason for it; the other is feeling it too much, becoming fretful, impatient, despondent. "It is inhuman not to feel thine afflictions, and unmanly not to bear them." God often leads men by such experiences to the possession of true Wisdom. Mr. Simeon, of Cambridge, saw, in Lady Ross's grounds, some blind men weaving. One of them said to Mr. Simeon: "I never saw till I was blind; nor did I ever know contentment when I had my eyesight as I do now I have lost it. I would not change my present situation and circumstances with any that I ever enjoyed before I was blind." (See Psa. cxix. 67, 71.)

Vers. 13—15. "Happy" is plural, and denotes the highest degree of blessedness. This is found in Wisdom, i.e., the fear of the Lord (1—7), including the enjoyment of his favour, obedience to his will, and fellowship with Him. Two young men, who had been schoolfellows, met together at the door of a church. One had chosen the way of Wisdom; the other had sought for pleasure in the world and in sin. "Why, Tom," said the pleasure-seeker, "I have not seen you for an age." "No," the other replied, "you and I have taken different ways. I can heartily recommend my way; can you recommend yours?" The young man hung down his head, for he had begun to taste the bitterness of sin. It is no exaggeration to place the value of Wisdom as above that of every precious earthly thing. Pearls and diamonds and rubies may adorn the person while the heart within is aching with an unsatisfied longing. Be sure that you find Wisdom. See the condition necessary (ii. 3—6). It is the gift of the Lord, but is possessed only by those who seek.

Vers. 16—18. Both hands of Wisdom are full of blessings. With the right hand blessing compare verse 2, Psa. xci. 16; and the eternal life promised in the Gospel (1 Tim. vi. 19). With the left hand blessing compare what the Gospel reveals as to our sonship and heirship (Rom. viii. 14—18), and the promise of a position with Christ upon his throne (Rev. iii. 21). The Gospel puts new meaning into the Old Testament promise. Wisdom has not only gifts to impart, but "ways" in which to walk. We cannot possess her gifts without walking in her ways. Do not judge them as to their outward character. Men see what religion takes away, but not what it gives. If it denies what is sinful it imparts innumerable spiritual pleasures. Overflowing joy is found only in Wisdom's ways (Jno. xv. 11; xvii. 13). The "Tree of Life" recalls that which was placed in Eden. Sin barred our way to that (Gen. iii. 22—24). The Gospel opens the way to the possession of this. Compare the tree in Sol. Song ii. 3. Note how important it is to "lay hold" and to "retain."

Vers. 19—20. Observe well what God by Wisdom has done in nature. He best reads creation who sees in it a parable of the Gospel. Is it possible that any need of ours can be beyond the skill and power of Him who made all these?

Vers. 21—24. See how life within and grace without are conbined (22). The best adorning is that of a true Christian character. Safe walking is promised only "in the way" (23). Forsake the way, and stumbling will follow. This is why Abraham lied when he forsook Canaan, and went down to Egypt; why Lot fell when he chose to dwell near to Sodom (Gen. xii. and xiii.). To get Jesus out of God's way was Satan's temptation (Matt. iv. 5—7). Don't expect God to keep you unless you give Him the choice of your way (see Golden Text). Our sleep as well as our walk is guarded by Him (24). Recall David, when fleeing from Absalom, and surrounded with danger (Psa. iv. 8); and Peter, when expecting to be executed the next day (Acts xii. 6, 7). Of John Rogers, one of the martyrs, it is said that "on the morning of his execution, being found fast asleep, scarce with much shaking could he be awakened." "So He giveth to his beloved sleep."

YOUNG MEN AT EXETER HALL.

Religious London was vastly indebted to the half-dozen good and generous hearted citizens who saved Exeter Hall some twelve years ago, when it was like to be alienated from its historic use as a rallying ground for Christian workers at home and abroad. Since that time the premises have been burdened with a mortgage of £11,000. One of the most welcome announcements made at the Y.M.C.A. annual meeting last Thursday evening was the fact that this debt had been wiped off by the munificence of a few friends, some of them the same gentlemen whose liberality enabled the hall to be secured. It is well that the public should know who these benefactors are. The greatest of them is Mr. George Williams, of St. Paul's Churchyard, who gives no less a sum than £6600; Mr. J. D. Allcroft, Mr. T. A. Denny, Mr. S. Gurney Sheppard, and Mr. F. A. Bevan each contribute £1000; while Mr. John Cory, Mr. J. Gurney Barclay, and an anonymous friend give £500 each. The building is now free of capital encumbrance, and only the current expenses will have to be met.

The annual meeting was in other respects a very interesting and enjoyable occasion. Mr. Williams, of course, was in the president's chair; with the Archbishop of Canterbury and Dr. Stalker as chief speakers, both appearing for the first time at Exeter Hall on the Y.M.C.A. platform. They acquitted themselves so well that a hearty welcome will await them should they repeat the favour.

Mr. E. J. Kennedy's secretarial report was concise and informal, but it palpitated with actuality and with abounding proofs of the live character of the year's work. In the matter of statistics as to the growth of the Y.M.C.A. generally he had some very encouraging figures to quote. Ten years ago there were in the United Kingdom 316 centres of association work; last year there were 846. In 1883 the members and associates within the same area numbered 45,955; last year these had increased to 83,817. The Archbishop truly said in his excellent speech that any society which doubles itself in ten years has a right to be congratulated.

As to the special work of Exeter Hall for the past year, Mr. Kennedy recited the usual long list of varied agencies—educational, social, physical and spiritual. Nearly 600 situations had been found within the twelve months for those seeking employment; and there were close on 114,000 attendances at the 1520 religious gatherings of the year. It was deeply encouraging to hear that a good proportion of those who attended these Gospel meetings are casual passers by in the Strand. Still more cheering was it to know that many of these strangers who had turned aside for a little while out of the tide of traffic had received spiritual impulses and influences, the result of which cannot be tabulated or even imagined. Mr. Kennedy gave details of two or three out of the large number of cases of definite blessing that are known to the workers.

In the region of finance of course the overshadowing item was the clearing off of the mortgage debt, and a portion of the deficit on the year's account which, including previous loans by the bankers, totalled up to £2500. The splendid gifts already mentioned will no doubt stimulate less wealthy friends to copy their example at a distance.

The Chairman's remarks, distributed throughout the evening, were in his customary happy vein. He has the comfortable knack of looking at the bright side of things, and was naturally jubilant at the continued advances which the Y.M.C.A. makes throughout the world. Mr. Williams is expecting a big time next year when the Association jubilee falls to be held on June 6th, and when delegates are expected from the four corners of the earth.

There was nothing lacking of warmth in the reception that was accorded to the Primate of the Church of England, who gave the first address. We append a pretty full report of his remarks, which will be welcome to the reader both on account of their personal interest and inherent worth. The subject of the address might be set down as

KNOWING AND HELPING.

I do not think, said the Archbishop, that it is a matter of no importance what church a person belongs to. Unless it is a very poor church, I certainly think it must be an important factor in his life. I should be a very dishonest person if I did not both think and say that from very early years I dedicated myself to the service of a particular church; and in the course of my life I have been led on, I do believe, into more and more love for the mother whom I own. As a boy I resolved I would never seek a position by applying for it, or by suggesting that I might fill it appropriately, or by collecting testimonials to prove that I could. I determined I would never refuse a position that was pressed upon me, unless it was absolutely incompatible with what I was already pledged to. That is a very short account of a very diversified life, and I like to tell it to you because I feel now that I stand with perfect honesty before you.

But if I could conceive myself to be more attached than I am in love to my own church which has born and nourished me and my forefathers, I should still think this—that a most important basis of Christian work is to be found in three things. The whole of my life has led me to see the extraordinary effect upon character of the most primary truths. And again, nothing has been borne in upon me more, in my real experience of life, than the wonderful double and treble effectiveness of trying to help anybody else to the standing before God which it has pleased Him to give you. And thirdly, there is a special call to the men and women of this generation to combat what is a new phenomenon in some respects—the indifferentism which regards all sects, all religions, and, I had almost said, all truths, as in themselves indifferent.

Apart from any church influence, primary truths have a marvellous effect upon character. How primary was the truth which John the Baptist enunciated: "There comes a judgment, and there comes One after me who is greater than I." How perfectly simple the primary truth when he said: "Behold the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world." There may be wonderful systems of truth built upon these two propositions—that there is a judgment coming, and that there is a Lamb of God, who, before that judgment, taketh away the sin of the world. Like the basis of any great science they are capable of endless expansion and application. To the world's end, however changed the conditions of society may be, or however changed a man's way of looking at things may be, they will have an eternal effect upon character, if I at all understand what character is.

It makes the highest possible difference to every soul that receives the incarnation and the atonement. As soon as a man who has any sense of duty whatever perceives and knows God was clothed in flesh, and took upon Him the form of a servant, and walked about the towns and villages of an insignificant region, in all things looking like a peasant who was pursuing the higher walks of thought; as soon as he knows that upon a certain hill there was a certain erection on which this peasant gave up his life; and that this was indeed the incarnate God dying for the sin of the world—I say whatever treasures of wisdom and knowledge we have to search out and to communicate after that (and I believe them to be very great and very profound, and no intellect of man has yet fathomed them), these simple certainties are borne in upon the heart, and are enough to work what Mr. Williams so truly called "miracles of transformation."

There are many of us made so that we can take in nothing more than primary truths. There are many made so that the things which we build upon them or deduce from them have for them little or no interest. But it is upon these primary truths that even the wisest and the greatest have to lean at the last. The late Bishop of Durham, one of the greatest of English scholars, one of the best of English divines, one of the soundest and most profound of our thinkers, had many days of sickness and quiet and tranquillity as he faded away towards the world to come. His friends thought it must be going wearily with him, and that his brain must be thinking out some of the many great scholarly problems he had begun. They asked him, and he said, "Oh, no, neither weary nor busy"—something to that effect—"I take three or four great truths, and I think upon them always."

Perhaps you know the story of the last moments of his great predecessor Bishop Butler, the author of the philosophical book which has done more to make thinking people true Christians than perhaps any other book of man. You know that he, the simplest, noblest, and wisest of Christians, upon his death-bed had one of those sad, dark moments that often cloud the holiest, when the awfulness of the next world opens upon them and all that this world has held dear becomes as nothing. His chaplain was sitting by his bedside, and the Bishop said, "What shall I lay hold of?" The chaplain reminded him of all he knew and believed; of the atonement of our Lord Jesus Christ, and so on. The Bishop said, "I know it is true, but how shall I know that it is for me?" I always think the chaplain was a wise, good man. He did not turn the dying man back upon his great philosophies or the great things he had done for Christianity. He said simply, "Him that cometh unto me I will in no wise cast out." The Bishop closed his eyes and said, "Oh, this is comfortable." And they were the last words he spoke. I mention these two cases of such powerful thinkers, that we may assure ourselves that in the last great hour of need the things we shall turn back to will be the primary truths.

A word or two about the effectiveness of helping—not to magnify the man himself or to make anybody think how good and kind he is; or with an idea that the person whom he helps will see how good and holy a man he is; but that it shall strengthen the man he speaks to. Here in London there is many an isolated tempted young fellow—tempted beyond the temptations that have come to many of us who think we have been through temptations. It makes all the difference who it is that speaks the first kindly word to such an one. Our Lord was driven out into the wilderness to be tempted of the devil. Very large numbers of his sons and daughters—the larger proportion of them—are some time or other in their lives driven out into the wilderness that they may be tempted of the devil. And I believe there is no wilderness in which the devil's temptations are so powerful as in the awful first loneliness in this wilderness of London.

Your secretary spoke to me this morning about the Strand being the wickedest thoroughfare in the world. If it be so, and no one is more likely to know than he, it is a very terrible affair, and it ought not to be so. But the point I come to is this, that legislation would not make it a bit better than it is. Legislation—I do not care what it applies to—is no good whatever when it outruns public opinion and the feeling of the people. There is nothing worse for a nation than this—that there should be a good many laws in existence which are not observed. And therefore if legislation could and ought to make the wickedest thoroughfare in the world other than it is, it could only be done by that legislation following on public opinion. So that public opinion must be raised, and everybody who belongs to any organisation which has anything to do with it ought to be doing his best to raise it. Public opinion is, after all, raised by private opinion.

In drawing his exhortations to a close, the Archbishop uttered a protest against the diffuse and shallow methods of reading that are common in this age; how rare it is to find "a man of one book."

The highly suggestive and useful address of Dr. Stalker is reported substantially at length on a previous page. The worthy doctor caused some amusement by declaring early in his speech that one has to go to America to learn in perfection how to carry on a Y.M.C.A. But the tables were rather neatly turned on him when Major Whittle, in a few admirable parting sentences at the close of the meeting, said that though he was flattered by the references to America, he must admit that they had to come to London for the idea. Rev. J. S. Hill, Bishop-designate of the Niger (who had just returned from that region looking as brown as a berry), also spoke briefly, making an earnest appeal to any of his young brethren who were not decided confessors of Jesus Christ.

The Late REV. DAVID RUSSELL, D.D.,

CONGREGATIONAL PASTOR, GLASGOW.

BY REV. ARNOLD FOSTER, HANKOW, CHINA.

In The Christian for May 26th last year, there appeared among the obituary notices, a short paragraph announcing the death of Dr. David Russell, late minister of Eglinton-street Congregational Church, Glasgow. No one who had the happiness of being intimately acquainted with Dr. Russell, can help feeling that his character and work deserve to be more widely known than they were in his lifetime. The testimony of one of his dearest friends (his brother-in-law, Dr. Maclaren, of Manchester), given in an address to the Eglington-street congregation just after the death of their former pastor, expresses in few words what all his friends must have felt about him :—

> If ever there was a good man in the world he was one; and the words that come to me in thinking of him are 'blameless and harmless, a son of God without rebuke, shining and holding forth the Word of Life.' I do not think that anybody could be long in his presence without feeling, here is a man whose religion runs through his life like a hidden brook, murmuring a quiet tune, and coming to the surface now and then in deeds of mercy, and words of grace and wisdom.

But if Dr. Russell's personal character was beautiful and a standing witness to the reality of that eternal life in the strength of which he lived, his work was singularly and pre-eminently fitted to illustrate the ideal of the Christian ministry; it is in the hope that God may use this short notice of Dr. Russell to raise the tone and character of some brother minister's work that this notice is written.

Being a quiet and reserved man, with no desire for notoriety, and no fancy for miscellaneous work that did not lie in the direct line of his duty, Dr. Russell was best known as the minister of the church over which for exactly fifty years he presided as pastor. But a man of his sound judgment, practical common sense, businesslike habits, and genial spirit could not altogether avoid public life. For sixteen years he was secretary to the Congregational Union of Scotland, and in 1874 he was chairman of the Union. For more than twenty years he served on the committee of the National Bible Society, and took an active and living interest in all its proceedings. He filled also other posts of a more or less public and influential character.

But all these things were the asides of his life. He was above and before all else a preacher of the Word of God, a pastor watching for men's souls as one that must give an account, a diligent student of Scripture, and a man filled with a deep sense of responsibility for the ministry which he had received from the Lord Jesus. George Herbert, in his "Country Parson," describing his ideal minister, says "The pulpit is his joy and throne"; and again "The country parson is full of all knowledge.... but the chief and top of his knowledge consists in the Book of books, the storehouse and magazine of life and comfort, the Holy Scriptures." This description almost exactly fits Dr. Russell. If not "full of all knowledge," he had, at all events, a well-stored mind; but his knowledge of, and reverence for, "The Book of books," would not easily be surpassed, and it was the constant aim and ambition of his life to bring forth out of this treasure things new and old. For this characteristic of his ministry he, no doubt, owed much to his early training.

(From Photograph by Messrs. Maclure, Macdonald, & Co., Glasgow.)

His father, Dr. David Russell, of Dundee, who sixty years ago was one of the best-known ministers in Scotland, and the author of several valuable theological works, was a man mighty in the Scriptures, and endowed with rare gifts in the exposition of them. David Russell, the son, studied at the University of St. Andrews, where he was a pupil of Dr. Chalmers. Writing of this long afterwards, he said :—

> I was one of Dr. Chalmers' students in St. Andrews in 1827-8, and a member of his Bible class, which he taught in his study on the Sabbath evenings. I look back on those nights with intense satisfaction. The great man was a father to us, and we felt as his children. Intellectual, spiritual, emotional force was all combined in one.

From St. Andrews, David Russell went home to Dundee, and for four years worked in a solicitor's office. The legal training he thus received was of the greatest advantage to him, and helped to foster in him a certain judicial calmness and fairness in dealing with men and things, which was one prominent and very attractive feature of his subsequent life. But the ministry of the Gospel was the sphere in which God designed that his servant's life should be spent, and in 1836 David Russell went to the Glasgow Theological Academy. After passing through the usual course of instruction, he was ordained, on March 6, 1839, pastor over the congregation to which he continued to minister till his retirement in 1889.

To his work as a minister it is impossible to do justice in a brief notice like this. He regarded it as the first and most binding duty of every preacher to study the Scriptures diligently, and so to unfold their meaning by the help of God's Spirit that hearers should be made to realise that they were listening to the thought of God. Few things saddened him more than to listen to preachers who manifested no sense of responsibility for speaking as the oracles of God. His own ideal was a very high one.

For preachers who take texts of Scripture merely as mottoes, and as pegs on which to hang their own thoughts, which are neither evolved from the text nor have any necessary connection with it, Dr. Russell had very little respect. Such treatment of the Scriptures he regarded as being irreverent and impertinent, and as calculated to lower the esteem in which thoughtful men would hold a Book that was treated by its expounders in such an unreal fashion. Keenly enjoying the sermons of other men when they were earnest and instructive, he was impatient of sermons that were neither.

As a pastor, Dr. Russell was faithful and sympathetic. He attached the greatest importance to personal dealing on the part of a minister with the members of his flock. He maintained to the last the good old custom of always being in the vestry of his church at a certain hour every week, to talk with any who wished for spiritual help and counsel; and many a one by availing himself or herself of this opportunity for a quiet talk with the pastor, received comfort and strength.

One of the most touching instances of pastoral care for his flock which Dr. Russell showed was in the manner of his resigning the charge of it. Although feeling at the end of his fiftieth year of ministry something of the weight of advancing years, he was by no means feeling unfit for further work or weary of preaching. On the contrary, the joy of preaching and of preparation for the pulpit he still felt, though now seventy-eight years of age; but he feared that a time might soon come when, insensibly to himself, his power of preaching with profit to his hearers might decline, and he might only do harm by attempting to fulfil the duties of his ministry when he was past work. At the jubilee of his ordination he retired from the pastorate. He was succeeded by a much-loved friend, Rev. James Ross, who eight years before had joined him as a co-pastor in the church.

Space will not allow of a longer tribute here to one of the most faithful and godly ministers Scotland has had during this century. As a natural consequence of Dr. Russell's method of closely studying and carefully expounding the Scriptures, the sacrifice of Christ for sin formed a very prominent part of his teaching. But more than that, the Atonement was to him one of the greatest realities, and no one could listen to his devout and reverent prayers without feeling how entirely faith in the one sacrifice and in redemption through the blood of Christ pervaded all his thoughts of God.

He passed away three years after resigning the charge of his church. As the church bells were ringing for afternoon service on Sunday, May 15, 1892, he quietly fell asleep. The memory of his ministry and of his love and of his holy influence remains in the heart of the writer of this paper as one of the most precious possessions of a lifetime.

MISSION TO COALIES.

The annual meeting, held last week, was an enthusiastic and pleasant manifestation of good and kindly feelings between between masters and men. There is more influence for good in this direction, in movements of this kind, than in any social or political endeavours to compass the same end. Yet this is not the chief object of the mission. Its main purpose is to lead the men to Christ. The missionary, Mr. Prentiss, has won the hearts of the men by his genial hearty Christian life and testimony, and the work has been so successful that a second missionary has been added. The meeting was held at Mildmay, Colonel J. F. Morton presiding, and hearty words were forcibly spoken by delegates from the coalies in various parts of London, and then by some of their employers and other friends.

The report gives many fresh and cheering incidents in visitation among coal-heavers, describing the informal meetings in coal-yards and elsewhere. The missionary writes;—In the various lobbies and in the open-air I have conducted 486 little gatherings, having read and expounded the Word to some 3020 men. At one of these meetings one of the men gave the following account:—"When you were in the lobby in December last, you advised me to turn; and although I promised you I would turn from my evil ways, that same afternoon I had a loan of ten shillings and spent six shillings in drink; but I said, 'I will give up the drink come the New Year'; and I kept my resolution. But when I got my head clear, I began to think there was something more that I wanted. I commenced to read the Bible. I read the second chapter of Acts over and over again, and all of a sudden it seemed to come to me like this; 'If the Lord could save 3,000 persons in one day, perhaps he could save a poor coalie like me'; so I got on my knees and commenced to pray. No answer came. I went on my knees again, and did not get up until I knew that God for Christ's sake had pardoned my sins." Addressing his mates at one of our quarterly meetings, he said, "When I went to the Conference Hall, and saw some of my mates on the platform looking so happy and speaking for Christ, I thought, 'I should like to be as they are.' Little did I think that so soon I should be speaking for Christ here."

VILLAGE EVANGELISATION.

On Wednesday last week, in the lecture hall of the Y.M.C.A., 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C., a conference was held on Evangelistic Work in our Villages. The invitation issued by Mr. J. E. Taylor, honorary manager of the Bucks Evangelistic Mission, Aylesbury, propounded three questions for consideration—how, when, and by whom the work should be done. Other important points were, however, raised, showing the spiritual destitution of many villages of England, and urging measures by which evangelistic work may be promoted with the best results.

The meeting held in the afternoon was, for the first hour, presided over by Mr. J. E. Mathieson, who remarked on the evils of city life and the need for faithful Gospel testimony in rural districts. On the one hand, Romanism and Ritualism are rampant; on the other hand, religious teachers are giving up the Bible as the sure Word of God. When he left Mildmay he thought he would like to spend the remainder of his days in some needy village; and possibly this might yet be in store for him.

Mr. Taylor, who for thirty years has devoted his time and energies to work in country towns and villages, pointed out how desirable it is that people should be impressed for good before they leave the provinces for the Metropolis. He urged Christians of means to take up residence in the country, and engaging in Gospel work among the neglected villagers, who are, as a rule, very ready to listen. Of course, living in remote places involves some disadvantages, but it affords good opportunities of work for Christ. He had seen believers running from conference to conference with Bibles under their arms, and spending a fortune of money, while if they went through the villages of the land they would find plenty to do, and have great satisfaction in their endeavours.

ADDING TEN YEARS TO THEIR LIVES,

Mr. T. S. Heley, who has for many years been engaged in this work, said he had just received a letter from Warwickshire, asking for a lady to go and labour in a needy village. For some years he had been wandering from county to county, having much joy in labour in some districts, and being sadly distressed at the condition of things in others, where several chapels and a church compete for the adhesion and support of a mere handful of people. Some of the villages are very dark, the Gospel being but rarely preached in them; and he thought Worcestershire was one of the most destitute counties in England, there being no effort whatever in some of the villages. He was accustomed to travel a thousand miles a year, more or less, for the most part visiting from house to house. He should be glad if a small fund could be started to enable earnest Christian men to go into the country for a few days, thus being benefited by the pure air and helped to engage in Gospel work.

In the conversation that followed, several references were made to the fear in which the villagers are kept in some quarters, where they are not allowed to call their souls their own, pressure being brought to bear by and those who do their bidding. However, it does not necessarily follow that the Word is spoken in vain because there is no congregation. For though they may be afraid to come out and stand round the preacher, the people will listen from their windows. Some of the speakers told of Scripture passages thus heard having been blessed to the conversion of listeners. In other villages there is such thorough independence that a congregation is easily collected. Several of the workers spoke highly of colportage operations, which, like the spoken message, sometimes yield fruit after many days.

The Romanising process in the villages, by clergymen who show no interest whatever in spiritual work, was the subject of some painful observations. One gentleman told of a woman who had received a New Testament and been blessed by it. She was afterwards visited by the clergyman, who told her she had no right to read the book! Other incidents were of villagers being converted through attending open-air meetings, and being afterwards used of God in their homes and among their friends. A devoted worker in Hertfordshire said that, when driving in the country, he would "pick up" some pedestrian, and then turn the conversation in a spiritual direction. There was a general opinion in favour of cottage meetings, at which people can be spoken to with individual directness.

Mr. G. D. Shipley, who has for thirty years been engaged in village evangelisation, described his methods. He occasionally changes his centre, and therefrom penetrates the small towns and hamlets by means of a phaeton which had been given for that purpose. He would like to have for use in all weathers. House to house visitation should be performed in a leisurely manner by village missionaries; and not only are these workers and evangelists required, but also teachers, to open up the Scriptures, at once establishing Christians in the faith, and instructing inquirers in such a way that they may prove steadfast in the day of temptation.

Mr. R. C. Morgan presided over the second half of the meeting. Among other speakers was a labourer in connection with the London City Mission, who said that many Metropolitan missionaries would be glad to spend a short time in the country. Another friend said that two helpers are wanted in colporteur work in Hampshire. It was held to be desirable that workers should go in twos, not singly; and the difficulty of recommending converts to church or chapel membership was alluded to, but left, as circumstances must decide in each case. It was pointed out that, with friends in the country willing to accommodate City visitors for a few days, all that is needed is an agency to bring these together. In some concluding words, Messrs. Taylor and Heley said that keen persecution is endured by some villagers, and suggested the more general formation of county evangelistic associations.

In the evening a public meeting was held, presided over by Mr. W. H. Seagram. Much was said of a cheering character regarding the distribution of Gospel books in villages, dealing personally with men and women about their souls, and preaching to large or small numbers as they may gather round. Among the methods suggested was the use of in which workers may live and sleep, going from place to place; also the use of wooden tents in sections, that can be easily put up and taken down for removal.

Colportage work, combined with preaching the Gospel, was shown to be a great power for good. Workers should select a good centre, and visit all around. One worker in Bucks, thus acting, takes about twenty-six villages regularly, and calls on rich and poor alike, selling over £200 worth of Bibles and Christian books a year, and giving away over 1000 Gospel books per month. He reads and prays with all sick people, and preaches five or six times every week. Thus thousands are reached with the Gospel. It was shown that members of the Y.M.C.A.'s have tried in some cases to spend their holidays in going from place to place. There might be more of this.

At the close of the conference a committee was formed of well-known workers, and Mr. Taylor and his daughter were asked to act as hon. secs. for the present, the object being to try and bring the workers and the work together. All willing to help in any way should write to Mr. J. E. Taylor, Bible Depot, Aylesbury, Bucks, addressing Miss Taylor with regard to lodgings, &c., for ladies.

A GREAT SALE OF WORK, organised by the Society for Promoting Female Welfare (22a, Devonshire-street, W.), is to be opened this day (Thursday), and continued to-morrow, in the Royal Albert Hall. Many very well-known Christian institutions on behalf of women will share in the results of the sale

PASTORS' COLLEGE CONFERENCE.

Notwithstanding the specially trying circumstances under which the Conference has met, the meetings have been of a decidedly interesting and helpful character. Of course the absence of the beloved founder, for so many years the president of the College, is still sorely felt. And this year the Conference has suffered but recently another heavy blow in the death of Principal Gracey. Few institutions have ever been called to bear such heavy losses; for few, if any, have ever possessed such men to lose. College Conferences with neither C. H. Spurgeon nor David Gracey must be different from the Conferences of other days.

As intimated in our last issue, Pastor James A. Spurgeon has been unanimously elected president. The unanimity and heartiness with which he was re-elected to office, bore witness to the esteem in which he is held.

The presidential address on Tuesday morning was upon the text, Rom. vi. 13. The theme was appropriate from one who has so recently been plucked from the very jaws of death, and the speaker showed evident concern to know the meaning, and to learn the lesson, of his affliction. It was hopeful in tone concerning the future, fearless in its utterance of Evangelical truth, and contained an urgent call to whole-hearted consecration to God prompted by the recollection of what grace had done in quickening us when we were dead. It is safe to say that the Conference will continue to be important and necessary, so long as it bears such faithful and loving witness to the truth.

The meeting at the Orphanage in the evening was enlivened by the songs and music of the boys. Pastor Charles Spurgeon, recently returned from Australia, brought cheering tidings of the brethren there, and gave an earnest and inspiring talk upon "The Faith that removes Mountains." Pastor C. Cole, of Bolton, described the work of the false teachers, who, with their cunning craftiness, lay in wait to deceive the church at Ephesus; and ventured the statement that the Church of to-day was exposed to the influence of similar jugglers with words. Missionary work in India was represented by Mr. Dann, of Delhi, who commended himself to the brethren as one eminently qualified for evangelistic missionary work. China was represented by Mr. J. J. Turner, who drew a picture of the famine in China, in which several millions of people died, not because nothing was provided for them, but because while plenty was at the ports there were no distributors to take it to the dying multitudes. There could not be a more striking illustration of the manner in which the heathen are left to die—not for want of a Gospel, but for want of messengers to tell them the story.

The address of Professor Marchant on Wednesday morning was a carefully prepared and powerfully read paper on the timely theme of "The Excellent Glory of our Lord Jesus Christ." He dealt first with the glory of our Lord's essence, and contrasted the brief and impressive and largely negative utterances of Scripture with the laboured attempts of the Fathers to describe this glory in fitting language. One of the most important parts of the paper was that in which the glory of our Lord's essence, and of his Person as manifested before, and at, the incarnation, and at the Cross, was shown to be preparatory, not final. The glory of his work from the Father's throne, by the power of the Holy Spirit, and resulting in the salvation of men—to this every other expression of his glory tended. The paper, of course, left much unsaid; but it served its purpose in inspiring the brethren with a more fervent desire to make known the Gospel of the glory of the Blessed God.

Detailed reference to the other papers is impossible. Pastor R. Chettleborough well described the duties of the Church in relation to the instruction of its own members, and warned against some of the dangers connected with the work of the Church to-day. It is possible to be very eager to get in the young converts, and neglect them when they are added to the Church. It is also possible to overweight the Church with special societies, and to overlook the fact that the beauty of holiness, like every other beauty, requires the perfect harmony of all its parts. It is not the mission of the Church to provide amusements for the people.

The three papers read on Thursday morning were all of an equally interesting and valuable character. As a description of "The Minister's Personal Equipment for his Work," nothing could have been more wise, more suggestive, more spiritual and gracious than the words of Pastor J. McAuslane. Pastor C. B. Sawday, of Leicester, introduced the missionary subject in a paper on "The Church as the Agent for the Evangelising of the World." This was especially valuable as defining the work of the Church to be that of making known to all people the Gospel of Jesus Christ. He protested against committing this work or any part of it into the hands of unconverted men, whether as teachers in the Sunday school, singers in the choir, or chairmen at our public gatherings. He affirmed that the work could be done in a few years if the whole Church would set about it. What the Church needed was not great gifts, but to use well what they had already had. Holiness was the first essential; and the way of sanctification by faith, of victory over indwelling sin by the power of the indwelling Christ, was insisted on. The three R.'s we need to preach are those of Acts ii. 38: Repentance, Remission, and Reception of the Holy Ghost. We must have faith for definite blessing. Preaching is an action. We are sent to open blind eyes, not to talk optics. One of the illustrations with which the paper closed was specially noteworthy. One of the laws of the Lacedemonians forbade them making war too often upon the same enemies lest they might make them too good soldiers. Much of our work in this country is a continual making of war upon the same enemies, who are now so well used to our arguments and appeals, that we have no prospect of success.

Pastor W. Usher's paper defined, as truths that need special emphasis to-day, the inspiration and authority of Holy Scripture; the offices of the Holy Spirit; the ordinance of Believer's Baptism; the Second Advent; and the certainty of eternal punishment. The Atonement of Christ is absent from this list because the writer referred to churches that were already Evangelical. The paper was an exceedingly valuable one, and was received with hearty and prolonged cheering, which became heartier still when it was announced that Pastor Usher consented to act as one of the tutors of the College until the place of Mr. Gracey is filled.

The attendance at the College supper on Wednesday was not so great as in former years, yet the result was very satisfactory. The sum of £1460 was given, £105 of which was from the chairman, Mr. J. Marnham. The Thursday night meeting was most enthusiastic. All the speeches were good. Mr. Tweedie well represented the students in College; Pastor C. Spurgeon gave messages from the churches in Australia; Pastors Geo. Turner and W. C. Minnie spoke for the ministers in this country; but the two speeches which closed the meeting were the most remarkable. One was from Pastor Hiley, of Dalston, on "Uncompromising Witness for God"; and the other from Dr. Pierson on "The Word of God." Though the hour was late, and the place was hot, the people showed no weariness in listening to these brethren. Dr. Pierson defined inspiration as in some cases unconscious, as when Caiaphas prophesied of the death of Christ in Jno. xi. 49—52; and as in other cases guaranteeing, not the accuracy of the sentiment, but the accuracy of the statement. The numerical proportion of the Bible opened up a new method of study, which promises to yield an abundant harvest to those who carefully pursue it.

The closing day of the conference was undoubtedly the best day of the feast. Pastor Frank H. White was hardly expected to be able to preach the sermon; but all were delighted to see him on the platform, looking very ill yet ready to give his message. What a gracious message it was! Its theme was Glory; and it abounded in suggestive applications of Scripture, and was delivered in Frank White's own winsome and forcible manner. "I have never stood here since he was here; you can know my feelings." The very reference moved the brethren to similar emotion. "When such great gaps have been made, there is nothing better than that we should turn to our Lord and enjoy his presence." How evidently the speaker felt, while he quoted the words of Payson:—"If we knew what it is to be a minister of Christ, we should clap our hands with joy." The glory of Christ in its contrast with that of the Old Covenant was described in a sentence, "No one was ever changed into the image of the glory by looking at the face of Moses." "The face of Jesus is the only sight of God we shall ever have; and can we want more than the very brightness of the glory?" "What we need is not what is called insight, but God's sight. The one is moonshine, we need God's shine." "Grace is God in action; glory is God in vision." Not the least valuable and impressive part of the address was the closing reference to the blessed hope and the appearing of the glory of our Blessed God and Saviour Jesus Christ.

After such a message, the season at the Table, which brought the conference to a close, was a very hallowed one.

FRIENDS' RESCUE HOMES.

The annual meeting of these Homes was held at the Home opened three years ago at 71, Greenwood-road, Dalston, Mr. J. Fyfe Stewart presiding. The presence during the devotional exercises at the opening of the meeting of a number of girls, formerly inmates and now doing well in domestic service, was a cheering sight and a testimony at once to the power of God's grace and to the blessing attending the earnest labours of the matron, Mrs. Dudley, and her assistants.

The reports presented by the lady secretary, Mrs. Richardson, stated that since the commencement of the work 100 girls have been placed in service or returned to their friends. During the past year seventy-one cases have been received, thirty of whom were met with at the breakfast meetings for the destitute held every Sunday morning at the Bedford Institute, Spitalfields, others being sent by lady workers in the same district and elsewhere.

The second Home, which is only a few doors off from the other, was opened about fifteen months ago, and has proved a great help, enabling the committee to classify the cases and to start laundry work. This has not only afforded employment for the girls, but is a source of income; as much work has been received as can be undertaken, and it is turned out in first-class style. In the other Home all the outfits are made. The matron, who has the oversight of both, keeps up intercourse with girls in service, and makes them welcome on their evenings out to her motherly sympathy.

Funds are needed to carry on the work, the expenditure for the year having exceeded the contributions by £200.

Miss Steer, in an address full of practical counsel and encouragement, remarked on the change that had taken place in recent years in the treatment of the fallen. The stern prison-like discipline has given place to the influence of Christian love in such homes as that in which they were now met. The home should be as bright and natural and life-like as possible, and the girls encouraged to speak out their thoughts rather than to brood over them in silence. She was glad to see a little child in the house; its presence brings sunshine and stills bad tempers. Outward reformation is not sufficient without a change of heart. In conclusion, she urged the necessity in rescue work, not only of the spirit of love, but of an understanding heart and clear judgment in dealing with the cases.

Mrs. Bailhache followed, also emphasising as the basis of sucess the discipline of love and personal salvation. She encouraged the endeavour to rescue women as well as young girls; mentioning a striking instance in her own work of one who had long been a victim to drink being restored. She urged upon Christians the importance of dealing with both sides of the question. The Rescue Home only deals with the result, while the cause is too often neglected. She wished that every Rescue Home might also have a vigilance work in connection with it. The evil is found in the places of amusement and refreshment, as well as in the streets; and social purity is the great question that has to be dealt with. After a few words from other friends, the meeting closed with prayer.

The treasurer of the Homes is Mr. G. Gillett, 58, Lombard-street, E.C.

A QUIET DAY FOR CHRISTIAN WORKERS will be held on Tuesday, May 16, at the "Wilfrid Lawson" Hall, Woodford Green, Essex. The meetings will commence at 11 o'clock, and continue all day, with intervals for food, as may be convenient at the time, but it is much to be desired that those who come should stop quietly all day. Friends are invited to join in prayer and waiting upon God for definite blessing and a mighty outpouring of the Holy Spirit upon all workers in home and foreign missions; and for a great awakening and in-gathering of souls throughout the world, into the Kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ.

YOUNG WOMEN OF LONDON.

The Y.W.C.A., and the devoted workers on behalf of young women, celebrated their anniversary on Friday. In the afternoon a meeting was held in Grosvenor House, and the large Rubens Room being crowded out, another beautiful room was opened for the overflow. The Duke of Westminster, who was unable to be present, sent a donation of £100.

Lord Compton, who presided, maintained in the course of a sympathetic address that there is great necessity for the Young Women's Christian Association. The advantages are recreational, educational, and spiritual, the latter being the chief part of the work. The object was to make girls good, honest, Christian women—that there may be better Christian homes, better Christian mothers in the future. He wished Godspeed to all connected with the work. Mrs. Stephen Menzies moved a resolution setting forth that the constant flow of young women into London and other great cities called for the world done among them by the Y.W.C.A. The speaker gave details of cases in which the association had been of great practical value in Liverpool, and said that the object was to win girls for Christ. Colonel the Hon. F. Bridgman, M.P., Canon Barker, Miss Gollock, and other speakers followed.

In the evening a great gathering took place at Exeter Hall, which was crowded. The Mizpah Male Choir sang admirably at intervals, while Mrs. Crowell and Mrs. Mary Davies rendered several beautiful sacred solos.

Lord Kinnaird presided, and called on Mr. W. T. Paton, who presented a précis of the report. There are in London connected with the Association, twenty-five Institutes and Evening Rooms, twenty Homes and Restaurants, and ninety-one other branches, making a total for London of 136, with a membership of upwards of 14,000. The numbers of workers in connection with the London association are 2046 voluntary, and fifty-two paid—a total of 2098. There are twenty-two departments of work, including circulating libraries, convalescent, sick aid, and holiday fund, emigration, employment agencies, factory helpers' union, park mission, educational classes, railway restaurant and public-house visitation, travellers' aid, &c. The evening classes at one institute alone have been attended during the past six months by upwards of 400 students. During the past five months 109 cases of more or less friendless and destitute girls have been helped by the Park Mission. Two workers are regularly employed in visiting the parks. It is estimated that 36,000 girls in London alone are benefited every year by the Association. The expenditure for 1892 was £6980 2s. 7d., and the income £6775 12s. 11d., but a considerable deficit in addition to the expenditure just mentioned was brought forward from the year 1891. The finance committee have, therefore, been making a special effort to raise £5000 to enable them to clear off the deficit, and undertake some much-needed extensions. About £4000 of the amount required has already been given or promised, and it is hoped that the remaining £1000 will be raised speedily.

LADY HENRY SOMERSET ON TENDERNESS.

Lady Henry Somerset, who was enthusiastically received, said: I am here as a substitute, and to be a substitute is an embarrassing thing. When Miss Willard read me Miss Kinnaird's letter, and asked me to come, I had no alternative but to obey. For eighteen years Miss Willard has toiled in the temperance and purity cause. She came to England for rest, but she has worked incessantly, until now she is stopped by order, and obliged to take a real rest. To this magnificent audience of young womanhood, whose deepest feelings she understands so well, I come with her greeting and warmest sympathy.

When I was in Glasgow lately I heard the definition given by a Glasgow girl of what the Y.W.C.A. means, "It means that no girl in Glasgow need ever be without a friend." That sums up beautifully the work you are doing. We are living in extraordinary times; new light is breaking on many questions, a new dawn is glowing on the horizon, and a breath of new hope is stirring the world over. There is a growing sense of brotherhood, of pity and love. Woman's position is becoming better understood; a truer, nobler, and more Christian sentiment towards women is rising in the heart of man.

Now, as I speak to this great meeting, I feel in the depths of my soul that it is impossible to look on rows of faces belonging to young lives just starting on the journey of life, without a great sense of responsibility arising in one's heart. It seems to me as if there is a lack of tenderness, the tenderness that comes from Divine compassion, the compassion and pity that filled his heart as He looked on the great multitudes. We may be able to do but little, yet small and trivial as our service may be, let us so live that men may say when we are gone, "The world is better because you lived."

We read much of the failure of Christianity; and if it were not for the consciousness of the love of God, if it were not for the lives I know saturated with the love of God, I might admit Christianity a failure. When a Government professedly Christian supports the drink trade, sends opium to curse unnumbered millions, and winks at the licensing of vice and the sacrifice—a sacrifice worse than burning on the altars of their idols—of Hindu girls and women to the passions of our soldiers—thinking of these things, I confess Christianity seems to have lost its power; but it has not; it has still its transforming power, and it shall prevail. It is because some seven years ago on a sweet June day the knowledge of God came into my own heart, that I am full of hope and say these things to you. I pray the power of God may transform you, that you may become the means of transforming others.

The Hon. Emily Kinnaird read a letter from Miss Willard expressing her sorrow in being absent, and her deep sympathy with workers for young women. The Gospel in action seemed to her the brief epigram of the Y.W.C.A. She hoped for the time when "Each man's weal shall be each man's care," and when she said "man" she usually meant women.

After a beautiful Gospel solo, "Come unto Him," by Mrs. Mary Davies,

Dr. Harry Grattan Guinness gave an earnest and eloquent address pressing home the Gospel invitation just uttered so sweetly in song.

Rev. F. B. Meyer followed with an address on the missing quality in the lives of many young women, viz., depth. This might come through sorrow or love, but best of all through the implanting of a new ideal. When Jesus comes into the heart to reign, then there will be depth and power. In solemn earnest tones the speaker sought to lead his young hearers to the joy of surrender and the simplicity of full trust in the Lord Jesus Christ.

SUMMER TENT WORK.

For nineteen summers we have been sustained in carrying on the Gospel Tent campaign, accompanied by far-reaching results such as eternity alone will reveal. The first year we began with one tent, seating 500 persons; and for several seasons we have had seven and eight tents, with accommodation for 2,000. Great has been the encouragement in the very many cases of conversion we have been permitted to see, as also the restoration of backsliders, and the reviving and the upbuilding of God's people. No suitable site being available at Weston-super-Mare last summer, we erected our large wooden-sided tent at Burnham. During nine weeks 110 consecutive services were conducted under its canvas roof, independent of the many open-air meetings on the sands. By this means the Word of Life was held forth, and the precious seed distributed to the many thousands of excursionists and visitors, in addition to inhabitants, with fruit resulting to the glory of God. Another tent was pitched in one of the most populous and needy suburbs in Bristol—in Mina-road. For thirteen weeks the services were continued with increasing blessing. Those who could not be prevailed on to attend church or chapel flocked to the tent night after night, and many ringleaders in sin and iniquity were savingly converted, and afterwards became efficient helpers.

As sufficient funds have not yet come to hand to secure two new tents to replace those too old and rotten for repairs, which would cost £70, we make use of those we have. Already several spiritually dark and needy villages have been brought to our notice, which we hope to visit with tents as means are forthcoming for the purpose. Our Bible-carriage work has been attended with much encouragement in the way of blessing during the year, the large van being used only during the summer months, the smaller one throughout the winter as well. With thankfulness for the past, and renewed confidence in God for the future, we would seek grace to occupy diligently and faithfully the few ever-shortening moments that intervene ere the Divine Master comes.

EARTHQUAKE IN ASIA MINOR.

GREAT LOSS OF LIFE.*

Dear Friends,—A great calamity has befallen the city of Malatia. About two o'clock last Friday morning an earthquake occurred, which, so far as we can know by telegraph, has left a good part of the city, especially the Christian quarter, practically in ruins. The pastor telegraphs that the church, the school buildings of the four schools, and the parsonage are all thrown down.

The Pasha informs us that 180 dead have been recovered from the ruins up to the present time, and that there are 300 wounded. The shocks have continued for some days, and even the houses still standing are considered unsafe, and the people are living out of doors in their gardens in the mud, while rain and snow are falling nearly every day. A second telegram from the pastor says: "50,000 people are living in the mud and water, with rain and snow falling over them. For the love of God help us! Send tents, medicines, and money as soon as possible."

The Sultan has sent 300 liras—equal to 1320 dols. Our local government is moving, but it is moving slowly. The people of Harpoot, Turks and Armenians as well as Protestants, are making every effort to meet the present distress of the people of all classes in Malatia. Even the poorest of the Protestants are helping. About 90 liras has been collected by missionaries and Protestants and sent; more is coming in. The theological students are scattered among the villages to secure help. The present distress is very great, and we are doing what we can at this distance to relieve it. There was much sickness in Malatia before this calamity, and it is inevitable that the loss of life from exposure will be greater than from the earthquake itself.

Malatia has been one of the best of our out-stations. It has a congregation of about 300 and a church membership of over 100. For many years the church, with great effort and self-denial, has been self-supporting, except that they have received aid from the Board in the support of their schools. It was also the best equipped of all our out-stations. The enterprise of the pastor and the community would not rest until they had secured good substantial buildings. The High School building was repaired last year at quite a large expense, and they were planning to enlarge their chapel during the present year.

Friends at a distance cannot send aid in time to help the people while they are living in the mud during these stormy days of March, but no doubt aid will be needed for some time to come by many who were dependent on their work for their daily bread. Many of the poor will be unable to repair their houses without aid. We hope that, while contributing to relieve the present distress of the people in general, all will bear it in mind that our Protestant congregation will need not a little help for the future. They will not be able to pay the salaries of their pastor and teachers for some time to come, and as for the buildings—the church, parsonage, and schools—it will be utterly impossible for the community to rebuild them. Some of them will need aid to provide shelter for themselves.

In their dire extremity these friends appeal to us, and we commend their case to all the churches and missionaries in this country and to our friends abroad. May we not confidently ask that substantial sympathy be given to these brethren in their sore need.

In behalf of Harpoot Station,
(Rev.) H. N. Barnum.

Harpoot, Turkey-in-Asia, March 7.

Later communications from Mr. Barnum give further details:—

It seems that six or eight Turkish villages on the mountain back of Malatia have fared even worse in proportion, than the city itself. With the Protestant chapel as a centre, it is said that only about twenty houses are left standing within a radius of a quarter of a mile.

Adiaman, sixty miles from Malatia, has also suffered heavily, and a Koordish village of seventy or eighty houses, half way between Malatia and Adiaman, is reported to have been swallowed up bodily, or buried beneath the débris from the mountain above it.

* The latest official news puts the total number of dead in the cities and villages at 1046.

AMONG THE POOR IN ROME.

For seventeen years Mrs. E. J. Wall has carried on her deeply interesting work among the Roman poor; and she opens the report of last year's operations with a note of praise to God for the success which He has caused to attend her labours. The social destitution which from year to year she has deplored has of late increased; and not only is there much distress among the aged and infirm, but hundreds of competent artisans languish while waiting for work which they fail to secure. The medical dispensaries are specially useful, and facilitate the continual breaking up of new ground. Mrs. Wall says: "Assisted by the Bible-women, we visit the more needy cases, but the help we have is utterly insufficient in order to avail ourselves of the many opportunities offered for carrying the Gospel to the homes of the people. Several young ladies of true missionary spirit might find work for Christ here, if they would acquire the language, and devote themselves to service in connection with the medical mission."

Among some remarkable stories told by Mrs. Wall is the following, of SAN GIOVANNI.

We were surprised one day, at our meeting for the poor in Trastevere, to see an aged gentleman, with silver hair, enter the hall, and take his seat with the others. We thought he was curious perhaps to see and hear for himself, so we let him remain without asking any question. At the close of the meeting, as I went to the door to distribute the bread, he stopped me, and, taking my hand in both his, with tears in his eyes, said, "Signora, I thank you for what you have said; your words have touched my heart. I feel you have told us the truth." When all the other men had left the hall, seeing he still lingered, I was about to wish him "Good morning," when he said, "Excuse me, Signora, I am very hungry, and shall be so grateful if you will kindly give me some bread." I saw there was no mistake; under such a scrupulously clean and gentlemanly appearance there were the signs of want.

His case interested us much, and we invited him to the service in the evening, that we might inquire further into his circumstances. We found that he had been a cloth manufacturer at a small town about fifty miles from Rome; and that he had been in England, where he worked as a journeyman in order to learn a cloth-manufacturing process which he was the first to introduce into Italy. He thus rose to influence and wealth, and became Mayor in the city of S—. He was much respected in his native town, but owing to the failure of a bank and the intrigues of his partner, he lost his all, giving everything into the hands of his creditors. He then decided to come to Rome, and try, if possible, to support himself in some other way. He applied to several of the principal men of the city, who in the past had been among his guests and accepted of his hospitality, but although they received him with great kindness, they could give him no permanent employment. His knowledge of French enabled him to give lessons, but these only lasted a few months owing to illness and the removal of families from Rome.

He was now left without money, with no one to whom he could go for assistance, and

READY TO DESPAIR.

It was at this time that he heard of the meetings we held for the poor, where he would be able to get a little bread. He came driven by sheer necessity, and there the blessed Saviour, the Friend of the poor and needy, met him for the first time. He continued to attend the meetings regularly, and became a sincere believer in the Lord Jesus, and an earnest student of the Word of God. For some time past we have been employing him in any work we had on hand, which he was always willing and grateful to do. Last year a large number of New Testaments were given us for the Italian senators, deputies, and officials. We needed someone who could prepare them for the post, and write sufficiently well to address them, as the Italians, and more especially the Romans, would think it an insult to receive anything, if not addressed with their respective titles. San Giovanni could write beautifully, so we immediately employed him some hours every day, at the same time providing him with a small room where he could spend his quiet hours.

In this work, and in preparing Gospels for distribution in the scattered villages, he is often busy for seven or eight hours every day, and works with real joy and pleasure. He does not mourn over his changed condition, but rejoices that he was led to Rome, where he has found the Lord; and says he can see how all his trials have been only so many stepping stones to bring him to know and love the Saviour.

Parcels of clothing for the Mission may be sent to the Baptist Mission House, Furnival-street, Holborn; and other communications direct to Mrs. Wall, 35, Piazza in Lucina, Rome.

THE CONGO BALOLO MISSION.

MR. COOTE AT BONGANDANGA.

Mr. T. Coote, the first missionary of the Hackney Y.M.C.A., who is working in connection with the Congo Balolo Mission, has sent home an interesting letter, giving an account of his voyage up the Congo to Bongandanga, the furthest station of the Balolo Mission. For the earlier portion of the letter, dealing with adventures and observations en route, we regret that we cannot afford space:—

It was intended that my post should be at Lulanga Station, but when I arrived there the news came that two of our members at our highest station of Bongandanga, were obliged through illness to leave for England at once, and that the one left in charge of the station was ill with hæmaturia. I volunteered to go and help our sick and lonely brother, and was accepted. After leaving Lulanga for Bongandanga, news came down river that our sick brother was dead. This altered my position; instead of helping a brother, I have now to fill the gap caused by his death. The whole of the responsibility of the work on the station was thrown upon me, a very difficult task for one so recently fresh in the country.

Sorrow succeeded sorrow. A few days after the death of our brother at Bongandanga, Mrs. Todd at Lulanga died, after an illness of only five hours. A week later, and Mrs. Haupt, at Ikau Station, died. Death seemed to be asserting its power, and threatened to remove many more of our members who were dangerously ill. Three deaths within six weeks is an alarming rate of mortality. . . . . I beg of you as a Christian institution not to fail to do your duty to assist in refilling the gaps in our ranks caused by these deaths. It may be my turn to go next; if so, see to it that none other but one from your midst be sent to fill my place.

I thought of you all at Christmas time, and pictured in my mind the many happy family gatherings that were held.

I would not have changed places with any of you, although this Christmas was one of the strangest I have spent.

My fellow missionary (pro tem.) had been very ill and weak for a long time. On Christmas eve I was attacked by a fever which caused me to keep my bed. On Christmas night we were both ill in bed, when suddenly two native boys entered the room and said the Ngombe tribe—a cannibal tribe—were about to attack us. What could we do? Neither of us had strength enough to do more than walk across the room. My brother got out of his bed, read the 91st Psalm, and offered prayer for our safety.

Oh, what an indescribable sense of safety and peace filled my soul. I could no longer fear since Jesus had promised, "Lo I am with you alway." We went to our beds again, and slept soundly until the morning, when we awoke all safe and sound. Our brethren at Ikau station did not fare so well as I did. A few days before Christmas the natives secretly arranged to destroy our brother Mr. Haupt's house with fire. An ambush was laid in the tall grass surrounding the house, awaiting a favourable opportunity to apply their lighted torches to the grass roof. At a given signal all the natives made a wild rush for the house, intending to set fire to it, but its contents attracted their attention. It seemed to them a waste to burn so many pretty things, so they commenced to ransack the house. As soon as Mr. Haupt made his appearance the natives threw a shower of spears at him, which he succeeded in dodging; unfortunately one spear struck him in the arm, which was raised to defend his face.

The brethren at Ikau are more fortunate than we at Bongandanga. There is a Government station within an hour of Ikau. As soon as the native attack commenced, a messenger was sent to the Government official, who speedily sent over a band of soldiers to clear and defend the station from the rebels. A native attack at Bongandanga would be a very much more serious affair. We are a long way from civilization, the nearest white man is six days' journey from us. In case of sickness, death, or native attack, it would take six days before I could send a canoe down the river and receive assistance. I feel out of the world altogether in this far-distant and uncivilised spot. No steamer comes to visit us, as they do when you live on the Congo, except when our own little mission steamer brings up provisions, which is not often, sometimes only thrice a year. My colleague and I are the only white men that I know of within six days' journey of this place.

We are isolated from all Christian fellowship and Christian gatherings, which were of so much help to us when in England; but we have a joy and strength which comes from God alone, of which many in England, who have the privileges of Christian gatherings, know nothing.

It is a very dark cloud that has no silver lining. Sorrow must be very bitter that does not contain one drop of joy. Death after death, sorrow after sorrow, has been the dark cloud which has recently overshadowed our mission, but the silver lining is now appearing. God is greatly blessing our work for Him at Bongandanga, souls are being saved daily, and witnessing a good confession to the genuineness of their conversion. The first to give themselves to God were two boys, who voluntarily came to us and said, "I want to forsake the devil and follow Jesus." Two more came to us a few days afterwards, and expressed the same desire. Three more followed the next day. Scarcely a day passes without one or two coming to us to ask the way to follow Christ. Fourteen of the cases I believe to be very genuine cases, as they have been spoken to, and watched for some little time. Join with me in praising God for what He has done; ask Him to strengthen the new and somewhat ignorant converts, and help us to be able to add unto his Church daily. Alleluia! Alleluia! "Not unto us, O Lord, not unto us; but unto thy name give glory for thy mercy and thy truth's sake!"

From December 30, 1892, to January 24, 1893, the Lord has been pleased to work in the hearts of no less than thirty-four men and boys, all of whom have voluntarily expressed their desire to follow Christ, and so far as we can perceive, they are doing so. Last Sunday we had the pleasure of baptizing three of those who had recently been saved. The Lord blessed our service, and we believe not a few were deeply impressed.

DEEPENING OF SPIRITUAL LIFE.

The Conference Hall, Strangeways, Manchester, was well filled afternoon and evening on Wednesday, April 19, when Rev. John J. Luce, of Gloucester, conducted two meetings with the above object. His subject was "Cleansing," illustrated from the Book of Leviticus, bringing out the need of the complete purification of the priests of the Lord.

At the close of the afternoon meeting tea was provided, after which was held an hour of prayer. This was a time of great solemnity, and of much blessing. The varied needs of Africa, China, South America, Ireland, Manchester (especially Manchester ministers) were laid before the Lord. Each subject was introduced by a few suitable words, and hymns chiefly sung kneeling. Prebendary MacDonald conducted this interval meeting, which was a time long to be remembered.

These meetings begun in 1889 on similar lines to those carried on at the Portman Rooms, have been continued monthly ever since, with a brief summer interval, and have been made the means of much blessing. Rev. F. B. Meyer, Rev. E. W. Moore, Rev. W. Haslam, Rev. J. Hudson Taylor, Rev. J. B. Figgis, Rev. Chas. Inwood, Rev. Evan Hopkins, and others have taken part in them.

The closing meetings of the present series will be taken in May by Dr. Elder Cumming, of Glasgow, and in June by Professor Rendel Harris, Cambridge, lately returned from Mount Sinai. These meetings are looked forward to with much prayerful interest. They are supported by earnest Christians from all the churches.

Already the Strangeways Conference Hall has sent forth and supports one missionary in the foreign field (China); and it is hoped that more will follow.

GLASGOW MIZPAH BAND.

The "Rescue Wing" of this band was organised two years ago with the special object of conveying persons found on the street, under the influence of drink, to their homes; always keeping in view the winning of their souls for Jesus.

During 1892, 138 cases were dealt with. Of these, eighteen proved unsatisfactory; of fifty-four the result is not yet definitely known; forty-seven are classed as hopeful and very hopeful; whilst nineteen have professed conversion. The workers are much cheered, and thank God for letting them know of the results of their labours in so many bright instances. Of the nineteen who have professed conversion, some have stood the test of six, seven, eight, ten, and eleven months; one is now a "Rescue Wing" worker, and has already assisted in twelve other cases. Another is a Sabbath-school teacher and treasurer in connection with one of the Mizpah Band districts. Others not only give satisfactory evidence that the change in their life is real, but have become a source of help and stimulus to those with whom they come in contact.

At the New Year the "Rescue Wing" adopted a plan to counteract the drinking customs by having texts in very large type posted on the hoardings. One was from Habakkuk ii. 15: "Woe unto him that giveth his neighbour drink . . . and maketh him drunken." . . . . They had also an oblong board with this and other texts on it carried through the principal thoroughfares by two men. Very many were attracted to read.

The "Rescue Wing" are in want of many more workers, and they believe that no Christian labour or effort will bring forth happier results for the energy expended. Will God's people help by prayer, and by personal co-operation if so led?

Dear Sir,—My object in sending to you the foregoing report of the "Rescue Wing" of the Mizpah Band, is that work of this nature might be adopted by other towns in the United Kingdom. I am encouraged in this belief by the fact that some Christians in Dundee commenced it after hearing of the work in Glasgow. In a letter received from them at the beginning of the year, they say, "We have now a membership of ten, and we hope to add a few more shortly; we have had a good many cases, and are confident that this is a work owned and blessed of God. We find that there is blessing in the work itself; in most cases the workers are well received by the friends of the persons assisted home. Sometimes it is a Christian mother who waits for her wayward son, and then the worker is invited back again."

In this work in Glasgow we find, after helping the men home, that gratitude is aroused in their hearts, and that we have a far greater influence over them than if we had visited them in the ordinary way, and made an appeal to give up drinking. A desire is awakened to know more of the Saviour of those men who have been so kind to them, and who have saved them from the police office, a fine, perhaps loss of their employment, and further degradation in the eyes of their families.

We have at present eighteen workers, who go forth in pairs. A cap is worn with the words on it, "Rescue Wing, Mizpah Band." This is necessary for recognition by the police, as men sometimes look after those who are drunk for the purpose of robbing them. In Dundee, they have a card with the worker's name upon it, to be shown to the police when required. In going forth, we leave ourselves entirely in the hand of the Lord, to guide to the cases where we can be most helpful, and often find Christian wives and mothers receiving their wanderers home.

I would say to anyone starting this work, Trust the Lord to help you, and go on with it in the face of every opposition which may come up. Do not be surprised if the greatest hindrance should arise from those you would expect to give you most help.

I believe that publicity given in your paper to this work of conveying persons to their homes who are found in the streets under the influence of drink (always keeping in view the winning of their souls for Jesus), will induce Christians in many towns to undertake it. Yours in the Master's service,

W. S. Peat.

HOMES FOR LITTLE BOYS.

The dinner festival at the Hôtel Métropole last week on behalf of these excellent institutions was gracefully and sympathetically presided over by Lord Knutsford. His lordship expressed the view that the holding of big dinners for charitable societies is a necessary evil. However that may be, the festive gathering of Tuesday week produced the goodly sum of £1500. Nobody will say that a more worthy institution ever called together its friends and patrons in this way than the Homes at Farningham and Swanley, which are feeding, clothing, educating, and preparing for the stern battle of life over 500 boys, either destitute or orphaned.

It is difficult to say anything new about such noble work; but the mere statement of such a fact ought to be enough. The speeches at last week's dinner had no novelty in them, but all were full of appreciation and commendation. The noble chairman had taken the trouble to visit the Homes and see for himself the good work that is done; so had Rev. W. J. Dawson. The note of personal testimony which both these gentlemen sounded was the most effective part of the evening's advocacy. Speeches were also made by Mr. Willans, the treasurer and only surviving founder, by Mr. W. H. Long, M.P., Archdeacon Sinclair, and others. A band of the boys from the Homes, by their neat, smart, healthy appearance, and by their vocal and instrumental performances furnished a very telling argument for the thorough and beneficent character of the Homes.

Some warm words of welcome were given during the evening to the two new secretaries, Mr. A. E. Charles and Mr. W. Robson, who may be trusted to follow in the footsteps of their much-esteemed predecessors, Messrs. A. O. Charles and Benjamin Clarke. The London office of the Homes is at Bank-buildings, Ludgate-circus, E.C.

HOME OF INDUSTRY WORKERS.

A goodly number of workers and friends assembled at the Bethnal Green Beehive on Wednesday week for prayer and conference on the Lord's work in the East End.

Mr. J. E. Mathieson gave a brief but suggestive Bible reading on Jewels, starting with the expression in Mal. iii. 17, "My jewels." Why should jewels be used as representative of God's people? Because jewels are precious or priceless, imperishable, and safely kept, because they are found in deep, dark mines, and when found have to be ground and polished in order that they may shine, reflecting back the light of God.

Miss Child spoke of work in Ratcliff. We had heard of jewels, and she wished to tell how these were picked up in the mud and mire of "the Highway." She sought to make "The Welcome Home" really a home for seamen far from home, and friends, and in the greatest danger morally. Describing the various branches, she spoke of the coffee-bar, the Fo'c'sle, where meetings are held every night all the year round, and rarely without the conversion of some souls; of the book-bags, the dock visitation, the Christian lifeboat crew, and other forms of effort.

A young Russian was also introduced by Miss Child, who told in broken English, but evidently with a full heart, how God had saved him in the Welcome Home, and how he hoped ere long to become a missionary among his own people. He earnestly asked prayer for sailors and for Russia.

Miss Steer spoke on behalf of the Bridge of Hope, beginning with three incidents from real life of poor degraded wretched women rescued, led to the Saviour, living consistent lives for longer or shorter periods, and by and by passing from earth leaving a good testimony. Were there (exclaimed our sister) but these three cases, these alone would justify the whole cost of the Bridge of Hope. But there are hundreds such; and we have a great deal to thank God for. The work among young girls, many of them of tender years, has of late been developing greatly, and may be regarded as the most important part of the whole work. Some of these, young though they be, are very hard and difficult cases. There are now some 120 little girls in the Homes, twenty women in the Bridge of Hope, and sixty in the Night Refuge. A new recreation-room, which is much needed, will be opened on May 3, at the Bridge of Hope, Betts-street.

Miss Macpherson asked prayer for these sisters in labour and love, and proceeded to mention various causes for praise and prayer in connection with the Home of Industry, and the workers who trained therein have gone out to the mission-field. The sixty-fifth party, which left lately under the care of Mr. W. H. Merry, has been wired, "All well: safely landed," an announcement which was read with thanksgiving to God. The next party is expected to sail on June 8th.

OUR KITH AND KIN IN INDIA.

Sufficient attention has not yet been given to the moral and spiritual condition of our countrymen in India, numbering, it seems, just about one quarter of a million, scattered in all parts of the empire, and in many cases absolutely without any Gospel privileges, or any possibility of hearing the Word of Salvation. To meet in some measure this sorely-pressing need, the Anglo-Indian Evangelisation Society was formed twenty-three years ago, and through its efforts much good has been done, as appeared at the annual meeting held in Exeter Hall (Lower) on Wednesday last week, Lord Radstock presiding.

Rev. John Fordyce, Secretary, gave an outline of the report, showing that the special appeal issued last year for larger funds and additional workers had awakened some response, and it is hoped several will go out next winter on the new plan of the "Forward Movement."

Details followed of the work of Rev. S. J. Jones, who went to Dinapore quite apart from the Society, but took up its work in the North-west Provinces and Upper Bengal, and with growing success. When formerly in India he did good service, having only an allowance for expenses. Now the work extends, his needs increase, and he receives a moderate salary. He has started or revived Sunday-schools at several stations. Mr. J. R. Hewison was appointed early in the year to the district between Baroda and Ajmere. Both he and his wife devoted themselves very heartily to the work at Abu Road and elsewhere. He has now left for a pastorate at Allahabad.

The report says that Mr. Herbert R. Francis, an evangelist of much experience, was appointed to a district partly in the North-West Provinces and partly in the Punjab, with Dehra Dun as his centre. In the beautiful Dun there is an American Presbyterian Mission. Dr. Morrison, who wrote the Ludhiana appeal for prayer that sent a thrill of interest through a great part of Christendom, died at Dehra a few years ago, and a church was erected bearing his name. Two missionaries there are good English preachers; but the Board in New York limit the exercise of their gifts in English, so that application was made to the Society for aid. The Society being purely evangelistic, the directors could not supply a pastor, but an arrangement has been made that Mr. Francis shall aid in the services of the church, and do evangelistic work in the district. Mrs. Francis, who has good gifts for Christian work, is with her husband. Mr. Frederick W. Adams, who had, as a volunteer, done good work among railway employés, especially at Battersea, was unanimously appointed, and has taken up the district left vacant by Mr. Hewison.

Rev. Isaac F. Row, a very successful agent, after more than sixteen years in India, is now on his way to England for a well-earned furlough.

The reports of the evangelists emphasise the growing need of scattered Europeans and Eurasians, and illustrate the fact that the Society is doing a work that is not done by any other.

Particulars followed of the Anglo-Indian Ladies' Union, and Mr. Fordyce concluded by giving a few incidents showing how God has blessed the work.

Lord Radstock said he had, while in India, become convinced that the spread of Christianity and progress of missionaries among the natives depends largely on the character of the Europeans and Eurasians. In fact, were all our own people in India consistent Christians, missionaries might almost be dispensed with. Nothing is more potent in winning an entrance for the Gospel than Christianity lived out in the eyes of the natives, who believe in what Christians do rather than what they say. Hence the importance of such a Society as this.

Addresses followed by Col. J. F. Morton, Dr. Pringle, and Gen. Bruce. The address of the secretary, Rev. John Fordyce, is now "Simla," Station-road, Cambridge.

THE BAPTIST UNION.

The opening session of the Spring Assembly of the Baptist Union of Great Britain and Ireland was held on Monday afternoon in Bloomsbury Chapel, there being a large attendance of ministers and others. An introductory devotional service was conducted by the Rev. R. H. Roberts, B.A., the retiring president, after which the incoming president, the Rev. Thomas Mew Morris, of Ipswich, took the chair, and delivered his inaugural address.

Taking as his subject, "Our Greatest Need," he said that he believed this to be a Pentecostal effusion of the Holy Spirit, a revival of true, spiritual religion in the churches. They suffered from many necessities, but this was their supreme need; and if this, their greatest need, were met, all their minor necessities would in due time be satisfied. He would not take a pessimistic view of things, but neither would he close his eyes to the facts of the case. There was material advance in certain respects, which they should not ignore, and for which they should not be ungrateful. Christian people were never more active, were never more liberal. In the matter of merely material increase, as shown by the number of adherents, places of worship, resources, agencies, and instrumentalities of different kinds, they had not very much to complain of; but ought they to be satisfied with these results? Was there not, with devout and serious-minded people in all the churches, a feeling of unrest and of dissatisfaction with the existing state of things? They felt that the great work they were called to do was certainly not being done to the extent to which it should. The number of conversions was small, the tone of piety was low, the distinctions between the Church and the world were obscure, and a large proportion of professing Christians were inactive.

All this should lead them to consider what was their greatest need. Their great need was that they should have a more vivid and influential belief in the supernatural—the divine; in the presence and might of the Holy Spirit, who was ever ready to work in them, and through them, by that almighty power which was able to subdue all things unto itself. They gained nothing, but lost much, by abating the claims and pretensions of the Church in this respect. They often heard it said that they were living in a materialistic age, and that if they were wise they would recognise the fact. Let the Church, it was said, show her sympathy with the spirit of the age, keep her supernatural pretensions in the background, and justify her continued existence among men by works of public and social utility. So far as the Church was persuaded to do this, she gave up the vantage ground which alone could make her victorious. So far as he knew, every age had been materialistic in its tendencies; but in every age there had been that in man which had protested against mere materialism. Man felt that he needed something more, and that he must have something more. The Holy Spirit was needed for the origination and sustentation of Christian life; the ascertainment and realisation of Christian truth; the maintenance and manifestation of Christian unity; and the rendering of effective Christian service; and these points he proceeded to elaborate.

In reference to the question of Christian unity, he said that, in seeking to secure and promote that object, there should be the clearest understanding at the outset that nothing was to be expected on the one hand, or surrendered on the other, the demand or surrender of which should even have a tendency to impair their feelings of mutual or self-respect. Truth must not be sacrificed on the altar of charity; and while they should desire to take large and enlightened views of the positions occupied by those from whom they differed, they must be careful that what they called emancipation from prejudice did not become compromise of principle. Separation from others in worship and work was a sin, if it were not a necessity. Just in the same proportion as they had fellowship with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ, would they long to have fellowship with all who loved God, and they would carefully avoid everything which would interfere with that fellowship, or render the maintenance of it difficult. Thus the different sections of Christ's Church, maintaining conscientiously certain differences of opinion, and maintaining certain distinctive ecclesiastical usages, living together on terms of brotherly affection, and working side by side in the service of the common Lord, would present to the world a picture of true unity, more impressive than any exhibition of mere uniformity could be.

In concluding his address, he said they had presented to them opportunities for service, such as had been presented to the Church in no previous age. The world was practically open to the enterprise of the Church, and waiting for its occupation. The agencies of the Church, its instrumentalities, its organisations, its resources, its material equipment, were never such as they were to-day. The one thing needed to lift the Church to a level with its opportunities, and render these vast and varied means effective, was a Pentecostal effusion of the Holy Spirit; and if the Church to-day was to have the enduement of power which was so sadly needed, there must be earnest, united, persevering prayer.

THE PRESBYTERIAN SYNOD.

THE MODERATOR'S ADDRESS.

At the opening of the Synod of the English Presbyterian Church on Monday at Manchester, the new Moderator, Dr. Walter Morison, of Westbourne-grove, London, gave his presidential address.

Thinking of their position as a Church among the years, he might not inappropriately ask them to go a little with him into the inquiry whether change under the influence of the spirit of the time was permissible to them, and if so, in what and how far. It might help them in their inquiry to remember that "our Gospel"—what was in their Confession and was preached by them at any period—was not necessarily identical with Holy Writ. Scripture was a larger word than creed. While the matter of revelation was immutable, their creed and their preaching might not remain always the same. With that distinction he would make the statement—and he would make it as a strong and unqualified one—that the Gospel in its substance did not admit of any change. Their Evangelical faith, with their preaching of it, was a thing unalterable in essence, and the attitude to be maintained by them towards all influences that would corrupt it was that of resistance absolute and persistent. It was "our little systems" that "had their day." The nature of the Gospel was to be a transmuting energy, and its power for effecting its purpose depended upon its continuing what it was and remaining pure. It was "the Gospel of our salvation." It addressed itself, primarily at least, to the redemption of the individual, the unit of humanity.

What did that salvation of the individual include? And was the salvation a thing which was required in one age of the world and not in another, or that could be accomplished in different ways at different times in history? It included the remission of sin. That was a necessity for all the generations of men that came surging up darkly on the horizon. If there was once a time when salvation could come only through the atonement in connection with penitence and faith on the part of the receiver of it, what was there in the circumstances, say, of our day, to make any essential difference in this matter? And there was that other great part of salvation, the redemption of character, the making of a man good. If, on account of the corruption of the human heart, a "birth from above" was necessary in the primitive times, how was such a deep change less necessary in our day? Was there not the same congenital corruption now, or had we in this age of progress discovered any spiritually renewing force with which the men of nineteen hundred years ago were not acquainted?

They had heard a great deal of late, and not one word too much, about the Gospel and the working-man; they had been told that the Gospel as preached by them must be adapted to him. That was so; but it was the man within the working-man who needed the Gospel most deeply; and as a man he was not different from his fellows in any rank of life. Strongly did he believe that the less they had of class distinctions in their preaching of the Gospel the better. By making their appeal to what was most profoundly and abidingly human in their wants and capacities, rather than to what was circumstantial and temporary in their condition, they should best lay hold, and keep hold, or recover hold, as need might be, of the individuals of all classes of society. It was not necessary to have a new Gospel for the nineteenth century, or for the twentieth. Let the old one shine!

While, as to its substance, the Gospel which they preached did not admit of any change with time and its influences, yet was there some sense in which change was not only legitimate but desirable and necessary. The Gospel was æonian in the sense of lasting, but it was æonian also in always being adapted to the "age" as it went on. An organism that could not adapt itself to its surroundings died. In what belonged to the subordinate matter of the way of presenting the Gospel to the world, there was room for variation of procedure within the great general principles of God's Word; by taking advantage of which liberty wisely they might the better "serve the present age." They perhaps ought to have more freedom in their manner of preaching, and in the persons of the preachers. He was not sure but that change in the condition of society, brought about by Christianity, had altered the position of women in this matter. And why not have "lantern" sermons? They had had dark-lantern ones long enough. But let them go deeper down. As theologians and preachers they did not fear light from any quarter. They could not condemn the spirit of science when employed upon the Bible in what was called the "higher criticism"; they wanted to know the facts in that department. It had been claimed that modern criticism had given us back the Bible, but it might be said with more truth that modern exegesis had given us the meaning of the Bible.

Along with the effect upon their views and teaching of the Gospel, thus produced by the scientific spirit of our time, there was also the effect of what he might call the historic influence—the power of the passing years with their events in drawing out the Gospel in manifestation and for application to circumstances. The modern geography, for instance, had in effect given to the Church a larger missionary commission than it knew in the early times, as being called to "Go into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature." Nor had the process of manifestation come to an end; with the call for it there still emerged into prominence now and then that which became the "present truth," the gospel for the day. Our being in India brought out at one time the gospel of anti-suttee, and at another time the gospel of anti-opium. Threatenings of war brought out the gospel of peace. The increase of drunkenness brought out the gospel of temperance, which was no substitute for Christianity, but a part of it.

So in the case of the various social needs of our time. They brought out the gospel for the time. They had in Manchester the headquarters of the "Labour Church"; but it was here before in their churches, and there was no need for a new sect; though, indeed, they of the old Church required to be reminded of "the spirit we are of." The social question dated from the first century—the time of the coming of Christ. Christianity, he admitted, was, and must always be, only a religion, a religion which included ethics; but it affected politics and art and literature and all things. And he did not see how the Christian minister was going out of his place when, in pursuing the spiritual and moral truth, he preached its application to outward and secular things. He must get the leaven into the lump somehow, and that might be by taking part, and that along with others, in public questions and movements, even within the political sphere. In conclusion, Dr. Morison said that with a good conscience they might go forward to the work, for the most part of an immediately practical kind, that lay before them. They had dealt with doctrine and with the subordinate matters of church government and the like; and they had dealt so far with the question of worship, which doubtless would be settled amicably on the lines of spirituality, freedom, and simplicity on which they had hitherto gone. What they had before them was arrangement for future work; and in that let them exercise a wise freedom within the large principles and spirit of the Word, adapting their measures to the needs of the time.

PROTESTANT REFORMATION SOCIETY.— The fifth monthly prayer-meeting of this Society was held last Thursday in the committee-room, 20, Berners-street. There was a good attendance. Rev. W. R. Mowll spoke solemnly of the ignorance that prevails even in educated circles on the subjects of sin and the Gospel. Prayer was offered for the missionaries of the Society, and that our country may be delivered from the power of the Church of Rome.

MESSRS. MOODY AND SANKEY.

A large and influential committee of laymen has been got together, with Mr. J. Herbert Tritton as chairman, for the purpose of arranging that a thoroughly representative and cordial invitation be sent to Messrs. Moody and Sankey to conduct evangelistic services in London and the suburbs next winter and spring. The clergy and ministers of London will be invited to join in signing this invitation; in response to which it is confidently anticipated that these beloved brethren will again visit the Metropolis.

The first meeting of the council was held on Monday last, when upwards of forty gentlemen were present. Mr. James E. Mathieson referred in touching words to the visits of 1873 and 1883-4. Mr. M. H. Hodder prayed that even greater blessing might be the result of the proposed visit.

After electing Mr. T. A. Denny and Lord Kinnaird treasurers of the fund, more prayer followed by Mr. H. W. Maynard, Sir Robert Phayre, and Mr. Edward Trotter. An executive committee, consisting for the most part of younger men, was elected to carry out future plans, whilst the hon. secretaries—Mr. Stuart Trotter, the Hon. Granville Waldegrave, and Mr. Clement Davis—will continue to act until a permanent secretary be appointed. The committee rooms are at No. 1, Circus-place, Finsbury, E.C.

"BEACH ROCKS," SANDGATE.

In brilliant weather, and under the most favourable circumstances, the opening took place on Saturday afternoon of the western wing of the new "Beach Rocks" Convalescent Home at Sandgate. This marks the completion of the splendid Home which the London Samaritan Society, under the energetic direction of Mr. John James Jones, has erected for the benefit of the sick and suffering poor who stand so much in need of rest, and change of air and scene, after trying illnesses. The Home, as it now stands complete, is perhaps the most elegant and comfortable retreat of the kind in the country. Inside and out it is equally pleasing to the eye, while its situation on the sea front gives it every advantage as a resting and recruiting place for the weak and weary.

The west wing contains accommodation for 127 patients, bringing up the total number who can stay at the Home at one time to 250. Most of the beds in the Home have been subscribed for, but there are still some fifty or more awaiting the necessary furniture to make them ready for use; it is much hoped that the funds for these may be subscribed before the summer season arrives. Each bed complete costs £5. There is also still a mortgage on the building of about £10,000, which it is desired to clear off as soon as possible.

The opening ceremony was performed by the Mayor of Folkestone (Alderman Banks, J.P.), who attended in civic state, accompanied by several town councillors, county magistrates, and others. In declaring the wing open, the Mayor spoke some very hearty words in commendation of the good work carried on in connection with the Homes, and recommended them to the liberal support of the public. Mr. Jones followed with interesting information relative to the history and working of the Homes and the Society. Other friends, including Mr. W. M. Dabbs, Mr. George Nokes, Mr. J. Tyler, and Mr. H. T. Tiddeman, also spoke.

Subsequently the company had an opportunity of seeing over the building, with which universal satisfaction was expressed, besides many hopes that the Home might long remain open for the good of our suffering poor.

THROUGH THE "MISSIONS TO SEAMEN" SOCIETY 5736 sailors have been enrolled during the past sixteen years as total abstainers in Cork Harbour alone.

MR. CHARLES INGLIS has held at the Barnet Tabernacle a six days' mission. The Bible readings proved times of great blessing; the Lord's people have been quickened and aroused by the practical and instructive addresses. The Gospel meetings have been fruitful in the ingathering of souls. The attendance grew as the mission progressed. The clear, earnest, and faithful uplifting of Christ was followed by a personal pointing of anxious souls to the Lamb of God. Percy J. Smart.

APPEAL TO VALIANT CHRISTIANS.

Wanted, 100 Men for Epsom Races.

Dear Sir,—Will you please find space in your next issue for this appeal? It is for 100 men, good and true, to help us in our campaign on Epsom Downs. The success of the past fills us with hope and confidence for the future. In the past sinners have been saved; tens of thousands have heard the Gospel that go to no place of worship, and the Royal Banner of the King of kings has been unfurled in the enemy's country and on his strongest fortress. Amid all the noise and tumult, the witnesses of Jesus Christ have given no uncertain sound that He still has power and authority on earth to forgive sins. Every time I go to Epsom Downs my heart yearns for these people, as we see them writhing, trembling, turning hot and cold, cursing and swearing, under the awful power of the gambling demon. Tens of thousands of people come there doomed to sorrow, trouble, distress, and a guilty conscience; and a word of sympathy, tenderness, love, is like balm to their troubled souls. Oh, how I long for workers to carry the balm of Gilead to them! Rouse up! wake up! cast away sloth and fear! come and help!

Workers, do come into this great harvest-field! The harvest truly is plentiful, but the labourers are few, and the harvest is spoiling. Come and help to gather it in. When I saw the Volunteers going away for Easter Monday, I thought, When will they turn out like this for Christ? They had to put up with many difficulties and inconveniences, and walk many weary miles, and then only to take part in an imaginary fight, and no chance to win one real victory. Now, we give you an offer—join our volunteer corps to take part in a real fight, and win real victories, and get a real, lasting reward. The class of volunteers we want—men filled with Holy Ghost power, that long for the salvation of others—men that can pray short and speak short, others that have good voices and can sing well, and one or two good soloists. Nothing impresses the crowd more than good singing.

The races commence on Tuesday, May 30, but we must be on the ground on Monday, May 29. Now book it, don't trust your memory—book the date, May 29. We take no notice of sects or parties at Epsom; if you are saved, and you have no doubt about it, and believe everybody else can be saved, and you are longing for their salvation, you will do. We have no time for discussion about water or incense, kneeling down or standing up; priest or parson or Pope; Church or Dissent. No; the business on hand is the salvation of the masses. So ministers of all denominations may come, and nothing would delight me more than to see the Archbishop of Canterbury, the President of our Conference, General Booth, and others there; but we must have at least one hundred men this year. If God is calling you to this work, write to me at the address below for full particulars. You have plenty of time to make arrangements this year.

One word to our readers before I close. Please pray for us—the work is difficult and costly; pray that the men may come; and when I appeal for funds, kindly respond, and help us to reach the masses for Christ.

Yours sincerely,

Josiah Nix.

THE BIBLE IN CHINA.

Dear Sir,—You may be interested to know how the Bible work of the National Bible Society of Scotland goes on in West China. During the past year 14,000 English miles have been traversed by a staff of nine colporteurs, in journeys extending throughout the provinces of Szechuen, Yunnan, Kueichow, Shensi, and Kansuh. On these journeys 21,000 New Testaments and Scripture portions have been sold, and also 54,000 Christian tracts. The booksellers are all earnest Christian men, who preach and explain the Word as they go.

If any of your readers would like to have one of these good men as his very own representative in the mission field—to pray for and to support—the thing can be done by his sending £10 annually to our secretary, Mr. W. J. Slowan, 224, West George-street, Glasgow. James Murray.

Chungking, China.

BIBLE READING ASSOCIATION.

On Tuesday, 18th inst., the lecture hall of the Sunday-school Union, 56, Old Bailey, was filled by members and friends of the International B.R.A., on the occasion of the eleventh anniversary. The object of the Association is to promote daily Bible reading, and the portions selected for the week are illustrative of the International Sunday-school lesson for the following Sunday, thus assisting teachers and scholars in the preparation for class study.

The Honorary Secretary (Mr. C. Waters) read a statement of the work of the past year, which indicated an increase in membership of 50,000. For 1893 there had been issued 435,000 membership cards in English, distributed in forty different countries. The members of the Association had subscribed £442 for the support of Dr. J. L. Phillips in India as a Sunday-school missionary He had travelled throughout the country, and had organised local committees for the purpose of stimulating and improving Sunday-schools.

The Chairman (Mr. J. Compton Rickett), Rev. C. H. Kelly, Rev. G. P. Mackay, and Mr. T. B. Glasgow (a coloured gentleman from Demerara), spoke on the work of the Association.

In the afternoon there was a conference of branch secretaries, at which a paper was read by Mr. W. H. Nicholson, district secretary for Manchester.

PROPHECY INVESTIGATION SOCIETY.

"The Great Tribulation" was the subject of a thoughtful paper read on Friday last before the members of the Prophecy Investigation Society, at Exeter Hall, by Rev. J. J. B. Coles, M.A. The study was based on Rev. vii. 14, and the following positions were maintained:—

This time of unequalled trouble is referred to in Daniel xii. 1, Matt. xxiv. 29, Mark xiii. 24, Luke xxi. 25, 2 Thess. ii., and in passages in the Old Testament Prophets which speak of the closing crisis of the "Day of the Lord": such as Joel ii. 30, Isaiah xiii. 9, Malachi iv. 1. It is the final crisis at the "end of the age" (Matt. xxiv. 3), immediately before the Lord's second coming to the Mount of Olives, Zech. xiv. 4. It occurs in the closing days of the "time of the end." It is the telos of the sunteleia of Matt. xxiv. 14. It is the time when God's judgments are in the earth, Isaiah xxvi. 9; and the time of Jacob's trouble, Jeremiah xxx. 7, when the Jews will be delivered.

The Apocalypse, regarded in its "futurist" application and interpretation, deals with the "time of the end" and the great tribulation which closes it. There is no indication in the Scriptures which relate to this great tribulation that any of the true members of the Church, i.e., the Body of Christ, will be in it. The Scriptures relating to the translation of the Church—e.g., 1 Thess. iv. 15—18—were a subsequent and special revelation, and are not to be synchronised with passages relating to the events which occur after the Church is gone. In the present time the Holy Spirit speaks of three classes 1 Cor. x. 32: (a) the Jews, (b) the Gentiles, and (c) the Church of God; whereas, in all the above-quoted passages relating to the "day of the Lord" or the "time of the end," or the "time of Jacob's trouble," there are but two classes found, Jews and Gentiles. There is, therefore, no authority for saying the Church will be in the great tribulation.

IN THE WEST INDIES.

Mrs. Huntley writes from Grenada:—"I left Demerara at the end of January and went to Barbados, where I spent a fortnight. I was pleased to see how the work of the Lord is prospering in the hands of Mr. and Mrs. Gordon. Thence I went to St. Vincent, and was much cheered to see the steadfastness of those who came out with me in 1891.

"In March I came to Grenada, and found a wonderful work going on. Messrs. Mitchell and Swift labour together very happily. The majority of the congregations in the Gospel Hall are men, nearly all blacks. Fifty or sixty attend the Bible readings, and ask interesting questions. Mrs. Swift is very active among the women, and has large Bible classes. Mr. Henry Dyer has visited Barbados, Demerara, St. Vincent, and Grenada, accompanied by his wife. They expect to go to Jamaica shortly.

"I go about among the sick, and hope soon to do hospital and poorhouse work. We have a large demand for Gospel tracts. Perhaps some kind friends will help us to meet the need."

Mrs. Huntley's address is Green-street, St. George's, Grenada, West Indies. Tracts may be sent to her by book post (up to 4lb. weight), at the rate of 4d. per lb.

THE Y.M.C.A.

The Harrogate Y.M.C.A. will shortly remove to improved premises, situate in Parliament-street.

Heckmondwike Association has just held its first annual public meeting, which passed off very successfully.

At the quarterly meeting of the Sunderland Y.M.C.A. the report showed that twenty-nine new members and associates had joined during the past quarter.

The Broughty Ferry Association are, through the generosity of Mr. A. J. Buist, erecting an admirable and complete gymnasium in connection with their present buildings.

Over 100 of the officers, workers, and committee of the Sunderland Association held a social conference upon the invitation of the Ladies' Auxiliary, when papers on the summer work were read and discussed.

At a reception given the other day by Mr. Richard Cadbury to 1300 members, associates, and friends of the Birmingham Y.M.C.A., concerts by telephone from London and Liverpool were among the attractions provided.

The annual meeting of the Exeter Y.M.C.A. was held on Thursday evening last week. "King's Lodge," an excellent property, has been acquired by the Association as its home, and only £350 is owing on this account.

Successful quarterly meetings of the North-Western District Union were held at Keswick. Mr. Peter Thompson, manager of the Keswick and Cockermouth Railway, presided at the evening gathering; and Mr. J. F. Curwen presented the report, showing steady progress.

Mr. A. H. Wheeler, who has been sent to Portsmouth by the National Council to try and resuscitate the Y.M.C.A. work, which collapsed some two or three years ago, hopes to conduct a fortnight's mission for men from April 30, and will be glad of the prayers of the Lord's people that the results may be the ingathering of numbers of the young men of this town.

The half-yearly conference of the South-Western district was held on Wednesday week at Exmouth. There were a large number of delegates present; and the report presented for the district showed an increase in the membership of 724. A resolution was passed affiliating the Tavistock, Teignmouth, and Dawlish Associations to the district. Dr. Hingston delivered an excellent presidential address.

The fine building presented by Mr. Sankey to the Y.M.C.A. in his native town, Newcastle (Penn), has had a very narrow escape from total destruction by fire, having indeed been very seriously damaged. The physical director, Mr. G. T. Thompson, who was sleeping on the premises, was rescued with much difficulty, and amidst the greatest excitement. Happily the building was fully insured, so that the damages will soon be made good.

The annual business meeting of the Edinburgh Y.M.C.A. was recently held, Dr. Carment, the president of the Association, in the chair. The annual report showed improvement and extension, particularly in evangelistic and other religious efforts. The membership showed an increase of thirty-one, and the attendance at the Bible Classes and meetings recorded a large increase during the year. The Foreign Mission meetings had been addressed by many foreign missionaries, and the interest in those missions among the members had been greatly extended. Monetary support had been given to several missions, and the members had resolved to maintain a native evangelist in Santalia. Two members had entered on appointments in Home Mission work, and three members would leave shortly for the foreign field as missionaries.

At the last monthly meeting of the National Executive an invitation was accepted to hold the half-yearly meeting of the Council at Leeds on June 12 and 13 next, immediately preceding the British Y.M.C.A. Conference at Sheffield, June 13—16. Lord Kinnaird kindly undertook to represent the Council at the Religious Congress to be held in connection with the World's Fair at the close of the ensuing summer. A resolution was adopted to the following effect:—"That Young Men's Societies having kindred aims with those of Young Men's Christian Associations shall be deemed eligible for admission into relationship with the Y.M.C.A., provided (1) that the spiritual benefit of young men be included as one of the objects of such societies, and (2) that the character and constitution of such societies be not inconsistent with the Y.M.C.A. basis of union."

A few of us at Mayfield felt burdened for the young men of this town, who Sunday by Sunday could be seen lounging about the streets, and very little being done for their eternal welfare. Earnestly we prayed that God would send along a qualified brother to lead on the van. He answered prayer, and Mr. Coultas was led to take up residence amongst us. Soon his house was opened for young men to come and spend the evening, and some professed definite blessing. So the work grew. Mr. Coultas left the town, but the start he was enabled to give was taken up by others, and last Monday a new hall was opened for the furtherance of the good work, with a week's mission conducted by his son, Mr. Gerald Coultas, of London. God owned the Word, and souls have been saved. The mission has been a means of blessing to Christian workers, and through God's grace has given a permanent start to the work.—William Adams, Treasurer.

OXFORD NOTES.

Prof. George Adam Smith, of Glasgow, preached at Mansfield on Sunday last.

Rev. Thomas Champness, of the Joyful News Mission, preached in the Wesley Memorial Church last Monday evening.

Rev. J. G. Stewart preached last week the annual sermons of the Wesley Memorial Sunday School, and also spoke at the meeting which followed next day.

The list of speakers at the weekly meeting of the Missionary Union for the new term is an exceedingly good one, Mr. Hudson Taylor being among the number.

The anniversary of Commercial-road Baptist Chapel was held recently, when the pastor (Rev. H. B. Case) spoke of good work done in the midst of a poor neighbourhood.

A very large and crowded meeting was held on Monday in the Town Hall in connection with the suppression of the opium traffic. Miss Soonderbhai Powar, of Bombay, Rev. J. S. Adams, of the China Inland Mission, and Mr. Alexander, secretary of the Anti-Opium Society, spoke, and resolutions in favour of the suppression of the traffic were unanimously carried. Miss Powar's testimony and earnest appeal will not soon be forgotten.

A noteworthy appeal has been issued by several prominent Evangelical Churchmen in order to establish an Evangelical Pastorate for University men, by the appointment of two clergymen whose sole work will be the pastoral care of undergraduates. This movement is the direct result of the remarkable address by the Rev. F. J. Chavasse at the last Islington Clerical Meeting, and will be of untold value to the cause of the Gospel in Oxford. The parochial clergy, already occupied with pressing claims, can find but little time or opportunity for work among undergraduates, but the presence of men specially appointed will be permanent influence to the men.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR NOTES.

At New Mill, Tring, ten members have just been received into the Baptist church from the local Y.P.S.C.E.

The Clarendon-street, Boston, Endeavour Society supports one of its own number as a missionary in Africa, at a cost of six hundred dollars per year.

At Golborne-road, North Kensington, the fifth anniversary of the Christian Endeavour Society has been held, and, from the reports given by the pastor, Rev. H. R. Davies, and the secretaries, it appeared cheering progress is being made.

The Christian Instructor says:—"We have recorded the fact that Secretary Noble refused to grant the use of the Pension building at Washington for a 'sacred concert' on the Sabbath in connection with the inauguration of President Cleveland, and also the fact that the President himself objected to such a concert as constituting any part of the inauguration ceremonies. It has since transpired that the movement against the concert on the Sabbath originated with the Christian Endeavourers of Washington, and that they were heartily seconded by the ministers of the city and other organisations."

THE ALBANY INSTITUTE.—Earl Compton warmly congratulated the friends at the Albany Youths' Institute on Wednesday week, when presiding at the anniversary gathering, upon the solid progress that had been made during the year. One of the founders, Mr. Smith, had been called home after a painful illness. A satisfactory report was read and speeches delivered by several friends, Mr. Spong being the representative of the Ragged School Union.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing upon evangelistic work in St. Neots, Hunts, during the ensuing summer.—For spiritual blessing upon the services of Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh at London-road Hall, Kettering, from April 30 to May 14.—A very weak Christian asks the earnest prayers of God's people that she may be delivered from that which hinders her following Him, and that she may get strength to do her duty in a very trying position.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

Bishop Wilkinson, the new occupant of the see of St. Andrews, has taken up his residence at Birnam.

The recent licensing courts in Scotland have shown a general tendency to a reduction in the number of licenses.

Mr. and Mrs. Quarrier of Glasgow, are hoping to sail on May 25, with another band of little emigrants for Canada, £240 are still needed to complete the cost of outfits.

The adult free breakfast mission in Dundee has been in active operation during the past winter; nearly 8000 people were breakfasted. The directors of the Curr Night Refuge are formulating a scheme for providing these destitute men with work.

The report submitted to the annual meeting in Glasgow last week of the Sailors' Orphan Society of Scotland showed that 118 children had been admitted last year, making 340 under their care during that period. Legacies of £3500 from the late Mrs. Alex. Allan and £3000 from Mr. Allan were reported. These amounts go towards the endowment fund.

The annual Assembly of the Scottish Congregational Union is being held this week in Aberdeen. Rev. Professor Simpson (Edinburgh) is the moderator. Introductory services were held on Sunday, when sermons were preached by Revs. Hope Davison and Burford Hooke. On Monday night a reception was accorded to the delegates, who number about two hundred, by the Aberdeen churches in the Blackfriars' Hall. The reports to be submitted during the session indicate numerical and financial progress.

IRISH NOTES.

A new Presbyterian Church has been built at Newtownbreda, near Belfast, at a cost of £6700.

There are eight candidates for the Methodist ministry coming forward this year in Ireland, being about the average number.

The series of Pleasant Sunday Afternoon Services in the Ulster Hall, Belfast, was brought to a close for the present on Sunday week, when Rev. Henry Montgomery preached an earnest sermon.

Evangelistic services, extending over four weeks, have been held in the Methodist Church, Clones, by Rev. Henry Ball; and similar services have been held by Mr. S. Montgomery in the Presbyterian Church, Newtownstewart.

The anniversary of the Church Missionary Society has been held this week in Belfast. The report showed that £10,031 was contributed last year in Ireland towards the funds of the society, being the highest amount, with one exception, ever given in twelve months to the same object.

The Irish Church Mission recently held its annual meeting in Dublin, the Bishop of Cashel presiding. Canon M'Cormack and other speakers gave an encouraging account of the work of the society throughout the country. There is no doubt there is an open door for the preaching of the Gospel in Ireland such as was never before experienced in that country.

At the Mariners' Church, Kingstown, Rev. W. E. Burroughs, incumbent, recently received into the fellowship of the Church eight converts from Romanism—five men and three women. Most of these found the Saviour at the meetings held at the Stanhope Mission House, Tivoli-road, Kingstown, where an excellent work is carried on amongst poor Roman Catholics of the neighbourhood by Miss Carr, assisted by other ladies.

An organisation, consisting of all the ministers and elders who are total abstainers in the Belfast Presbytery, and called the Belfast Presbyterial Temperance Association, has been formed, with the objects of diffusing knowledge with regard to the drink traffic, getting people to become total abstainers, disseminating temperance literature, and influencing the Church to manifest an uncompromising attitude towards the drink traffic.

KING'S WEIGH-HOUSE FLOWER MISSION.—The flower mission, in connection with this church, is being resumed on Saturday, April 29. The workers will be glad to welcome anyone who would like to assist in distributing the flowers among the poor in the neighbourhood of the Royal Mint. Contributions of flowers from friends in the country will be welcome. Letters to be addressed, Miss Winey, 8, Aldgate, City. Flowers to be addressed, Mrs. Kirby, Darby-street Flower Mission, Royal Mint-street, E.C.

NO PUBLIC-HOUSES exist in a section of the township of Toxteth, Liverpool, containing about 60,000 people in 200 streets, with 12,000 houses. In this district the dwelling-houses realise rents of about one-third more than those obtained for similar houses in liquor-shop neighbourhoods, and people are so anxious to take them that there is hardly a house to let.

Personalia.

Rev. J. Idrisyn Jones has, we hear, accepted the pastorate of the Congregational church at Welshpool.

Mr. Henry Varley has arrived in England. Communications for him may be addressed to 40, Bassett-road, Notting Hill, W.

Rev. Thomas Champness has now commenced the work of the women's branch of his mission at Rugby. Miss Mary Champness is in charge.

Rev. Thos. Cook has been invited to give a year to evangelistic service in South Australia. The decision rests with the Wesleyan Conference.

Rev. Dr. Perrin, the newly-appointed Bishop of British Columbia, left Liverpool on Thursday for Montreal, on his way to his future labours.

Rev. George Short, B.A., of Salisbury, who was, on Monday, elected vice-president of the Baptist Union, is well-known as a devoted worker and faithful preacher.

Rev. Charles Spurgeon received last week a warm and cordial welcome at the Pastors' Conference on his return from Australia. He looks well tanned, and very much improved in health by his trip.

Mr. J. J. Scroggie is desiring to remove to the neighbourhood of London, as being more central for the work of evangelisation in which he is engaged, His present address is Westmead, North Malvern.

The Misses Leitch have nearly finished their task of collecting and are about to return to Ceylon. They hope to sail about May 1, accompanied by Dr. and Mrs. Scott. The Misses Leslie expect to sail for Ceylon a little later.

Dr. Charles F. Deems, the well-known pastor of the Church of the Strangers, New York, who was stricken with paralysis several months ago and was obliged to give up work, has nearly recovered full power of speech, and can use his limbs a little.

Rev. Oscar Michelsen is still in Scotland addressing meetings in aid of mission work in the New Hebrides. In Glasgow, last week, he spoke in St. Paul's Church (Rev. James Paton, minister), and in Free St. Peter's and Free St. John's. On Monday he was at Alloa.

Rev. Henry Montgomery, of Belfast, through the kindness of his congregation, hopes shortly to take a holiday in America, in order to see something of the evangelistic campaign which Mr. Moody proposes to inaugurate in Chicago. He expects to sail in May, viâ Montreal.

Rev. G. J. Hill and Mrs. Hill, of the Seamen's Christian Friend Society, celebrated on Friday their silver wedding, and good meetings were held in connection at the Ratcliff Highway Bethel, when cheering testimony was borne to the remarkable blessing which has rested upon their labours among seamen.

Miss Frances Willard, who, although she came to England for rest, has since her coming been working incessantly, has broken down and is now imperatively ordered complete rest. It is feared that it will be six months ere she is fit for service again. Meanwhile earnest prayer will be made by many on her behalf.

The Boyle Lectures for 1893 will be delivered by Rev. Alex. J. Harrison, B.D., on the Thursday evenings in May and June in St. John's Church, Bethnal Green. They are eight in number, and have for their subject "The Grounds of Certainty in Science and Religion." The first will be given on Thursday, May 4, at 8 o'clock p.m.

Pastor Cremer, of Brive, Corrèze, France, is visiting England again, in order to attend the Conference on Continental Work this week in Exeter Hall, and to address meetings on behalf of the Foreign Aid Society. Friends desirous of arranging meetings in support of this Society should write for particulars to Rev. H. Joy-Browne, Christ Church Vicarage, Barnet, N.

Rev. Edward White intends dealing with Spiritualism in his Merchant Lectures, at the Memorial Hall, during the month of May. The course will review ancient and modern practices and professions regarding necromancy and spirit influence and control; and the light of Old and New Testament Scripture, alike in history and prophecy, will be brought to bear upon the subject.

Mr. William Noble will esteem it a favour if correspondents will send him any general or personal information respecting the work of the Blue Ribbon Gospel Temperance Movement in England, Ireland, Scotland, and the Colonies from 1878 up to date. Special authentic cases reclaimed, with any other items of interest, will be gladly received by him, addressed to Highfield, Wash-road, Newbury, Berks.

The late John Thomas Olney, of the Metropolitan Tabernacle, has bequeathed £1000 for the erection, wholly or in part, of one or more Baptist churches, at the discretion of his executors; £300 to the pastor and deacons of the Metropolitan Tabernacle for the relief of poor members; £200 to the Metropolitan Tabernacle Almshouses; £100 to the Baptist Missionary Society; and £50 to the Kennington Christian Association.

The Late C. H. Spurgeon.—On Wednesday afternoon last week, at Norwood Cemetery, a massive granite and marble monument which has been erected over the grave of the late Rev. C. H. Spurgeon was unveiled in the presence of several prominent members of the Metropolitan Tabernacle, together with a number of delegates to the conference of the Pastors' College then in session. One of the panels of the monument bears a striking medallion portrait in marble of the great Baptist preacher, and immediately below it is a cushion of polished red granite, with open Bible in marble, bearing the text, "I have fought a good fight; I have finished my course; I have kept the faith." In front of the pedestal is a granite door, leading to the vault below, engraved with the simple inscription, "Here lies the body of Charles Haddon Spurgeon, waiting for the appearing of his Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ."

Evangelistic Notes.

Hastings.—Deaconess Cook and Miss Ginger have concluded a ten days' mission at Mount Pleasant. The congregations were excellent. It was a time of great spiritual quickening, and many have found Christ.

Newbury.—Mr. Matthew Burnett has just held a ten days' mission in the Newbury Town Hall, concluding with a sermon in the Wesleyan Chapel, and an evangelistic address afterwards. The audiences each night were crowded and enthusiastic.

H. T. Midwinter.

Pulham Market.—A twelve days' mission has been held here by Miss Bee, and without sensational attractions the chapel has been thronged night after night, and the power of God felt. Men, women, and children found salvation, and the services have been blessed to all.

Mr. Frank L. Smith, who conducted fruitful tent meetings in various parts of the States last summer, has had much blessing upon his work this winter. He has held missions in many New York towns, and men's meetings in the Kalamazoo, Mich., Y.M.C.A., which resulted in the conversion of a number of men.

Bristol.—Mr. Gawyn Cummings has lately held a ten days' mission amongst railway men in the Mission Room at the Joint Station. His labours were owned of God in the conversion of souls and the strengthening of the spiritual life in believers. The workers thank God for his ministry amongst them, and pray that the seed sown may yield a yet more abundant harvest.

Scarfskerry, Caithness.—Mr. J. W. Moodie has concluded a fortnight's meetings in this locality. The people turned out well to hear the Gospel during the week-nights and also on Sabbath forenoons. They listened attentively to the solemn truths declared. As a result Christians have been stirred up, and unconverted souls have been awakened. We are expecting that time will prove that real good will result from the meetings to the glory of God.

James Scott, Baptist Pastor.

Tyldesley.—A good eight days' mission has been held by Rev. R. Stevenson. Large congregations assembled. The names of sixty adults, chiefly sons and daughters of members of the church, were taken in the inquiry-room. Great solemnity prevailed throughout, and there was an entire absence of undue excitement. A Gospel service on Wednesday evenings and a Gospel temperance mission on Saturday evenings have been formed, and continue to draw large congregations.

Swansea.—Rev. T. Waugh has just concluded a successful nine days' mission here. Thorough preparation was made, workers met day after day to pray, and the neighbourhood was systematically visited. Widespread interest was excited, and the congregations increased until the chapel became crowded; each service was a time of spiritual profit. The men's meetings were especially successful, and the missioner spoke with marvellous power. Mr. Waugh had the joy of reaping, and many decided for Christ.

Mrs. Horton and Miss Parker are having much blessing on their present mission at St. Paul's Church, Southend-on-Sea. The Bible readings and meetings for women are well attended, and prove seasons of power. Every night men and women are to be seen in the inquiry-room, and many have professed to decide for Christ, whilst in the meetings for Christians several are seeking a closer walk with Christ, and entering into fuller life. Rev. Alfred Waller, incumbent, has commenced a splendid work in a densely populated neighbourhood, and both he and his co-workers with the evangelists, rejoice at the rich token of God's spirit in their midst.

Moss Side, Manchester.—A successful mission, conducted by Messrs. Fullerton and Smith, has just been brought to a close at Moss Side Baptist Church, Manchester. The whole district has been stirred by the earnest message of these honoured brethren. More than 300 inquirers were dealt with during the fortnight, among them being several professed infidels. So great has been the impression produced by the mission upon the neighbourhood, that every church is able to count among its members some quickened by the special services. The meetings for men and the afternoon Bible readings were specially well attended, and large numbers were turned away each Sunday evening for want of room. It is hoped that a general Nonconformist mission for Manchester may be arranged as an outcome of these services. Arnold Streuli, Pastor.

Dr. L. W. Munhall held during March United Gospel services in Muscatine, Iowa. The city was greatly stirred, many confessing Christ. Dr. Munhall handles the Word of God with great power. There is no trimming in his preaching. His sermons are of the character which produces deep conviction. The New York Independent says as to these meetings:—"The community has been profoundly stirred. It is generally recognised that the work has been the greatest, the most notable, and in every way the most satisfactory of any of the sort which has ever been accomplished in the history of the place. No criticism as to 'excitement' has been heard, but the power of the truth and of the Spirit have been felt everywhere. Christian people generally have been greatly quickened, and have been moved to take higher ground in Christian living. Many backsliders have been reclaimed. The value, authority, and power of the Scriptures were magnified constantly, while the great fundamental doctrines were made to stand out in bold relief. The way of salvation was made so simple and plain that no one, not even the youngest, could fail to understand. The examination since of candidates for admission to the churches has abundantly demonstrated this."

Minneapolis.—The revival described in our last issue has been continued with much interest. The meetings have been crowded, none of the churches being sufficiently large to contain the throngs that gathered. Four services have been held each day, commencing with an early morning service. Dr. Chapman remained two weeks, closing the last night in the Exposition Hall especially fitted up for these services. One feature of the work was the all-night prayer meeting. The service was one long to be remembered by those who participated. One would be willing to go a long journey to see so many people waiting upon God through the long hours of the night and into the grey of the dawn. Another marked feature was the presentation by the two evangelists, Mr. Fay Mills and Dr. Chapman, of the doctrine of the reception of the Holy Ghost as a definite transaction. Very much was made by both evangelists of the necessity of receiving the Spirit. Hundreds of people professed to so receive Him. The singing of Mr. and Mrs. Lowe, who accompany Dr. Chapman, was a most attractive feature. Much of the success attending the work was due to the Gospel messages which they sang so effectually. Hundreds of cards have been signed, declaring a desire to become Christians.

Farewell to Missionaries.

A valedictory service was held in connection with the Zambesi Industrial Mission at New Court Chapel, Tollington Park, on Thursday last. A large number of friends met to say God-speed to the outgoing missionaries, Mr. and Mrs. Hawkins, Mr. and Mrs. Miller, and Dr. Hamilton. Rev. Wm. Pierce presided.

Mr. R. Caldwell, secretary of the Z.I.M., gave a brief history of the new movement, showing how successful everything connected therewith had been up to the present time, and what reasons they had to anticipate success for the future. Mr. F. G. Toller, treasurer, explained the system under which the missionaries were to labour. It was expected that at the end of three years each station would become self-supporting and reproductive. Rev. Wm. Pierce stated that the idea of industrial missions was certainly a novelty to him, although men like Moffat had done much in the same direction, and he felt a great interest awakened within him towards the Zambesi Industrial Missions.

Alderman R. Cory, Cardiff, having warmly expressed his sympathy with the aims of the Mission, and the manner in which those aims were being carried out, the outgoing missionaries briefly explained how the Lord had led them, and asked for an interest in the prayers of those present. Alderman Cory then gave the charge to the missionaries, and Rev. Mr. Carter offered up the dedicatory prayer.

LORD CHIEF JUSTICE COLERIDGE declares that judges are "weary with calling attention to drink as the principal cause of crime," and announces that he "can keep no terms with a vice that fills our gaols, destroys the comfort of homes and the peace of families, and debases and brutalises the people of these islands."

Obituary.

MR. WILLIAM WAKEFIELD, KENDAL.

THIS earnest Christian and ardent leader in the temperance cause was called home suddenly on Wednesday evening, dying in the railway carriage whilst travelling between Liverpool and Preston. Mr. Wakefield, whose age was sixty-eight, and who was a banker, was the principal respondent in the well known licensing case of "Sharpe v. Wakefield," a case which formed an important legal decision against compensation. Owing to the character of the death an inquest was held, when it transpired that his father and another relative had died in the same sudden manner. Workers in the North of England mourn Mr. Wakefield's departure as a sore loss.

MR. A. SMITH, OF THE ALBANY INSTITUTE.

A quiet but singularly devoted and valuable worker has passed away in Mr. Abijah Smith, whose work in connection with the Albany Institute, Camberwell, and earlier in West London, is known to many. Mr. Smith, who was but forty years of age, was formerly a member at Westbourne-grove Chapel, where he had an infant-class of 140. Ten years ago he took a similar class—having a remarkable gift for the work—in Boundary-road Sunday-school, Camberwell. He was among those who started the Albany Institute, and from the first was one of the hardest workers. In October, 1885, he became chairman of committee, and threw himself unreservedly into the work. In the summer of 1890 he showed symptoms of cancer in the throat, and since then has passed through several operations, with some hope at first of recovery; but for many months he has been lying, oft in great pain but always in perfect peace and submission, at the doors, waiting for the call. This came on Sunday, April 16, and on Friday his remains were laid to rest in the presence of a great gathering of mourning friends.

REV. JULIUS BRIGG.

This well-known and beloved Wesleyan minister and hymn-writer entered into rest early on Tuesday, last week, after a long and painful illness. Many of Mr. Brigg's hymns have passed into the standard collections of the period, and it will be a long time before the Christian Church will forget to sing "Father, from Thy throne in glory." Mr. Brigg was born at Leeds in 1840, his father, Mr. John N. Brigg, being a well-known Yorkshire woollen merchant. He entered the Wesleyan ministry in 1864, and during the quarter of a century he laboured with conspicuous success in Tenterden, Todmorden, Devizes, Hawes, Barnard Castle, Settle, Stainland, Hexham, Leighton Buzzard, Tewkesbury, and Idle. Whilst in the last-named circuit his health hopelessly broke down, and, about three years ago, he took up his residence in the village of West Kirby, which is rapidly becoming a favourite health resort. He was an eloquent preacher and lecturer, an indefatigable contributor to Connexional literature in England and America, and a man beloved by all who knew him. "The Dictionary of Hymnology," recently published, paid a warm tribute to Mr. Brigg's efforts as a writer of hymns and sacred poems.

DR. D. A. DOUDNEY.

We regret to announce the death of Rev. David A. Doudney, D.D., which took place at Southsea on Friday night. For some time past he had been in declining health, and has passed away at the advanced age of 82. For 58 years he edited The Gospel Magazine, for which Toplady, Cowper, and Perronet wrote hymns in the last century; and for more than thirty years he edited Old Jonathan, a monthly of which he was the founder. In his early days Dr. Doudney was a printer, and carried on business at the City Press in Long-lane. Shortly after ordination as a clergyman he was appointed to the curacy of Bonmahon, Waterford, where he established a printing school, at which Dr. Gill's celebrated Commentary, a work in six large volumes, and other standard pieces of theology were printed. Subsequently, on his appointment to the living of St. Luke's, Bedminster, he founded a similar school, which was carried on with equal success until three years ago, when he retired on account of the infirmities of old age. In our issue of July 18, 1890, we gave a portrait and biographical sketch of our deceased friend, who was a man of strong religious conviction, high Christian principle, and great energy in work for God. He was the author of a great number of religious works. On his jubilee as editor of the Gospel Magazine, in 1890, he was presented by Sir Andrew Lusk, on behalf of a large number of subscribers in England and Ireland, with a testimonial consisting of an address and a purse containing upwards of £800.

REV. ANDREW CARTER.

On Monday week there passed away at Bridge of Allan, in the person of Rev. Andrew Carter, editor of The British Messenger and other publications issued from the Stirling Tract Enterprise, Stirling, a gentleman who, though modest and retiring, was very well known. He had been in ill-health for a long time, but it was only on Sunday that matters took a turn for the worse. On that day internal hæmorrhage set in, and he then sank fast, expiring as stated. He was about forty-six years of age, and leaves a widow and large family. Mr. Carter's death is regrettable in many ways, but one of the saddest features in connection with it is the fact of his lying on a dying bed whilst some recently appointed elders, among whom he would have taken his place had he been able, were being ordained in Allan Park Church, Stirling. Mr. Carter was a native of Chirnside, Berwickshire, his father being one of the founders of the seed firm of the same name in Berwick. After having a distinguished college career, and taking his degree with honours, deceased came to St. Ninian's, and for some time acted as missionary to Rev. Dr. Frew, of the U.P. Church there. This was about twenty years ago. After that he was called to a charge in Broughty Ferry, and while there married the daughter of a Dundee merchant. His health, however, failed him, and he had to resign his charge. He then went to London, and there did literary work for several publishers. He remained in London for a number of years, and whilst there the editorship of the Stirling Tract Enterprise publications fell vacant, and on his applying he was unanimously appointed to the post, taking up his duties in September, 1882. But for his health, Mr. Carter would have taken distinguished rank in the ministry. He was a man of wide culture and high attainments, and was of a singularly attractive temperament, which gained him the esteem of everybody who came in contact with him. From his position in the Tract Enterprise he was widely known all over the country, and more especially in the Free and U.P. Churches.—Stirling Observer.

TO PARENTS AND TEACHERS.

WE do not need elaborate means of curing children's faults, but we want much forethought, painstaking, and energy to prevent them; and the more careful we are, the simpler may be the means we use—the gentler the better.—Miss Franks, A.E.S.

There is nothing more important than to permeate the child's mind with the knowledge that the drink is bad and injurious, and that all the notions with which custom, habit, and appetite have encircled it are false and dangerous.—Alderman G. White, Norwich.

A mother was passing along the streets and she heard her little girl say to one of her playmates: "You good-for-nothing little scamp, you come right into the house this minute, or I will beat you till the skin comes off." "Lizzie," said the mother, "I am surprised." "Oh," said the child, "I was only playing! He is my little boy, and I was only scolding him as you did me this morning."

THE BRITISH MINISTER AT BERNE, in a report on the arrangements in force there for the control of the sale of spirituous liquors, remarks that there is observable "a very wide difference in regard to object and effect between the system known as the Gothenburg system and the alcohol monoplies as exercised by the Confederation and the urban Canton of Bâle." The Federal alcohol monoply applies to the importation, purchase and re-sale of raw spirits. It has not any control over the ultimate distribution of these spirits. Still, though its powers are limited, its influence operates to insure the purity of the spirit supplied to the retail trade, and the official statistics show that since its introduction a considerable decrease in the home consumption of spirits has taken place.

Mr. R. Callender, B.A., of the Soudan and Upper Niger Mission, has resigned.

Rev. F. L. Ware has been appointed to the Vicarage of St. Mary's, Edmonton.

The London Diocesan Conference was held last week. Special attention was given to the question of religious education.

Bishop Bickersteth of Japan, who is now in this country, has issued a letter to the members of the Guild of St. Paul's, in which he urges the great need of a second bishop in Japan. He considers it a great cause of thankfulness that an extension of the episcopate should be necessary, but what can be done he does not yet know. "The whole question," he says, "is under consideration."

Mr. Edward Clifford, author of "The Life of Father Damien," has written in the English Illustrated Magazine for May an interesting article on "The Church Army Labour Homes," which affords some interesting materials for comparison with the work of the Salvation Army in a similar field. The friendly rivalry of two such organisations in a good cause can only be a matter of congratulation.

The Bishop of Christchurch, N.Z., speaking last week in the City on Sunday-school work, said that coming, as he did, from the colonies, where religious instruction was banished from the State schools, he could tell of the immense loss that was sustained in the character of the children. The Board schools did impart some little idea of the Creator, but it behoved all who loved their Church to see that their schools were maintained in efficiency.

The thirteenth annual meeting of the supporters of the Bishop of Bedford's East London Church Fund was held in the Egyptian Hall at the Mansion House on Monday week, under the presidency of Alderman Sir Reginald Hanson, Bart., M.P. Rev. J. F. Perkins, in his presidential address to the Norfolk Congregational Union on "The Demands of the Age on the Ministry and the Churches," urged the necessity for freer and more flexible methods of Christian enterprise, in order to adapt the Churches to the needs of the age. Pastor Carlile's services at Bermondsey Town Hall are proving to be a time of great revival. Last Lord's Day nearly 2000 people attended in the evening. Mr. Carlile spoke upon the love of the Father, as illustrated in the story of the prodigal. Many at the close of the meeting confessed faith in the Saviour.

The report of the Stockwell Orphanage Sunday-schools states that there had been class teaching on thirty-nine Sundays, by a staff of forty-four teachers, and eight separate services with addresses by various ministers and laymen. The International Bible Reading Association branch had 242 boys and 359 girls as members, including some former scholars, who still retain membership.

Special evangelistic services have been conducted at New Brompton by Rev. J. H. Blackwell, and as the result there has been a deepening of spiritual life in the church, and a gratifying increase of membership.

The total number of members is 427,739, in addition to which there are 30,016 on trial, and 67,611 in junior society classes. These returns are better than many expected.

Successful services were conducted by Rev. T. Jackson on Sunday week at Southend, in connection with the opening of a new mission there, which will form a branch of the Clapton Mission, and, with the Home of Rest, will be under Mr. Jackson's superintendency. Nearly £800 was raised for current expenses of the church and mission, and a house had been presented by one of the elders for the use of the missionary. The mission Sunday-school has doubled in numbers during the year.

For several months, as we have ere now mentioned, a curious exchange of pulpits has been made. Rev. R. E. Welsh, of Brondesbury, being in South Africa for his hea th, has been ministering at Port Elizabeth, while Rev. J. T. Lloyd, the minister of that southern church, has been in London preaching to Mr. Welsh's flock. This arrangement has now come to an end. Mr. Lloyd has started for the Cape and Mr. Welsh is soon expected home.

The statistics drawn up by Rev. Dr. McGaw for presentation to the Synod, shows a total income for the English Presbyterian Church of £244,510, against £239,650 in the previous year. Samuel and Anna Baker are on their way home on furlough from India, and expect to be at London yearly meeting.

Dublin yearly meeting commences on Wednesday next, the meeting of ministers and elders convenes the day before. Several American and English Friends are expected to attend.

It was hoped that Theophilus and Susane Waldmeier from Mount Lebanon would be in England next month, but illness may interfere with their plans. There has been much illness of late on the "goodly mountain."

In Japan and in India the mission work is extending and deepening, and more workers are needed there, as well as in Mexico, where the Friends are actively labouring both with the tongue and the Press to liberate the enthralled masses from Popish bo ndage and superstition.

SALVATION ARMY.

The Copenhagen Congress is described as a great and remarkable success.

The enlarged Shelter in Blackfriars-road is now daily thronged and fully occupied.

The Regent's Hall Holiness meetings on Tuesday afternoons at 3 p.m. have been resumed.

At the Westminster Shelter much spiritual interest has been developed and several souls saved.

General Booth has this week been holding large meetings in Birmingham, Walsall, and Dudley. On Sunday he hopes to be in Wolverhampton, and Monday in Worcester.

The Governor-General of Finland has ordered the expulsion of Army officers who are not natives. This will mean the loss to Finland of two English and eleven Swedish officers. It is feared this will involve the total extinction of the Army's work in Finland.

A change is being made in the staff arrangements of the Salvation Army by the division of the country into provinces, each having a provincial officer, who will be responsible for the maintenance and development of the work in his division. The headquarters of the new divisions will be Clapton, Cambridge, Bristol, Liverpool, Manchester, Newcastle-upon-Tyne, Sheffield, Birmingham, Glasgow, and Edinburgh.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we purpose giving a portrait and sketch of the late Mr. C. M. Sawell, of the London City Mission.

We have been compelled by pressure of the May meetings and other matters to omit for the present Sir Arthur Blackwood's papers on "Apocalyptic Scenes."

In the current week's issue of The Christian Commonwealth the first part is given of an interview with Mr. Henry Varley. We have received proof slips, and observe that the question of education as a missionary agency is vigorously discussed.

An attempt is being made to get the London School Board to alter the agreement entered into in 1871, for the simple reading of the Bible in the schools. The famous "compromise" is certainly far short of the definite Bible teaching we desire for the children; but it is better that things should remain as they now are, than that sectarian teachings should be introduced, and the public schools be made a medium for the inculcation of false or dangerous interpretations of the Word of God. By all means the Bible should be read in Board schools, but doctrinal exposition is better omitted than given, as it would be in many cases, by those who disbelieve, and even contradict, that which they are supposed to teach.

It would seem as if our chief battle ground with sacerdotalism will be the Board School. Where the accommodation provided in a Romish school is not all required for Papist children, and there is not accommodation in other schools for Protestant children, these Protestant children may be forced into the Romish school. This is being done all round London; as many as sixty or seventy children are said to be in one school alone. At Amisdale, a suburb of Southport, where a demand has been made for free education, the Secretary for Education has answered that there are free places in the Roman Catholic School, and that the children must go there. The Free Education Act of 1890 is thus being made an instrument of promoting Popery, an end which a great many of its advocates never foresaw.

The great cry of the world to-day is not that men disbelieve in the Christ of the New Testament, but in the Christ represented in the lives of professed Christians. It is said of Jesus that He spake as one having authority, and not as the Scribes; that the common people heard him gladly; that they hung upon Him for to hear Him; and even when He spoke prophecy (which our wire-drawn schemes of fulfilment have made so unpopular), all the people came early in the morning to Him in the Temple for to hear Him. When his messengers live and speak on the people's level, manifest his lowly and loving spirit, and do acts of brotherly kindness in a brotherly and kindly way, we need not wonder that, as "one touch of nature makes the whole world kin," the sacred touch of divinely human sympathy wins multitudes, as in the Master's days. But also, as in his experience, the sifting time will follow, and he that endureth to the end shall be saved.

Dr. Dale seems to have undergone since his illness a kind of Evangelical revival. Not long since he adopted with enthusiasm the remark of a minister, whom he described as one of the ablest of the younger generation of men, that the terms grace and justification would have to be reinstated in the language of the pulpit. And now, at the centenary of Allen-street Chapel, Kensington, he has sought to recover "the teaching of Scripture on heavenly joy as a compensation, and more than a compensation, for the sorrows of this life." If Dr. Dale is right, he justifies what some have affirmed as to the very imperfect Evangelical character of the teaching of the present-day minister. He candidly reflects upon himself. But we know that his view is warmly opposed. It is felt to be an unjust reproach upon men who have preached grace and justification and the joys of heaven. Nevertheless, Dr. Dale's remark is true as to very many pulpits.

On the occasion of the reopening of a very ancient church, which had undergone "restoration," the Bishop of Durham spoke some salutary words of warning:—

> He rejoiced in the energy which had been put forth from time to time in church building and restoration, but that brought little comfort to his mind of assurance for the future. He could not forget the two centuries which were noted for the magnificence of church building—the two centuries which were gathering for the storm that broke out later on. It seemed they would have to look back upon this trouble in the last quarter of the nineteenth century.

These outward signs of power are often the signs of inward weakness and decay. Church building and "church extension" are not the same as the building up and increasing the living body of Christ: often the very contrary, and a great hindrance. The immense attention which has for some time been paid in the Church of England to external things may, as the Bishop more than hints, be a precursor of trouble. "He that hath an ear, let him hear."

We observe in the reports of the County Unions, contained in The Independent of last week, that five out of nine counties complain of the struggle which has been kept up with sacerdotalism. The other counties no doubt could tell a similar tale. The chairman of the Herts Congregational Union said that he knew of no county where High Churchism was being so developed as in Herts. On the western side of the county it was increasing most rapidly. "The chairman of the Derbyshire Union said he viewed with much concern the modern gospel of Ritualism, and the veiled idolatry fostered and fed within the borders of the Established Church." The labours of pastors and evangelists in Surrey were said to be in deadly conflict with sacramentarianism. If the Nonconformists of the county can be stirred on this question, which used to have such power over the minds of their fathers, they may, as their fathers did aforetime, do much to save us from Romanism.

The current number of The Critical Review of Theological and Philosophical Literature contains notices of no less than forty-six books, foreign and English, which have been deemed of sufficient importance to deserve either an elaborate review or a few lines to indicate their contents and scope. Some are volumes in a series, and some reprints, but most of them are new and complete treatises. The labours of ministers must increase tremendously if they are in any degree to keep pace with the criticism of the products of the times. Forty-six volumes for three months, 184 for the year, to say nothing of books and periodicals which do not come under the head of theological and philosophical! Then come the endless public engagements, which consume so much time. Ministers may well resort to reviews for an epitomised view of such a mass of books, and for some hints as to what books to buy, and what not to buy.

The "Keswick" movement seems to have taken a deep hold on our country. Under the heading of "Coming Conventions" our readers will observe how increasingly numerous these assemblies are becoming; we believe that arrangements for nearly thirty for the present year have already been made. We appreciate the great usefulness of Christian conventions, in bringing Christians of different denominations into closer union; in breaking down the unnecessary barriers of denomination, and for giving expression to the deep truths of the Gospel, as well as drawing God's children to realize the practical result of a life of faith in the Son of God. But there is another aspect of this question. While conventions increase in numbers, the number of speakers hardly keeps pace with them, and we can quite imagine that those conventions may possibly interfere with the ordinary duties of the clergy and ministers who take part in them.

Perhaps the time is approaching when it will become necessary to group these conventions in twos or threes, or even fours, so arranged that access to each convention can be easily had from the several places in the group; thus making the convention biennial or triennial at each place in lieu of annual as at the present time. Or, perhaps, a central town easily accessible by railway, with available accommodation for strangers, might be selected as the one permanent district convention town, where these annual gatherings could be held.

The fruitful mission of Rev. G. Grubb and his companions to South Africa, Ceylon, and Australasia is fresh in our memory. We again commend to the prayers of our readers the delegation, consisting of Revs. Hubert Brooke, Charles Inwood, and G. H. Macgregor in Canada, and that of Rev. G. Grubb, Mr. Millard, and Mr. Ewbank to South America. Could not similar delegations be sent to the Continent, to Japan, China, India, and Africa, to cheer, encourage, and stimulate the brethren in the different mission stations who are bearing the brunt in the forefront of the Lord's war? We feel sure that missionaries, merchants, and planters would gladly welcome such conventions, though they would not be on the scale we are accustomed to see them at home.

The Press sometimes does splendid service by exposing abuses and searching out evils. Cassell's Saturday Journal has sent a representative to inquire into the question of "Do women tipple secretly?" The first batch of evidence—we suppose more will follow—reveals a sad state of things. "There are plenty of grocers who will supply women with drink and charge for it as goods." All manner of deceit and fraud is practised by wives and tradesmen. One man — true, he was an ex-publican, but mark the "ex"—said, "As for grocers' licences, they are the biggest curses on earth to working men. My own sister used to get her stout regularly, unknown to her husband, because it was entered in the book as grocery; and I know scores of similar cases, all up and down the country." Can England not raise a revenue without destroying the people?

It seems only right to sound a note of friendly warning to Christians in view of the commercial failures which continue to take place. Are we always as careful as we ought to be in inquiring into the ways in which money is made by the company in which we propose to invest? Do we properly consider association and fellowship? Can a Christian expect to have as safe a course with an un-Christian as a Christian partner? In taking office in a company, no matter how nominal it may seem to be, ought we not to make the most rigid examination into its condition? The language of Sir Henry Hawkins a few days ago was as firm as it was right:

"It would be more satisfactory to me if directors had a proper sense of their responsibility. It is a cruel thing that people should be deluded out of their savings by high-sounding names. At the same time, there is no criminal law which will punish a director who scandalously neglects his duty, though he takes his money. I think the law might well be altered. Directors ought to be made to do their duty. They ought not to neglect, by what I call criminal negligence, the interests of those who repose confidence in them."

Satisfactory as a whole as was the report which the Baptist Missionary Society had to lay before its friends, there was one feature of it which was not quite comforting,—we mean the special character of the effort made in the year. Without affirming that special efforts are never desirable or necessary, are they not depended upon too much by churches and societies? They seem to imply that we may live at ordinary times below our duty, then by a great effort rise above it. It cannot be right to do the former, or possible to do the latter. We are bound always to give and to labour to the full extent of our ability. These special efforts, it may be presumed, are chiefly useful for stirring the minds of those who have not realised how absolute is the claim of their Lord upon all that they have and are. If, when a higher level has been gained, it can be held and become even the foothold for a further effort, then special efforts may do good; in so far as they become an excuse for worse lethargy and more self-indulgence they are not to be desired.

During the past few weeks the ladies working in Fez in connection with the North Africa Mission have been enabled to open a fresh station in the heart of that semi-civilised land, and they are now looking to their fellow Christians to enable them to retain what in the providence of God has been begun. With every fresh development and extension of the work there comes a call from God for fresh workers and increased support. There are thousands of towns and villages throughout North Africa where nothing has at present been attempted. Are there not some churches that could send forth and sustain one or more of their members in this needy field?

A recent incident in Malta shows what Romanism can do even where the Imperial flag of Britain waves. A lady of title, well known in England, while on a visit to the island, as she walked and rode about, distributed simple evangelical tracts among the people. In the course of a few days five Maltese police put in an appearance, and after detaining her in custody for twenty-four hours, gave her another day to clear out of the island! "This," remarks a correspondent, "is in the year 1893, and in a British possession! Such an outrage against personal right and liberty should be the subject of inquiry in the House of Commons." If the military authorities were to give the priests who instigated the persecution a day in which to "clear out," a new era would begin on the island.

Education and Missions.

In writing to us with respect to Mr. Henry Varley's projected mission to educated natives in India, our friend Mr. Gillings makes the following weighty observations:—

Although I have only been in India two years and five months, I have kept my eyes open, and have reached certain conclusions that lead me to anticipate very valuable results from special Gospel work in India. The conclusions that follow are to be understood as: (1) no more than approximate; (2) the result of limited observation and experience; (3) presenting a kind of average condition, admitting of brilliant exceptions.

Premising so much, I have no hesitation in submitting the following conclusions as my deliberate judgment: 1. That there exists in India a missionary formalism as real as the Christian formalism of India and England. 2. That the tendency of things at present is towards the increase of this. 3. That the movement known as "Mass Conversions," while yielding certain advantages of a civil and physical kind, must inevitably result in multiplying formal professors. 4. That where ignorant natives are thus virtually manufactured into mere Christian professors, they are harder to win to Christ than when heathens, because their profession teaches them that they are already Christians. 5. That the high-class educational movement is tending to civilise, westernise, and rationalise the students, but not to convert them to Christ, and that while shaking their faith in idolatry, is landing them in the coldness and darkness of practical deism.

Greatly as India needs an increase of workers, it much more needs a real revival among those already in the field; with a return, in more quarters than one, to the simplicity and earnestness of Paul, the model missionary. If any part of the world needs the prayers of God's people, it is India. And I should say that if a real revival of apostolic simplicity and of primitive devotedness to Christ is anywhere needed, it is among the Christian workers, real and professed, that constitute the rank and file of the army of missionary workers in India.

G. Gillings.

Whither?

Some time ago one of the speakers from the Mildmay platform said that in his boyhood he had been taught that "Man's chief end is to glorify God, and to enjoy Him for ever." Now, he added with some emphasis, there are many who declare in loud and confident tone, "God's chief end is to glorify man, and to enjoy him for ever." Probably not a few in the hall, though they understood the speaker's meaning, thought the statement rather extreme. Ready to admit grave defections and departures, they were not prepared to allow that such a travesty of plain Scriptural truth would be accepted by any one as a fair presentation of his belief. Certainly no one can be more surprised than he who first gave it utterance, when he finds that a reforming philanthropy adopts and proclaims it as both true and fair.

Speaking from an influential platform, these words fell from the lips of a much-applauded speaker: "May we have power to feel that there are but two words in the language of all the earth, and they are God and Humanity. The old catechism said 'What is the chief end of man? To glorify God and enjoy Him for ever.' The blessed Christianity in action of our own day says, and I reverently repeat the words: 'What is the chief end of God? To glorify men, and to enjoy him for ever.'"

We are more than willing to think that these words were spoken of man as redeemed by the blood of Christ, and regenerate by the Holy Spirit; that new creature in Christ Jesus—that new humanity—of which Jesus, crowned with glory and honour, is the Firstfruit and the High Priest. But we fear that not a few will interpret them of man as born of Adam, in whom dwelleth no good thing.

The glorification of Humanity, which by the way is a characteristic of the last Apostasy, is fast growing into greatness. The rights of God are fading and disappearing in the radiance of the rights of man. The duty of God takes the place of the duty of man. Sinners cease to be regarded as rebels; they are interesting patients entitled to the whole attention and best skill of the great Physician. The startling word "guilt" is scarcely found in the modern vocabulary. Sin is something to be pitied rather than to be punished. Instead of man being in debt to God, God is in debt to man.

Unquestionably the whole trend of these novel beliefs is towards universal salvation, apart altogether from present conduct, character, or creed. The spread of these beliefs, which are as demoralising as they are destructive and unscriptural, can only result in spiritual paralysis. Yet who does not know they are at present as pervasive as they are pernicious? There never was more needed a wholesome and worthy delineation both of the greatness of God and the littleness of man; of the sin which is so distinctively human, and the holiness which is so distinctively Divine.

THE JUVENILE SECTION of the Independent Order of Good Templars is making satisfactory progress. There was an increase during last year of 2,575 members, and it now numbers 49,900 juvenile Templars.

Shall we Abandon Central Africa?

BY DR. HARRY GUINNESS.

There is nothing more pathetic in the story of missions than the brave attempts which have been made for the salvation of the lost in Africa. Whether we contemplate the bent form of the veteran warrior whose final conflict was fought and won on his knees in utter solitude by Bangweolo's distant shore, or stand by the dying pallet of Wilmot Brooke or William Scarnell in the moment of their extremity and of their victory, our hearts are moved with deepest sympathy. Those who best know the multiplied sorrows that have attended missionary advance into the vast interior, have often been bewildered and well-nigh confounded by the loss of brave young lives on the threshold of service for their Lord.

To some of us this painful problem has been intensely real, and when, within six months, the ranks of one mission alone have been thinned by the death of four brave men and women, we wonder not that the whole position of Central African evangelisation should by some be called in question. Even those whose faith may never for a moment have wavered have had in such seasons of trial to stay themselves only upon God, and to remember that "as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are My ways higher than your ways, and My thoughts than your thoughts."

God moves in a mysterious way
His wonders to perform;
He plants his footsteps in the sea
And rides upon the storm.

I am reminded of two shipboard cries that linger in the memory. The first, that of the man with the line, who when the vessel has at last cleared the shallow water and breasts the deep sea, rings out with prolonged tone the cry "No sounding." The second, that which we have so often heard at the close of a night watch, in the silence which succeeds the striking of the bells, when from the bow of the vessel comes the reassuring voice, "All's well." And as we stand with heads bowed to acknowledge that "His judgments are a great deep," where there is "no sounding," we rejoice in the midst of our tears that

Through the love of Christ, our Saviour,
All must be well.
I know not where his islands lift
Their fronded palms in air;
I only know I cannot drift
Beyond his love and care.

To encourage, however, any who at this special time of difficulty may be anxious for a helping word, it is well to consider the alternative problems that confront us. We must either evangelise or abandon the millions of the vast interior. There is no other way. Look steadfastly at the thought of abandoning Africa, and grasp a little of its meaning. Shall we take away the one ray of hope that is beginning to shine into the darkest region of the world? Shall we leave one hundred millions of our fellow creatures to the hopelessness, the cruelty, the slavery, and the unspeakable degradation in which they seem sunken almost beyond recovery? Shall we cease to care that they perish, and become callous to the cry of our brother's blood? Shall it be as nothing to us that in this vast area more than eight thousand perish daily whose history has been written in tears and blood? Shall not the unspeakable woes of this vast ocean of humanity appeal to us?

What, shall we abandon the infant Church of Christ, begotten by the labours and sufferings of so many brave missionaries, to that darkness which would certainly prove its death? Shall we forsake the grave of Livingstone and the dust of our sacred dead? After having put our hands to the plough, shall we turn back? Shall we, unlike our blessed Lord, come down from the cross of suffering, and this in view of the ultimate victory?

Or, to go still more deeply, shall we say to the Son of God who bled for the salvation of the world, "It costs too much to follow Thee. Thus far, but no farther, would we go. We would serve Thee without suffering. We will not join with Simon of Cyrene in bearing thy cross along the Via Dolorosa. We shrink from the Valley of Shadow even though Thou hast promised to be with us. We would share thy Mount of Transfiguration and sit on thrones, but cannot watch with Thee in the shadows of Gethsemane." Can we thus speak to Jesus?

Or, if we shrink back in horror from such unworthy cowardice, may we not in secret unbelief be sheltering ourselves behind some thought that his last great word of command has some other meaning less costly than that which it seems to bear? As in the desperate charge of those brave men who rode through the valley of death, though it was clear "someone had blundered," may there not here also be some mistake? Can He really mean "all the world," "every creature"?

Unless we would rob the atonement of its virtue, and the Saviour's parting words of their undying inspiration, let such unworthy thoughts be for ever banished by the Divine declaration, "All authority is given unto Me,...go ye, therefore."

If it be objected that the expense is great (and so it is), what shall be said concerning the far greater expense entailed by those great commercial enterprises in this same region, whose sole object is the exploitation for the purposes of financial gain of the products of the vast interior?

The Congo railway, which is soon to span with its iron limbs the cataract region of 230 miles, has involved not only an enormous outlay in money, but a hecatomb of human lives. No one will ever know how many graves have been necessitated by that stupendous work, and yet these obstacles have never for a moment been deemed insurmountable when the end in view is contemplated.

The rocks must be blasted, the mountains scaled, the valleys exalted, and the ravines bridged over, to make the way of civilisation plain. Whatever was involved in the way of suffering, or of death, was not to be taken into consideration; and even if the sum expended were more than a million sterling, this too, should be gladly subscribed for the work in hand.

But if gigantic outlay be considered advisable for the facilitation of trade and civilisation, shall it not be equally reasonable when expended on the spiritual elevation and eternal salvation of these nations which sit in darkness? Are not these worth more than the rubber of the forest, or the ivory of the elephant?

Surely if Belgian, French, English, and Portuguese traders do not flinch from encountering the dangers of climate, for the sake of worldly advancement, it were a thousand shames were we to lag behind.

And if we turn our eyes for a moment by way of contrast to a still deadlier field, what shall we say?

The firmament breaks up. In black eclipse
Light after light goes out; one evil star,
Luridly glaring through the smoke of war,
As in the dream of the Apocalypse,
Drags others down.

Let the dread scourge of battle speak in trumpet tone. What was the cost of the great American civil war? Sixty thousand lives and ten thousand million dollars. And what the outcome of the awful Franco-German struggle that so recently convulsed Europe? France alone lost 290,000 men and 516 millions sterling.

While at the ghastly field of Gravelotte the victorious Germans lost by death 328 officers and 4900 men, in addition to 591 officers and 14,000 men wounded, the French loss was 13,000 men. What shall we say to the gallant army of 400,000 soldiers lost amidst the snows of Russia by the Great Napoleon, or of wars even yet more diabolical than those of mere aggrandisement, whose object was the establishment of a traffic which was destined to blight a million-peopled Empire? If glory shrouds the soldier's grave who falls upon the battlefield, shall not a brighter crown be his who, in the service of the King of Love, falls in the brave attempt to save?

All Europe recently rang with acclamations when Stanley returned after conducting his army of followers for three years in "Darkest Africa," encountering the blackness of the primeval forest, and the grim realities of starvation and death, in order to rescue one white comrade and a handful of dark-coloured men and women; and would not eternal disgrace be ours if we shrank in dismay from an undertaking infinitely more urgent, in which it was a question of carrying eternal life to millions perishing for lack of those glad tidings of great joy which were to be to all people?

One thing is clear, and that is, that whatever we may do or forbear to do, the officials of the Congo Free State will not desert their post of duty. For the sake of king and country they will even dare to die. They know that glory will immortalise them in the annals of the foundation of Greater Belgium, and as a brave Commissaire said to me, one who had suffered himself from fevers almost to the point of death, and yet had refused to return even for a short furlough to Europe, "Our king shall never lack volunteers." And who shall affirm that those do not nobly and well who say to Jesus, "Blessed Lord, Thou shalt never lack volunteers for thy holy service. If it behoved Thee first to suffer and then to enter into thy glory, we, too, would be willing to suffer with Thee, that we may be also glorified together."

Know well my soul, God's hand controls
Whate'er thou fearest,
Round Him in calmest music rolls,
Whate'er thou hearest.
What to thee is shadow, to Him is day,
And the end He knoweth,
And not on a blind and aimless way
The Spirit goeth.

There is, however, another side to the picture, and one that is full of hope, for whilst our trials and difficulties are undoubtedly great, we have, nevertheless, a comparative exemption from certain hindrances which are found in other mission fields.

We have no religion of antiquity to combat, or ancient system of caste which prevents our ready access to the minds and hearts of the people; and, thank God, no persecution such as in Mohammedan countries so frequently awaits those who make an open profession of their faith.

Moreover, God has markedly prospered the efforts put forth, so that on the lower Congo there are to-day many hundreds of native Christians gathered out of the darkness of superstition into the light of Christ, whilst on the upper river numbers have been baptized, and the cloud is already seen on the horizon which betokens an abundance of rain!

Christ's Kingly March.

A MISSIONARY SERMON.

BY REV. JAMES CULROSS, D.D.

"Art thou a king, then?"—John xviii. 37.

It is unnecessary in such a gathering to point out the connection of this text; the reading of the paragraph is enough.

I do not think the question a scoffing or bantering one. A judge's seat, with human life at stake, is not the place for that. Nor is it the question of an inquisitor, drawing the prisoner on to incriminate himself. Rather, Pilate is strangely impressed by the personality of Jesus, and speaks with a grave, half-awed seriousness. This is no vulgar revolutionist or wild visionary who stands before him, but One greater than He seems. Pilate was not alone in being thus impressed. Recall the prayer of the crucified malefactor: "Lord, remember me, when Thou comest in thy Kingdom!" We are taken by surprise. In the rejected, thorn-crowned Sufferer, the dying man sees the King of the eternal Kingdom, and comes boldly as to a throne of grace, with the great request: "In the day of Thy glory, have mind upon the poor suppliant who hung by thy side in thine agony." If Doré, in his picture of Christ leaving the Pretorium, has caught the true idea, I do not wonder at all this. Through that lane of faces, malignant, ruthless, scornful, questioning, pitying, with the ghastly cross awaiting Him at the bottom, He goes down the steps, calm and regal, with a sense of absolute sufficiency for all that lies before Him—a King in verity.

Pilate's question is in ten thousand hearts to-day—thought not articulate. The battle with unbelief, retreating from other points, is gathering around Jesus personally. Who and what is He? In what rank shall we place Him? The day to speak of Him as an impostor or charlatan is past and gone. No serious man ventures to belittle Him. By universal consent some large theory is wanted to account for Him. Even a professed unbeliever endorses the lines:—

> Jesus, there is no dearer name than thine,
> Which time has blazoned on his mighty scroll;
> No wreaths nor garlands ever did entwine
> So fair a temple of so vast a soul.

Take India for illustration. A century ago Jesus Christ was unknown there, and the people sat in darkness, bound in affliction and iron. What had been done for the Gospel there by Englishmen may be guessed by the remark of Captain Bruce to Robert Southey: "If our empire in India were overthrown, the only monuments that would remain of us would be broken bottles and corks." The rulers of India acted as if they were partners with Juggernaut and afraid of Jesus Christ. In truth, in those bad old days European life, with rare exceptions, was viler than heathenism. How is it to-day? Through the preaching of the Gospel, and the lives of Christian men, Jesus of Nazareth has won for Himself a distinct place in the thoughts of that mighty country. Instead of the old dull stolidity, his claims are being eagerly, even passionately, discussed; an extensive awakening of thought is in process, and a yearning after something more satisfying than the ancestral religions can supply. The change that has taken place is really

VASTER THAN A REVOLUTION.

The souls that have been quickened into heavenly life cannot be reckoned up, nor can the indirect benefits and blessings be computed. Lord Lawrence, at the close of his wide and varied experience, referring to the practical results of the Gospel, declared: "Where it has not actually converted, it has checked and controlled; where it has not renewed, it has refined; where it has not sanctified, it has softened and subdued." Years ago, Keshub Chunder Sen pronounced: "Christ will surely reign over India; already his benign rule has brought about many and grand blessings; and soon, in the full light of his revelation, darkness will pass away, and the full and everlasting light shine; for India is already won for Christ." So far as one can judge from the reports of those who know India best, her attitude toward Christ cannot be more accurately indicated than in the question, "Art Thou a king, then?" It is fast coming to be the same with China. These Chinese are among the strongest, shrewdest, most intelligent and capable races in the world. The way the Gospel is laying hold upon them is wonderful, and nowhere do we find a more simple, earnest type of Christianhood. Putting India and China together, you have more than one-third of the population of the globe. The attitude of both lands is one of profound significance and hopefulness, and invites us to the earnest prosecution of our enterprise.

In answer to Pilate, Jesus avows his royalty. His meaning cannot be mistaken. "It is even as thou sayest: I am a King, and there is no true King beside." The claim is made in the most solemn crisis of life. If ever a withdrawal or abatement of the claim was to be made, now was the time. But He answers the governor with an unhesitant Yea. The only firm thing the governor did was to record that yea in the title over the cross. I do not stay to point out on what a broad and firm basis the claim of Jesus rests. With the New Testament in our hands, that is needless. And not only is He King by right, but also by the willing and glad surrender of hearts to his sway. This surrender is not the mere capitulation and laying down of arms in presence of One who has vanquished us by his omnipotence; the will is in it; the assent of the understanding and the consent of the heart; it is surrender to the magnanimity of holy love, wounded for our transgressions, and bruised for our iniquities; and it means, "Thou art the King of Glory, O Christ."

The past eighteen centuries attest his Royalty. He wears the name that is above every name. Whom will you name second?

THERE IS NO SECOND.

He stands alone. He is not, indeed, as yet, in a numerical majority in any country. There is far-spread ignorance of Him; millions have never heard his name; even where his name is known, his rights of royalty are widely challenged, and his will disregarded. Thousands proudly say, "We will not have this man to reign over us." Yet his empire de facto in hearts and lives has gone on widening with the process of the ages, and has never been so vast and grand as now. Its beginning was all but unobserved at the time. Few things are more remarkable than the slightness of the notice which it attracted. To the world-conquering Roman, the new King was merely "one Chrestus," the leader of a hateful superstition. But from the beginning He has been marching on to victory. Every conversion of a soul to God means a step toward the glorious issue, and so does every good and holy purpose created in a Christian heart, and every Christ-like deed wrought by Christian hands. For the convert is not a marble statue, cold and pulseless, set on a pedestal to show the Divine Sculptor's skill, but is a fresh and living force thrown into the battle against evil. No man has read history aright unless he has seen in it the regal governance of Jesus Christ. Down these eighteen centuries—as I read history—He has been the real leader in all that makes for mercy, pity, peace, and love. He has made use of many agencies, often unconscious on their part, as He did of Cyrus: "I girded thee, though thou hast not known Me." I see his power during these centuries in the taming of fierce and barbarous races, in the growth of knowledge, in the advance of civilisation, in the widening of freedom, in the framing of just and humane laws, in the growing reverence for conscience, in the quickening of man's moral nature, in the rising revolt against slavery, war, cruelty, impurity, in the recognition of human brotherhood, in great and holy Christian lives, and in all those influences which make for truth and righteousness. The symbol of his power is the Cross. Those who believe in ships of war and parks of artillery see with surprise how mere physical and brute forces crumble down and come to nothing before the Christ-power of holy suffering love. Prophecy foretells the issue. Earth's monarchs, the proudest and loftiest-throned, shall one day shut their mouths and be silent before

THE MAN WITH THE MARRED COUNTENANCE.

Looking on what He has already done, as a showing of his hand, are we not warranted to take up the words: "Mercy shall be built up for ever; thy faithfulness shalt Thou establish in the very heavens?"

This missionary enterprise, which has convened us to-day, belongs to his method of empire extension. We act under his royal commission. The grandeur of the commission is only beginning to dawn upon our churches. We look out on the great world of men in all its realms: it belongs of right to our Saviour; He has a creator right to it; He has a blood right to it; and the enterprise we have in hand contemplates the bringing of all these realms in loving homage to his feet. We are sent forth to this holy war with divinely-furnished weapons, "mighty through God to the pulling down of strongholds, casting down imaginations and every high thing that exalts itself against the knowledge of God, and bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ." We cannot pause while a single inch of territory is held by the Prince of Darkness.

We sometimes glorify our century as if it were pre-eminently the age of missions. It is a profound mistake. We may have wiser methods; but the spirit of Gospel-propagation had an intensity in far back ages, and a heroism and daring before which we may well hang down our heads. But a new beginning has been made. Something has been done—if less than might have been expected. Many souls have been brought into God's marvellous light. Churches have been planted—each one a tree whose seed is in itself. Multitudes have been brought to listen with interest to the heavenly message. The Word of God has been extensively translated. A Christian literature is growing up. The world is open to us as in no former period. There never was a grander opportunity for publishing the message of salvation. In view of this opportunity I would name some things made clear by the experiences of this past missionary century.

First, Jesus Christ is mighty to save. A commonplace, you say. Yes, a commonplace on lip and in creed; we all hold it theoretically: the missionary brings it home to us from heathendom almost as a new truth. I say Jesus Christ, and not Christianity. Christianity never saved anybody and never will. But in the mission-field we see Jesus Christ actually saving men. He is no remote spectator of the enterprise. He does not merely send help from the sanctuary. He is with us, as He said, entering in, as of old, among men in their darkness and misery and sin, with good tidings to the poor, healing to the broken-hearted, deliverance to the captive, the opening of the prison to them that are bound; and uncounted numbers have already been blessed in Him. Their life, indeed, is far from perfect, but it is patterned to a new ideal, and is in contrast to what it was before. They see the white-robed Christ before them and meekly say, "I follow after." I might name, for illustration, Jamaica with its broken fetters, Madagascar, Patagonia, or other fields; but I select, for a passing glance,

THE FIJI GROUP OF ISLANDS.

Within the memory of some among us, these islands—an earthly paradise to the eye—were full of the habitations of cruelty. The people were savages and cannibals. The sick were frequently buried alive. Widows were strangled in multitudes, or suffocated. The vices of the people were indescribable in their brutality and shame. Jesus Christ came in where these and like horrors reigned; and already he has changed the whole appearance of the people and the whole conditions of life; a new age has begun; and instead of shrieks and yells, you hear the melody of joy and health. It is the same with individuals as with communities. Take the case of Africander, the terror of South Africa, a wild and fierce savage, to whom robbery and murder were trifles; and think of that man as Robert Moffat described him, subdued by the love of Jesus Christ and changed into a little child. The annals of the missionary enterprise are glorious with similar examples of what Christ can do; forbidding despair on our part, because there is no man so deeply lost but he may be saved by the omnipotence of grace, and made an heir of God and a joint-heir with Jesus Christ.

Next, the experience of the past century has brought clearly into view what sort of men we want as missionaries. Whatever may be said of other things, they must be men whose whole being has come under the power of the redeeming Christ, and who are baptized in the Spirit of Pentecost. By all means let there be volume of being, princely manhood, wide and various culture, grasp and sweep of intellect, valour, hardihood, fulness of resource; but, primarily and fundamentally, there must be souls with heavenly sympathy, that thrill to the touch of Divine love. "He loved me, and gave Himself for me." In that creed you have the true missionary. The man in whose heart it lies as a deep joy, is the man to say: "None of these things move me; neither count I my life dear unto myself that I may finish my course with joy, and the ministry which I have received of the Lord Jesus, to testify the Gospel of the grace of God."

THIS IS THE LINE OF VICTORY.

It is along this line that any true advance is to be made. It has never been otherwise. How was the Kingdom founded? "He went forth bearing his cross." The servant is not above his Master nor the disciple above his Lord. The blood of the martyr, they said in the old time, is the seed of the Church; and, Madagascar being witness, the principle of the words is as true and as applicable as ever. Many of our own missionaries who have fallen in the field I do not hesitate to call "martyrs," ranking them with those who have gone to stake or scaffold. They would never have been found in the sphere of danger but for the name of Jesus Christ; and they would easily have discovered creditable opportunity to slink away if they had not loved his service better than life. It is by such men that the banner of the Cross is carried forward and planted on captured battlements. It is through the self-sacrificing love of the missionary—unconscious of the self-sacrifice, that the Divine love is disclosed, as the child first sees heaven in the eyes of his mother. I look for example on those graves on the Congo. I can imagine some Congo man asking, "What is the meaning of these graves? The men whose dust lies there—why did they come? They were not traders. They did not make gain of us. They did not bring rum and gunpowder with them, but the good message from heaven. The men loved us." And so, through the human love, it comes easier to believe in the love of God. If anything has been made clear by the experiences of the past century, it is this: that the men wanted in the mission-field are men full of the Spirit of Christ, each an incarnate Gospel, with the ambition of the Apostle in his heart—"That I may know Him, and the fellowship of his sufferings, being made conformable unto his death."

At this point, the question presents itself: Where shall we look for such men? Not in Laodicean churches, with no place among them for so awful a Being as the Holy Ghost—but in churches aglow with the love of Christ and with and a passion for their salvation. Such churches will be prolific of right-hearted men offering themselves willingly for service—men not only with missionary aspirations, but with missionary virtues, to whom the Gospel is an utter certainty, breathing the Spirit of Him who, for the joy that was set before Him, endured the cross, despising the shame, and is now sat down at the right hand of the Throne of God. Such men are not to be got by offering high salaries. Your hundred thousand pounds will not, of necessity, secure one of them. The Holy Ghost is not to be purchased with money, any more than conversions are to be secured at so many per thousand pounds. Nor, on the other hand, are they to be looked for as God's gift to niggardly churches. Niggardliness is akin—and very near of kin—to covetousness, and inevitably it brings a blight over the spiritual life, and impoverishes a church. The gold and the silver thus kept back is cankered, and the rust thereof is a witness against its holder. Our missionaries abroad and we at home are partners—we share the service between us—and the spirit that is required in the missionary is required at home in those who sustain him. Loving interest in Christ's work at home is essential to the success of our joint enterprise. It is easy enough to give money to the funds of a mission while taking no real interest in the work itself, exactly as many people might give half-a-crown to a collection for the wounded man whom the good Samaritan found in his blood by the wayside, but who would not soil their fingers and shock their nerves by binding up his wounds. There is a notion in some minds that it does not matter whence or how money comes if only it reaches the missionary exchequer. I, for one, believe that it matters very much indeed. We cannot perceive the taint which the polluted hand has left on the gold; we cannot distinguish the gift of grateful love from the offering of vainglory or niggardly avarice, as they lie together in the same heap; but the Lord who sits over against the treasury can; and while He accepts the one offering He rejects the other; and we cannot look to Him to use it unless on the same principle on which He makes the wrath of man to praise Him. The drift of all this is that the success of our enterprise rests as truly on the spiritual condition of the churches at home as on the missionary abroad. The partnership is one and the same.

I name, and only name, another great lesson taught by the past century—

THE LESSON OF PATIENCE.

You know how much seeming enthusiasm is a mere fire of straw, that blazes hotly for a time, but speedily burns out, and leaves only a handful of white ashes. Be patient, brethren, unto the coming of the Lord. Behold, the husbandman waiteth for the precious fruits of the earth, and hath long patience for it, until he receive the early and latter rain; be ye also patient. Be patient with your missionaries. Be patient with the mission converts and mission churches. Above all, be patient with God, and reverently accept his great law of growth. Remember the calm and measured words of Livingstone: "The order of the Divine kingdom is at first silent and slow, often progressing through apparent failure."

Another thing I would point to—how the missionary idea has broadened out and enlarged during the past century. We started with the thought of preaching. But almost immediately it became evident that the Word of God must be translated into the language of those to whom we preach, and the Lord gave us translators. Bible translation in turn meant teaching the people to make use of it; hence came Christian schools and colleges. By-and-by we remembered that the Lord not only said, "Preach the gospel," but also, "Heal the sick," hence came medical missions. Youngest of all, and in some respects most gracious of all, is the Zenana mission, in which heavenly love is told through woman's lips, in

> Compassion's native, silver voice,
> The gentle melody of patient love.

No one of these departments can be neglected without loss.

Only one thing more I name—the past century bids us labour on in the patience of hope. I look back with gratitude, and wonder that service so imperfect should have been so amply blessed. One of the great hindrances to the Gospel is a half-despairing temper—a guilty apathy, if not contentment with non-success. Various things lead to this. There are men with mocking lips who pronounce the enterprise a dream, as foolish as that of the child chasing the rainbow. And there are Christian men who believe they humble human pride by predicting failure. It seems to me that they sometimes humble man at the cost of dishonouring Christ, who has said, "I am with you," and of limiting the gracious power of the Holy Spirit.

GOD HAS NOT REPENTED OF PENTECOST,

nor revoked the mighty promise of that day. What fresh forces shall yet be thrown into the battle on the side of righteousness and truth; what unheard of and undreamed of revelations of Divine power there shall yet be, and what wondrous unbaring of God's holy arm, I do not now inquire. Meanwhile, every mission-field sends us home the message: "Be not weary in well-doing; for in due season ye shall reap, if ye faint not." "Be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labour is not in vain in the Lord."

There are two visions in the Book of Revelation very significant when placed side by side. In the early part of the Book the seer tells us: "I saw, and behold a white horse; and He that sat on him had a bow; and He went forth conquering, and to conquer." Again, near the end: "I saw heaven opened, and behold a white horse; and He that sat upon him was called Faithful and True, and in righteousness He doth judge and make war. His eyes were as a flame of fire, and on his head were many crowns.....He was clothed with a vesture dipped in blood; and his name is called The Word of God. And the armies that were in heaven followed Him upon white horses, clothed in linen, white and clean. And He hath on his vesture and on his thigh a name written, KING OF KINGS AND LORD OF LORDS."

> Come, then, and, added to thy many crowns,
> Receive yet one—the crown of all the earth,
> Thou who alone art worthy; it was thine
> By ancient covenant ere Nature's birth,
> And Thou hast made it thine by purchase since,
> And overpaid its value with thy blood.

BOOKS FOR MISSIONARIES.—In reference to a letter on this point, which appeared in our issue for April 20, it may be of interest to mention that there is a "C. M. S. Missionaries' Book Fund," carried on by ladies who would gladly welcome additional members and gifts. Information may be had of Miss Tucker, 74, Carlton-hill, N.W.

KESWICK IN MONTREAL.

DEAR SIR,—We have a prophetic reminder, "Shall there be evil in the city and the Lord hath not done it." Here we are with our climatic spring more backward than the oldest inhabitant can remember. Our harbour ice-bound in mid-April, business stagnant, etc. In contrast, and from the same blessed source, we are having a spiritual springtime, thawing out the cold hearts of Protestant Montreal in a way not soon to be forgotten, scattering life and warmth, with the promise of early fruit bearing to many precious souls.

The coming amongst us of three "Keswick Ministers," Rev. Hubert Brooke, C. Inwood, and G. H. Macgregor, with the purpose of deepening the spiritual life of God's children in Canada, is indeed an event worthy of record in our city's history. A short intimation of their coming appeared in one of our city papers, and conjecture was rife as to the special object and character of their teaching. "Keswick" being but little known to those who are not readers of THE CHRISTIAN, many associated it with "sinless perfection" and kindred unscriptural extravagances.

The first utterances of the ministers in the several churches on the Lord's day soon dispelled any such delusion, and at once opened the way for their cordial reception. God's hand has been most signally manifested throughout, the unusual amalgamation of the sects has been blest, bishops, ministers, and people mingling in prayer and praise, and giving earnest heed to the words spoken; and in answer to an invitation, given early in the Convention, for an expression of desire for a higher consecration of life and service to God, the response was most decided and general throughout the large assemblage.

These ministers came out at the instigation of some Christians of Ontario—whence they go to hold similar conventions, making a short visit to the World's Fair at Chicago, to mingle their testimony with others, against prevailing formalism and kindred evils, so deadening to spiritual life and dishonouring to our gracious God. Well, we have had a taste of the good things of our Father's kingdom, and our souls long for more out of the rich store of promises, even to become through faith "partakers of the Divine nature."

The distinguishing feature of the convention was the exaltation of God's Word—there was no room for invidious comparison between the dear brethren; each seemed imbued with the solemnity of his message, in urging upon believers a higher phase of experience and blessing, ready for our appropriation if we would "only believe." Their individuality in method and style was equally charming and persuasive, and they seemed faithful types of the Christian graces—Faith, Hope, and Love.

The repute of our city hitherto has not encouraged evangelistic effort. Strangers seldom come amongst us; possibly because they are not asked, our ministers thinking the field sufficiently well supplied. Well, no doubt we have much to be thankful for in what we have, but is there not a fear of getting too much "set" in our methods of thought and action in Christian as in secular life? Just as these dear brethren, filled with the Holy Ghost, have opened to us sources of blessing which we have over and over read about, but which we never can attain to, independent of our ability to appropriate. We get too satisfied with a dwarfed Gospel, thinking the possession of eternal life the end, instead of the beginning of the Christian course, and thus remain children when it is our privilege to be men and women in Christ Jesus, "filled to the very brim even with the fulness of God Himself."

The closing scene of the convention last night was too solemn to attempt a description of—the last great day alone will reveal it. With gratitude we record the most promising convention (outwardly) yet held in our city. May it prove the most fruitful to the glory of God. W. O. B.

Montreal, April 20.

THE ENGADINE.—A lady well known as a missionary worker is anxious to know if there are any Christian ladies labouring in the Engadine, or in any other high mountainous part of Switzerland such as Chamonix. Being compelled by her health to reside in such a district, she would be glad to know where she could have Christian fellowship (while paying for her board), and render some service.—Address, A. W. M., care of the Missionary Bureau, 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C.

CONTINENTAL EVANGELISATION.

On Thursday and Friday last a conference on the spread of the Gospel on the Continent of Europe was held in Exeter Hall, under the auspices of the Foreign Aid Society. The attendance was limited, but it was evident that the audiences consisted of Christian people warmly in sympathy with the cause advocated. At the opening meeting the chair was occupied by the Dean of Ripon (Dr. Fremantle), who delivered an introductory address, at once instructive in character and hearty in tone.

At the outset he brought home to English Christians a material obligation to the French. Up to the time of the Reformation, England was, generally speaking and chiefly, an agricultural country, with wool for its principal article of commerce. The Continental persecution of Protestants forced Flemings and Huguenots to come to England, and to bring skill, intelligence, and capacity, and a variety of forms of manual and mechanical industry, which subsequently developed so wonderfully, and made England what she is to-day as the centre of manufactures and commerce. The religious intolerance of the kings of Spain and France, the Popes of Rome, and the Inquisition, has brought its Nemesis upon those countries, and at the same time enriched England. The Churches of France, Switzerland, and Italy have, however, a stronger claim upon our sympathy on account of the noble Protestant testimony they have borne; and this statement suggested to the Dean remarks upon the massacre of St. Bartholomew's eve, and the sufferings of the Vaudois in the Hautes Alpes.

Proceeding, the Dean bespoke deeper and more general interest in Continental effort in the name of Christ. He called upon his hearers to tread in the footsteps of the Reformers; declared Christian brotherhood to be superior to questions of ceremonials; and maintained that the supreme authority of the Scriptures and the confession of the Headship of Christ justify and demand co-operation on the part of all believers.

Rev. H. Joy-Browne, secretary of the F.A.S., was unable to be present, owing to illness, but he sent a paper in support of the cause, which was read by Rev. A. W. Freeman.

PASTEUR THEODORE MONOD

spoke on "The Spiritual Forces in France." After the war it was thought that free and obligatory instruction would regenerate the country; but it has been made clear that education is more important than instruction. The standard of public morality has gradually become lower and lower; and it is now realised that the heart must be touched as well as the mind, the conscience as well as the brain. The conclusion is being rapidly arrived at that there is no morality that can work practically except it be founded on religion, which means founded upon a recognition of the living God. Guizot and Thiers, when young men, at the beginning of the present century, are said to have discussed the question of what would be the chief subject that would interest the people at the close of the nineteenth century. Thiers, who was a free-thinker, said he thought it would be the industrial question, and have reference to inventions, the progress of civilisation, etc. Guizot, who was a Protestant, said he thought it would be the religious question. The latter expectation has come to pass. The present is a time of crisis, a change having taken place in the attitude of the French people towards religious questions. Nowadays working men, generally speaking, receive the name of God respectfully, often sympathetically, whereas some years ago it was received with a sneer.

Having supported this statement by illustrative incidents, M. Monod showed that there is at present a reaction in favour of Roman Catholicism. The Papists have made great sacrifices of money in founding schools and newspapers, and have done much in their way to supply religious education. At Easter he saw in the Cathedral of Notre Dame many thousands of men in attendance at early communion, thus making a public profession of their membership of the Roman Catholic Church—a system which puts a priest between the soul and the Saviour, that takes away the liberty of the soul. Referring to the Papal advice to Roman Catholics to cease fighting the Republican form of Government, the speaker said that by and by an effort may be made to combine clericalism and republicanism. Why? Because the Protestants do not offer, on the large scale that is required, the pure Gospel, so that the people can understand it and accept it. The Reformed Church of France is the organisation to which the bulk of the Protestants of the country belong. It has been reorganised on its old basis—that is, in a synodical form of government. During the past twelve years one million eight hundred thousand francs (£72,000) have been raised for various purposes; though not all it ought to be, that sum is sufficient to show that French Protestants are trying to help themselves, and therefore are deserving of outside assistance. Moreover, the spiritual life of the churches is progressing; there is greater activity, the women also doing their part. In the Reformed Church revival and consecration meetings are held, and the work of the McAll Mission is looked upon with sympathy and heartily encouraged. Villagers who hear the Gospel message are asking to have it told over again. If ever there was a time when Christian work should be helped—in France, Belgium, Italy, and elsewhere—that time is the present. There has been enough talk, and the time to do something has at length arrived. The work must be done, à la Française, and if done in the power of the Holy Spirit, the one, true, living force, it will grow and abide.

M. Eugene Reveillaud dwelt upon the aggressive work of French Protestantism. Christ sent forward his people "as lambs among wolves"; and the "wolves" have always taken the advance of the lambs as aggression. Between truth and falsehood there cannot be peace or even armistice; and as, at the present time, there is full liberty to preach the Gospel, the responsibilities of Christian people are very great. The speaker expressed his deep conviction that Romanism will meet her fate on the battlefield of France. The system is now being criticised by its loyal adherents, journalists and others having pointed out that it is impossible to recognise the Christian religion in the superstitious fetishism and political intrigue. M. Reveillaud referred to the corrupt character of the daily Press of France, and spoke of the importance of counteracting it by a wholesome and Protestant organ of opinion. The Christian workers in France are throwing out the net at the Master's command; and there are signs of a "great multitude" of fishes being taken. Friends in the neighbouring British "ship" are accordingly asked to render help, as they will share the joy of the glorious result.

THE ARCHBISHOP OF DUBLIN

presided over the afternoon meeting. He showed a keen interest in Continental work, and described movements in Germany, Switzerland, Italy, and Spain; he called for an increase of hope, unity, work, and prayer.

Pasteur Lorriaux, of the Société Centrale, told of the operations of that agency, his address showing a wonderful readiness on the part of the people to hear the Gospel.

Prebendary Webb-Peploe dealt with the subject "How best to create among British Christians an interest in Continental Missions." He recalled his labours as English chaplain at Lille nearly thirty years ago; and enlarged upon the responsibilities of Christians who go abroad as travellers or sojourners, and those who may go from this country as Christian workers. He rebuked the inconsistency of such as, on leaving home, casting off religious restraints, and said he would like to have an opportunity of telling the Anglican Bishops of Northern Europe and Gibraltar of the serious injury to the Protestant cause that must result from their encouragement of Ritualistic practices.

Pasteur Vernier told of the good results of colportage work in France as prosecuted under the auspices of the Evangelical Society of Geneva.

A ladies' meeting was held on Friday morning under the presidency of the Hon. Lady Beauchamp, who gave interesting details of the practical results of work amongst English and French sailors at Havre. The Hon. Alice Baring spoke of effort at Rouen, and of the desire of the people to hear the Gospel. Miss Rose Faulkner described a visit to the West of France, in the province of Poitou, and told of the eagerness with which the people heard the message of salvation wherever she went. Mrs. Gardner James spoke of work among young women in the Southeast of France, and pleaded the cause of the Continental Division of the Y.W.C.A. The meeting was also addressed by Mademoiselle Lecomte and other ladies.

In the afternoon the Dean of Canterbury (Dr. Payne-Smith) presided over a third meeting of the full conference. He emphasised the importance of giving the Bible to the Continental nations.

Pasteur Ch. Merle-d'Aubigne described work in Belgium, especially among the miners. The hard life of these toilers—boys and girls as well as men and women—was sketched, also the devastating work of strong drink among the population. The Roman Catholic Church is no longer a moral or spiritual power, but simply a political agency. Fifty years ago the work of the Belgian Missionary Church was commenced, and now there are seven thousand members, who endure persecution, and make the Gospel known among their fellows. The people are, on the one hand, disgusted with the priests, and on the other hand they have not lapsed into general infidelity. There is respect for Protestantism, and the missionary-pastors enjoy the moral support of many who do not range themselves on the Evangelical side.

Rev. T. Howard Gill, for some years associated with the McAll Mission, spoke of the importance of the work of that evangelistic agency.

The last speaker was Pasteur Cremer, of the Société Evangélique de France, who made an earnest appeal to British Christians for financial support and personal co-operation. In the remote parts of France the most elementary teaching is required regarding sin and salvation.

M. Rougemont intimated that there is hope of a speedy realisation of the purpose to provide a daily Protestant newspaper for France.

In the evening a conversazione was held, when an oration on "Catholic Reform in France" was delivered by Père Hyacinthe.

TOURING IN TURKEY.

Dear Editor,—I desire to thank the donor for that copy of The Christian which continues to arrive for the missionary station of this region. We all are refreshed and strengthened by reading of the efforts of other missionaries.

We have had a very stormy winter, for about seventeen feet of snow has fallen during the entir e winter. When such a great body of snow melts, it must cause destructive inundations in the Tigris and Euphrates rivers. It has rendered slow and uncomfortable, touring by our party among the villages. Mr. Cole and Miss Mary Ely have returned from five weeks' visit among our out-stations on Moosh Plain, and my son has made a circuit among thirteen villages in another direction. In some of these he found fatal cases of cholera, which had broken out last season, where quarantines for months had been established. It is thought that this disease, as well as famine, will assume fearful proportions in the spring, and we expect this will entail additional care and burden on the missionaries, for the people, especially the lower classes, have neither the intelligence nor means to prepare preventives against the invasion of such a terrible disease as appeared here in 1866. At present your periodical continues to reach us saturated by disinfectants.

The inhabitants, especially the Christian portion, are full of forebodings as to their future for reasons we do not consider prudent to mention. We entreat your readers to pray for the visitation of the Holy Spirit upon your missionaries and their people, without which we have no hope of the successful advance of true religion.

Dr. Raynolds, from our neighbouring station, Van, recently passed through here, and gave our inhabitants a lecture interesting and instructive as to the method of forestalling cholera, and how to treat it on its arrival, to whom we all feel very grateful.

Our Protestant Church has recently met with a serious diminution in numbers, which has rendered them discouraged in seeking the conversion of others. Pray that like discouragement may not weigh upon us.

Yours in the Lord,

George C. Knapp.

CONSUMPTION HOSPITAL, BROMPTON.—At the services at St. Peter's, Cranley-gardens, on Sunday week, sermons were preached in the morning by the vicar, Rev. Dr. Ridgeway, and in the evening by Canon Fleming. On both occasions eloquent and touching appeals were made by the preachers in behalf of the Hospital for Consumptives, Brompton, whose strong claims to sympathy and support were powerfully urged on crowded congregations. The collections after the sermons amounted to £85.

THE REDHILL CONVENTION.

The fourth Redhill Convention is over. The writer took the opportunity of asking some of the readers of it what impressions it had left upon them. One replied that if he could judge by the countenances and the deep attention paid to the addresses, he had never been at a gathering where there were so few unconverted persons. Another said he thought the deep spiritual Scriptural teaching was never more eagerly sought and listened to. In point of numbers of persons attending the meeting, it was far in excess of any of the three former ones. On the last day a blank card in an envelope was handed to each person present at the testimony meeting, and they were requested to place their thankoffering in the envelope and seal it, then to write their names and addresses on the cards, and to state, in the case of having received a definite blessing, the text of Scripture which had been the means of producing it. A very large number of cards were sent in with the names and texts as requested.

Mr. Robert Wilson, of Broughton Grange, Carlisle, presided at all the meetings excepting two.

The convention had its opening meeting in the school-house of St. Matthew's Church, when two addresses, by Dr. White on Rev. ii., the Message to the Church at Ephesus, and Rev. Evan Hopkins on the Purpose and the Power of God's Will in us, occupied a good part of the meeting. Rev. H. B. Macartney, who had recently arrived from Melbourne, offered earnest prayer for the outpouring of the Holy Ghost on the meeting. Every morning till the following Sunday there was an early prayer-meeting from 8 to 9, including a short pointed address, and many of those who attended, found them a blessed preparation for the large meetings.

On Tuesday forenoon Rev. G. Wilson, of Edinburgh, selected the parable of the Prodigal Son for his theme, applying it to lost saints, not lost as regards salvation, but lost as regarded sanctity. His points were—(1) Self-will. "Father, give me the portion that falleth to me." (2) Self-indulgence. Wasted his substance with riotous living. (3) Self-degradation. "He would fain have filled his belly with the husks that the swine did eat." (4) There was one further step, but that step, self-destruction, did not come, praise the Lord! for self-discovery came first, from thoughts of the Father's home. As there were these downward steps, so there were the restoration steps—(1) Self-discovery, "When he came to himself." (2) Self-denunciation—self-effacement, self-suppression, self-crucifixion. (3) Self-surrender, "I will arise and go to my Father." (4) Self-recovery, "I have sinned." What follows? The forgiveness, the best robe, the ring, and the feast. Surely this is practical holiness for all.

Rev. Evan Hopkins spoke on Gal. v. 3, 16, 17, 18, 22 to 26—Progress, Triumph, Fruit.

In the evening Rev. Darlow Sargeant, who made his first appearance at a Redhill Convention, gave a terse and forcible application of 1 Thess. iv. 3, "This is the will of God, even your sanctification," coupled with Matt. xiv. 22. Rev. Evan Hopkins discoursed practically on 1 Thess. v. 23, 24.

On Wednesday evening the Town Hall was crowded. Rev. G. Wilson took Gal. vi. 14-16, giving St. Paul's aspect of the Cross as the power of deliverance in a believer's life in four different respects—Deliverance (1) from the world, (2) from dead externalism, (3) from weakening worry, (4) from dual ownership.

A new voice which has been absent for some time from Great Britain was heard when Rev. H. B. Macartney took Isaiah lviii. 13. Something we are not to do; we are not to speak our own words. Something we are to do; to break the yokes (Is. lviii. 6). We must get rid of Satan's yoke before we put on Christ's yoke. How many have handled religion, but evaded Christ's yoke! The way to learn of Jesus is to listen. The first thing to learn, to be meek and lowly in heart. Another lesson to ask questions on our knees over our Bibles, and having got our lessons, learn to live them out. The higher life teaches us to get lower down; let us become babes and learn the A B C of God. We have been occupied half with Jesus and half with sinful self. If linked with Jesus now and eternally, there will be no longer the artificial double life.

On Thursday afternoon there was a short after-meeting, when many in the large gathering stood up, to testify that they desired to walk worthy of the Lord unto all well-pleasing, and to claim the filling of the Holy Ghost that they might be fruitful in every good work.

On Friday morning the little hall where the prayer-meetings were held was so thronged that people could not find standing room. Much time was occupied in prayer, about twenty people taking part. Rev. J. Gregory Mantle gave a very short address, full of power, on Ps. xxvii. 4. He spoke of how to maintain blessing—by abiding in Christ; take time to be holy; no short cut to Christ-likeness. We shall show in coming days what we see of his beauty; we shall learn what it is to be on intimate terms with Him; only let us beware of grieving his Holy Spirit and marring his work.

At 11 o'clock a large number of the friends attending the Convention joined in a service at Matthew's Church, at which Rev. C. A. Fox preached from 2 Cor. iv. 5. The Lord's Supper followed, and the members parted, to meet again in the Redhill Town Hall for the praise and testimony meeting, which was largely attended, and where many gave glory to God for the blessings they had received.

The evening was devoted to a general missionary meeting, when addresses were delivered by Mr. Archibald Forder, from Kerak, Moab; Rev. M. G. Goldsmith, from Madras; Mr. John Sloan, from China; and Rev. J. Hudson Taylor.

MR. VARLEY AT BANGALORE.

Mr. Varley had no intention of coming to Bangalore, and was not invited, because it was understood he was bound for Calcutta. But he came first, for one night, on his way to Madras, which was extended to two nights. At the second service there was manifest evidence of the presence and the power of God. At the close of the meeting thirty persons rose to express their desire to accept Christ. It was undoubtedly a blessed meeting.

When Mr. Varley's work in Madras was nearing its end, it became possible for him to return to Bangalore, and arrangements were made for a six days' mission—the first on Sunday, when two services were held in the Ebenezer Church, and on Monday to Friday inclusive, in a large building known as the Bowring Institute.

A second mission was arranged for. Two services, as before, were held on Sunday. At the close of the evening service, in a packed building, fifty persons rose to accept Christ as Saviour. On Monday, the Institute was full to overflowing. This second mission closed on Wednesday, and on Thursday and Friday Mr. Varley was in Madras; but returned on Saturday for a third series of meetings from Sunday to Wednesday, when he left for London. At the close of the last meeting nearly the whole of the large audience rose and testified to their reception of blessing.

In addition to these ordinary meetings, a daily prayer meeting was held from 7.30 to 8.30 a.m., when most helpful addresses to Christians were delivered, and two other meetings as supplement to these were held from 10 to 12 a.m., for prayer and consecration.

By permission of the military authorities two meetings were held in recreation rooms in the barracks for special addresses to men. Hundreds came, and only good could result. If he were available, it would handsomely pay the British Government to give Mr. Varley a large salary to devote his whole time to giving such addresses to the British troops in India as he gave in the Bangalore barracks. The cost of such a man would be saved ten times over in reduced hospital expenses, and in not having to maintain hundreds of privates and officers in enforced idleness—an idleness the direct and palpable result of wilful and deliberate sin.

Of the full effect of such a mission it is, of course, impossible to speak; but it is also impossible to doubt that real blessing over a wide area has resulted.

"EGYPT IN ITS GRANDEUR" is being described by a cyclorama, which is on view daily in the Niagara Hall, York-street, Westminster. Mr. T. Hunter Boyd, who explains the scenes, has studied the subject with the ardour of an enthusiast. He has recently published a useful pamphlet, entitled "A Crisis in Egypt; or, what happened on the day of the Exodus." (6d. Dublin: Eason and Son.)

A MISSION IN BASUTOLAND.

Dear Sir,—Mr. Spencer Walton, of the Cape General Mission, kindly consented to come up to Basutoland on a special mission. I think missionaries ought to be visited by such servants of the Lord Jesus. Think of them as living in a position where everything has a tendency to lower their Christian life, in keeping them in constant contact with the Christian life of the natives, which is mostly as yet superficial and imperfect. See that missionary, alone with his wife, on his station, seeing once or twice, if as much, another white person in the year. The Lord is able to hold him up, but the circumstances in which he is, and the constant contact with the natives, pull him down. He ought not only to be prayed for by his more privileged brethren, who can meet in conventions, and refreshing and revival meetings of all kinds; but he ought from time to time to be visited by such as know they could do him good.

Mr. Walton came to Basutoland, and stayed at Monga four days. Besides, he visited the two of its out-stations. I can only say that the people flocked to hear him, and as several of the meetings had to be held in the open air, they would sit as near as possible to the speaker, not to lose any of his words. The fact that all the addresses and some of the prayers had to be interpreted or translated to the people, did not diminish at all the interest of the meetings. It was as if the teaching was a new teaching; not that the people had never been taught the same great truths; but, being presented by one whom they had never seen and never heard, with much plainness and vivacity, and with plenty of very understandable illustration, the Gospel has produced deep impression upon many, and the results have been very plentiful and gladdening. Many of the old converts have been stimulated and built up. We trust soon to have a meeting for testimony and thanksgiving, and I am sure it will be a very interesting one.

After most of the meetings after-meetings were held, for the believers to listen to the defects of their religion and to their wants. After-meetings were also held for backsliders and heathen; and altogether of these two kinds of men, in four different places, about 320 people came forward to declare that they were choosing that very day to come boldly forward on Jesus' side, forsaking their sins and desirous to begin a new life.

We are very grateful to Mr. Walton and his friend Mr. Sampson for their very useful visit. I only wish it could be renewed from time to time. They have gone to other places in Basutoland, as I write, but I cannot wait to know the results of that trip. I repeat, that missionaries more than any other body of ministering servants of the Lord need to be prayed for and visited, so as not to get poor in their own personal religion, and to enable them to fight against the lowering and weakening circumstances of their position, so that their endeavours to bring the heathen to the Lord may be abundantly blessed, and their whole work furthered.

The Cape General Mission helps our Mission in Basutoland in providing funds for building a station and two or three out-stations in the mountainous part of the country, quite up in the valleys of the Upper Orange River. We are very thankful for that help, without which it would have been very difficult, if not impossible, for us to meet the wants of a pretty large portion of the Basuto tribe.

From here Mr. Walton goes forward in his mission of love to Aliwal North, Dordrecht, Pondoland, and Transkei, down to Cape Town. May the Lord's blessing richly attend him, and further the work he has undertaken for the Lord's glory!

Yours truly, A. Mabille.

Morija, Basutoland, April 5.

A letter from a member of the Cape Mission gives interesting extracts from Mr. Spencer Walton's letters describing his mission to the Basutos. He speaks of great gatherings of people, many coming considerable distances; of numbers impressed and constrained to renew more fully their dedication to God and the Christian life; of some important chiefs having attended, and of several of the wives of the paramount chief having professed conversion.

THE BOYLE LECTURES for 1893, to be delivered in St. John's Church, Bethnal Green, by Rev. A. J. Harrison, B.D., will not begin until May 18th.

PICTURES IN THE ROOM.

BY REV. JOHN MITCHELL, EDINBURGH.

I was spending a week or two in the country not long since, and was amusing myself looking at the pictures on the wall. They were a queer lot, and I thought they would make a good subject for our young friends who read this paper.

The first I notice is a wild boar which has just gone out to seek for its dinner. Suddenly it is startled by hearing the yelping of dogs not far off, and now it makes for home with all its might. But the dogs are gaining upon it, and one of them has jumped on its back and is biting its ears, while the poor boar roars with pain and fury. Soon the other dogs will be upon it, and instead of getting its dinner the boar is turned into one.

How often do young folks go out to the streets or fields when unexpectedly they are overtaken by some dogs of Satan who try to harm them and to ruin their souls! Sometimes we see the warning, "Beware of the dog," inscribed in large letters at the entrance to some workshop or factory. We look around, and notice a big, fierce-looking dog watching its opportunity to snap and snarl at anyone who may go near it.

"Beware of dogs" is a warning we find in the Bible, and refers not to the four-footed creatures of that name, but to people who, like the dog, are always seeking to annoy others. They are of a snarling disposition, and are ready to bite or hurt the souls of all with whom they come in contact.

There are some who can never play with their companions without grumbling at nearly everything. Then there are others who can scarcely pass anyone without calling out ugly names and making grimaces.

And as there are in the world a great many sly dogs which appear to be very friendly, but are really enemies, so there are many people who are sly, and pretend to be seeking your good, and will lead you away to evil places and leave you, perhaps ruined soul and body for eternity. Beware, then, of two-footed dogs!

The boar was conquered because it had no one to help it out from among its enemies. But we have a loving Friend who is both able and willing to deliver us from our enemies if we commit ourselves to his care. Yes, Jesus knows our weakness and wants us to trust Him and to call upon Him in the day of trouble.

The next picture is that of a nice parlour, in which there are two pug dogs and a cat. They have the parlour all to themselves, and so take the opportunity that their mistress has gone to have a quarrel. I cannot tell you what was the cause of dispute, but I know they are looking very angrily at one another. And yet when the family are in the room they are all kindly and affectionate! They will lie together cosily, and the dogs will lick the cat while it sings to them a sweet song in its own way. It has only the one song it can sing, and although there is not much real music in it, it is from its heart, and it does its best to show how happy it is in their company.

Who has not seen children play together so pleasantly while their parents were beside them, but the moment they are left to themselves strange sounds are heard, then angry words pass, and someone bursts out crying? This brings the mother into the room to learn what has happened.

What a pity it is that there should ever be any quarrelling! It does no good, and only causes grief. Those who quarrel make themselves miserable and other people also.

And although father and mother might be out of the room, God is there, and He sees all that goes on.

> My thoughts, before they are mine own,
> Are to my God distinctly known;
> He knows the words I mean to speak,
> Ere from mine opening lips they break.

Another picture shows me a river and a mill side by side. They are very friendly, and the river helps the mill in its work. The water drives the machinery and grinds the corn. But the river would never help the mill if it were not invited to do so by the miller. He makes a channel for it, and it flows in as he wishes it, does its work, and returns whence it came. The miller saves himself a great deal of labour and expense by being friendly with the river.

It would be foolish if the river were to grumble because it was not a mill, or for the mill to grumble because it was not a river.

Some people are apt to grumble because they are not gifted with talents to enable them to do what others can do. Two boys were talking together. One says, "I wish I could play the organ like you, Jim, but father says I have no ear for music and could never be a good player." The other replied, "Tom, I am to play the organ at the village church on Sunday, but they do not know who they will get to blow the bellows. I wish you would come and do that, for you know it takes two of us to do the work, and I can't do my part unless someone helps me." "Well," says Tom, "I never thought of it before, but I see that there must be some people who are good at one thing and some who are good at another. I think I could blow the bellows better than you could, for I often work the bellows for uncle at his forge. Call round for me on Sunday morning, and you will find me ready for you."

So you see that although it may seem a grander thing to play the organ than to blow the bellows, yet the one cannot be done without the other. Each worker is as useful to the Church as the other in his own way. A man may not be able to preach a sermon, but he can keep a door in the house of God, and if he does that out of love to Christ, his service is as acceptable to God as that of the preacher.

Then, instead of grumbling, let us all work in harmony, knowing that we have each to depend upon the other, in order that we may do our duty in life. All honest labour is honourable, whether it makes our faces black or white. The true nobleman is not the man who has the title merely, but the one who works for the benefit of others. A title may make a duke, but it cannot make a man.

The last picture we shall look at is a shepherd and his dog. A dog is of great use to the shepherd in helping him to gather his sheep and to drive them; but I do not think that the sheep care to be driven by the dog. It frightens them, and makes their life not so happy as it might be. We do not blame the dog, for it does its best, and cannot help its nature. It is a good and faithful servant of its master. All honour to it!

But our Shepherd does not require a dog to gather his sheep, and does not drive but leads them. And the sheep know his voice and follow Him.

In the fold of this shepherd there are lambs who require to be tenderly watched over and cared for. And Jesus loves the lambs and carries them in his bosom. All are his flock who have entered by the door into the fold. "But what is the door?" someone may ask. We give you the answer of Jesus: "I am the door; by Me if any man enter in, he shall be saved." Then, have you entered in? Enter quickly, ere it be too late. Enter in and you shall be saved from sin and its sorrows, you shall be kindly watched over and blessed by a kind, loving, and true Shepherd.

> Safe within the fold He leads us,
> He the Shepherd; we his own;
> And as Him the Father knoweth—
> Precious thought—of Him we're known.

HUMILITY.—Pride and self have the all of man till man has his all from Christ. He therefore only fights the good fight whose strife is that the self-idolatrous nature which he hath from Adam may be brought to death by the supernatural humility of Christ brought to life in him. The enemies to man's rising out of the fall of Adam, through the spirit and power of Christ, are many. But the one great dragon enemy, called Antichrist, is self-exaltation. This is his birth, his pomp, his power, and his throne; when self-exaltation ceases, the last enemy is destroyed, and all that came from the pride and death of Adam is swallowed up in victory.—William Law.

DR. BARNARDO'S HOMES.

In the "personal notes" recorded in his latest issue of Night and Day, Dr. Barnardo tells some gratifying recent experiences of Christian generosity in connection with his extensive work. One day in February he received 1413 separate letters containing gifts for the Homes, the total amounting to £1949 1s. 10d. On another day, more recently, the 1651 gifts that came to hand reached the goodly sum of £2500 1s. 6d. He might well remark that if only he had a dozen days like these two, the blank in his treasury would soon be filled up, and all anxieties as to ways and means would quickly pass away. A further occasion of gratitude he finds in the genuine Christian sympathy in the letters that accompany the gifts. He has now the names of over 100,000 corresponding donors in his books, and all are animated by an affectionate interest in the orphan waifs under his care.

Dr. Barnardo expresses natural solicitude lest these unusual gifts in the early part of the year may mean an empty exchequer in the early summer. Every day he needs £150 for food alone, and on some days his receipts are much below that amount. To stimulate his helpers to continued remembrance, the following little narrative is told:—

At the tender age of six, I was able to deliver little Ruth Jones from the custody of a homeless, tramping, immoral mother, who came one night to our Dock-street Refuge. Little Ruth's case illustrates how these ever-open doors for homeless women and children operate. Through their agency I have been permitted, in the providence of God, to lay hands upon many a poor child waif whom otherwise I could not have got hold of. For the goodnes shown to these women with children while they shelter in this Refuge inspires confidence in their breasts, so that they are often ready to surrender a child whom they would not otherwise have given up under any circumstances.

The mother of Ruth was a dreadful creature. Her whole life had been discreditable and bad. For the last four years she had been on the tramp; sometimes in the company of one wretched man, at others in the company of another; and this defenceless lamb had been carried with her in her wanderings, often cold and wet, hungry and tired, seldom having sufficient of the commonest food, suffering neglect and even cruelty when her unhappy mother was in drink. What lay before little Ruth but a life of misery for the next few years, until at length girlhood should give place to the dawn of womanhood amid surroundings so degrading and full of temptation that one cannot think of them unmoved or with common patience, who can tell? Happily, as I have said, the effect of the kindness shown to this miserable mother and her child awakened better feelings in her, and led her to wish that little Ruth might be sheltered from her homeless future. So it came to pass that Ruth came into my hands. Poor wee bairn! I hope by God's help to fill her child-life with such happiness and such wholesome influences, as may lead to the upgrowth of a harvest of a far different order than might have been expected.

Who among my readers will pray for little Ruth and love her for the Saviour's sake, and perhaps help me to bear the fresh burden which her care involves? How many thousands of my readers have to thank God for happy homes, and for dear children whose innocent experience has as yet been destitute of sorrow or privation? Which of these will, as a thank-offering, give to the Lord they love enough to bind little Ruth as with the golden chain of Christian charity to their own happy children's lives for many years to come?

THE "PALESTINE EXHIBITION" being held this week in St. Martin's Town Hall, Charing Cross, seems a great success. Under bright and cheerful externals, information on Bible lands, customs, and peoples, as also about missions in the East, is imparted. The prominent features of the exhibition are a Jerusalem street, with shops for the sale of Eastern articles, a panorama of Jerusalem, models of ancient and modern Jerusalem, Eastern pictures by celebrated artists, costumes and curiosities of the country, and numerous exhibits. The object of the exhibition is the furtherance of hospital and medical mission work in the Holy Land in connection with the London Jews' Society.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, MAY 7.—2 CHRON. XVI.

How obvious and fatal was this mistake! The blockade of Israel was no doubt formidable and trying. But it was a mistake from every point of view, whether religious or political, to meet it by an appeal to Benhadad. The treasures of the House of God ought never to have been employed for such a purpose. Asa's policy succeeded for a time, but it was to have disastrous results, and these were not obscurely hinted at by Hanani, the seer. There is nothing which brings such inevitable disaster as unbelief. We cannot enter into alliance with the heathen without certain injury to ourselves. "From henceforth thou shalt have wars."

Hanani referred to the story of the past; and, indeed, it is full of deep and solemn interest to us all. Let us not forsake the sacred policy of faith, which has brought God into our lives in so many difficult and anxious days. What He has done He is prepared to do. In Him is no variableness. Let us see to it that our heart is ever perfect towards Him; then He will prove Himself strong on our behalf. To be perfect is to refuse to harbour evil or mistrust; and to keep the whole nature open to God. His eyes miss no single soul that is right with Him. His eyes discover and his hand brings help. However lonely and obscure your life, and however weak your arm, if God is with you huge hosts vanish.

Asa went from bad to worse. He would not brook the seer's remonstrance, and imprisoned him, but he could not reverse the Divine sentence. His policy in the State governed that in his home. Physicians cannot help us if we seek their help apart from God.

MONDAY, MAY 8.—2 CHRON. XVII.

There is a touch of pathos in this mention of the first days of David. To walk in them was to be secure of the companionship and alliance of God. God—not Baal; his law—not the deeds of Israel. Out of this comes stability, riches, and honour. What an uplift we get when we follow the ways of the Lord. We mount up with the wings of eagles, and God makes all grace abound toward us.

It is a good thing when princes take part with Levites and priests in the work of instruction. There is no higher work which can occupy the energies of man than to teach men to know and love their Bibles. This is the secret of prosperity, and we are not astonished to learn that a golden time of success and wealth followed on these efforts to circulate religious instruction throughout the land. In addition to this, God provided that there should be no attack from without. It was also a time of internal peace. Such times come in all our lives, and we should gratefully welcome them, and make the most of them. They should not be given up to stagnation and indolence, but to construction, the inspection of spiritual condition, and preparation against days of war and storm.

The Spirit of God is swift to commemorate the willing offering of an Amasiah (16). Let us willingly offer ourselves to God, that He may be able to realise through us the good pleasures of his goodness, and the work of faith with power. And in this attitude, let us wait on the King.

TUESDAY, MAY 9.—2 CHRON. XVIII.

There is an ominous connection in the first verse between abundant riches and honour, and affinity with Ahab. God would more often use prosperity to ennoble and discipline us, but we cannot stand it. And when once we begin to cultivate the friendship of the world, we drift insensibly to lengths the mere suggestion of which would have appalled us. So Jehoshaphat was swept into a war with which he had no necessary connection. Ah! the perils of unhallowed alliances!

What a noble contrast is presented by Micaiah. There was no compromise in his case, no smooth flatteries passed easily off his lips. In strong parabolic form the prophet, wan with suffering, told of the doom towards which Ahab was rushing. The Ahabs hate the Micaiahs because they suppose that their adverse prophecies are dictated by spleen, whereas they only indicate the inevitable issues of evil courses, which are as deep as the very nature of God.

Are you persecuted for righteousness' sake? Is yours the bread and water of affliction. Be of good cheer. It is only for a little while. Your triumph is coming with the eternal ages.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 10.—2 CHRON. XIX.

We met with Hananit in a former reign (xvi. 7): here is his son. Happy are the fathers whose sons take up their work! God cannot allow his children to turn to the right or left without remonstrance and chastisement. He is so strict with us, because He loves us so. We cannot join in sinful and worldly alliances without incurring wrath. Let us cleanse ourselves, then, from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit. It may be the decisive act of a moment, but it will lead us into the blessed enjoyment of almost infinite promises. We may have to sacrifice companionships and associations that are very dear to us, but the compensations are richer, deeper, fuller, than heart can conceive. "I will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters," etc.

Though he had transgressed, Jehoshaphat was evidently forgiven and restored and used to bring back the Israelites who dwelt on the frontier to God. His directions to the judges who were set to administer justice throughout the land were admirable, and may well be adopted by ourselves in all the work to which we put our hands. There is diligence: take heed and do it. There is sincerity: no iniquity nor respect of persons. There is faithfulness: with a perfect heart. There is the need for moral courage: Be strong. There is the assurance of God's presence: the Lord be with the good. Over the judges was the high priest. All moral and difficult questions must, after all, be referred to our Saviour, who is the High Priest over the house of God. A light shines from his sacrifice over all the dark problems of life.

THURSDAY, MAY 11.—2 CHRON. XX.

This chapter is full of encouragement and help both to the Church and the individual. Perhaps these awful combinations of trouble are permitted to elicit our noblest trust, and to leave an example for others to learn from. Set yourself to seek God, and summon others to join with you. Look away from your foes to God, and consider his omnipotent might, against which none can stand. Quote the promises by which God has bound Himself. Supposing you are involved in difficulties which have arisen from your determination to do only God's will, then cast on God the responsibility of extricating you from them. Confess your own utter helplessness, it is only when we are reduced to the end of ourselves, that we come to the beginning of God. Keep your eyes on God. Then the answer will come. There are battles, in which we have no need to fight, because the Captain of the Lord's host is there with his legions. We often speak of claiming victory, but here was something in advance, praising for victory.

It is strange that Jehoshaphat again perpetrated the sin of his earlier life in allying himself with Israel. Oh, God! guard and help.

FRIDAY, MAY 12.—2 CHRON. XXI.

The sin of a father may entail sad consequences on his house. Jehoshaphat had been very inconsistent in seeking alliance with Ahab, and as one consequence of this there came marriage between his son, who was heir to the throne, and the daughter of Ahab. In the presence of so direct a violation of God's law, all the splendour of Jehoshaphat's reign and the prudence of his arrangements for the amicable settlement of his posterity were dissipated. No sooner had the young king ascended the throne than there was the outbreak of murderous violence towards the rest of his brethren, and a train of disasters, beneath which the country groaned. Godliness and righteousness are the only guarantees of real prosperity. If we leave God, He leaves us to the mercy of men and things which otherwise He had kept at bay. Apart from God, life is like a rudderless ship, which drifts at the mercy of the waves. When we are right with God, he makes our cause his, and fights for us. When we are wrong with Him, the stars in their courses fight against us.

It is interesting to catch this glimpse of the old prophet Elijah. Though his ministry was principally concerned with the northern kingdom, yet his heart was with the whole people, as was indicated when he built the twelve stones into the altar. What a contrast between his chariot of fire and the terrible death of this ill-fated king, who, when his house was in ruins, died without being desired, unlamented by his people. But God was still mindful of his covenant, as He will ever be, and kept the lamp of David's line burning, though but dimly.

SATURDAY, MAY 13.—2 CHRON. XXII.

Jehoshaphat's weak dalliance with the house of Ahab had still further results, as this chapter records. The fell influence of Athaliah, whom Jehoshaphat had taken for his son, blighted the whole kingdom. What an awful record!—"His mother was his counsellor to do wickedly." The house of Ahab seems to have had paramount influence in the counsels of the young king. But those counsels led to his destruction. Evil alliances will certainly work disaster, as well as corrupt the soul.

Ahaziah fell under the hand of the ruthless captain, Jehu, but this destruction was of the Lord. At all costs the cancer had to be cut out of Judah. This Israelite alliance was likely to prove the destruction of the kingdom of Judah, if it were not arrested. The contrast in verse 9 (R.V.) is very significant—between Jehoshaphat, who sought the Lord with all his heart, and the house of Ahaziah, which was powerless to hold the kingdom. Sin has disintegration at its heart.

The young Joash was hidden in the apartments of the priests, whilst Athaliah reigned six years: a significant period of incompleteness and evil; but he was destined to emerge in power and trample her beneath his foot. So will the hidden Lord be manifested ere long, and to Him shall the kingdom be given and victory over all his foes.

INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSONS.

MAY 14.

Fruits of Wisdom.—Prov. xii. 1—15.

Golden Text: Prov. xi. 30.

In former lessons from this book the young man has been counselled by the voice of Wisdom; in this lesson we are shown what sort of a manhood results from receiving or rejecting Wisdom's teaching. The youth determines what the man will be.

1. "Instruction" means correction as R.V. teaches. Discipline, rightly received, is the way to knowledge. No one can "love correction" for its own sake. It may be "not joyous, but grievous"; but the lessons learned by it are invaluable. School lessons are not always easy; but how needful they are! The pride that will not consent to be reproved is contrasted with this spirit of submission. "The fool casts away the precious because it is unpalatable; the wise man accepts the unpalatable because it is precious" (Comp. Isa. i. 2, 3; Jer. viii. 7).

2. Here the man who receives instruction and the man who hates it are contrasted as to their character and their portion. True godliness is goodness, which is one of the fruits of the Spirit (Gal. v. 22). In God, goodness means beneficence, bountifulness. A good man receives this from God, and shows it towards others. His portion is "the favour of God." It more than satisfies him here (Psa. iv. 6, 7; lxiii. 3), and hereafter (xvi. 11). The ungodly are not so. He not only does wrong, but he devises it—plots it (i. 10—12). His sin is deliberate, and therefore all the more guilty. He is condemned already (Jno. iii. 19, 20). Does he ignore that? How shall he stand when the Judge appears against him (Psa. l. 16—20).

3. Many men have sought to establish themselves by wickedness. Ahab, conspicuous for his opposition to God, had not one out of his seventy sons to sit upon his throne (2 Kings x. 7). The rich fool (Luke xii. 19—21). The righteous are rooted in God. Much may be done to the leaves and the branches, but the root remains unmoveable (Rom. viii. 35—39).

4. Woman, though called "the weaker vessel" (1 Pet. iii. 7), should be her husband's brightest adornment. A crown is the symbol, not only of kingly power, but of greatest joy. If she is not this, she is a living disease, like "a worm eating into the heart of a tree and destroying it."—Jerome.

5—7. The righteous and the wicked are contrasted (1) as to their thoughts. Character is the outcome of what is within. The tree is according to its root. "Out of the heart are the issues of life" (iv. 23). A man cannot speak and act aright if he does not think aright. (2) As to their words. In the one case the words tend to evil, as did those of the Scribes (Luke xx. 19—21), and of the forty men who conspired against Paul (Acts xxiii. 14, 15). In the other case, they tend to deliverance. The words spoken by Jesus were words of everlasting life. Let our lips be devoted to a similar service. (3) As to their end. "Overthrown" as Haman was (Esther vii. 10); or "stand," as the upright will (Rev. iii. 12). To which of these two do we belong?

8.—"The Master praises, what are men?"

9. In modern language, "Respectful mediocrity is better than boastful poverty." It is easy to see the Gospel in this verse. How lightly is the godly man esteemed, yet how many servants minister to him (Heb. i. 14)! How foolish is the pride of the wicked while they have not "the Bread of Life"!

10. Godliness extends to every detail of a man's life. Cruelty to any creature God has made is sin against God. How considerate God was even for the cattle of Nineveh (Jonah iv. 11).

11. Diligence is another feature of godliness. A lazy Christian is a contradiction in terms. This will apply to the business of this life, and to the opportunities connected with spiritual life. Negligence in tilling and sowing leads to poverty in the time of harvest. There is no lack of "vain persons" to lead men astray, but he who follows them is "void of understanding."

12. Restless unsatisfied craving is the characteristic of the wicked. Every man more prosperous than themselves becomes the object of their envy. But the life of the godly is fruitful (Psa. i. 3). The fruit is the evidence of the healthful root.

13. Instances of the wicked becoming ensnared by his own words are many. The enemies of Daniel (Dan. vi. 7, 8, 24), the people of Jerusalem (Matt. xxvii. 25). The righteous have trouble, but they are delivered from it. God knows how to do this work (2 Pet. ii. 9).

14. The words of the mouth and the works of the hands reveal a man's present character, and influence his future. Everything a man says or does reacts upon himself. The principle of recompense is carried beyond this life (Heb. vi. 10).

15. Conceit is the companion of folly, and effectually prevents a man learning wisdom. He needs to become a fool before he can be wise (1 Cor. iii. 18).

May-Blossom.

BY REV. R. BALGARNIE, D.D.

THE fairest daughter of the year is she who comes to us in spring-time. Her step light as the young lambs upon the hill, her voice sweet and low as the music of the brook, her eye bright and clear as the blue of the morning sky, and her locks wreathed with the blossom of the orchard and the woods, "the merry month" is always welcomed by us for her beauty, mirth, and song.

It is the month of fair promises. Like our young Queen at her accession, its motto is—"I'll be good." From hill and glen, from garden and orchard, from solemn wood and rugged moorland, vieing with each other in the beauty and profusion of their pledges, comes the promise of teeming harvest and autumnal fruitfulness.

So spring-time comes to the Church, revival of religion to the soul, the beauty and fragrance of May-blossom to the heart that has newly found its Saviour, and spring music to the lips of those who have been born of grace. Beautiful beyond all that Eden yielded, are the May-blossoms, the early vows, the youthful pledges of the soul's first love to its Redeemer. When the heart opens to Christ, as the flower-bud opens to the sun, it receives and reflects the beauty of his holiness, and becomes all glorious within.

During the London revival, when Mr. Moody's work was so greatly blessed, there were held in many districts early morning prayer-meetings; some at six o'clock. Stirring it was, even to hearts the most impassive, to see the doors opening in the silent streets, and groups of young converts gathering and setting out for the meeting places; to hear the swelling notes of their morning hymn, and the first-attempted prayer to Him who had brought them into light. That was May-blossom and spring-music: the consecration of young life to a holy service, and the song of the heart at rest.

May-blossom is beautiful in itself. The pure delicate pink-and-white blossom of the orchard has a distinct charm of its own, So has youthful piety. Few Bible narratives are so attractive as those of young Joseph, Samuel, David, Abijah, and Daniel. And what shall be said of the beauty of that young face turned so earnestly to the doctors of the law at Jerusalem, as it listened to their questions and inquired about the Father's business?

May-blossom is beautiful in its season. It is seen to most advantage in the environments of spring. Late in the autumn it would appear pale and sickly by contrast. Late conversions and reforms are possible, but these leaves are ever liable to wither in their spring.

May-blossom is beautiful for what it promises. It does not bloom to last, yet no sadness attends the drooping and dropping flowers, because something better—the fruit—is to succeed. May all your early vows and youthful promises to Christ, my young fellow Christians, be kept, and may they, through God's help, yield fruit unto holiness, and may their end be everlasting life!

The Manse, Bishop Auckland.

"DON'T TOUCH" is a phrase that a mother should use sparingly. Rather let the children touch and handle, but let them do it the right way and to some purpose.

THE PROBLEM OF TO-DAY is, What is to be done for the children of outcast London? How to keep the children of depraved and vicious parents from growing up to be as bad as, or even worse than, their parents?—Miss Steer.

Letters to Dorothy.—3.

DEAR DOROTHY,—And now, at last, I'll tell you about the other half of our life here.

Soon after I began to study the Bible for a purpose (how dear it grows as one uses it!), I began, too, to speak to one and another here and there in missions, for our little band of people enter into many and varied branches of organised work in the city—need enough for them and a host more in this wicked city, so full of "impotent folk waiting for some one to put them into the pool." But the best use of what we learn came when I was given "a parish" all my own.

Dorothy, dear, you can't think what it is—you poor mortal with your palette and brushes and your books all around you—to have a little group of people all your own; not models by any means, as your people are, but people to be made over, gradually as the Spirit shall aid.

Just a drop, dear—the whole of my work—in the sea. But what a comfort that this drop is eternal! A few blocks of a street of poor families, and here I find a measureless field for work, an exhaustless store of lessons for myself.

At first the misery of it all sorely oppressed me; courage oozed away; but just as soon as I saw I could do something to better it, the sense of faintness at sorrow's sight was lost in the joy of trying to relieve it.

What do I do? What can I say to those stranger-people? You see, I know you well enough to anticipate all your questions.

First of all, my dear, I love them, and in all possible ways let them know it.

By this time I can only dimly remember they ever were stranger-people, they have grown so dear.

Of course, once I stood knocking, with just a yearning to help, in some yet undefined way, whomever might come to the door, and a good deal perplexed as to how to do it. But Mrs. Capron's oft-repeated words echoed in the heart: "Remember, dear children, four stand on every doorstep—the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit, with you." As the sweet sense of such companionship grew, fear fled away.

What if they are strangers? "Mother Great-Heart" says: "Introductions belong to society life. You have no need of them. You come, an ambassador, with a message divine. You are not bound by earthly conventionalities. Speak direct to the heart. Leave them a bit of the heavenly language. They will understand. If you speak only as the Spirit guides, you cannot offend. God never wastes soul-effort. There are not so many ready to run his errands that He can wish to slight the least bit of real service you can render."

"Strengthened with might in the inner man" by such teaching, "for the sake of the name" we go forth, and you'd be surprised to find how many are waiting for us.

The women in these homes, even if they have heard some far-off hint of hope and mercy for them, love to be led by some friendly, if a stranger hand, to the Throne.

Often prepared hearts await us. Only the other evening our blessed Saturday twilight meeting, when we talk and pray together about the work of the week, one of our students was telling us an experience which well illustrates the simplicity of this.

As she knelt before going to her visiting, she asked for a special word for a woman who had always half repelled her, insisting that she had no time for "such things."

In answer to her prayer the story of the foolish virgins was given her. As she entered the door that day—will you believe it?—that woman was filling her lamps! How easy the transition to the story of those other women who did not fill their lamps. Was there a story in that book about filling lamps? She was interested at once and forever after in that strange book, which told about just such common work as she had to do.

Now you may think whatever you like. I know that the Holy Spirit gave the story and timed the worker's coming for that lamp-filling. "Being in the way, the Lord led me."

How do I know? Because it is just like Him, as over and over again we prove.

I can't retrace how it all came about—that the lives of these people in "my street" gradually interwove with mine. One would tell me of a neighbour woman, whose child was ill and needed me; another would bring in a friend of hers to our cottage meeting, of which I'll tell you later. Of course, afterwards 'twas most natural to call. In time over thirty families owned me as their personal friend. You scarce can comprehend how much it means to some of them to have a friend.

The entrance to homes was thus made natural; yet even now, I love to search out another stranger to whom I may be a friend. This has its own blessing, for "the Son of Man came to seek and to save."

"The cause which I knew not I searched out." "If thou sayest, behold we knew it not; doth not He that pondereth the heart consider it?" In my next letter I will tell you how my life got tangled up with just one family. EDITH METCALF.

ST. GILES' CHRISTIAN MISSION.

DEAR SIR,—It is with the deepest sorrow that I learn from my friend, Mr. W. Wheatley (superintendent of the St. Giles' Christian Mission), the very serious condition of the finances of the loved work over which I had the privilege of presiding for more than thirty years, and which is still so dear to my heart. I am convinced that many of your readers will be grieved to know that the need of money has been so urgent that Mr. Wheatley has been compelled to advance all his little savings (more than £1000) in order that the varied operations of the mission might not come to an entire standstill. This is not all, for matters are so pressing that unless substantial help comes to hand some considerable portion of this noble work must be relinquished. I cannot but believe that when these facts become fully known the Lord's stewards will most certainly come to the aid of our friend.

I should like to mention that in the prison department alone upwards of 100,000 men have been assisted during the last fifteen years from a prison career into the paths of honesty and usefulness. During the past year alone 476 lads have been taken from the hands of the judges and magistrates of the Metropolis. Each of these lads has been saved from a first conviction: placed in one of the homes, and provided with suitable employment. All this is exclusive of several hundred thousand men who have been supplied with a breakfast at the prison gates, and earnestly pointed to the Saviour. This is only one department of many, as I think your readers are well aware. I may add that the deep sympathy of the Government officials, including nearly all the prison governors and chaplains, opens such a door of usefulness to Mr. Wheatley as I venture to think has never before been known.

I am not now officially connected with the mission, because my health has entirely broken down, and I have been compelled to seek complete retirement. But I have it on my heart to ask your readers to help me to raise the sum of £1500 at present owing, that we may hand it over to Mr. Wheatley, and so give him the opportunity of continuing his most valuable labours untrammelled by this heavy burden. Most sincerely thanking you for all the help you so readily gave to myself during the past years of happy service for my Lord,

I am, dear Sir, yours sincerely,

GEO. HATTON.

P.S.—Moneys may be sent to Mr. W. Wheatley, 4, Ampton-street, Regent-square, W.C.; or to myself, addressed Newport Lodge, Beulah-road, Tunbridge Wells.

[It is with the deepest regret that we find our friend Mr. Wheatley so heavily burdened with monetary anxiety. Any cessation of his splendid Christian work of helping young lads in danger of being drawn into a life of crime would be nothing less than a national loss and calamity. We are of opinion that the Government ought to subsidise our friend to some extent; at any rate, it is clearly the duty and privilege of the Christian public to free Mr. Wheatley from financial stress, and so release him for undivided attention to the work of rescue and help for which he is so eminently fitted.—ED.]

THERE IS A WAY to teach the lesson under consideration specially adapted to your class; find it and follow it. The more you feel that you must know what you would teach, the more you will feel that you must teach what you know. A head and heart overflowing with the truth of the lesson makes the teaching both easy and delightful.—Rev. L. E. Peters.

The Late MR. GEORGE CLOUGH BARLOW,

MERCHANT AND PHILANTHROPIST, BOLTON.

"Whose name will liv
Not in the memories, but the hearts of men,
Because those hearts he comforted and raised,
And when he saw God's images cast down,
Lifted them up again, and blew the dust
From the worn feature and the disfigured limb."

SUCH was the life-work of GEORGE C. BARLOW, the subject of our sketch. Born of godly parents, he had all the advantages of a Christian training, and early gave himself to service for God. At sixteen years of age, he became a Sunday School teacher, and at seventeen was accepted as a local preacher by the Wesleyan Methodists of Bolton. At this time, too, he took a prominent part in the Temperance cause, then a much less popular movement than at the present time. Opposition and rebuffs only served to inflame his zeal, and the coldness and indifference of others seemed only a greater reason for increased earnestness and determination on his part. Finding the church with which he was connected was relentlessly hostile to temperance principles, he, with his father and other friends, found a new religious home with the Methodist New Connexionists.

In 1874 some startling facts relating to the ignorance and lost condition of the slum children of Bolton were brought to light by the action of the School Board. These so moved Mr. Barlow that he could not rest until, with the help of some kindred spirits, he had opened a room in the lowest quarter of the town, where, both on week nights and Sundays, neglected little ones were gathered.

Continually witnessing the starved condition of the children, in 1880 he determined to give free dinners in the school every Friday. In this, as well as in the distribution of clogs, he was some years in advance of his time. The Collingwood Court School becoming too small, in 1877 he built, at his own expense, the Queen-street Mission-room. The work here gradually developed into Gospel services for adults, and in 1883 it was found necessary to establish a branch in Bark-street, specially for the poorest and most destitute children. During last winter at these two places no fewer than 27,000 free meals were given, and clogs to the number of 700 pairs were distributed.

Mr. Barlow took up philanthropy before it was fashionable, and for years the work he did was unnoticed and unknown; it was only the extension of the operations, and the need Mr. Barlow felt for public oversight over the expenditure, that gave the mission the prominent place it has recently taken among local institutions. The Queen-street mission now remains as a monument to the energy and kind-heartedness of its founder, and its record is a wonderful example of the power of organisation coupled with spiritual force.

While Mr. Barlow saw the need of helping the poor in their material necessities, he never lost sight of the fact that something more than a change in external conditions was needed to raise the fallen. With him the work of rescue and reform went hand in hand with material help, and at the same time that he set a man on his feet, he awaked within him the aspiration for better things, and encouraged him to help himself.

(From Photograph by Mr. Adrian Smythe, Llandudno.)

In his business life, as a tea merchant, Mr. Barlow was an example of just and Christian dealing, while in his work for Christ two things were most prominent—real, loving, and whole-hearted devotion and retiring modesty. The only attractions used to draw congregations to Queen-street Mission were Christ and his constraining love.

Mr. Barlow had been in failing health for a considerable time, and some few years ago he left the scene of his labours and retired to the little seaside town of Lytham, where he waited in smiling patience for the Master's home-call. It came on Tuesday morning, March 14. The loving heart quietly stopped beating as he slept—the faithful servant had gone home. By his express desire the funeral rites at his interment were not of the customary depressing order, but were rather in keeping with one of the hymns of the day's ceremonial:—

"Rejoice for a brother deceased,
Our loss is his infinite gain."

The departure from the usual melancholy funeral observance was noticed in the bright, everyday attire of the chief mourners, most of whom wore white ties and light-coloured clothes, while the order of the funeral service in the chapel and at the graveside was of a similar bright character.

Though no guests were invited but two or three close friends, the procession was very long, and all through the town the streets were lined with people. Two who stood close to the grave with real mourning in each heart were the Mayor of the town and a ragged, bare-footed little boy. There were a good many rags at that funeral, for the poor had lost a friend.

At a service held in St. George's-road Chapel, Mr. J. Popplewell, missioner at Queen-street, spoke of Mr. Barlow as "a man who looked with contempt on the 'Vanity-fair' kind of life many people lived, and was righteously indignant at the lax business morality of many professing Christians. He deeply regretted the way in which many good men immersed themselves in the baser work of making money, to the exclusion of all self-denying efforts to elevate their less fortunate fellow-citizens, and to extend the kingdom of God among men.

"At home George Barlow was wisely firm, gentle, and affectionate, and received the unstinted love and confidence of his family. As a friend he was trusty and true, and none sought his help or counsel in vain. As a philanthropist he was practically wise and discriminating, and yet ever willing to succour the needy, sympathise with the sorrowful, and to stretch out the hand of pity to the fallen and the lost.

"While he possessed the firmness of a strong masculine mind, it was mingled with the tender sympathies and fervent love of a woman's heart. He was a man who crucified self, and responded to the call of God, and the needs of his fellow-men. After serving his generation, by the will of God George Barlow fell asleep at the age of sixty-two, bearing many garnered sheaves to lay at the Master's feet."

The mission work in Bolton will be carried on by his sons, who, by their father's bright example, have been led to follow the same Lord Jesus Christ whom for forty years he loved and served so well. Before the father's death a new and commodious mission-hall had been planned, and building operations actually commenced, towards this, and a night shelter for homeless children, which has been suggested in the town of Bolton as a fitting memorial to the departed saint.

NORTHFIELD CONFERENCES.

The present year will be a notable one in the development of the "Northfield idea." The Christian world has become familiar with the two great annual summer gatherings in the home town of Mr. D. L. Moody—the General Conference of Christian Workers and the World's Student Conference. Since the return of Mr. Moody from his last European evangelistic campaign, arrangements have been made to add to these conventions a third one —an International Conference of Young Women. This conference is to be to the college young women what the World's Student Conference has been and is to the college young men of this and other lands. A growing desire for such a conference has found expression in urgent requests from the young women of some of the leading educational institutions. Evidently the time is ripe for the inauguration of the movement.

The Young Women's Conference will be held first, in the order of time, June 20—28; the World's Student Conference next, July 1—9; and that of the Christian Workers last, Aug. 1—13. Mr. D. L. Moody will preside on each occasion. The meetings will be held this year under unusually favourable conditions, with even better facilities and more ample accommodation than before. There will probably be a larger representation of prominent Christian workers from other lands than at any previous season. There is no reason why the confident expectation of an unusual blessing, a mighty spiritual impulse, may not be realised in the Northfield Conferences of this Columbian year, so that it shall indeed prove to be an "acceptable year of the Lord."

CONGO BALOLO MISSION.

In connection with this mission we are hoping to send out almost immediately two parties to reinforce the broken ranks in Lolo Land. Mr. Howell, from Birmingham, is returning to his post at Bonginda, whilst Messrs. Domenjoz and Wooding are joining the transport department of the work in the cataract region, thus liberating Mr. Bowen for labours on the upper river. Later on we are hoping to send out a second party of four brethren, one of whom will be a medical missionary.

To meet our current expenses in addition to those of this forward movement, which has been rendered imperatively necessary by our recent losses, a sum of more than £2000 will be required, and we especially ask the readers of The Christian to join with us in earnest prayer that this amount may be speedily forthcoming.

Should lack of funds retard the outgoing of the party the result might be serious to the brethren and sisters in the field, and we hope that all who sympathise with this effort to extend the kingdom in Darkest Africa will come to our help, and that right speedily. H. Grattan Guinness.

EVANGELICAL TRACT SOCIETY.

On Tuesday week Pastor Frank White took the chair at the annual meeting of the British and Foreign Evangelical Tract Society, held in Powis Hall, Talbot Tabernacle. This Society and Prayer Union was formed in March, 1882, to enable tract distributors to help one another in their work for the Master. Its members combine by monthly freewill offerings to sustain the general fund, and contribute to the Foreign Missionary Fund. Tracts are supplied monthly to each worker according to his using. A letter is sent to all members once a month containing items of interest concerning the work, and requests for praise and prayer from workers. The fellowship of tract distributors is invited, and the support of all who are interested in the spread of soul-saving truth at home and abroad is earnestly desired. The income for the past year was £253 3s. 9½d., the total distribution being 930,461 tracts, embracing some twenty European and other languages. The secretary is Mr. S. E. Roberts, 26, Paternoster-row, E.C.

THE OPIUM SHAME.

No more rousing testimony against the national disgrace of our opium traffickings in India has been uttered of late than the speeches made at the recent breakfast meeting in Exeter Hall. The meeting was convened primarily to consider the unhappy action of the Decennial Conference at Bombay, of which so much has been said and written; but the scope of the protest went much further, and embraced the whole question at issue. A full report of the breakfast proceedings, with a most interesting and weighty introduction by our earnest friend, Mr. B. Broomhall, has been published as one of the numbers of National Righteousness (1d., Morgan & Scott). Nothing could be better suited for wide distribution in circles where the moral sentiment on this important question needs informing and stimulus. We trust many friends will order and circulate copies. From the remarkable speech of Prebendary Webb Peploe we make a very striking extract:—

"TELL HIM THAT——"

"Imagine that we could suddenly bring from a far distant world one who had heard the terms of our Gospel from the angels in heaven; tell him that in this country we claim to be not only the most civilised, but the most highly advanced nation upon earth, especially with regard to Christian things, and to be the representatives to the world of that glorious Gospel that brings salvation to a fallen race. Tell him that it has pleased God, in virtue of this, as I believe, to give us the government over a larger portion of the human race than any other people have ever had committed to their care, scattered over the whole of the globe; and that by virtue of this position we were intended to be the bestowers of the Lord Jesus Christ to the whole family of men. Then tell him that, for the sake of a small gain of a few million pounds a year, we had actually forced about a fourth part of the human race to take in among them that which they pleaded against, that which they implored to be delivered from (though they were themselves in the darkness of heathendom) and that they came with a conscience more highly elevated than our own, and implored to be delivered from that which was cursing and ruining them; and then, again, that for the sake of an excise revenue we were prepared to force upon the two hundred and eighty-five millions of people in India the awful curse of intoxicating liquor which, step by step, we determined to spread through the country; that we literally manufacture for their consumption a drink that we forbid our own soldiers and fellow-countrymen to touch; that it is to be penal if an English soldier drinks a single glass of this filth, but that it is held to be praiseworthy if the excise officers can force it upon the Indians.

"Again tell him this, that we have come to such a point with regard to morality that our officers meet together and consult as to the price at which prostitution is to be placed, that we by our officers so act for the men as to provide them not only with an opportunity if they are determined to do wrong, but with an encouragement to go and do wrong at so much a time; and that, moreover, we have asked for statistics in our House of Commons during the last few months, and find that out of all the British troops in India, no less than 503·5 out of every 1000 were admitted to hospital during 1890 for venereal diseases, 503·5—(remember, that this is more than one half), while of the native troops, who are heathen and not Christian, only 41.1 were admitted, because of their purer habits and greater continency. Tell him this; and tell him again we have asked in the House of Commons what means the advance of lunacy in India, and that we are told by a high Government officer, the Under-Secretary of State, that it is accounted for by the fact that 25 per cent. of those in madhouses in India to-day are there because of their being led to drink the abominable liquor made from hemp, which our Government manufactures for the people entrusted to its charge, merely for the sake of revenue. Tell him this, and then say, 'We glory in our Christianity; we represent the Lord Jesus; we are inviting Him to return; we desire his kingdom; we long for his coming, and hope that He will return to reign ere long;' and I tell you, brethren, that that being would cover his face with his wings, and, bowing his head, would exclaim, 'My God! what a lie!'

"Christians may appear but a feeble folk; yet they live in the rock, and, thank God, if we seem but a feeble folk this morning, and the House of Commons in its greatness of human wisdom may imagine that the Christian churches are but poor governors for the world, they shall yet learn that those who dwell in Christ possess a power that no human wisdom can withstand; that, if we have God on our side, we may be but few, yet we have a majority because 'The Lord of Hosts is with us,' and that we must overcome because, like our Blessed Lord Himself, we would 'with righteousness judge the poor and reprove with equity for the meek of the earth;' and that our humble determination to see justice done is not the mere scream of an offended sentimentality, but the quiet determination of God-fearing men, who have homes to be guarded, who have interests to be considered that are not merely temporal but eternal, and who have hopes in their hearts that the Christ whom they love will ere long come to be the Sovereign of this world. Let us tell them this, both in the Houses of Lords and of Commons, and we shall find that, though we may seem for the moment to be fighting a losing battle, because we are so few and so feeble in ourselves, we may step on with faith in the Lord God Almighty, and we MUST win the day, and that before long! If devoted members of all the Christian churches or denominations represented in this land are truly united together it shall not be long before the conscience of England shall be so roused upon this matter as to bring overwhelming compulsion upon the House of Lords and the House of Commons, which in a little while shall sweep away all opposition; and the men who dared to rise in opposition to our holy purposes as expressed in this resolution would be ashamed, I think, ever to appear in decent society again."

Sir,—Your readers, who take so deep an interest in the abolition of the opium traffic, will be glad to know that it is likely to come before the House of Commons on Friday evening, May 26, when Mr. J. E. Ellis has obtained the first place for the following resolution:—

This house reaffirms the opinion expressed by its vote of May 10, 1891, during the last Parliament, that the system by which the Indian opium revenue is raised is morally indefensible, and urges on the Indian Government without further delay to give effect thereto, by ceasing to grant licences for the cultivation of the poppy and sale of opium in British India, except to supply the legitimate demand for medical purposes, and by taking measures to arrest the transit of Malwa opium through British territory.

If any of them are willing to help in collecting signatures to petitions to Parliament, I shall be most happy to furnish them with forms of petition and all necessary instructions, and with suitable literature for distribution by canvassers.

We are greatly cheered by the recent action of the Government of India under pressure from this country for putting a stop to the evils of opium in Lower Burma. In pursuance of recommendations made two years ago by Sir Alexander Mackenzie, the Chief Commissioner, the Government have at length sanctioned regulations under which the sale of opium will be confined to persons whose names are entered as opium consumers on an official register. After the 1st of July next this register will be for ever closed as regards natives of Burma, and no Burman under twenty-five years of age will be allowed to be registered. As the issue of opium will be confined to the quantities required for the personal use of the registered consumers, this measure appears likely to put an end to the further extension of the opium curse in India. Joseph G. Alexander.

SALMON'S LANE MISSION, LIMEHOUSE.—The annual meeting of this mission has been followed by a week of special services, which has been much owned of God. At the annual meeting the secretary's report stated that the work has been successful in every department.

The May Meetings.

Church of England Temperance Society.

The annual meeting of this society was held in the library of Lambeth Palace on Tuesday week. The Duke of Westminster presided, in the absence of the Archbishop of Canterbury, who was detained by a committee at the House of Lords. The annual report stated that the year's income of the central council had been £9,451, excluding £596 for the Women's Union, £885 for inebriate homes, and £486 for the United Kingdom Railway Temperance Union. During the year the society had appointed a special agent, an ex-police officer, to investigate alleged infractions of the licensing laws and to prepare evidence. There were now fifty-one missionaries employed by the society in police-court and prison-gate work in London and other large towns, against forty-one last year. The number of cases visited at their own homes was 28,717; 13,543 prisoners were met on their discharge; 1421 persons, chiefly young women and girls, had been placed in homes or restored to their friends; temporary or permanent employment had been given to 1630, while 7053 cases had been assisted with money or in other ways; 4190 persons had been handed over to the care of the parochial clergy, and in 171 cases loss of employment had been averted by the intercession of the society's representatives. The establishment of more labour yards was an absolute necessity of the Police-court Mission, but in the meantime the Croydon yard had been closed for lack of funds. The Duke of Westminster read a message from the Archbishop commending the fruitful vein of real work disclosed in the report of the society, especially in its Police-court and Van Missions. The Duke of Westminster said that at least eleven bills dealing with the licensing laws had been brought in. Among them were the Society's Bill, the Government Local Veto Bill, and the Bishop of Chester's Bill to establish the Gothenburg system. His own wishes were all for the last-named, but he would be very glad to see both that and the Church of England Temperance Bill carried. He concluded by suggesting that it might be possible for all interested in the matter to confer, with a view to uniting their forces.

The report was adopted on the motion of Rev. W. Murdoch Johnstone, seconded by Mr. E. Stafford Howard. Canon Davenport Kelly and Canon Ellison also delivered addresses. In the evening a public meeting was held in the People's Palace, Mile End, under the presidency of the Bishop of London.

Trinitarian Bible Society.

Major-General Synge presided over the sixty-second annual gathering of the Trinitarian Bible Society, which was held on Tuesday evening last week at Exeter Hall. Some extracts from the report, read by Rev. Dr. Bullinger, were at once gratifying and promising. The distinctly Protestant character of the Society was affirmed, and an account given of operations at home and abroad. The income from free contributions shows a steady advance; and the circulation amounted to a total of 115,000 Bibles, Testaments, and portions, over 20,000 complete Bibles being included. Free grants have been made to fifty-five societies, institutions, churches, etc., in various parts of the world.

It was stated that the Massoretic Text of the Hebrew Bible, upon which Dr. Ginsburg has been engaged for many years, is in an advanced state of preparation, and there is every hope that it will be published in about three months' time. This important work, for which many are anxiously waiting, will be specially welcome to scholars, and will doubtless do much to facilitate the correct expression of God's Word in vernacular versions. The Hebrew New Testament is still being disseminated with blessed results, and an order issued last year by the Government of Russia, imposing a heavy duty on books imported into the Empire, was afterwards recalled and restitution made, and the work of circulation proceeds. The Hebrew-German Bible, for the use of Jews who are not familiar with the Sacred Tongue, will shortly be published in a complete form.

The work of Bible circulation in Brittany proceeds with much encouragement. The colporteurs have of late noticed a better feeling of the people towards them; but there is stronger opposition on the part of the priests, who have destroyed as many copies as they could of the book. Some Romish priests tell their parishioners to read the Bible, others tell them to burn the Bible. Meeting a priest on the railway, and talking of the matter, a colporteur received this explanation:—"Where they are Protestants, people will read the Bible; so to prevent them reading your false Bible, we ask them to read the Bible which is sanctioned by the Church. Where there are no Protestants there is no need of any Bible; good Christians ought to be led, and not to think for themselves."

Among other places supplied with Bibles was Tarsus, the native place of the Apostle Paul. An English worker tells the story of a New Testament which was given to a sailor at Milford, and blessed to his conversion. During three shipwrecks the man saved the precious little volume; at length, escaping for his life from a sinking vessel, he brought it ashore in pieces, which he afterwards fastened together. The book was dear to the man because it gave him light regarding the eternal life. In conclusion, the report stated that an increasing number of Christian people support the work, and that there are many new openings for circulation and testimony.

Addresses were delivered by Revs. G. D. Hooper, of Hendon; J. Neil, M.A., of Acton; W. Hunt Lynn, of Brockley; and E. Ashton Jones, of Darlington. All the speakers rejoiced in the extent to which the principles of the Society are recognised in the present day, when the tendency is to depreciate God's Word and minimise the difference between Romish error and Protestant truth.

Christian Colportage Association.

The annual meeting of this society was held on Tuesday week, in Exeter Hall (lower). The report showed that 130 colporteurs are at work, who sold last year 1,352,607 Bibles, books, and magazines, etc., and circulated half a-million of tracts. Pitiful illustrations were given of the evil effects of the abominable literature which is flooding the country and eagerly read by young people. On the other hand, cheering incidents were mentioned as to the blessing which has attended the circulation of the Scriptures and of Christian books. One colporteur for example writes:—

"I sold a Bible to a servant girl—recently come here from the country; to-day who told me she had been wanting one for three or four years but did not know where to go and buy one, and no one ever came round with them at the place she had just come from. I had a good opportunity of speaking to her of the need of reading God's Word.

"I have a very interesting account to report of the conversion of a young man through reading a Bible I sold to his mother who sent it to him. He is a soldier and was a very reckless young fellow, and he has written home to say that through reading the Bible his mother sent, he has sought and found the Lord, 'and now I can say,' he writes, 'the blood of Jesus Christ has cleansed me from all sin.'"

As to village work the report stated that "The great need for evangelising the villages and rural districts is being more and more felt. No agency is so well fitted for this as colportage. The quiet systematic house-to-house visitation of the colporteur, the personal dealing and telling out in simple language in a homely way the truths of the Gospel, and especially taking the Word of God and Christian books to the people's homes, is a work that is being greatly owned of God. Over fifteen hundred villages are thus under regular visitation by our colporteurs, who visit also the smallest hamlets, the lonely farmhouses and roadside cottages within their districts." Work in public-houses and among domestic servants as well as at fairs and markets was described, and a strong plea was made for larger help in carrying on the agency of colportage.

Mr. F. A. Bevan, who presided, warmly urged the claims of the Association, which is not merely a bookselling, but an important missionary society. The "man with the pack," often finds his way to homes where a missionary pure and simple would be rudely repulsed.

Archdeacon Sinclair, D.D., in the course of his address, remarked that if these colporteurs carried the works of Shakespeare, Scott, or Dickens, the reading of these books would not reproduce the writers, but the Book they did carry had the power by the Spirit of God of reproducing the life of its great Author. From his own knowledge of village life the speaker was prepared to welcome heartily these colporteurs who went to the remote hamlets and the lonely farmhouse carrying the Word of God, wholesome books and personal words of Gospel warning.

Messrs. T. A. Denny, W. R. Moore, and Robert Paton spoke on various phases of the work, after which Dr. A. T. Pierson addressed the colporteurs on the necessity for personal contact between the saved and unsaved; the pre-eminence which must be assigned to the Word of God; and the motive power, the indwelling of the Holy Ghost.

The Pentecostal League.

If imitation be the sincerest flattery, General Booth may regard Mr. Reader Harris as one of his most ardent disciples. A Pentecostal League anniversary in Exeter Hall is so closely framed on the model of a Salvation Army festival, that one wonders why our barrister friend should not have enrolled himself and his followers, under the Booth banner, instead of starting what is virtually a new sect. There is the same disregard of conventionality in the matter of programme; the same specialising of subjective holiness teaching; and the same zeal in seeking to bring the lukewarm outsiders within the charmed circle. Like General Booth in the earlier days of his work, Mr. Harris has his "dear wife" by his side.

The fact that the leaguers filled Exeter Hall last week, indicated no small amount of enthusiasm or of organising capacity. Mr. Reader Harris, of course, was Commander-in-chief, and, with the exception of an admirable address from Rev. J. G. Mantle, Mr. and Mrs. Harris did all the speaking. There was nothing of the nature of a report. Indeed the object was clearly not to survey the work of the past year, but to conduct a "holiness meeting" pure and simple.

After rousing song and earnest prayer, Mr. Harris read, with a running commentary, Isaiah xxxv. Coming to the verse which tells of the way of holiness, Mr. Harris said that God gave it that name 2600 years ago, and many are treading it to-day. There is a great revival of Scriptural holiness spreading over the land, and God is thus fulfilling this wonderful prophecy. We believe (he said) in a perfect salvation; we believe it possible to be perfect men and women, as we are indwelt by our God, and only so. Everybody wants perfection in everything but in their religion; they will put up with a shoddy religion. I got a letter the other day from my little daughter of four. There was nothing in it but crosses and twirligigs; the crosses were kisses and the twirligigs were hugs. It was to me a perfect letter; and our Heavenly Father is very willing to be pleased when He has our hearts and we are willing to follow Him.

Mr. Mantle's address was a very impressive exposition of Ezek. xlvii., which speaks of the water that flowed from the temple and carried life and healing and blessing wherever it went. He deplored the lack of spiritual power in many of the churches, but rejoiced that all over the land men and women are beginning to see that their birthright is the baptism of the Holy Ghost. He thought it was the business of the Pentecostal League to bring men and women into the experience of full salvation and then to send them back into their churches to carry the river of the water of life to those among whom they lived. Mr. Mantle told the following incident as illustrating the spiritual condition of some of the Churches: "A gentleman lately said to me, 'Do you see yonder church? It is one of the best attended in this city, and the clergyman is one of the most popular. What do you think happened last Sunday? The church was crowded to excess. The clergyman was preaching on the parable of the Prodigal Son, and his description was so graphic and powerful that a young man started up in the church and said, "That's me, that's me!" What do you think they did? They turned him out. It was a highly ritualistic church; some of the "sidesmen" were by the side of this young man at once, and he was turned out.' I think Mr. Harris would have said, 'My friend, here is the penitent form.'"

Addresses followed from Mr. and Mrs. Harris, with free criticism of the churches; but also marked by much earnest exhortation to a wholly surrendered life.

At the close of his address Mr. Harris invited all to stand who were willing to consecrate themselves wholly to Christ, and a good few representing all ages responded. An after-meeting was held, when some forty persons boldly came forward and knelt at the penitent form. Surely a good night's work, if all, or even a half, of them were led into a deeper and more real apprehension of what it is to be a disciple of Jesus Christ.

The Railway Mission.

The annual meeting, held in Exeter Hall on Wednesday week, proved rousing and encouraging, both by reason of the large gathering and of the fine spirit manifested.

The report, submitted by Mr. R. Nixon, the secretary, showed many reasons for thanksgiving on account of the progress and fruitfulness of the work. The importance of such service arose from the fact that railway men number at least 400,000, and also because these are ever exposed to sudden death or serious injury. As to the Mission, it appeared that thirty-four new branches had been formed during the year, making 365 home branches, holding some 1200 meetings each week, and consequently bringing a very wide influence to bear on the men employed on the railway lines and their families. Over twenty paid evangelists are kept constantly at work preaching the Gospel among railway men.

The Railway Christian Association is looked upon as the inner circle of the whole operations, being composed of Christian men and women united in prayer, love, and effort. The Association has now 8000 members, or an increase of 1000 during last year. The Convalescent Home at Hastings, opened in March, 1892, has done good service to many, both physically and spiritually; but it may be asked, what is one small Home amongst so many thousands of men? Particulars were also given by the secretary of work in South Africa and other colonies.

Mr. S. Gurney Sheppard read the financial statement, and made a strong plea for increased liberality, this plea being emphasised by Mr. T. A. Denny.

Mr. A. Hubbard (deputy-chairman of the Great Western Railway), who presided, thanked God for this Mission, which sought to put brightness into the lives of railway men and to win them for Jesus. The Mission, he was glad to know, has a platform broad enough to admit all Christian Churches, and would to God Christians of every name would unite, forgetting all differences, in one grand common effort to advance the Kingdom of Christ. Proceeding, the chairman showed that the shareholders and directors of railways, as well as passengers and the public generally, are under heavy obligation to the Railway Mission, which has done so much to benefit the men and to check intemperance and gambling.

Miss Ada Rose sang sweetly a solo beginning

> Dear Saviour, take our hand in thine.
> And lead us every day;
> That we may never take a step
> But in the narrow way.
> We cannot on ourselves rely,
> We cannot walk alone.
> Oh! Saviour, take our hand in thine,
> And lead us as thine own.

Rev. A. T. Pierson, D.D., said: I am amazed at this meeting. For thirty years we have been working at railway missions in America, and at first the difficulties were great, though now they have spread over the Continent; but I do not know we have had such a meeting as this. The genius of Christianity is that every saved man should be at work, and every unsaved man should be the object of work; and that is, I believe, the principle of this Mission.

Now, when our Lord was on earth He was wont to take familiar objects as illustrations of his discourse. I wish our preachers would do the same to-day, instead of running off to scientific matters, of which the people know little or nothing. Now, I want to take an illustration from your own calling. We ask about life or conduct, about influence and about character. Where can you find a better illustration of conduct than in the railway track? So long as the train keeps on the rails, following the line of these two bars of steel, all is well, and in darkness as well as daylight the engineer reaches his destination; so "let integrity and uprightness preserve us," let us have definite lines of conduct laid down, and we will be kept right. Then as to influence. What an illustration we have in the coupling! No man liveth to himself. We are ever dragging men upward or downward. There are many coupled to us as the railway carriages are to one another; let us beware how we lead them.

Then as to character. What an illustration we have in a locomotive—one of the finest triumphs of man's constructive genius. What a power a well-constructed, well-balanced man is! And he has weight too, as the locomotive must have. Then the best engine ever made is useless unless the steam is up. So we need the water of the Word and the fire of the Holy Ghost if we are to serve God among our fellow men.

Various railway men from King's Cross, Edinburgh, Crewe, Redhill, and other parts bore witness to the blessing of the Railway Mission work.

Rev. Thomas Cook followed with a stirring Gospel address, based on the words "Son, remember."

City Young Men.

In beginning his brisk and business-like statement at the Mansion House on Thursday afternoon, Mr. Robert Burn, the secretary of the Aldersgate-street Y.M.C.A. remarked on three outstanding facts in the situation. First of all, there was the presence in the chair of the venerable founder of the institution, Mr. George Williams, who has been spared to enter the jubilee year of the Association after forty-nine years of active service for Christ and young men. The second was the world-wide ramifications of the Y.M.C.A., with upwards of 5000 branches. Thirdly, the Association has had a most blessed influence in breaking down the spirit of denominational and ecclesiastical exclusiveness. This threefold cord of interest ran through the whole of the subsequent addresses.

In giving an account of his secretarial stewardship, Mr. Burn said that the aim of the Association was to build up the whole man. Then he told in brief what had been done during the year in the way of educational classes (including university extension lectures, which had been a new feature), in physical equipment, and, most important of all, in spiritual upbuilding. There is a membership of 1160 godly young men who seek to influence for God and for good their fellow young men. Gratification was expressed at the large and well-sustained attendance on Mr. Meyer's Bible classes on Saturday afternoons. There were several special Gospel efforts throughout the year, and these were fruitful in definite conversions. Much good is accomplished through the personal effort of the members employed in warehouses.

It seems to be the usual fate of Y.M.C.A. secretaries to report a balance on the wrong side of the financial account. Mr. Burn had to confess to a deficit of £1620 on the year's work; with £828 standing over, there was a total indebtedness to the treasurer of £2448. Towards this upwards of £500 had been received from City firms and other friends, but £1936 had yet to be made up, rather an unhappy position to occupy on the eve of the jubilee year. A little later on, the chairman hazarded the opinion that the secretary rather liked a little debt, but Mr. Burn did not own the soft impeachment.

The speaking was all good, and strictly to the point. First there came Rev. G. A. Ambrose, a young pastor from Wantage, whom the Chairman introduced as a sample of the work turned out at the Y.M.C.A. Mr. Ambrose told how he came to London, a friendless country lad, and how in a meeting at Aldersgate-street he was led to Christian decision. Since he entered on the pastorate God had blessed him to the conversion of souls, and these in turn would be a channel of blessing to others; so the circle grows. Following up Mr. Ambrose's testimony, the Chairman said that thousands of such young men came up to London every year, and for them the Y.M.C.A. is a place of refuge and of help. To-day there may be found, as the result of its operations, many men in the ministry of the Gospel at home and in mission fields abroad.

Dr. Pierson's speech was in some respects a replica of his address at last year's anniversary in the same place, but it was nevertheless extremely interesting and full of "go" and suggestion. He rapidly surveyed the evolution of modern history as a divinely planned preparation for the Christian activities of to-day. The Y.M.C.A. had come into being just at the time when it could take root and spread, and its growth had been one of the wonders of the age. Its happy influence in checking the rising spirit of sectarianism, and providing a common platform for Christians of all names was commented on. It has enabled the churches to see that the things in which they differ are very insignificant compared to the matters in which they agree. Another point dwelt on was similar to that emphasised so well by Dr. Stalker at Exeter Hall, namely, that creed, though essential and important, is not everything; life and work must have a large place, and this is made conspicuous in the scheme of the Y.M.C.A. Some excellent and telling things were said by Dr. Pierson on the power of "association" in work; it not only supplements, but complements; men of different and even opposing temperaments and capacities come together; the one fills up what is lacking in the other, and vice versâ. There was intertwined with exhortation a bit of personal testimony; for the doctor is another sample of Y.M.C.A. work, having been one of the first 100 members of the New York branch when it was founded.

The speech by Rev. H. Price Hughes was in substance a strong and cogent plea for the more generous support of the City of London Y.M.C.A. by City merchants, and other employers of young men whom the Association seeks to reach and to benefit. It is said that there are 200,000 young men engaged in what is known in business parlance as "the City." Great numbers of these are resident within the City bounds, and no language can describe the utter loneliness of many of them. A great city is often the most lonely place in the world; and it is a place of great moral peril. It has been asserted that through the influence of these two factors, not less than 10,000 young men are ruined in London every year—ruined by drink, by gambling, and by impurity. How unspeakable in these circumstances is the boon offered by such an institution as the Y.M.C.A., with its facilities for benefiting the mind, the body, and the spirit, and with its social companionship. Mr. Hughes remarked on the somewhat notable fact that the Aldersgate-street Y.M.C.A. is now carried on in premises at one time occupied by a literary institute, managed on purely secular lines, and which was a failure. All the really successful institutions of the kind in London are now carried on upon a Christian basis. The previous speaker's remarks as to the non-sectarian character of the Association were cordially endorsed by Mr. Hughes, who proceeded to make a powerful appeal to the wealthy City men to show greater practical sympathy for the work that benefits so greatly those in their employ. A strong protest was also made against the way in which many of the young men toilers in the City are herded together in barracks, while those who employ them, and amass wealth through their labour, are rolling in luxury in their West End, suburban, or country residences. It is only a paltry thousand a year that is needed from City men to help in sustaining this Y.M.C.A.—a fourth of the cost of a Lord Mayor's banquet. After Mr. Hughes's speech came the collection, which, we trust, was adequate to the occasion and to the need.

Throughout the afternoon the assembled friends were charmed, as in former years, by the delightful singing of a ladies' choir from the Royal Normal College for the Blind at Upper Norwood.

Baptist Total Abstinence Association.

This society held its annual meeting in the Metropolitan Tabernacle on Wednesday week, Mr. W. S. Caine, M.P., presiding. Mr. J. T. Sears read the annual report, showing that in the various colleges the total abstainers numbered:—Bristol, 21; Haverfordwest, 12; Manchester, 14; Midland, 11; Pastors' College, 68; Pontypool, 19; Rawdon, 15; Regent's Park, 35; Scotch Institute, 10; total, 206. The number of associations now in connection with the society is 110, having an average membership of 169, and having taken an average of 30 pledges to each society during the year.

Mr. W. S. Caine, M.P., said it was the duty of the ministers to bring their congregation into line with themselves. It was still a fact that a large proportion of the congregations were not on the side of total abstinence. Speaking on the Veto Bill, he said that a Government was returned to Parliament who promised, as a part of their political programme, to give the people the power of local veto, and in conformity with that promise had brought forward a Bill. The Liberal Unionists as well as the Liberals, he said, would be found voting with the Government. There are no less than twenty measures before the House at the present time all tending in the same direction.

Rev. J. Thomas, Liverpool, maintained that, on account of the great national interests involved in the temperance crusade, they were entitled to ask every true patriot to come over and help them. The cause of temperance was too important to justify the division of political parties now as a serried rank in its support. They were going to create, if possible, a nation of intelligently free and sober men and women? Why were they going to win? Because they were hand in hand with the highest principles, because the success of the temperance cause was bound up with the success of the moral principles generally.

A letter was read from Miss Willard, in which she stated her inability, through illness, to attend. In the letter Miss Willard mentioned the interesting fact that while in the Far West one of the late Mr. Spurgeon's sermons on "Whosoever Will" turned her heart to Christ.

Dr. Pierson, in the course of a vigorous address, held on scientific grounds that intoxicating drinks are of no value for the supply of vital force to the body. He ascribed the unseating of the human reason through strong drink as one of the greatest crimes that could be committed, and concluded with an urgent appeal for the removal of the temptations to drunkenness that existed in so many seductive forms.

Reformatory and Refuge Union.

At the annual meeting of this institution, held in St. James's Hall on the afternoon of Wednesday week, a choir of over 500 children, selected from various homes in London, rendered a variety of pretty pieces.

Mr. A. J. S. Maddison (secretary) read a report showing that the Union, founded in 1856, now had 754 affiliated institutions. During the year two new institutions had been established, a boys' home at New Malden and a training home for feeble-minded girls at Hitchin; while a small industrial school near Salisbury and the West Riding Industrial Home for youths and men discharged from prison had been closed. During the year 328 children had been placed in homes and schools and seventy trained lads sent out to Manitoba. A committee was now considering the matter of the treatment of inebriates. The evidence taken by the House of Commons committee all tended to show that the voluntary retirement of inebriates did very little good. It was hoped, too, that the absurd practice of indefinitely repeating short sentences for drunkenness would be replaced by some rational system such as that adopted in Massachusetts. In regard to juvenile crime legislation was also required. Colonial law was far in advance of that of the mother country in this respect. The receipts of the year had been £2022 for the general fund, £3458 for the children's aid fund—which was in urgent need of more help—and £3414 for the female mission fund. The number of missionaries in the street at night has lately been increased through the liberality of two kind donors. The whole of London is now divided into districts which are systematically visited, and women are assisted at the police-courts, workhouses, infirmaries, and hospitals. The difficulties of this work only those engaged in it know. But it has a bright side, and the missionaries are able from time to time to rejoice over many who by their means have been led to return to the path of rectitude and purity. Another department of a similar work is "The Anchorage," with which the name of Colonel Stuart Wortley was for so long identified. The abundant success of this effort is cause for great thankfulness: the figures show that as many as 98 per cent. of the young women are now doing well in life, even after three years' absence from the Homes.

The Duke of Westminster, who presided, urged the importance of the work of the R. and R. Union. He remarked that he was glad to believe that there was a decrease in maudlin and indiscriminate philanthropy and an increasing tendency to support preventive work; and the remarkable diminution in the volume of crime in this country, especially since 1882, might, he supposed, be fairly attributed to the fact that so many children trained in reformatories and industrial schools had grown up respectable citizens of the Empire.

Rev. C. J. Ridgeway gave a short, but animated, address to the children on "Perseverance," while the claims of the work were pleaded by Earl Compton and Sir T. Fowell Buxton. The Duchess of Westminster distributed the prizes for Scriptural knowledge, and the proceedings terminated with an exhibition of musical drill by some little lads from Farningham.

Baptist Missionary Society

This society had its usual round of anniversary meetings last week, commencing on Sunday with missionary sermons in nearly all the Baptist churches in London. On Tuesday there was the soirée at the Cannon-street Hotel, the speakers including two representatives of the Church Missionary Society—Sir T. Fowell Buxton and Mr. Eugene Stock. On Wednesday morning Dr. Culross preached the missionary sermon, which we give elsewhere, and in the evening Rev. J. M. Gibbon gave a sermon specially to young men in the City Temple.

The annual meeting was held in Exeter Hall on Friday evening. In making his statement respecting the year's work, the secretary, Mr. A. H. Baynes, said he believed they had never had to present a more stimulating and encouraging record of work done and blessing received. All along the line the missionaries reported progress. There had been a larger number of additions to the native Christian churches in India, China, and Africa than in any previous year, as well as a very marked growth in the spiritual power, independence, self-support, and aggressive force of the churches. Ten years ago they had not a single thoroughly self-supporting native Christian church in India, but now they had more than thirty. Not only had these paid the stipends of their pastors, maintained their fabrics, and raised funds to build new chapels, but out of their poverty they had contributed largely to the centenary thanksgiving fund, while on the Congo, their youngest mission, at the two stations of San Salvador and Wathen, the native Christian churches were supporting members of those churches as evangelists in the regions beyond. During the year ten new missionaries had been sent out, and now they were entering upon the new century of the modern missionary enterprise amid most hopeful circumstances. All they wanted was, by the blessing of God, to realise in some more adequate way their sublime privileges and their solemn responsibilities.

Mr. W. R. Rickett, the treasurer, in giving his financial report, said that whereas in raising the centenary fund they had aimed at £100,000, the churches had sent in nearly £115,000, for which result they were devoutly thankful. They had aimed at a second object, however—to raise the annual income to £100,000, and this was the task they had now to set themselves earnestly to do. In closing, Mr. Rickett strongly insisted that every church member should be a regular subscriber to this holy cause.

Mr. Charles Townsend, M.P., of Bristol, who presided, in reviewing the story of the past, said that they had abundant reason to thank God and take courage, and now that they were on the threshold of a new century, they were going forward into the future radiant with hope and promise not only for this society but for Christian missions the wide world over. In looking out upon the foreign field he was struck by the large numbers of wide-open doors, and by the spirit of inquiry and of seeking after God which there is among the heathen. As the days went by he was more and more impressed with the fact that the Gospel of Jesus Christ was the only power which could elevate and uplift the degraded races of the earth, and he urged them to press forward in this work, relying in the future, as in the past, upon the arm of the Lord, upon the devotion of their missionaries, upon the spirit of prayer, upon the grace of God, and upon the love of Christ.

Rev. F. Harmon gave a most interesting account of itinerating evangelistic work in the province of Shantung, North China, showing how in divers ways the missionaries endeavour to reach the people. He was full of hope for the future of China, and although it had been described as the Gibraltar of heathenism, so strongly rooted are the pagan superstitions of the people, yet they were determined to overcome and to capture the enemy's strongholds, and to establish the kingdom of God in the hearts and lives of the people.

Rev. Dr. Pentecost followed with a long address, pointing out some dangerous by-paths into which the missionaries were liable to stray in prosecuting their work. He urgently besought them to give themselves wholly to preaching and teaching the truths of Christianity and of building up the native converts in the knowledge and love of Christ, and training them for the work of the ministry.

Rev. R. Wright Hay concluded the meeting with an address full of deep pathos and Divine unction, calling earnestly for new recruits for the missionary army. His glowing words were listened to in breathless silence by the large audience and there were many hopes expressed that one result of the meeting would be that some of the young people present would henceforth consecrate themselves to God for the foreign field.

On Friday morning there was a breakfast meeting in the Lower Hall, when Professor G. P. Gould opened a discussion on the subject of the duties of all Christians with regard to foreign missions. The closing meeting in the Large Hall in the evening, presided over by Mr. John Chown, was specially for Sunday-school scholars, teachers, and young people, and was addressed by Rev. H. E. Crudgington, of India, J. L. Roger, of the Congo, and Rev. F. Harmon, of China.

Free Church Methodist Missions.

The home and foreign missionary meetings of this body were held last week in Exeter Hall. The afternoon was given to a convention on methods, and the evening to a public meeting, when Mr. J. A. Bowron presided.

Rev. G. Turner read the report, which stated that the year had been a good one. The home work was improving, and the work in China was full of hope. West Africa, America, and Jamaica were steadily moving ahead; but the work in East Africa had been much hindered by fever. The statistics of the foreign work were:—Missionaries, 70; local preachers, 293; leaders, 514; members and on trial, 10,485; chapels and meeting-houses, 150; Sunday-school scholars, 11,811; teachers, 1118. There was a decrease of 25 in membership. The home and foreign returns were:—Ministers, 379; church members, 78,512—an increase of 462. The receipts for the financial year were £22,771; expenditure, £21,662.

The first speaker was Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, who made a vigorous and well-received plea for Methodist reunion.

Rev. J. Truscott, the president, spoke of the desire that young men of private means should devote themselves to mission work. In illustration he mentioned the name of Rev. George Piercy, now in the East-end of London. In touching upon the various mission fields, he gave a word of encouragement to each and a hint, if needed, by which the work might be better carried on or extended. Then he closed with a suggestion that even as Macaulay had advised that young men should study the lives of Senior Wranglers, so they should read and study the biographies of such men as Carey, Moffat, Livingstone, Bishop Hannington, and Alex. Mackay.

The only mission station represented was China. Rev. W. E. Soothill was the deputation, and he had a fine reception. The audience stood up and loudly applauded him. He gave a stirring account of his first call to China, and his subsequent trials and troubles in that land. His description of the arduous work, the constant dangers, and the recent riots was listened to with great attention.

Although the hour was growing late the audience gave Rev. D. Brook a hearty welcome. In a short speech he pictured the ruin that would accrue if Methodism and other Churches gave up their missionary enterprise in South Central Africa. The good traders would withdraw, leaving the people in the hands of evil men; they would be exposed to the cruelties of the slave-dealers, and drink and opium would rule the land.

The Theatrical Mission.

Interesting details respecting the wide field at home and abroad covered by the varied operations of this old and eminently Christian organisation were crowded into the utterances of the ladies and gentlemen who spoke during the brief two hours devoted to its annual meeting on Wednesday afternoon in the Mission's Institute, Macready House, Henrietta-street, W.C.

The statement read by the founder and director, Rev. Courthope Todd, showed that expenditure had exceeded receipts by £80 during the five months ending April 15.

Rev. Marcus Rainsford, jun., who was in the chair, rejoiced, on the one hand, that godly influence was the chief aim of the work, and, on the other hand, that the institution was benefiting the bodies and souls of a class which had been too long despised and neglected. He also warmly commended to increased and liberal support the work of the Orphan and Seaside Home branch at Hastings. Some of the bright and happy little ones from that Home were present at the meeting, and enlivened it with Gospel songs. The Zulu Choir, too, under Mr. Saul Msana, added a few of their quaint and touching melodies in the course of the afternoon.

Additional "cubicles" erected on the first floor, for extending the sleeping accommodation, which has been so highly appreciated by lonely theatrical employés, were opened by Lady Power; and it appeared, from a subsequent little speech by Mr. Todd, that various firms and friends have associated some of the "cubicles" with their names by bearing the expenses of building, alterations, and furniture—an excellent example, for the imitation of which there is still scope.

Mrs. Springhall cleverly compressed a deal of information about the good results which have flowed from the persevering efforts of ladies who, from love to Christ, serve the Mission in corresponding with actresses on tour.

Then followed Mr. Todd's account of the growing spiritual and protective influence exerted by the Mission's numerous voluntary agents on the Continent. He mentioned that Mademoiselle Victoire Bertrand has arrived in New York, with a view to meetings for the benefit of theatrical employés scattered throughout the principal cities of the Union and in Canada, with special attention to Chicago during the Exhibition.

The scenic reproductions of old cities with which London is shortly to be favoured will also afford to the Mission fresh fields for benefiting the many strangers who will be employed therein.

In the absence of Lady Ashburton, Lady Power and Mrs. Shaw Kennedy distributed prizes to a few young women members of the Institute, and to some of the orphan boys and girls; this function being followed by tea and a visitors' inspection of the premises, which comprise so many of the attractions of a home for "professionals" of both sexes.

Midnight Meeting Movement.

The annual meeting of this society was held on Friday week at Exeter Hall, the Archdeacon of London presiding.

Mr. J. H. L. Christien said that the past year had been one of quiet, continuous, successful work, in pursuance of which various forms of missioning had been adopted. Amongst these had been night and morning meetings, park and street visitation, midnight promenade for the distribution of the Gospels and appropriate tracts, the visiting of railway stations and other places of public resort.

The Chairman said he thought it was very gratifying to learn that there was less cause for anxiety as to the evil against which they were contending than there was a few years ago, and that was owing to the influence, after many years of waiting for it, of a good sound education. Perhaps, in a place like London, which is somewhat different from any great city that ever existed, they could hardly hope ever to overtake the evil. There was more Christianity in London than anywhere else; but at the same time there was an enormous amount of wickedness. He was hopeful that the good influence of the many admirable schools which were now established would be more and more widely felt. Still he could not but feel that meanwhile, in spite of the valuable work of the Girls' Friendly Society, and of the efforts of other labourers, there would be these moral shipwrecks from time to time, and therefore great need for the work of the society.

Rev. W. E. Codling hoped that the report might have a wide circulation, brimful as it was with information which, though startling and saddening, was not without its encouraging side. He expressed the pleasure it afforded him to see the Archdeacon of London in the chair, and to know that representatives of various branches of the Church were present. It was very sad, he said, to think that under the very shadow of our cathedrals and churches there should be this evil, like a great poisonous marsh sending up a deadly miasma night and day. If people did not know this it was because they did not keep their eyes open.

The remaining speakers were Mr. Ireton, Rev. W. H. Dickenson, and Mr. George Williams.

London Adult School Union.

The annual meeting was held at the Memorial Buildings, Roscoe-street, Bunhill-row, on Saturday last, preceded by the usual conference of delegates in the afternoon. The chief item in the afternoon was a paper by Mr. Edward Grubb, of Scarborough, on "Adult schools and the labour movement." He described the labour movement as the struggle of the democracy of this country to attain their freedom—freedom from the tyranny of economic forces and from circumstances that made it impossible for millions to live a full or worthy, or truly human life. The relation of adult schools to this movement should be rather a corrective one. No social or political reform will really succeed unless it is accompanied by an elevation of the characters and lives of individuals, and this could only be obtained by personal contact with the Holy Spirit itself.

The secretary, Mr. Herbert H. Catford, mentioned that new schools had been started at Croydon, Norwood, Beckenham, Penge, Stoke Newington, and men's schools at Hoxton and Southgate-road; also a junior section at Holloway.

At the public meeting in the evening, Mr. A. J. Crosfield, of Reigate, took the chair, addresses being delivered by the chairman and other friends.

Christian Evidence Society.

The annual meeting of this society was held on Monday afternoon in Westminster Town Hall, Dr. C. Julius, Bishop of Christchurch, presiding.

Rev. C. L. Engström, secretary, read the summary of the report, in which the committee remark on the changed position taken up by many friends engaged in ordinary spiritual work, who formerly held aloof from the society because its methods appeared to be hardly consistent with their view of vital Christianity. There is less unreasonable suspicion than there used to be. Intensely practical and deeply spiritual men now testify to their warm and increasing sense of the need of Christian evidences. Instances are given—from Plaistow, Lambeth Baths, and Whitechapel—where devoted workers, seeking to save and elevate struggling, tempted, and almost hopeless humanity, have found Christian evidence lectures an integral and essential element in the means employed. Provincial lecturers are also named who look upon the defence of the Gospel as one of the most urgent needs of the time. Several vigorous branches have been formed. For the present the newer branches have been chiefly concerned to form the members in classes and prepare them for examination in works on Christian evidence. On the other hand, in connection with the oldest branch, that at Manchester, a very large number of lectures (about 300) have been delivered. Quotations from letters show the need for lectures or speak of their results, and indicate also the wide range of the society's work, both as to the subjects about which information is sought, and as to the distance from which inquiries come. 286 students presented themselves for examination; but a much larger number have greatly benefited by the careful study of the prescribed text books. The financial position is much the same as for some years past. The current contributions do not increase with the extension of the operations either in London or the provinces. An appeal issued in the names of Sir George Stokes and Lord Halsbury produced £163; this and the sale of £200 of stock has enabled the committee to close the year with a balance in hand of £47.

The Chairman said he had been asked to touch upon the religious state of things in the Colonies. The whole outlook, from a Christian point of view, is such as may well give rise to serious thought. Apart even from the spread of scepticism and infidelity, the most lamentable injury has been done by certain preachers and evangelists who have come from America or elsewhere, and wrought immeasurable damage by false teaching and evil-doing. Reviewing the various features of modern colonial life, the Chairman came to the conclusion that the position was not without hope, provided the servants of Christ gave themselves distinctly and decidedly to the teaching of the Word of God.

The Dean of Armagh, traced the curious way in which in the very earliest years questions arose in the young mind, and must find an answer of some kind. There were, he believed, some persons who looked askance at the work of this Society, who put but small faith in the use of reason and argument, preferring what they were pleased to term "more spiritual" work. From this aspect, the speaker examined the claims of the Christian Evidence Society, and proved that these are strong and impregnable, and that the whole work of the Society is of the highest value to the Church at large.

Rev. F. B. Meyer, said that in Leicester and subsequently he had found the evidential lecturers sent out by this Society of the utmost service in dealing with working men. Describing some of his experience with such, Mr. Meyer made it clear that the objections raised by many are for the most part not against Christianity at all, but rather against human theories and forms built on or added to the teaching of our Lord Jesus Christ. The difficulties arise rather from misstatements and misconceptions about Christianity than from any well founded dislike to Christianity itself. He wished that our young men, and in particular our Christian young men, had a truer idea of the solid basis on which the Christian faith rests.

Rev. W. J. Dawson laid special emphasis on the work of the open-air agents, for if the lower class sceptics were to be met at all it must be at the street corner. If the working classes are to be got hold of it will be outside the churches rather than inside. His (the speaker's) own experience had been mainly amongst young men, and he had found a large proportion simply indifferent—not hostile, but heedless. There certainly is a large class who have been repelled by the low level lives or unscriptural teachings of some Christians. Another very large class is eagerly inquiring, though they may not always follow on the recognised lines. Enlarging on these thoughts, the speaker dwelt on social and working-class problems, and declared that it is not Christianity that is played out, but very often it is Christians who are played out.

Rev. A. J. Robinson having spoken briefly, the proceedings terminated.

Baptist Zenana Missions.

The ladies who conduct this mission met their friends at breakfast on Wednesday in last week in Exeter Hall.

Miss Angus read an outline of the report, which showed progress at home and on the mission field. In India the band of missionaries had, during the past twelve months, remained unbroken by death or even by serious illness. Last year four new missionaries were sent out, and three more ladies have recently been accepted to go to India this autumn. A short time since a deputation of the Baptist Missionary Society waited on the committee of the Zenana Society with a view to ladies being sent to China for missionary work. After consideration, the committee came to the conclusion that it was their duty to respond to the call, and to commence work in China when funds were supplied and suitable ladies offered themselves. Accordingly, Miss Angus said two ladies hoped to start for work in that country in August. The report also mentioned that the number of ladies at work in the mission field now numbered over two hundred.

Dr. Underhill presented the financial statement, which showed an expenditure of £8704, with an income of £8403, but these receipts included special donations for the new work in China, amounting to £730, whereas the expenditure for China would scarcely begin until the ladies left in August. The entire expenditure for India, therefore, was nearly £700 in excess of the receipts. The year had closed with a balance due to the treasurer of £301.

Mr. G. W. Macalpine, who presided, said the work of the mission was full of hope. It was the work of God, and in knowledge of that fact there was no room for doubt and fear. He did not think the churches sufficiently realised the magnitude of the work which was being carried on by the committee of the Baptist Zenana Society. That name suggested at once the visitation of those women who were imprisoned in the zenanas of India in their homes. But that was by no means the only field covered by the society. If they looked at the report they would find a vast educational system was carried on, and that the children were being taught by the lady missionaries, who also engaged in tract distribution. Then they were preachers of the Word to women assembled at the great melas held in India. They also did much itinerating work, and last, but not least, of all there was the far-reaching medical work of the Mission, which drew the women from all parts to the centres of the society, and sent them home with the Gospel as well as medicine into distant parts, where the ladies could not go. They secured the means of opening zenanas that otherwise would be shut to the messengers of the Cross.

Addresses followed by Mr. A. H. Baynes, Miss Compston, and Rev. F. Harmon, and the following ladies were introduced as going out shortly to India:—Miss Compston, who is returning to Calcutta; Miss Coombs, of Castle Cary, Somersetshire; and Miss Dyson, who has for some years been head mistress of the Girls' High School at Northfleet. Then the following are leaving for China in August:—Miss Kirkland, who has been trained in medicine, and whose brother has just been accepted for work on the Congo; and Miss Ghalders.

London Flower Girls.

On Monday afternoon about 500 girls and women were entertained at tea at Foresters' Hall, Clerkenwell-road, in connection with the Watercress and Flower Girls' Mission, Clerkenwell Close. The report was preceded by an exhibition of artificial flowers, these being the work of the Industrial Brigade. Mr. John A. Groom, the secretary, has of late enjoyed better health, and has thus been enabled to give more attention to the general evangelistic work. There have been full attendances at the Gospel service held on Sunday evenings at Foresters' Hall, and on Sunday last some hundreds were unable to gain admittance.

Lord Charles William Bruce was to have presided at the twenty-seventh annual meeting, but his place was taken by Mr. E. C. Robinson, barrister-at-law. The abstract of the report, read by Mr. John A. Groom, showed that the necessity for the work is greater than ever; the ever-growing demand for flowers is such, that during the spring and summer there is the greatest inducement to girls and women to engage in the traffic. The work is attended with no small moral danger to them, and the need for the rescue work is urgent. It was shown that many take to the traffic in desperation. Some of the girls are as true as steel; they called them "God's street-lamps"; but the most wretched as well as others are invited into the club-room to have a good word spoken to them. As many as 500 girls and women weekly attended the meetings of the Guild. A number of children from the orphanage at Clacton-on-Sea were present and excited great interest; they were described as having been rescued from surroundings of great misery. The immediate need at Clacton was a laundry, which would cost £500.

The chairman warmly advocated the cause of the mission. Mr. Robert Scott, in his address, made some scriptural allusions to flowers, which he described as the most lovely products of nature. Mrs. Frank Bevan said that the deeds they had seen in what was done for the little children spoke louder than words, and they could not but pray for God's blessing on such service. Rev. J. H. Rose and other friends spoke. The prizes for long service, good conduct, and general progress were distributed by Mrs. Hannah Knight.

REV. W. H. AITKEN IN BIRMINGHAM.

Prayer was asked recently for blessing on a mission in St. Matthew's, in this city. Will those who offered join in praising our gracious God for showers of blessing? Over 230 memorial cards were given out, of which 113 professed conversion to God. At the last men's service close upon 1000 men heard a most touching and soul-moving appeal to reject the bribes of the Devil and cast themselves on "the Mighty to save." It is years since the business men came out at the dinner-hour in such numbers to hear of things concerning sin, righteousness, and judgment to come. St. Philip's Church, especially in the last week, had great numbers present, who listened most eagerly to God's gifted servant. Our hearts are glad and thankful. Would that in this poor and needy part of Birmingham a consecrated band may now go forth, witnessing in lip and life for Christ's glory and honour.

It is to be regretted that the Parochial Mission Society is in need of £500 this year to avoid a deficit. Might not those who have been blessed through the missioners of the Society send a special thank-offering to 7, Adam-street, Adelphi, W.C.?

DR. WHYTE IN LONDON.

It is seldom that Londoners have an opportunity of hearing the premier preacher of Edinburgh, as Dr. Alex. Whyte, of Free St. George's, may, without exaggeration, be called. Last Sabbath he exchanged pulpits with Dr. Pentecost, and spoke to deeply-interested assemblies in Marylebone Presbyterian Church forenoon and evening. The fame of the Scotch preacher drew together many in addition to the usual congregation. Dr. Whyte is fast getting grey, but he seems to have lost nothing of his vigour either in matter or manner. He has escaped the modern tendency towards doctrinal vagaries, but he holds the truth in love, and is essentially strong in his advocacy of applied Christianity in life and conduct.

The morning sermon was evidently designed to have reference to the call which is this week being formally given to Dr. Pentecost to the Marylebone pastorate. The discourse, from Ezekiel ii. 8—10, iii. 1—4, was on the characteristics of a true Christian pastor. It was full of fine practical thinking, expressed in the strong sinewy Saxon speech of which Dr. Whyte is a master. Here is a pregnant paragraph:—

"We must submit ourselves to speak and to hear the whole Word of God. The book of the Bible, the preacher, the cycle of doctrines that we like, may not be the best of us. All God's truth for our full salvation is not shown in one book of the Bible, or in one Testament, creed, or Church. Our ministers have not to be one-sided, sectarian, and censoriously-minded men, and ought not to gather around them a one-sided and party-spirited people. They must preach to them the whole Bible—the broad-minded, large-hearted, brotherly, loving truth—evangelical grace and moral virtue—the righteousness which justifies the sinner, and the holiness without which no man can see God. The Divine end of all religion is to cause and to secure that the whole word of God, the welcome and the unwelcome alike, shall enter our hearts and work salvation there."

At the close the preacher paid a fine and touching personal tribute to the memory of the late pastor at Marylebone.

"The God of your salvation has no better gift to give you this side glory than a good minister of Jesus Christ. You have had such a minister in this pulpit in the late Dr. Donald Fraser. You knew Dr. Fraser as a preacher and pastor. It was during that great awakening and revival that came to Scotland more than thirty years ago that I first made Dr. Fraser's acquaintance. He was then the idol of Inverness, and I was a poor student in Aberdeen. It was at a great open-air meeting at Forres that I first came to know and love your minister. I had never been introduced to him; I was nobody to him. I never knew why he did it, but as one of the meetings was in progress he touched me on the shoulder, and beckoned me to follow him. I knew him, and went after him with another student. He led us into an adjacent cornfield, and kneeling down out of sight amidst the tall yellow corn, he poured out his heart before God, first for his own salvation, then for us as students, and then for the great work at that time in progress in Scotland. I often met and often heard him speak after that occasion, but it is always to that far-off morning I go back when I wish to think of Dr. Donald Fraser."

Of Dr. Pentecost, the pastor-elect, Dr. Whyte said the congregation had in him "one of the most gifted, interesting, and impressive preachers now living."

In the evening the hearers had a taste of Dr. Whyte's peculiar quality as an interpreter of John Bunyan. The lecture was on Bunyan's "Mr. Standfast," and a very noteworthy deliverance it was. He seemed to revel in the Bedford tinker's quaint narration, and the lessons he drew from the character and experiences of Mr. Standfast were very much up to date. His confirmed habit of musing as he journeyed up the heavenly road; his escape, by taking to his knees, from the blandishments of Madam Bubble; his triumphant passage across the river of death—these and other points were illuminated and made real in their application to the Christian life to-day in a way that positively enthralled the attention of the people. Speaking of the account of the death scene, Dr. Whyte said he had long desired to have it printed separately in large type and hung up by the dying beds of those pilgrims whom he visited pastorally. Hitherto he had not done so for fear of the doctors, but he declared his resolve that he would have Standfast's last testimony printed for the comfort and strengthening of dying believers, whether the doctors liked it or not.

This lecture will doubtless find its way into print speedily and we counsel all who can get it to do so and read every word with care. Will not some brother minister prevail on Dr. Whyte to pay another visit to London after a brief interval?

OGLE MEWS RAGGED SCHOOL.

It is not yet fifty years since the Ragged School Union was formed, but some of the schools that were associated to form that beneficent institution have already reached their year of jubilee. The Ogle Mews Schools are amongst this happy group, and on Tuesday, April 25, they celebrated their fiftieth anniversary meeting. Hon Evelyn Ashley presided, in the unavoidable absence of Baroness Burdett-Coutts.

There were some most interesting features in the report read by Mr. John Kirk. It was the members of a Presbyterian church in Wells-street, Oxford-street, who originated the movement on behalf of the children, and though the Wells-street building and congregation have long ago disappeared, one of the leaders, Mr. Robert Hepburn, has been from that day to this its hon. treasurer. To begin with, the expenditure could not have been extravagant, for a disused stable was the scene of the earlier efforts; but so many and varied are the operations now carried on on behalf of the poor neighbours that last year the cost was £1000. The day nursery is so highly appreciated that the daily payments by the parents amounted last year to nearly £170. It is not uncommon that babies should begin to be brought at the tender age of three weeks! For structural and other alterations £500 are required, and the friends present made a goodly collection towards the amount.

Mrs. Lynn was the principal speaker, and she was followed by Rev. T. Turner, Rector of St. Saviours, Alderman Beachcroft, and Mr. John Priestley. During the evening a portrait of the Baroness Burdett-Coutts was unveiled. It is to remain in testimony of her ladyship's life-long devotion to ragged school work, and to kindred efforts on behalf of the poor.

TRIAL IN PROSPECT.

I will fear no evil, for Thou art with me.—Ps. xxiii. 4.

Yes, I see a gloomy valley
Lie before me in the way,
I can trace its darksome shadows
Shutting out the light of day.

I can almost tell the mingling
In that bitter cup of woe;
I can mark the wounding bramble
In the path where I may go.

And although the storm-clouds gather
Thick and dark on every side,
I am calm and free from trouble,
God hath said, "I will thee hide."

And into that shadow'd valley,
I shall never go alone,
For my Shepherd is beside me,
Arms of love are round me thrown.

He will guide me through the valley,
Resting on his mighty arm;
Lions' den, or fiery furnace,
Storms or tempests, cannot harm.

Grace to trust Him every moment,
This will cover all my need;
Changing all the dismal valley
To a place of bliss indeed.

I may never tread that valley,
For my Lord may quickly come!
And before I reach its shadows
I may find myself at home.

Like a weary dove escaping
From the windy storm and rain;
Basking in that radiant sunshine!
Never more to sin again.

Gazing on that face in glory,
Once so marred for love of me!
Feasting on that wondrous story
Through a long eternity!

Banchory, N.B. B. C

THE OUTLOOK IN IRELAND.

[By a Correspondent.]

The rioting in Belfast is at an end, and the Christian people of Ireland are profoundly glad it is over. It may suit partisan politicians to proclaim that the Protestants of Ireland are in sympathy with the rioters. But such is not the case. They have nothing but the most unqualified condemnation for such brutal conduct. As well tax the labouring classes in England for the incendiarism at Hull, as assert that Irish Protestants as a body approved of the recent riots in Belfast. Neither were the riots sectarian. Once bad passions were aroused, sectarianism helped to fan the flame; but the rioters were primarily actuated by political feelings, and their position was most illogical. They feared the intolerance of the Roman Catholic Church if Home Rule was granted. And to demonstrate that feeling they gave the world an exhibition of the most rabid and brutal intolerance themselves.

The fact of the matter is this: there is a description of professing Protestant to be found, chiefly in the North of Ireland, who is Protestant only in name. He goes to no place of worship, knows nothing of his Bible, is consequently ignorant of the very rudiments of Christianity, drinks bad whisky, or worse ether, and is constantly disposed to quarrel with his surroundings. His ideas of religion are purely political. He is always prepared to beat a drum, or take part in a procession, and there his religion terminates.

I well remember addressing a meeting on a recent occasion very far north. The godless Protestants of the neighbourhood gathered in, expecting to hear some strong denunciations of Romanism. At the conclusion of my address the local minister, who presided, declared his satisfaction at seeing some dozens of people present whom he had never beheld in any place of worship or at any religious meeting before. Such people are few, thank God. Day by day they are becoming fewer. They are a diminishing and discredited minority. Their atmosphere is intolerable to a follower of the Master. But they are the stuff of which the Belfast rioters are made. They have hitherto been the worst enemies of the Gospel in this country, and all the while the Christian people of Ireland get credit for being actuated by these motives and feelings.

While on this subject of toleration, let me give an incident illustrative of the toleration that Roman Catholics are prepared to extend to their Protestant countrymen. We constantly hear just now of how mild and indulgent the Church of Rome is in this country. Intolerance, in fact, is only to be found in the North of Ireland. All this sounds well, but it is not true. In this, at least, Rome is consistent; she always was and always will be intolerant. Intolerance is part of her very nature, and she cannot deny herself. Only the other day an ex-Roman Catholic, accompanied by his wife and family, passed through Dublin on his way to Limerick. Limerick is his native place, and he has been for some years now out of the Church of Rome. He got into the town long before the people were astir. In the early forenoon word of his arrival got abroad, and a crowd collected to have a look at the "turncoat." It became so threatening in its attitude that the police had to be called in. The poor man with his wife and family took refuge in the police barracks, and stole out of Limerick under cover of the friendly darkness, and was back in Dublin next morning. Previous to this, and on his first leaving the Church of Rome, he got employment here in Dublin. He was working in a large firm, but his past history was discovered, and matters became so disagreeable all round that his services had to be dispensed with.

It is all very well to assert, as did a prominent Irish politician recently in the House of Commons, that "it is an insult to the Roman Catholics of Ireland to anticipate that they would oppress the Protestant minority." Petty oppression is common at the present day wherever it can be practised by the Church of Rome with safety.

NZANZALA is the name of a little lad of eleven years, whom Rev. W. L. Forfeitt, of the Congo Baptist Mission, bought for 950 brass rods. This is the character given to him: "He has a very good disposition, and does his work always quickly and cheerfully."

MESSRS. McNEILL AND BURKE.

These brethren have had a successful and in many respects eventful mission in the "Emerald Isle." The month of April was given entirely to the South, and the towns visited were Cork, Limerick, and Waterford; the Cork meetings have been noticed in your columns.

In Limerick, the mission was held in the theatre, and from the outset great interest was manifest; every evening the building was almost filled. The mission lasted from April 16th to 21st. Two meetings were held each day except Monday, and it was truly astonishing to see the numbers who gathered in the afternoons.

At the opening service Mr. McNeill said, "Sin and shame and suffering belong neither to Catholic nor Protestant; they are human, and we come with a message to the human heart." These and other cheery words seemed to win the confidence of his hearers, so that from the start he had a thoroughly sympathetic and appreciative audience. All the meetings were marked with deep solemnity and spiritual power, although the speaker, as is his wont, occasionally enforced the truths by some remark or incident which caused a general smile. God's presence was so felt in every meeting that the workers have faith to be assured that a great many were born again, and numbers of believers built up and strengthened.

In Waterford the mission from April 23 to 28 was held in the Protestant Hall. Through some misunderstanding the mission was announced as abandoned in the middle of the previous week, and the only notices of the meetings on Sunday were from the pulpits of some of the churches that morning. However, the hall was fairly well filled. On the Monday posters were put on the walls, handbills distributed, and notices sent out, which resulted in the gathering of a large audience, and a steady increase at each meeting, until on the closing evening the hall was almost crowded.

Mr. McNeill soon won his way to the hearts of his hearers. It was deeply interesting to watch the upturned faces of the listeners as they drank in the glorious story of the Gospel, told with such wonderful freshness and power; occasionally there was a murmur of approval, which almost amounted to a cheer. There were evident signs of blessing, and the intense solemnity which prevailed warrants the belief that God's Spirit was at work applying the truths presented.

Mr. Burke's singing of the Gospel hymns was greatly appreciated, and one could not help feeling that the earnest desire of the singer to be the means of blessing to his hearers was being fully realised.

One remarkable point about this mission in all the cities was the presence of those who do not usually attend mission services. Although the speaker was honest and faithful enough not to gloss over customs and teaching which are misleading and ruinous, but rather to speak out fearlessly and boldly against them, the same people came night after night. Mr. McNeill has done much to strengthen and help the regular Church organisations. In return he was well supported by the Evangelical ministers and clergy. He is a man well suited to cope with the difficulties of evangelistic work in Ireland, and we are hopeful that in the near future he may see his way to come amongst us again. He has asked for our prayers for his future work, and he may rest assured that he and his fellow worker have a warm place in many Irish hearts.

A Privileged One.

THE INTOLERANT SPIRIT.—We often talk about the persecuting spirit of the Roman Catholics, because they set up the Inquisition in Spain, and put people to the rack and various tortures, and even burned them at the stake because they did not bow to the Pope and worship the Virgin; but it is to be feared that there is not a denomination of Christians in the world that could be safely trusted with supreme power. Human nature has never yet been trusted with absolute power without abusing it, and this is as true in the Church as in the State, that the possession of a sceptre needs to be guarded by constitutional limits to prevent its despotic abuse. There remains much unsanctified territory, even in the hearts of professed disciples, and so it is that intolerance and bigotry are so common, even in the Church of Christ.—Dr. A. T. Pierson.

MY EXPERIENCE of the trained child shows him to be full of resource and energy, never at a loss for employment, always cheerful, easily pleased, friendly, and sociable.—Miss Frank.

MRS. BAEYERTZ IN EDINBURGH.

This lady evangelist has concluded a very interesting and fruitful mission in Edinburgh, extending over sixteen days. She came to the city almost an entire stranger, but leaves it with the warm regard and hearty good wishes of a large number of Christians in it.

Mrs. Baeyertz conducted a daily afternoon Bible-reading for Christians in the hall of the Young Men's Christian Association. The attendance at these meetings steadily grew, until on the last four days the hall was filled to its utmost capacity. Many Christians acknowledge having received help and stimulus at these Bible-readings, especially in regard to a fuller understanding of the nature of the overcoming life, and quickened desire to enter into experimental knowledge of it.

The evening meetings were held on Sundays in the Free Assembly Hall, and on week-nights in the large hall of the Carrubbers Close Mission. The attendance on week-nights increased daily, until it became very large, whilst on the last two Sunday evenings the Assembly Hall was crowded in every part. Special interest was awakened by Mrs. Baeyertz's address on the Passover, illustrated by a table furnished in the modern Jewish fashion. By request this address was repeated during the mission, and again after its close Mrs. Baeyertz re-delivered it in connection with one of the churches. A more instructive and impressive address it would be difficult to imagine.

There were many inquirers every night, who were dealt with by Mrs. Baeyertz in a way peculiarly her own. A number of interesting cases of decision are known to the workers, and it is believed that they are but a part of those which have decided.

Mrs. Baeyertz's closing meeting on April 25 was a time of rich blessing. The hall was crowded to overflowing, very many having to stand throughout the proceedings; nevertheless, the stillness and earnest attention were very striking. A noteworthy feature of the gathering was the large proportion of men present. Mrs. Baeyertz gave a very telling and helpful address on Holiness, and when she invited those who wished to pray to remain to the second meeting, four-fifths of the great audience kept their seats. Several earnest and pointed prayers followed, while those present were on their knees—an unusual occurrence in Scotland. It was a thrilling sight to see, after prayer, hundreds of Christians holding up their hands while they sang with fervour:

I will follow Jesus;
Everywhere He leads me, I will follow on.

It cannot be doubted that the effect of this meeting will be blessedly felt in many a branch of Christian service.

THEATRE SERVICES.

At a drawing-room meeting for this important work at the house of Mr. Montague Holmes, 79, Warrington-crescent, on Saturday afternoon, the secretary, Rev. T. C. Udall, said they were now at the close of the thirty-fourth winter course of these services. In no previous year had there been greater interest manifested in the meetings held in the sixteen large buildings, or more cases to report of remarkable conversions to God.

Sir Mark J. Stewart, M.P., chairman, spoke of the large proportion of the working classes alienated from the churches and who are careless or hostile to Christianity. London is now a nation containing six millions of people, and such a democracy without religion is a menace to the State. Mr. Carley, late missionary to the drovers and cattlemen, gave an account of the work at the Agricultural Hall, Islington. Rev. T. T. Snow, St. Peter's, Islington, also gave testimony as to the remarkable work being done in the Hall. Mr. Geo. Nokes, of the Pavilion Theatre services, Whitechapel, followed with a thrilling account of life in Whitechapel and Bethnal Green; his work during the last eighteen years has been among the very poorest and lowest people of that vicinity.

Allusion was made to the great loss sustained by the death of Mr. C. M. Sawell. It was felt that the work was never more needed than now, and that it must go on.

THERE ARE NO DUMB CHILDREN among those that are born of God; they have all the spirit of prayer, by which they not only speak, but cry, Abba, Father.—Bishop Leighton.

MILDMAY CONFERENCE, 1893.

Beloved Christian Friends,—No urgent call is needed this year to summon you to Mildmay. Your thoughts, your sympathy, are there already. And the departure from our midst of the one who, for twenty years of widowhood, laboured so lovingly, so unwearedly, for us all, and the loss of whose wise counsel and blessed influence is now felt with such acuteness, will quicken your desires to visit again the scenes where she dwelt and wrought, scenes now hallowed more than ever. You will be feeling, as we do, that now, if ever, is the time when we should draw still nearer together in the name of our blessed Lord, and with hearts more closely knit, and hands more closely joined—take up with zeal rekindled by holy memories the work so dear to her and to him whom she has now rejoined in her Saviour's presence.

As the company of those we have loved and laboured with here grows larger there, as the number of his elect hastens to its accomplishment, it is for us who remain to grasp the weapons they have laid down all the more firmly, and to follow more faithfully their loved and honoured footsteps. For, though one and another of the workers is transferred to yet more blessed service yonder, the work here remains; nay, it seems to grow in importance and in its claims for more devoted labourers as the days pass on. It is his work, and we hear Him saying afresh to us all, "Occupy till I come." "Till I come"—when "He shall see of the travail of his soul and shall be satisfied"—when we shall meet in his blessed presence the loved ones that have gone before, and when "he that soweth and he that reapeth shall rejoice together."

Can we then have for our conference this year a subject more fitted to knit us to one another, to brighten our hope, and to kindle our flagging energy, than "The coming of our Lord Jesus Christ and our gathering together unto Him"? Thus, moreover, shall we be in fellowship with many other conferences of our brethren throughout the land, who in response to a recent suggestion, will probably be occupied with the same bright and blessed theme. We ask you, then, to meet together in worship, in conference, and in meditation on that joyful hope on the 27th, 28th, 29th of June, and to unite with us in frequent prayer, that through the presence and power of the Holy Ghost our gathering may be one rich in blessing, and redounding to the glory of God.

Yours in the fellowship of the Gospel of Christ,

S. A. Blackwood, A. R. Pennefather,
James E. Mathieson, J. Herbert Tritton,
Harry C. Nisbet, Edward Trotter,
Trustees of the Conference Hall.
J. F. Morton,
Superintendent of the Conference Hall.

KESWICK CONVENTION.

In sending out the invitation to this well-known convocation, Mr. Robert Wilson, of Broughton Grange, Carlisle, says:—

"Again, in the goodness of our God, the invitation goes forth, to all who love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity, to assemble as one in their blessed Master in a convention to be held, God willing, at Keswick from July 24 to 29, 1893. Whilst on our part making humble confession of sin and failure and utter weakness and unworthiness, may we have unbounded confidence in the mighty power of Him who worketh in us 'both to will and to do of his good pleasure.'

"We desire to praise our God for all the blessing granted in past years, and trustfully look to Him to be with us, in the mighty power of his Spirit, revealing more of the fulness of Jesus for every waiting soul. Many loved and honoured brethren will be with us, God willing. May they come in his name to break the bread of life amongst us, in the power of the Holy Ghost. We know not how soon these earthly gatherings of the Lord's children may end, when with joy we shall meet in the great convention in the presence of our Master, when in wondrous grace He declares, 'He shall gird Himself and make them to sit down to meat, and will come forth and serve them.'"

Tent meetings: Prayer meeting, Saturday, July 22, 7.30 p.m.; Sunday, 23 and 30, at 7 a.m. Evangelistic services, Sundays, July 23 and 30, at 3 and 8 p.m.; Monday, July 24, prayer meeting, 7 a.m. First convention meeting, 7.45 p.m. After the convention, so long as the tent stands, other meetings will be held, of which due notice will be given.

Mr. John Postlethwaite, Eskin Place, Keswick, will again kindly act as hon. secretary, to whom applications for information respecting lodgings or hotel accommodation may be sent, stating particulars of what is desired. Anyone taking rooms for longer than one week will find it easier to obtain accommodation early.

RAGGED SCHOOL UNION.

For nearly 100 years there has been Christian work carried on at what is now known as the Camberwell Mission in Toulon-street, Camberwell. The unattractive district still needs such an all-round agency for the children and the parents. The self-denying workers met on Monday week at the anniversary gathering, and were cheered by kind words from the president, Mr. Edward Rawlings, Rev. Thomas Hooper (of Camberwell Green Chapel), Mr. Charles Steinitz (chairman of the R.S.U. Council), Mr. Travers, Buxton, and others. Mr. A. H. Ward, one of the hon. secretaries, was able to give a good record of work done.

Bermondsey is not noted for its salubrity. It has, however, long had the benefit of good earnest work for some of its poor children in the Marigold-place Ragged School. The day school still continues under the motherly influence of Miss Challis. Mr. Donald Matheson, a long-tried friend, presided at the annual meeting on Thursday, when Mr. R. J. Curtis, of the Ragged School Union, with other friends, gave testimonies to the value of the work, and pleaded earnestly for some financial recognition.

Doncaster "Do Without" Missionary Society.

In January last an exhibition of curiosities from the foreign field was held in the Mansion House here, and addresses were delivered by Miss Broomhall, Mr. Hudson Taylor, and Mr. Louis Byrde. Two missionaries are supported by this society in China and one in India, and others are partly maintained. Two native evangelists are supported in Madagascar, and one in India. Two women are being trained in the Converts' Home, Allahabad, and the sum of £15 has been spent in sending New Testaments to Uganda.

On Sunday week Mr. Edwards, of the North Africa Mission, deeply interested the members by the account of the work in Morocco and by his beautiful rendering of Arabic hymns. This mission is going to be helped by the support of a "Doncaster Bed" in the Tangier Hospital. There are now 875 members who are expected every week to do without something, and every day to pray for a blessing on the work of evangelising the world.

A. Christy Wilson, M.D.

IRISH NOTES.

Evangelistic services been held in the Presbyterian Church, Sandymount, Dublin, by Rev. Dr. Black, of Inverness.

The Dublin Methodist Council has decided to establish a central mission in the city, and have guaranteed £250 a year for five years towards the cost.

On Sunday week Rev. Dr. Pentecost, of Marylebone, preached with great acceptance for Rev. Dr Edgar, Moderator of the General Assembly, in Dublin.

A new Baptist Tabernacle, which has cost about £2000, was opened at Ballymacarrett, Belfast, by Pastor H. D. Brown, of Dublin, on Sunday week. Rev. Robt. Clarke is the pastor.

The mission on behalf of the adult deaf and dumb in Belfast, of which Messrs. Magin and Harris are the agents, has made a very successful and encouraging year, and is doing an excellent work.

The Belfast Methodist City Mission has closed for the season its series of "Happy Saturday Evenings for the People," which it has held for each of the four winters, and which has been most successful.

A successful series of temperance meetings has been held at Omagh, Newtownstewart, Limavady, Coleraine, and other places in the neighbourhood of Londonderry, by Rev. T. J. Charlton, rector of Crossduff.

A series of meetings which has been attended by ministers members of various Protestant denominations, has been held under the auspices of the Evangelical Alliance at Parsonstown, Roscrea, and Tipperary, by Rev. Dr. Mullan.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

A proposal for union with the Evangelical Union Church was favourably received at the Congregational Union meetings in Aberdeen last week.

The membership of the U.P. Church shows an increase during the past year of 1777, and it is reported that the operations of the Church generally furnish distinct evidence of a healthful and progressive energy.

Mr. and Mrs. Barclay, Edinburgh, conducted very successful Gospel and temperance meetings in Elgin from Friday, April 21, until the Wednesday following. Mrs. Barclay rendered solos at all the meetings with telling effect.

The huge quarto volume which Rev. R. Howie, of Free St. Mary's, Govan, has compiled, in order to bring home to thinking people in hard, dry, irrefutable figures "the churchless" in Scotland, is a unique proof of what untiring literary industry and a firm belief in the convincing power of statistics can accomplish. The volume is of priceless value, alike to clerymen and politicians.

At a great meeting in St. Andrew's Hall, Glasgow, to celebrate the jubilee of the Free Church, many enthusiastic speeches were delivered. Perhaps the most practical was that by Dr. Stalker, who said that in the future they must fight the drink, fill the home churches, and evangelise the heathen. He repeated with approval the remark recently made by a young minister, that the true dividing line to-day in the churches is not the denominational one, but it is the old distinction between those who teach that men need only to be improved, and those who teach that men need to be redeemed.

O PATIENT MOTHER! what peace she keeps in the house, just by having peace always within herself. Paul can find no better figure wherewith to set forth God's marvellous patience with Israel during her fretful childhood in the wilderness, than just that of such a nurse among her provoking children.—Alex. Whyte, D.D.

TORQUAY.—The Chelston Evangelistic Mission, founded about eight years ago by the Dowager Countess of Castlestuart, is doing a good work for God among a working-class population. Mr. Levi Powell is the evangelist. He tells out the old, old story with power and pathos. There have been recently a number of decided conversions. Mr. J. Thacker conducts a large and flourishing Bible-class.

LIVERPOOL.—The Gospel Hall, Boaler-street, in this city, has for the past four weeks been a scene of revival such as we have not seen before since the erection of the hall fourteen years ago. Mr. Wharton, who has laboured so long in connection with the freed slaves, has conducted the services. Mr Nightingale sang the Gospel. The Christians have been stirred up to more earnest work for God, backsliders have been restored, and many homes are happier to-day. Services were held for the young people with gratifying results. A service at the Midnight Mission Home resulted in a number taking their stand for Christ. G. G.

UNIVERSITY NOTES.

OXFORD.

The Bampton Lectures were resumed on Sunday by Dr. Sanday, on the subject of Inspiration.

Rev. J. Hudson Taylor gave the first address of the Term last week at the meeting of the Missionary Union.

Mr. R. Scott Moncrieff, of the Society for the Relief of Persecuted Jews, gave an account of the work of this Society on Monday last in the hall of Christ Church.

The Bishop of Oxford, in his Visitation charge last week, dealt very effectively and helpfully with the question of recent Old Testament criticism, especially in relation to our Lord.

The annual sermon for the Christ Church Mission to East London was preached on Sunday last in the Cathedral by Rev. H. L. Paget, vicar of St. Pancras, and a meeting was also held in aid of the mission. The annual report shows a well-organised centre of various activities for the poor of Poplar, but the work is carried on on distinctly High Church lines.

CAMBRIDGE.

Rev. Dr. Kirkpatrick, of Trinity College, has been appointed to the office of Lady Margaret Preacher for the ensuing academical year.

The University sermon was preached on Sunday, April 30, by Archdeacon Howell. It was delivered with characteristic vigour, both of thought, feeling, and language.

On Tuesday evening last a meeting was held in the Alexandra Hall to hear speeches on the opium traffic. In the absence, through indisposition, of Rev. H. C. G. Moule, Mr. A. J. Tillyard presided, and was supported by Miss Soonderbai Powar (Hindoo Women's delegate) and Mr. F. Marcus Wood (of the China Inland Mission). Terrible word-pictures were painted of the fearful results of this trade, and the abominable condition of the opium dens.

The majority of men were again in residence by April 23, the first Sunday of the May Term—a term during which aggressive Christian effort is somewhat slackened. Still, it is pleasant to record an increase of energy on the part of those who have the success of the daily prayer meeting at heart. Circulars have been sent round to Christian men urging upon them the deep importance to the spiritual life of the University of this too frequently neglected means of grace, and inviting them to be present as often as possible. This is the term for open-air services. Those held at the Barnwell centre for children are full of promise, but fraught with difficulty. Very gratifying is it to see so many men volunteering for this important branch of service.

A QUESTION FOR SMOKERS.

Dear Sir,—As we are in the thick of the great anniversary meetings, I should like respectfully to ask the attention of the clergy, ministers and delegates —during their deliberations—to the question, "Is indulgence in the use of tobacco in its various forms, by members of churches—our young people especially—and the public at large, injurious or not?" I beg to give a few reasons why I think this query should be answered.

The anti-narcotic societies affirm that the effect of this habit is harmful, physically, mentally, morally. They consider the annual expenditure of sixteen millions a waste of money, little short of criminal, when funds for missions, etc., are so much needed. They deplore the fact that multitudes purchase cigars, etc., and smoke them in the streets. The revenue shows that the consumption of this drug is increasing rapidly. Shops for the sale thereof are open in large numbers Sunday and weekday. Their consumers, boys, youths, and adults, throng our streets and public places. With thousands this has become a chief occupation of their lives.

If what I have stated are facts (and much more could be said) I say this question is one that cannot be put aside as trivial, or unworthy the attention of all patriotic and Christian men and women. I especially ask all those who have so nobly protested against the opium traffic in India and China to consider the effects of the indulgence in this narcotic on our own countrymen. In America and some European countries youths and boys are prohibited the purchase and public use of tobacco; the Anti-Narcotic League earnestly ask the aid of all Christians to obtain the same laws in our own country. We are fast becoming a "nation of smokers," and this question is only second to the drink. Surely if we as Christians do not grapple with the evil we shall be in danger of incurring the rebuke of the Great Founder of Christianity. Yours faithfully,

Anti-Narcotic.

THE Y.M.C.A.

A fine new building at West Troy, N.Y., is rapidly approaching completion.

A new association has been started at Gawler, South Australia, being the fourth in the colony.

Dean Lefroy will be one of the principal speakers at the forthcoming British Conference of Y.M.C.A.'s at Sheffield.

The Melbourne Y.M.C.A. has now four members labouring as missionaries in China and Japan, and three in Africa.

Earl Compton presided on Friday at the seventh annual meeting of the Shoreditch Association, 4, Kingsland-road.

The new home of the Sioux City, Ia., Association, is a valuable addition to the list of association properties in the West.

At Sioux Falls, South Dakota, the meetings have grown so much that the regular quarters have been abandoned for a hall which accommodates 500 people.

The Camden-road Association holds its annual breakfast on Sunday morning. The mission band in connection with this branch, at its recent annual meeting, reported good work and cheering results.

Writing from Nazareth under date April 8, Mr. George Holmes, the missionary secretary of the National Council, says:—"I found here Mr. Gollmer (an old member of the Aldersgate-street Association) and also a member of the Norwich Association. It is worthy of note, showing how widespread in its usefulness is the work of the Y.M.C.A., that in nearly every place I have touched, whether village or city, as well as on board ship, I have found traces of our work, and in many cases active Christian workers. This applies to Egypt and Palestine and the whole of the Mediterranean stations."

The Saturday afternoon meetings held at the Aldersgate-street Association, from three to four o'clock throughout the past winter, by Rev. F. B. Meyer, have attracted audiences which have filled the lecture hall. At the earnest request of the young men he has consented to give two further Bible talks as follows:—Saturday, May 6, "The Cleansing of the Heart;" Saturday, May 13th, "The Reception of the Holy Spirit." We feel sure that those who so greatly valued these addresses in the past will avail themselves of this additional opportunity of hearing Mr. Meyer. All young men are heartily invited.

The Cork Association has just held a very successful social gathering to close its winter session. The chair was taken by Col. Wilson, A.A.G., who bore testimony to the Y.M.C.A. as a widespread agency seeking in every way in its power to help and benefit young men, especially those away from home and kindred—which it was able to do by introducing them by letter to the local secretary, and through him to a wide circle of good friends; so that from the very outset a young man or member going to a strange city or town would find himself surrounded by men, who not only welcomed him gladly into their midst, but were often in a position to help him materially in his worldly prospects.

A Fortnight's Walking Tour in Scotland, arranged by the Exeter Hall Y.M.C.A., will start from London on the evening of Friday, June 16, returning on Saturday, July 1. The following among other places will be visited:—Edinburgh, Stirling Castle, The Trossachs, Glen Falloch, Pass of Brander, Oban, Glencoe, Ballachulish, Fort William, Ben Nevis, Glen Spean, Kingussie, Braemar, Balmoral and Abergeldy, Glen Tilt, Blair Athole, Pass of Killiecrankie, Pitlochry, and home viâ Dunkeld, Perth, and Edinburgh. There will be an ascent of Ben Nevis, arrangements being in progress by which the Summit Hotel will be secured for one night. The tickets will be—Members of any Y.M.C.A., £9 5s.; non-members, £9 15s. Communications should be made to the General Secretary, Exeter Hall, W.C. There will be opportunities for evangelistic work at Edinburgh, Kingussie, and, perhaps, other points.

The Railway Mission.

A new hall was opened in connection with the Railway Mission at Leicester lately. The hall, which seats about 300, was built by the Misses Walker, who superintend the Leicester Branch of the Railway Mission. The opening services were addressed by Mr. S. G. Sheppard and others.

The annual conference of Scottish branches of the mission was recently held at Perth. Forty delegates attended and gave very encouraging accounts of the progress of the mission throughout Scotland. Nine new branches have been opened during the past year, and five lapsed branches revived. Lord Kinnaird presided at a public meeting on April 15, which was addressed by several friends of the mission.

Obituary.

DR. W. BURNS THOMSON.

We hear with profound regret that Dr. W. Burns Thomson, one of the leaders in the medical missionary movement, passed away on Monday—the very day on which the annual report of the Medical Missionary Association bearing his signature as chairman of the Executive Committee was issued. As those well know who have heard Dr. Burns Thomson plead the value of the double ministry in mission work at home and abroad, his whole soul was thrown into this service, in which, indeed, in past years he himself had been much blessed. We hope to give shortly a portrait and sketch of Dr. Thomson.

REV. W. MOLYNEUX.

The people of Twineham, Sussex, are mourning the somewhat sudden death of the respected Rector, Rev. W. Molyneux, brother of the late Rev. Capel Molyneux. Although the Rector had been ailing for about two months, he continued to conduct the services in his church until Easter Sunday, but it was with great difficulty. He passed peacefully away on Thursday, 20th ult., at the age of sixty-eight, leaving a widow, one son, and four daughters to mourn his loss. He had held the rectory of Twineham for thirty-four years, during which time the church has been re-seated and the day-school erected. He was a minister of decidedly evangelical views, and never failed to warn his parishioners, in no uncertain tones, against the errors of Ritualism and Romanism. His loss will be greatly felt in the parish, and it is to be sincerely hoped that his successor will be one who will be a faithful minister of the Gospel and loyal to Reformation principles. The funeral took place on Monday week amid many signs of respect, the little church being filled to overflowing, the coffin being covered with wreaths. Mr. Molyneux was, we may note, brother-in-law to Prebendary Webb-Peploe.

DR. A. GUNDERT.

On the morning of the 25th ult. Hermann Gundert, Ph.D., after long sufferings from dropsy, patiently borne, fell peacefully asleep at Calw, in Wurtemburg. Dr. Gundert was a well-known and highly-honoured labourer in the mission field in South India. In 1835 the late Mr. A. N. Groves, seeking fellow-workers, found him and others in Germany and Switzerland. The missionary party landed in Madras in July, 1836. For some years he laboured in association with Mr. Groves; subsequently marrying one of the missionary party, a Swiss lady, Julie Dubois, who died some eight years ago. Subsequently Dr. Gundert joined the mission of the Basle Evangelical Society, on the West Coast of India, labouring at Tellicherry and at Cannanore, and neighbouring out-stations. He was a man of unusual mental power and acquirements, and of singular humbleness of mind. Though obliged by failing health to return home to Germany a good many years ago, he was ever full of missionary zeal, and laboured in literary work, and in connection with the Evangelical Missionary Press and Book Depot at Calw, till within the last three years. Latterly he was quite laid aside, and for more than a year bedridden. J. G. Halliday.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR NOTES.

The Third National Convention of the Young People's Societies of Christian Endeavour is to take place next month, June 6 and 7, at Bradford.

As the outcome of special mission services, a Christian Endeavour Society has been formed in the Congregational Church, Blandford. At the first meeting upwards of forty joined as active members and twenty as associates.

The C.E. Societies of Berkhamstead, Dunstable, Hemel Hempstead, Houghton, Luton, Maulden, Redbourne, and Stopsley have formed themselves into a district union, to be called "The Three Counties Christian Endeavour Union."

Dr. F. E. Clarke, writing from Jaffa, says:—The movement is growing everywhere, and that on this long journey which I am making, I have found strong and vigorous societies of Christian Endeavour not only in Australia, but in Japan, China, and India, and expect to find many more in Turkey.

A conference of the Birmingham and District Christian Endeavour Union lately held at Steelhouse-lane Schools, was attended by 300 Endeavourers, under the presidency of Rev. J. H. Knight. The secretary reported that there were nearly twenty societies in the city and suburbs, with a membership of about 1000.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we purpose giving a portrait and sketch of Rev. J. E. MARTIN, Baptist Pastor, Erith.

We are being entreated by London workers among the poor to help them, as in former years, in sending their protégés for a day's outing in the country. We shall gladly become the almoners of our readers in this matter, so far as their generous responses to this appeal may enable us.

In common with all the loyal subjects of our Queen and constitution, we rejoice at the projected marriage between the Duke of York and Princess Victoria May of Teck. We have had repeated occasion to note the kindly personal interest that the fair young Princess has shown in many good works; we pray that she and her husband-elect may have grace to adorn the high position they will probably have one day to fill. They may be trusted, we hope, to maintain the high traditions of Court life which have been established during the present reign.

Postcards, as a means of communicating information as to Christian work, and facts likely to stimulate others, are by no means utilised to the extent they might be. They have the undoubted advantage of enforcing brevity. Many of our readers, far and near, must know of points of interest in the work of the churches or missions, the Y.M.C.A., the Y.W.C.A., the Christian Endeavour, P.S.A. movements and kindred agencies, also of evangelistic and temperance efforts, or even of the falling asleep of some earnest Christian. We should be thankful if more will help us in such information by sending the facts tersely stated.

By way of clearness let us put it thus:—Wherever and whenever you know of "something attempted, something done" in the cause of Christ send a postcard to the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C. We do not want mere presentations, list of speakers at some meeting, or praise of man, but facts as to real work done in the Master's name. Such notes are always welcome, and for them a postcard usually suffices.

Here is a bright little testimony from a young missionary friend:—

I find the work among the women in the hospital and in the homes very encouraging; those who become Christians do all in their power (with few exceptions) to bring their relatives and friends to Christ, whom they have learned to love and serve themselves. I often think the Chinese Christians are far better and more faithful witnesses for the Master than we in Christian England are as a rule. They seem to look upon themselves in a great measure as their brother's keeper.

Doubtless this is a true testimony. How humiliating to us at home!

We gave this young sister a concertina when she went out under the L.M.S. She says:—

Your concertina too, is a blessing. I use it constantly, and a disappointed look comes into some faces when I have not got it with me. I often think more good is done by means of that and the hymn explained beforehand than all the talking; "It opens our hearts," they often say to me.

We quote this suggestively. Perhaps others would like to think that an instrument they had given was so appreciated. A missionary soon going to North Africa plays the violin, but has only an inferior instrument. We shall be happy to be the medium of conveying a good one to her from any of our readers.

The Chairman of the Surrey Congregational Union said in his presidential address:—

Ministers have reason to fear the presence among their members of carnal Christians, who are the greatest hindrance to spiritual teaching, because they cannot understand it; to honest, high-toned moral teaching, because they dislike it; and to earnest, self-denying effort, because they will not make it.

These words go to the root of a good deal of the evil in churches; it lies in the hearts of the members. One unspiritual member is a stone of stumbling, over which many stumble and fall—an iceberg chilling every warm emotion, a wall of rock hindering progress. The vis inertiæ of one man, especially if his wealth or social position has got him into office, can sometimes keep the whole church standing still.

In the same address the chairman said that the true idea of the Church, as a company of spiritual persons drawn together by the love of Christ for spiritual ends and purposes, needed reviving among Independents; and that the ancient reproach of their chapels being "preaching conventicles" was an honour which should be jealously guarded by a continuance of faithful and earnest preaching of the Gospel. "Only by preaching can a worshipping congregation retain the spirit of worship." "The true guardian of the preaching of the Gospel is that believing spirit which the Gospel created." "Without such preaching you will get, if you get a congregation at all, a crowd of ignorant devotees, or a number of sightseers who turn the house of God into a place of entertainment."

It is lamentable that year after year these unhappy strikes continue to wreak injury upon workers and employers, and upon thousands of unhappy persons who are dependent upon the bread-winner. Is it not time that something were done in the way of legislating for the establishment of a national board of conciliation? The unfortunate dispute at Hull is now costing the authorities of the town twelve hundred pounds per week; when to that sum is added the immense loss in wages, some idea may be formed of the amount of suffering which is likely to fall upon others than those directly concerned in the movement.

The Westminster Gazette gave some excellent advice in one short sentence to the men in London who are being urged to strike in defence of their fellow workmen in Hull:—

The best strike in London would be to strike drink, and send all the drink money to buy food in Hull.

Social and commercial struggles, as well as international conflicts, generally issue in consequences which none could foresee; and if strikes for wages were to be one means of enforcing temperance, the men using their drink-money as a war tax, we should witness some surprising results. A spell of temperance for a temporary object would help temperance as a permanent habit. Victory gained in one trade conflict by a few weeks of self-control would open men's eyes to the immense power they would wield by being always their own masters. A temperate democracy would carry everything before it, and it would be good ground for the Gospel seed.

The Social Purity campaign is just entering upon a new phase. It has been discovered, and can be proved, that the authorities in India have trifled with the power of Parliament, and have carried on a system of regulation after Parliament had decreed its abolition. The registration of fallen women, their compulsory examination, their practical imprisonment, and all the rest of the horrors with which the working of the infamous C. D. Acts made us familiar in England, are in full operation in a country which we ought to strain every nerve to Christianise. The revelation will presently be made as public as possible. The whole thing has been tracked by two American Christian women, Mrs. Andrew and Dr. Kate Bushnell, whose portraits we shall give in an early number of this journal, together with a sketch of their life before taking up this difficult work.

We quite expect that the exposure will be met with a good deal of quibbling on the part of the officials, and with a good deal of bitter resentment on the part of a section of the secular press, and then with a lame attempt to saddle the responsibility upon the Government underlings. As to the first, we were familiar with it through all the painful contention against the C.D. Acts; lies were stoutly told and cleverly supported, but in vain. As to the second, it did no good man or woman any harm, then; it will do none now, neither will it prevent the exposure from producing an immense moral uprising.

As to the third, there must be a determined and persistent effort to put the responsibility upon the shoulders of the right men, however high in office they may be. If the highest in authority are the real offenders, let them be made to know that the will of the nation, as expressed through Parliament, is not to be trampled under foot. For disobedience to the will of one man, the nearest to the throne have suffered death; let there be a worse penalty than that for him or those who have dared to break the law both of God and man. There are worse punishments than cutting off the head.

Mr. Booth-Tucker, secretary for the foreign missions of the Salvation Army, writes that a recent cablegram brings intelligence of 9700 souls having sought salvation in one week, this being the culmination of a great awakening during the past month, not confined to any one nationality, district, or caste, but including at least six different races, separated by hundreds of miles. Whether this report should prove strictly accurate or otherwise, we should never be surprised to hear of awakenings on a great scale, as the result of missions which seek the lost until they find them. However we may differ from the S.A. in its constitution, and in many of its methods, it has taken the right line in some of the most important essentials of evangelisation. Its ideal is that every member becomes a total abstainer, and an active worker for Christ; it trains them at home for foreign work; it sends them to all parts of the world; it treats the coloured races as of one blood with themselves; it uses native converts, and trusts them equally with themselves to preach and teach the gospel of Christ.

The writings of men like the late revered John Angell James have well-nigh faded from the memory of most readers, and are supplanted by a modernised type of thought and expression of an entirely different order. Without disparaging what is really good in present-day teaching, we may safely affirm that the Christian Church would gain by a recall of the solid, Scriptural, and well-defined statements of truth contained in the works of men like the renowned Birmingham pastor and teacher. The Evangelicalism of their day was, to say the least, far more clear and pronounced in its character than much which passes for Gospel now. Spiritual minds find it a relief to turn from much that is more modern to what has become to many a forgotten literature, and to most of the younger members of the Church of Christ is even unknown.

The quotations from Mr. James's article on "The New Theology," given in our last issue, demand more than a passing glance. They call for earnest and prayerful reflection. That the condition of things he foresaw and forewarned us of, has actually come to pass, none can deny who are conversant with things as they are. Many, we fear, would rather rejoice in the change which has taken place, and regard the forecast given as too pessimistic. The sneers at orthodoxy, which he deplored, are increasingly prevalent, while the absence of positive belief and assertion as to doctrinal truth is even more manifest than the actual promulgation of error. The crisis foreseen has come, and we are in the vortex it has occasioned.

What is needed is precisely what Mr. James so strongly desiderated, "a spirit of earnestness and importunate supplication." We do not want a return to formulated creeds or systems of theology, but to an eager search of the Scriptures as the authoritative, because divine, standard of belief and practice. The dictum of man has too much sway in our midst, "What saith the Scriptures?" has far too little. God has spoken, and the voice from heaven is by no means "an uncertain sound." It does not wait for the tongue of the learned among men to give it interpretation, or for the decrees of any Council or Church to unravel its true meaning. All that is required is an eye to see, an ear to hear, a heart to receive what the Spirit says to the Churches. He still speaks through the Word; would that there were a wider and more eager desire on the part of all believers to hear and obey his voice!

Dear Dorothy.—Last summer in our Gospel tent on the corner of Desplaines and Harrison streets, far on the west side, I met a little fellow twelve years old, who had been "thinking about being a Christian." I explained the way very simply. In a sincere, though boyish fashion, he yielded up his young life to the Saviour.

I was surprised to find he lived near my Institute home. How ever did he wander so far to a Gospel meeting! I called soon upon my little neighbour to invite him to go with me to another tent far on the North side. He introduced to me a brother two years older, a dear boy, who won my heart quite as much as the other, and with my new-found little brothers I went to Humboldt Park tent. On the way little Johnny whispered to me, "I thought if Jimmy went with us, perhaps he might get saved too."

And, sure enough, Jimmy was "saved" that night. He had once lived away from home in some family where he had been Bible-taught, and with his younger brother's example to encourage him, it was easy to persuade his more mature mind to make the same decision.

But I found the story had only just begun. When I went again to the house to see the mother, and invite them all to go to the tent on Market-street, an older brother still, seventeen years old, wanted to go with us, and there gave himself to the Lord. How glad I was when that trio kneeled in their home and called on God their Father. Compare any other joy to that, it dwindles.

All this time I was getting deeply interested in the mother. One seldom sees a sadder soul.

Though deeply interested in the conversion of her boys, she was powerless herself, so she told me, to find again the hand of God, once tightly held—but scorned for so many years, that she doubted not the Spirit had forsaken her. The father of her three boys had been an earnest Christian, made so through her influence and prayers. How sweet that I had helped to answer his dying prayer for his children! "They will all enter in," she would say, despairingly, "and I be left out at last." I used to be a Christian worker like you in our Canada home. We used to have house meetings like yours in the farmhouses, and I would pray and sing or lead the meetings—so happy. I've led many to the Saviour, only to be lost myself at last! But I've forgotten all that now," she would say, hastily. Surely her present life evidenced it; for she had fallen so far as to marry a drinking man, who made her life most miserable. It was unspeakably difficult to help her hardened heart, for she never found time in her overcrowded life to sit down calmly and consider. In fact, she seemed never to dare to think, haunted, as she was, by her past.

She told me this in snatches as she stood at the washboard or flew about getting supper. I was tempted to despair for her; yet something always said, Hold on to that soul; wait, it is yours if you "endure to the end."

When you come here to me, Dorothy, as I hope (why else do I write all this than to allure you?), you will learn, if God will, what it is to be "burdened for another's soul,"—it was once a meaningless phrase to me—heart-sick for their sin and sorrow.

One day, in direct answer to prayer, God cleared the way for a satisfactory talk. "I'll be alone this evening; come in and talk with me." Do you think any invitation to our delightsome studio oyster parties ever pleased me more?

The time I would have spent in adorning my body for the oyster party, I gave to preparing my soul for this "only talk."

When we sat down by the dim lamp, the Spirit told me to win from her first the story of her wandering. Why did you leave God? Was it his fault? The very sight of her neglected Bible moved her, and before we could go on, she had to tell me the history of it. Then we read Jer. ii. 5-13, "What iniquity have your fathers found in Me? . . . They have forsaken Me." It couldn't have been his fault, for He said: "I will never leave thee nor forsake thee."

And she acknowledged sadly, "No, it was never his fault. I had a sorrow, and I neglected little by little my Bible and to go to Him for comfort, until I lost hold of the divine life, and then I had nothing to keep me from sin, and sin blocked up the way, so I couldn't get back." How glad I was that the dear old Book had full provision in it for just such prodigals as she, who had spent all in a far country, and begun to be in want.

She trembled when we read Solomon's experience in Kings xi. 9-11, and God's punishment for a backsliding people in Amos iv. 11-12.

The Spirit had done his silent work. She was ready to return.

And now, will He receive you? One after another, as the stars come out in the sky, the Spirit illuminated in my mind words that were for her: David's cry after two years of unconfessed sin, "Restore unto me the joy of thy salvation," and its answer in Ps. lxvi. 10-20; and the traitor Peter's loving recognition by our Lord, "Go tell my disciples and Peter."

How He loves you! Is it any wonder that He wants his child back again?

Did you ask many questions when your two runaway boys came back last winter all ragged and miserable? Did they have to plead long before you fell to hugging them? Isa. liii. 5-6, Jer. xxxi. 3.

But oh, the North Star, the guiding star for her, after all, was this beautiful passage, Jer. xxix. 11-13. Since then it is written in letters of fire on my heart of hearts, to be given to every straying child.

"For I know the thoughts that I think towards you, saith the Lord, thoughts of peace and not of evil. . . . Then shall ye call upon Me, and ye shall go and pray unto Me, and I will hearken."

She knelt down. The old neglected attitude brought a flood of memories. The frozen fountain of tears was unlocked. Her hand grasped again the outstretched pierced hand of Christ.

A heart-broken burning prayer rose up to Him. The seeking Saviour met the seeking sinner. She had sought with all her heart and found Him!

I doubt not there was "joy in the presence of the angels of God," but there was joy as great, I know, in one heart on earth—your little Edith's.

GROVE MISSION, SOUTHWARK.

Revs. Geo. Sanderson, of Clapham, and Jabez Parkyn, of Highbury, preached the anniversary sermons on Sunday. The celebration was continued on Monday with a tea—the largest ever held at the Grove—and a public meeting, presided over by Mr. Geo. Lidgett, L.C.C. Rev. John Fletcher, the pastor, said that in 1888 the membership was only eighty-seven, now it was 200, and the congregations were crowded, while the accommodation for the Sunday scholars had become totally inadequate.

Mr. Weston, the hon. superintendent, spoke of the "sisterhood" work, and remarked that its latest development was a maternity society; and now they were to add a bath and hospital chair for the purpose of bringing the invalid poor to the services. Where the money came from for this social work puzzled people, Mr. Weston observed, but the Lord sent it somehow. Addresses were delivered by the chairman, Revs. Grainger Hargreaves and W. W. Grigg.

HEED WELL YOUR CHILD; many a pearl is still hidden in its oyster.

"I AM IN TROUBLE ABOUT A GIRL IN MY CLASS," said a teacher to me. "She wants to lead a Christian life, and on telling this to her mother, she was only laughed at." Oh! I wonder if there are many mothers like this, who are keeping their little sons and daughters out of the kingdom of heaven!

STEPNEY CRECHE.—A fire broke out on Saturday evening in the infirmary of Mrs. Hilton's Crèche, but it was speedily extinguished by the energetic help of Dr. Barnardo's drill sergeant and a band of trained boys, so that little damage was done. Mrs. Hilton is wonderfully recovered, but is still confined to the house.

STRANGERS' REST, RATCLIFF.—At the monthly meeting for workers last Friday, Pastor Fuller Gooch gave a helpful address, on "Links to the Throne of Grace; or Helping by Prayer." Mrs. Hadland gave a short account of the work at Zanzibar Rest. Mr. Isaacs told how God had interposed to overthrow recent opposition in the open-air work, and appealed for more workers.

WOMEN'S FOREIGN MISSIONARY UNION.—In connection with this Union a series of conference meetings are to be held in Princes Hall, Ealing, on the afternoons of May 15, 17, 19, 24, 26, 29, and 31, at 3.15 p.m. The speakers will include Miss Angus, Miss A. G. Broomhall, Mrs. Constantine, Miss Etches, Miss Lucy E. Guinness, Miss Kimmins, Miss Mary L. G. Petrie, B.A., Mrs. Vanes, Mrs. Greaves, Miss Bartlett, and others.

Missionary Advance.

Dr. A. J. Gordon, of Boston, writing in The Missionary Review of the World, has said, "without proposing anything either revolutionary or radical," that he believes "the time has come for decentralisation in missionary operations."

The thought had been forced upon him through reading an able article in which the writer says: "The churches of Great Britain have never as yet made foreign missions a part of their work. The great missionary societies in England are all outside the churches, which, as churches, have nothing to do with their maintenance nor management. All that the churches do is to manifest a benevolent neutrality. Missions are not made the work of the churches; they are a paragon—we had almost said a by-play or a May-holiday—instead of being the Church of Christ's first work, as it was her Lord's final commission—a work demanding the highest talent and most devoted service."

A writer in North Africa says: "We hear a great deal in certain quarters about missionary enthusiasm, but we are inclined to think it mostly exists upon paper. Were there as much real concern for the perishing multitudes on the part of the churches at home as we are repeatedly asked to believe, we should surely not hear so much of trial arising from scanty supplies from those already on the field; nor would the supply of candidates, especially of men, be so miserably inadequate to the need."

Dr. Gordon says: "The Metropolitan Tabernacle is a kind of organised Spurgeon; Northfield is a sort of incarnated Moody. These types of men and method should be transplanted bodily to the missionary field, instead of being minted and restamped with the uniform signature of a missionary board. There are churches which are hot and churches which are cold. Pour their missionary spirit into a common receptacle, and lukewarm is the mean temperature. In some way the most fervent, most evangelical, most spiritual churches ought to make their influence felt directly on the foreign field through agents who shall properly represent them."

One of our correspondents, "who has had constant communications with missionaries for over fifty years, and who has repeatedly heard their bitter wail over the lack of helpers," expresses thankfulness for the suggestion, in the article "The Greatest Enterprise" in our issue of April 27, that every church should maintain one missionary or more. But our friend objects to the burden of a monthly letter being laid upon such a missionary, "because the only time they have for writing is taken from sleep." But missionaries ought not to work at such high pressure, and the monthly letters, warm from their hearts to the hearts of their personal friends at home, would lead to the multiplication of the missionaries abroad.

Our correspondent continues: "Let the congregation supporting a missionary agree with the secretaries of the society they are connected with to have the letter sent on for their perusal." Rather, we should say, let the congregation send the letter to the society; or, better still, the letter can be written in duplicate or triplicate with carbon paper, and a copy sent both to the church and the society. But the church, standing in loco parentis, has the first claim.

Another correspondent truly says that many a church has such an attenuated Gospel that it would not be qualified to send out a missionary. But that circle of coldness, and hardness, and error, may be broken in upon from either of two opposite points. Such a church may be awakened, stimulated, and transfigured by the true Gospel being pressed upon it, and so become a missionary church; or the duty and privilege of becoming a missionary church, and its indebtedness to preach the Gospel to the world, may be so made to grip its conscience, that it will feel the necessity of an instrument equal to the work. An engineer will not attempt to bore a tunnel with a leaden drill; and a church which has to drive a hole through the dense rock-wall of heathenism will realise the necessity of a Gospel as penetrative as diamond.

Still another friend has written thus:—

From my experience as a missionary, as a deputation, and now as a pastor, I am fully convinced that the best way to carry out our Lord's command, "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature," is for each church to have its own missionary or missionaries, who are superintended by the societies now in existence.

When I was a missionary, I was partially supported by a church; the result was, I was in direct communication with the friends at home, who daily prayed for me, and did all they could to supply my temporal needs. They sympathised with me in my difficulties and trials, and they rejoiced with me in the time of prosperity. In this way there is a living link between a living church and a living missionary.

I am also fully persuaded that it is only as the church at home moves forward in the spiritual life that the Kingdom of Christ is extended abroad. I once heard Mr. Hudson Taylor illustrate this by saying that you can only move your hand two yards in advance by moving your body. What we want is for the church at home to realise that the missionary belongs to it as much as the hand does to the body, and that it is our duty to do all in our power as churches and individuals to support our "hands" abroad by our means and prayers.

As a deputation I have found great difficulty in stirring up sufficient interest in the mission field, to get the churches to subscribe to any large extent to the funds of a society; but where a church supports its own missionary, and that missionary is constantly in communication with it, the result is, not only that his temporal needs are supplied, but he is continually remembered at the Throne of Grace. So, when the church (or body) is quickened at home, the missionary (or hand) is quickened abroad. May the Great Head of the Church so quicken the churches at home that abundance of spiritual life and funds may flood the regions beyond. Yours very sincerely,

A Pastor.

We feel that there is no more important subject before the Church of Christ than how to fulfil the Lord's behest to preach the Gospel to all nations. But more vital than all methods is the condition of soul essential to the work—to live by the faith of the Son of God; to be constrained by the love of Christ.

CHRISTIAN LIFEBOAT CREW.—At the last muster, held at the Welcome Home, Miss Child announced a message from the Queen of Sweden and Norway to assure her that she continues to take a deep interest in her Home and work in Ratcliff-highway and other places. The text for the month, "Jesus Christ, and Him crucified," formed the keynote of the meeting. Extracts from encouraging letters from different parts of the world were read.

MR. DAVID BARON is preaching at the new Central Hall, Mildmay Mission to the Jews, Philpot-street, Commercial-road, E., every Saturday at 3 p.m., Sunday at 6.30 p.m., and Wednesday at 7 p.m. On Sunday evening the Gospel service is in English for Jews and Christians, but on Saturdays and Wednesdays it is in German. At all these meetings Christian friends interested in the work of making Christ known to the Jews would be welcomed; especially ladies who could help in the singing.

GIRLS' LETTER GUILD.—The annual gathering of the 2000 factory girls, who are members of the Birmingham centre of this Guild, was held in the Town Hall on Saturday last. About 1000 of the girls had tea together, and afterwards they were addressed by Bishop Selwyn and the Mayor of Birmingham. The Guild numbers about 5000 members, but its work is hampered by a lack of lady correspondents. The hon. sec., 280, Hagley-road, Birmingham, will be glad to send all information and rules to any lady willing to take up the work of writing to a girl.

LIP-LESSONS FROM THE MASTER.

By Rev. WALTER MATHAMS, Birmingham.

The art of Divine elocution and eloquence can only be learnt under the teaching of our Lord Jesus Christ. When He spake of the things of God, "all men bare Him witness, and wondered at the gracious words which proceeded out of his mouth." He was the best of all speakers, and his words were always upon the wheels of some clear and holy purpose, and went forth to work out the will of God. If a man, therefore, would speak well and wisely, let him learn of Christ. In his learning he will find how to speak the right thing at the right time and in the right manner in all the circumstances of his life. The marvellous aptness and timeliness of the Master he will reproduce, if he sets about his task with rigorous self-discipline and faithful imitation of his Veacher.

One of the leading elocutionists of the day always says to his pupils, "Carefully watch the movement of my lips; then move your own exactly as I do mine, and keep yourself in constant practice." He told us one day that the late Dean Stanley used to spend hours in mastering the lip-lessons which he taught him, and at last found the secret of speaking with power. But to my mind the lip-lessons of Jesus Christ will be infinitely more serviceable if we put ourselves under his training. We shall know how to speak a word in season to him that is weary, to him that is wicked, and to him who is marching on to victory in the Kingdom of God.

The first lip-lesson of our Lord you will find in Matthew v. Very simple it is, yet sublimely profound—"And He opened his mouth and taught them, saying—Blessed." That is the initial and final word to be practised and mastered in the art of Divine elocution. If you can utter that with the tone of Christ, the world will stop to listen to you, and many a heart will cry:

"Say it over again to me,
Wonderful word of love."

Ah, we have sore need to learn of Christ in this matter. Our lips are too mobile in the utterance of censorious judgment. Nothing is easier to us than to be eloquent in criticism. We see a thing which does not please us, in the action, life, and speech of others, and we express ourselves in words which burn—but not with love. There are times when righteous indignation should come forth from our lips, as it did from Christ in the presence of hypocrisy and sin; but we are so far behind Him in whiteness of soul, and clearness of vision, that it is better in most cases to put our hand upon our mouth, or change our satire into supplication. If we do not, we may fall into the condemnation of "accusers of the brethren." Kind words not only "never die," but they have power to bring hope into life, and to nerve the battling soul into another battle, and a better. The way of love was the way of Christ, and it must be ours.

Watch his lips when a poor wrecked heart is in the dust before Him—"Neither do I condemn thee." Watch his lips, when the disciples fall below the standard of right—"Ye know not what spirit ye are of." Watch his lips when the children crowded round him—"He took them up in his arms and blessed them." Watch his lips when the lips of Judas scorched his cheek—"Betrayest thou the Son of Man with a kiss?" Watch his lips when the thorn-crown is on his brow, and the jagged nails are passing through his quivering flesh—"Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do." Watch his lips in the last farewell on Olivet—"He lifted up his hands and blessed them." Blessing, and always blessing, was the habit of his life. O gentle Lord, and lover of men, teach us thy secret. Give us thy spirit of benediction. Train us in this art divine, until we can repeat the lessons of thy lips, "in living echoes of thy tone."

HOUSE OF REST, ST. JOHN'S WOOD.—Rev. J. B. Figgis, of Brighton, addressed the usual monthly gathering last Friday afternoon. Taking 2 Thess. iii. 16 as his text, he showed that the peace of God is a gift to be enjoyed by every Christian—not only peace of conscience and heart, but peace under all circumstances in every condition of life. He impressed on his hearers that, though a free gift, it could only be enjoyed by those who are true of heart, and those who never tamper with sin. In the evening Mr. H. E. Millar, of Hampstead, gave an address on sanctification, which led up to definite consecration on the part of many present, and praise for blessing received.

STUDENT VOLUNTEER MOVEMENT.

BY ROBERT P. WILDER.

In my last report reference was made to work among British and Scandinavian Universities. On my return to England I found the Student Volunteer Missionary Union so well organised that my services were no longer required. It was a joy to feel free to leave Europe for my life-work in India.

Of the addresses given prior to sailing I might mention one in Liverpool to a large and representative audience, and one in the Metropolitan Tabernacle in London. I believe that as a result of these and other addresses much prayer has been offered up for the work done among Western students, and for the work to which I was going in the institutions of the East. Among the many friends who came to see us off on the last day were Dr. and Mrs. A. T. Pierson, Mr. and Mrs. MacInnes, Mr. and Mrs. Broomhall, and Miss Geraldine Guinness. The members of the executive of the S.V.M.U. were present, with the exception of one who was in Glasgow. The two representatives from Cambridge said that several had planned to accompany them to London. As Captain Lugard was announced to speak on Uganda that day, they had remained in Cambridge, and sent their messages of farewell instead of bringing them in person.

We were soon on board. Friends crowded into the cabin for prayer. The last words were spoken, and as the Peshawur slowly moved away, we heard,

"God be with you till we meet again."

We were told that our ship was the one that had carried Alexander Mackay from his homeland, and that had taken many other workers to their distant fields of labour.

Before the voyage was completed there were eighteen in our daily Bible class. Most of our time was spent upon the three first chapters of the Acts of the Apostles and the Pentecostal gift. I was asked to take the service of Sunday night, Dec. 11. The burning sun had dropped into the Red Sea, and in the cool evening air many of the first and second saloon passengers ventured out to the service which was held upon the hurricane deck. Some were enemies of Christ, whose lives and language could not help the heathen. Others were passive Christians, who had lived, and were expecting to live, negative lives in India. One of these had said to me, "I do not believe in aggressive Christianity." Some of those before me had been Christians at home, but the further they journeyed from praying friends the further they drifted from God. The message given them is found in Gal. vi. 7, 8. I was saddened by the thought that all in that audience, who refused to bow to the Spirit, would not only be corrupt, but would prove to be centres of corruption among the heathen, to whom they should bring eternal life.

There were many opportunities for personal work. I had repeated conversations with a ship's servant, who had at one time been a Y.M.C.A. secretary, and had purposed becoming a foreign missionary, but, falling into sin, he ran off to sea. Every effort to bring him home, every appeal to his past joy and present misery, seemed fruitless. On leaving the Peshawur I gave him our Bombay address. The first Sabbath on shore he called, and as we knelt in prayer he came home. The following Sabbath he brought with him three quartermasters from our ship, two of whom found Christ that week in the Salvation Army meetings. We five had a praise-meeting in the Mission House at Byculla, which shall never be forgotten. More than three months have passed, and that ship's servant writes to me that he feels again led of the Spirit to become a foreign missionary.

In Bombay I addressed the American Mission High School and the Y.M.C.A. I was invited to speak to the Decennial Conference upon the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavour, and to take charge of the Sabbath morning consecration service. At this and the other morning meetings there was, on the part of the conference delegates, an earnest spirit of prayer and a desire for more of the Holy Spirit's power for service. There were between thirty and forty student volunteers present at the Decennial Conference. I had the pleasure of addressing them. They formed an organisation, with Rev. John N. Forman as secretary, through whom they will from time to time speak to their fellow-volunteers at home.

The needs of Bombay moved me deeply. I am told that there is no missionary giving his entire time to work among the thousands of English speaking natives. This is said to be the second largest city in the British Empire, having 850,000 inhabitants. It is called the most important manufacturing centre in all the East, and many years in advance of any other place in India in business importance. I feel strongly drawn to the students of this city.

When we left Kolapore in 1875, we were drawn one hundred and fifty miles by bullocks before we reached the railroad. In returning, I went the whole distance by rail. The bungalow, built by my father, the old well, and the rocks upon which I played as a boy, brought back a flood of memories. Shortly after our arrival, the native church gave us a meeting of welcome. I was much touched by the earnest words of the pastor, and by the real joy of the people on hearing me say a few words in Marathi. During this visit to the city of my birth, I spoke twice to the Christians upon the Holy Spirit, addressed the young men of the Mission High School, spoke to the members of the Y.M.C.A., and said a few words in Marathi to the children of the Vernacular Girls' Schools, which are in charge of my mother and sister. The many interviews with those who knew my father and knew me as a child, made it difficult to leave Kolapore. They begged me to remain and work among them.

On January 31 we visited Sangli, and were much interested in the industrial work under Mr. Jolly's charge. It was a privilege to speak to the bright boys in Miss Sherman's school, and to look into the difficulties and encouragements of the life at their station. During an enforced stop of six hours at Bangalore, we visited the English Wesleyan Mission, and called upon Rev. T. E. Slater, of the London Missionary Society. Mr. Slater expressed a wish that I had brought with me a hundred workers to labour among the educated men of India, so needy and important does he regard the field. I received a cordial invitation to hold meetings during the rains in Bangalore and Mysore.

In Madras we were entertained at the Church of Scotland Zenana Mission House. Mrs. Longhurst's hospitality will never be forgotten. At the large gatherings in her drawing-room Mrs. Wilder and I were introduced to most of the Christian workers in that city. My first address was delivered in the Memorial Hall at the annual meeting of the Y.M.C.A. A large audience had assembled to hear Rev. F. E. Clark and myself. On two other occasions I addressed the Y.M.C.A. Mr. M'Conaughy has been greatly used of God in building up such a vigorous Association amid many difficulties. I also addressed the Y.W.C.A. and the students of Doveton College.

On February 8 I lectured to a large number of students in the Madras Christian College, at the invitation of Rev. Dr. Miller, who took the chair. The audience were most attentive while I urged upon them the privilege of believing in Christ, and the duty of immediate confession at any cost. The chairman expressed his regret that I was unable to remain and follow up the lecture by personal work. He and the professors wish me to return. It is evident that there is a great field for a college evangelist in Madras. During the week spent in this city, I spoke nine times.

The poor railway connection necessitated a delay of twelve hours in Bellary. On alighting from the train we proceeded at once to the London Mission House, where Mr. Lewis gave us a cordial welcome. During the afternoon I addressed the English-speaking students in the F.A. College. In the evening we had a delightful conference with the missionaries upon the Pentecostal gift. The long railway journey gave us opportunities of personal conversations. When we could get a Brahmin alone with us in our compartment, he was freer in stating his difficulties and franker in his admissions. Pray that the seed thus sown may bring forth fruit. The Holy Spirit can work as quickly in a Brahmin's heart as in the heart of a Philippian gaoler. February 12 was spent in Miraj. Dr. and Mrs. Wanless have their hands full of work in this important city.

On returning to Kolapore, I found that a deep interest had been aroused by Mr. Varley's meetings. Every afternoon at 5.30 I met educated natives in the Bazaar Church built by my father. That I might not be interrupted, I asked the audience to listen to me one afternoon, and on the following afternoon I should listen to their questions. They felt the fairness of the proposal, and as a result during none of my lectures was there any attempt to ask questions, make remarks, or raise a disturbance. Their attention was almost equal to that of an American audience. Several of the English residents attended the lectures; among them might be mentioned Mr. Candy, Principal of the Raja Ram (Government) College, Dr. Sinclair, Durbar Surgeon, and Miss Little, who is in charge of the Palace Schools. The subjects of my lectures were: "Students and Christianity," "Flesh against Spirit," "The God of the Bible," "The Claims of Christ."

On the afternoons devoted to answering inquiries, Mr. Irwin and I assisted each other. Gladly was I a listener to answers given so clearly and fairly by Mr. Irwin. To show what thoughts are prominent in the minds of educated natives, I will give some questions asked me: "There are many religions in this world. We see that the followers of religions never try to spread their religions, except those of Christianity. Why do these Christians try to spread their religion with their own expense and at the cost of their own lives?" "Would Christianity be beneficial to India? If it would be, how?" "Does Christianity say that all religions except itself are false?" "What is the will of God? Is it fulfilled by the Christians?" "Do you know all the principles of Hinduism?" "What proofs can you put before us that Jesus Christ was the Son of God?" "Is the Holy Bible a divine work or a human one?" "If God is merciful, how did He allow us to kill animals?"

In writing of these services and their effect, I quote from the March number of Indian Notes:—

"The attendance is quite good, the attention marked, and the inquiry meetings (that is to say, for answering questions) are full and promising. We are glad to notice that the inquiries are beginning to gather round the atonement, the Divinity of Christ, and the spiritual life in Him. Many are showing much interest, an investigating spirit, and an attitude of sincerity that we hope will ripen into true knowledge of Christ."

Every morning at eight I spoke to the native Christians upon the deepening of the spiritual life and more aggressive work for Christ. There is not room, in this a report, even to outline the many personal interviews with Christians and Hindoos. Before our departure we invited the members of the native church to tea. Here I had another opportunity to urge upon them witness-bearing for Christ in this needy city and in the outlying villages.

On our way to the Hills, at the foot of the mountain I gave a short Marathi address in the moonlight, and three times since our arrival here I have preached in the village of old Mahableshwar. This is regarded as a very sacred spot, because it is situated near the source of five rivers; but its holiness has had no practical effect upon the villagers, who are notoriously wicked. An absence of eighteen years from India has made me rusty in Marathi, yet it is a comfort to be understood by the people, even though genders are not always right and the vocabulary is limited. Oh, for more of God's power! That alone can break in pieces these flinty hearts and drive to the winds their flimsy excuses. The crash is coming. Before long there will be a great ingathering in this Presidency, I fully believe.

In accordance with the very cordial invitation which has come to me from Calcutta, I am hoping to begin work there in June. After this I hope to be better prepared to confer with our Board as to the future. I am advised to see the chief student centres in India before settling down permanently. In the forty-five addresses I have been permitted to give since landing, the attention as well as the size of the audiences has been most gratifying. I look forward to the work before me with unspeakable joy. Pray for me.

My permanent address is, Kolapore, S.M.C., India.

WEST MARYLEBONE MISSION.—The tenth annual meeting was held on Tuesday week at St. James's Hall, George-street, Lisson-grove, N.W. There was a full attendance of helpers and friends. Mr. James Spruit, the superintendent, gave a budget of facts and figures concerning the mission. The spiritual part of the work embraces Gospel meetings, Bible lectures, Bible classes, prayer meetings, open-air meetings, and services for children; the temporal includes free meals at the hall and in the homes of the poor, dinners for invalids, medical and other relief. The report showed that 611 services had been held during the year. Addresses were given by Mr. W. H. Seagram, Mr. G. Stoneman, and others.

A PEEP INTO A BEEHIVE.

The Connaught Institute, Brighton, is a very modest-looking building close to the Lewes-road Station. Casual passers can have no idea of the busy life carried on within its walls. Lest any of my readers should be unaware of the privilege they are losing in not going inside to see, a few words to let them know will not be out of place.

There is a Mission Hall for the evangelisation of the masses, where the Gospel of Jesus Christ, faithfully spoken Sunday and week-day, has been blessed to thousands of men and women. Sad, miserable, heavy-laden hearts have gone from it lightened and cheered. Silent messages from God have spoken to many from off the walls, giving fresh peace and rest, and hope.

As we enter we find ourselves in a warm, comfortable-looking coffee-bar, little tables about, groups at dinner or tea, &c., the working-man enjoying a quiet read. Texts here and there around the walls meet the eye, and fulfil their mission to those who read them.

To the right of this is the Medical Mission Room. Twice a week it is full of men, women, and children, carrying big and little bottles for medicine. Hymns are sung and addresses given during the waiting time, and to many sick ones this hour is looked forward to as the happiest time of the week. Down two or three more steps we enter the library, and beyond it the large hall, which is used for numbers of useful purposes, mission services, men's night school, Sunday school, temperance teas, workers' teas, Band of Hope meetings, etc.

But how can it be used for so many different purposes with all those tightly-packed rows of chairs? inquires the uninitiated. Watch; and in five or ten minutes, willing hearts and willing hands have moved all the chairs into little classes, or set all the tables for a tea, and in less than no time the place looks transformed. The lads, or "rough lads' class" as it is called, have a night school to themselves down in these quarters. Rough they are, and no doubt about it! Their nicknames, such as Jumbo, Poodle-dog, Bogie, Sparrowlegs, Country, are an enigma to the unenlightened, and it is a matter of great amusement to them to see their teacher's difficulty to find out their real ones. These lads spend their lives in the streets, only a few seem to have a little ambition to work, but it is not strange that they are, as a rule, what they are; for most of them have homes not worthy of the name, and drinking and swearing is what they have been brought up to. The marvel is that such should care to come and learn the "3 R's." Surely it is the power of God which draws in these wandering ones, for we know his hands of invitation are stretched out to all who will come.

One of the chief features of the Connaught, the little ones will tell you, is the nice dinner given twice a week. How the eyes brighten, how eager and ready for a feast the fifty little faces look as it appears. First comes the huge dish of steaming hot potatoes, then the favourite roast or boiled joint, followed by sundry jugs of rich gravy and vegetables. Then last, but not least, the big roly-poly treacle-pudding. How they do eat, to be sure! Here and there a well-cleared plate, with the owner thereof anxiously holding it out for more. The fact is, the children know what it is to be really hungry. Possibly some have had no breakfast. So it is well worth the trouble of providing and serving out a dinner to them. These dinners are the result of free-will offerings from the public, but it is sad to say the money scarcely lasts to do even the little that the busy folks in the Connaught try to do with it.

Twice a week, in the lower region, a number of little basins arrive; and at a certain hour dinners are carved off a joint, and sent in these basins to a given number of invalids at home. What a boon this is to the sick mothers or fathers, who have nothing to eat, or at any rate nothing to tempt the varying appetite which sickness leaves; and what a pleasure to the visitor, going from door to door, to be in any way able to help to relieve the pressing need on all sides.

But we must take a peep into the sitting-room where the bees live. It is a good-sized, cheerful room with plenty of tables, books and a piano, sofa and bird—everything, in fact, to make it home-like and happy for the seven deaconesses and their kind superintendent who use it. Perhaps they are having a praise-meeting now for a fresh subscription sent in for the work, or a prayer meeting for more funds, for this institution is wholly dependent on the contributions of the public, so its workers have to walk by faith and trust in the living God.

An Irish Visitor.

ROMANISM IN HAITI.

Dear Sir,—No doubt your readers will be pleased to hear of the progress of the Lord's work in Haiti, W. Indies. The Government is a Republic, and the people descendants of the African race brought to this as to the neighbouring islands centuries ago by slave-traders, amongst whom I fear were not a few English and Welshmen. The established religion of the country is Roman Catholic, and that in a much worse form than seen in England, or even Ireland, at the present time. The priests have had it much their own way so far, but I am glad to say that just now the tide is receding, and that there are prospects of a change in this direction. The more intelligent portion of the people, and even some in Government circles at Port-au-Prince, have a growing dislike for Romanism, knowing as they certainly do how little it has done for them.

Notwithstanding that Haiti is one of the richest (as regards soil and minerals) and one of the most beautiful islands of the West, its inhabitants are at the close of the nineteenth century in dense ignorance, and at this moment "sitting in the region and shadow of death," both commercially and spiritually. The President, General Hippolyte, is a large-hearted, liberal-minded man, and is very much in favour of establishing public schools all through the island for the mental and moral elevation of the people. He and his Ministers are favourably disposed toward Protestants and Nonconformists. This is prophetic of better times dawning on this priest-ridden land, and evidently shows that the people have no longer the confidence they had in Popery and its parasites.

The Creoles who dwell in the mountain districts, and who are not so enlightened as those referred to above, are greatly influenced by Papa lois (enchanter) who pretends to possess some mysterious power over both dead and living. Many in the country believe him, and therefore live in constant fear and dread of Papa. At this season of the year, the Roman Catholics observe their carems, or feasts. On the 30th ult., the day previous to Good Friday, the people here were beating drums, old kettles, and other articles productive of sound, mimicking the earthquake which took place at the time of the crucifixion. Friday was kept as a holiday, when the bells ceased to peal, and business operations were suspended. In most of the streets effigies of Jews were fixed up to be mocked and buffeted by passers-by, thus professing their hatred of the people who murdered the Lord. It is usual on these occasions for a large procession to parade the town, carrying in front of them a covered cross. This procession did not walk on Friday last, but the people gathered together in the evening, and according to custom, with lighted candles, ascended Mount Calvary. This is a place erected on the highest summit in the town of Jacmel, right in front of a small building wherein was a veiled cross with burning incense. Before this building, and right up against the barred gates, a number of persons were praying and singing, while others were scoffing. In company with the secretary of my church (Nosiril L'Herisson), I visited the above spot that I might see with my own eyes the performances carried on by the people in these parts. On seeing, however, the ignorance betrayed, the superstitions practised, and the Christ-dishonouring displays made by the crowd, we failed to restrain our souls any longer, and had to speak out. We mounted the platform in front of the building referred to. I suggested John i. latter part of 29th verse, as a suitable text to my friend L'Herisson to speak from, and he delivered an animated Gospel address to a crowd of about 350 or 400, who listened most attentively and with evident surprise to the words spoken with so much fervour. The writer followed from John iii. 16, speaking, of course, in English, the previous speaker acting as an interpreter.

At the close I heartily invited the people to read the Bible for themselves without the intervention of either pastor or priest, promising to supply copies to those who were without any and willing to study it. On the following morning nine young men, ranging from fifteen to twenty-one, called at my house, some of whom were here before 8 a.m. The people expressed their joy at hearing the glad tidings, and asked us to hold meetings again, some of them even promising to go around to call the people together.

While my brother and I were thus receiving the gratitude of the people, and praising God for giving unto us great boldness of spirit and freedom of speech here, an officer rode up to the store where I was busily writing, charged, as Saul of Tarsus, with warrants (not, however, from, but at the instigation of, the high priests) calling on my friend and me to appear before the court on Wednesday next (exactly four weeks after my arrival here from Wales, viâ Jamaica), to give account and stand our trial for what we did on Friday evening last. These summonses we cheerfully received, rejoicing that we should be counted worthy of being persecuted for the Gospel's sake. The priests are very much exasperated against us, and the more so because the people are in our favour, even those who hitherto professed Roman Catholicism commending us for our action in speaking to them.

The indictment against us is, "That we, being Protestants, should preach on premises belonging to the Roman Catholic Church." This, however, is not the real grievance, but simply a cloak to hide the hatred which priestcraft has always cherished for Evangelical teaching; it is, indeed, the old story over again of Protestantism versus Romanism. I have refused to be represented on this occasion by a lawyer (Haitian), believing that the Master whom we are serving is not only able, but willing, to defend his servants in the execution of their duty. Let the readers of your paper pray that God's Word may run, have free course, and be glorified. "The battle is the Lord's."

On Sunday the news was all over the town; the conduct of the priests and magistrates was much commented upon and condemned. Our meetings were better attended on Sunday than usual, especially the afternoon English service. Most of the young men who came for the Bibles on Saturday attended both morning and evening. One well-known Roman Catholic came for the first time, and at the close of the service expressed to me his desire to study the Protestant religion. With this object in view he promised to attend my nine-o'clock Sunday-morning Bible-class. This evening late a young man of twenty, who has been for some time frequenting our meetings, came in from the country to ask for baptism; thus the work shows signs of revival.

The present little room where we worship is not only inconveniently situated, but in a very unsafe condition, and riddled with musket balls. A new and very commodious chapel is in course of erection, but is just now at a standstill for want of funds. The sides, which are of strong wood frame, are already put up, with a galvanised iron roof; also there is sufficient lime and stones, for building between the frames, on the premises. The chapel when completed will cost at least £1200, and provide sitting accommodation, including the gallery, for over 700 persons. Towards this sum the church, which is composed of few and poor members, have, with the assistance of friends in town, contributed £300. The Jamaica Baptist Missionary Society, in connection with which the place is worked, has promised £100, and the English Baptist Society has promised the last £100. The Government, in compensation for damages done to the old mission room during the last revolution, has voted £500, thus leaving £200 to be raised in order to complete the work. Are there not amongst the Lord's children in the home country brethren who will come to the help of the Lord—to the help of the Lord against the mighty? With £200, sent either to the office of The Christian, or direct to the writer, the building operations would be at once resumed, and in six or seven months, certainly before this year is out, a chapel for the worship of God and the preaching of the pure Gospel in Jacmel, would be an accomplished fact.

Yours in the Master's service,

April 4, 1893. L. Ion Evans.

P.S.—We shall be greatly obliged to any friends who will supply us with French and a few English Bibles, English copies of Mr. Sankey's hymn-books, and a quantity of anti-Romanist tracts.

THE SPIRITUAL LIFE is nothing else but the working of the Spirit of God within us, and therefore our own silence must be a great part of our preparation for it.

MISSIONARIES IN ALGERIA.

THE NORTH AFRICA MISSION.

Dear Sir,—Your readers have heard of the threat of the French Government to expel British missionaries to the Mohammedans from Algeria, if they did not cease their operations. The reasons assigned were, that on account of the fanaticism of the natives their own countrymen were forbidden to carry on any religious propaganda among them, and that the same rule must be applied to foreigners. It was also said that schools were conducted which were not in conformity with the French laws, and it was suggested that the teaching of the missionaries was hostile to France.

We were at a loss to understand the statement that French subjects were not permitted to carry on mission work among the natives, as the Roman Catholic Pères Blancs have seven stations among the Kabyles, and the Sœurs Blanches have come to work in Djemâa Sahridj, the very village in which our mission has been longest established. Our missionaries have always endeavoured to treat them with consideration and respect, but there have been instances in which this has not been reciprocated. The Roman Catholics have also a Hospital and a Medical Mission at Saint Cyprien, a village composed of natives and orphans rescued by Cardinal Lavigerie after a period of famine. We are given to understand, however, that the French Government is well aware of the existence of these and other French missions; but they referred, when writing of their own countrymen not being permitted to undertake mission work, to an order made some years ago for the expulsion of the Jesuits from French territory; and as the latter had a mission at Djemâa Sahridj they were in consequence obliged to leave some time before the establishment of the North Africa Mission in 1881.

With regard to schools, we were not aware that the religious classes which our missionaries held were of the nature or character of a school, and we understood the French Government inspector to say they were not; but there seems to have been some misunderstanding as to this, and his report to headquarters would appear to have had a different character. Unfortunately, about the time of the last communication from the French Government to the British Foreign Office, this gentleman died. If in any way unconsciously we have not conformed to French law as to schools, we desire to apologise and to conform in future; but we are not aware of having transgressed.

The last point is as to the teaching of the missionaries being hostile to France. This idea is, of course, utterly without foundation. It has ever been the aim of the missionaries to point out to the natives the advantages that they enjoy under French rule, compared with their condition years ago before the French conquest. We are aware that the Algerian Press has frequently contained articles bringing vague and wild charges against English people in general, and missionaries in particular, but they have not, so far as we know, ever been specific, so that they could be either proved or disproved. In these papers, indeed, the danger of our arousing the religious fanaticism of the natives is not much referred to, nor the question of schools, but almost entirely the charge that being British we were spies, dealers in arms and gunpowder, or engaged in stirring up the natives to be discontented with French rule and to desire British rule. It seems almost impossible to understand how such wild and false statements could for a moment be listened to; but there exists unfortunately a good deal of jealousy of England on account of recent events in Egypt and Uganda, the incorrect Roman Catholic versions of what has happened being widely circulated and pretty generally believed.

The Council of the North Africa Mission having requested me to proceed to France and Algeria to explain matters and bring about a better understanding, I went to Paris in March, accompanied by one of our missionaries, Mr. Marshall, and laid the matter before some of the leading French Protestants to whom our work had been known for years. They rendered all the assistance and advice in their power, especially MM. Boegner, Appia, and De Neufville, of the Committee of the Paris Protestant Foreign Missionary Society, and also Pastor Frank Puaux. Thence I proceeded to Algiers, where I had the invaluable assistance of M. Eugène Réveillaud, of Paris, so well known as a barrister and as editor of Le Signal, and prominent in many good works. He had to see the Governor-General of Algeria as to a concession of land there for the Vaudois of the Hautes Alpes, and at the same time he was able to inform His Excellency that he had known this mission for years, and could assure him of our loyalty and of the sincerity of our motives.

A few days later, the Governor-General, M. Jules Cambon, granted the favour of an interview to one of our Swiss missionaries, M. Cuendet, and myself. We were able to explain our position and to assure His Excellency of our desire to conform to French law, and to give evidence of our loyalty to the French Republic. It was evident that M. Cambon had heard a good many incorrect statements about the mission, and he promised to appoint some person in whom he had great confidence to investigate the matter, confer with M. Cuendet, and report to him, whereupon he would report to the Government in Paris. The Governor listened to our statements most patiently, and seemed to desire to act without partiality or prejudice. He impressed upon us the importance of not increasing the number of our workers in Algeria for the present, and of sending French or Swiss rather than English missionaries if possible.

We feel we have great cause to thank God for this reception, and as we have everything to gain by investigation, we are encouraged to hope that with a Governor-General so upright, impartial, and able as His Excellency M. Jules Cambon, the missionaries will be proved to be the Republic's best friends, and not its foes.

In returning through Paris, I had the privilege of again meeting with a number of French Protestants and pastors. They expressed their warm sympathy with our mission in its difficulties. The French Protestant missions are prepared, if need be, themselves to bring the matter before their Government. However, with M. Cambon's promise of investigation this does not at present seem to be necessary.

On another occasion I may be able to give further information as to the general progress of the mission in North Africa.—Yours faithfully,

Edward H. Glenny, Hon. Sec. N.A.M.

A FRENCH VILLAGE SCENE.

I met some of my fellow-workers (alas! so few in number) lately in a little village of the Hte. Vienne named Villefavard, under very interesting circumstances. It was the fiftieth anniversary of a movement in favour of Evangelical truth, which turned the Roman Catholic Chapel into a Protestant place of worship. We met in the morning at the presbytery, where we had a prayer-meeting, during which the people assembled outside. Then we marched in procession (some 200 persons) towards the "temple," half a mile distant.

At the door of the "temple" we were met by the elders of the church, and one of them, a venerable old man, in broken, but deeply earnest, accents bade us welcome. He told us how, fifty years ago, the Roman Catholic priest was converted by the reading of a tract, how he left the Church of Rome, how his flock followed him, and Pastor Napoléon Roussel was sent by the Société Evangélique de France to take charge of his congregation. Moreover, he told us some of the opposition they encountered. The church had to be closed by order of the Government. The sous-préfet and the commissaire de police arrived to put their seals on the door; but during the night some youths took away the doors, and hid them in a pool not far away. The old man humorously added, it would have required a long tape to seal that door. Through God's mercy they were allowed to worship Him in the simplicity and purity of Evangelical truth. The Société Evangélique had not been rewarded for all it had done for the villagers, but God had given them joy in precious souls who had been brought into the light and liberty of God's children.

It was a deeply touching scene, and Pastor Mouron, secretary of the Société Evangélique, after thanking the elders in a few words emphasising the aim and object of the society, entered the church, followed by all the congregation, and preached on Heb. xi. 32—40, a sermon which, I trust, will long be remembered by all of us. Pastor Vinart, M. Bersier's successor in Paris, offered prayer, and before the service closed I was asked to baptize the son of the pastor of Villefavard.

LICENSED VICE IN INDIA.

Dear Sir,—It seems right that you who have so long helped us in our righteous cause should know the following facts. The Medical Reporter, of Calcutta, an influential journal subsidised by the Government, publishes a long article in favour of the system of licensed impurity. It is very clear that this article has been inspired by the inaction of the late Decennial Missionary Congress at Bombay. Materialists and Regulationists have been so far encouraged by the attitude of that congress as to make an appeal to all teachers of morality to aid them in the full reinstatement and enforcement of the iniquitous system of vice regulation.

I quote the following passage from The Medical Reporter:—"Let teachers of morality join hands with physicians and sanitarians, and let them now use the vast influence they would obtain, and which would be characteristic of this union, towards the enactment and enforcement of the law, in such a manner as to minimise the evil resulting." Then follows more in the same strain, and the writer adds: "Moral teaching has been made much of by opponents of regulation. It is right to exalt morality, and to receive with humility its lessons; but it is out of court here, however much we may desire its evidence; for moral teaching will not prevent the spread of contagious affection, but a suitable law will do so effectually." You will observe that this writer speaks of "the evil resulting" from social vice, as if there was to his mind only one evil—the physical one. You will observe also the inconsistency of calling on teachers of morality to join sanitarians, while at the same time he says that moral teaching is out of court.

Our courageous friend and fellow worker, Mr. A. S. Dyer, writes from Bombay, confirming the statement of the above paper being subsidised by the Government.

It is believed that the Indian Government has long had several low-toned, unscrupulous papers in the Indian cities as its special organs, chief among which is The Pioneer, of Allahabad; and to these has been added The Medical Reporter.

The knowledge of what has been, and is continually going on, and the thought of the terrible sufferings of the Indian women subject to the Cantonments Acts, convince me that it would be well not to delay promoting a serious movement in this country, which I can have no doubt would influence the Home Government, and through them the responsible officials in India.—Yours truly,

Josephine E. Butler.

AN EAST END ENTERPRISE.

During last winter Stratford Town Hall was used on Sunday evenings by the National Sunday League, who provided entertainments of various kinds for the large East End population in the centre of which the Hall stands. The fact that the League was allowed thus to use a public institution was much regretted by the Christian public of the locality, and many prayed that the scandal might not be repeated next winter.

Determined to be in time for the next "season," the League recently applied for a renewal of their arrangement with the Corporation. There was, however, another applicant for the Hall, Rev. David J. Stather Hunt, the evangelical vicar of St. Paul's, Stratford, who was, of course, able to plead local interest. The Town Council consented to each applicant having the use of the Hall for a period of three months, the question of precedence to be arranged between them! Mr. Hunt would not agree to this, and so the Council gave him the first term of three months. The League then refused to take second place, and so Mr. Hunt has assumed the responsibility of using the Hall on Sunday evenings during the entire winter. The turn which things have taken has caused surprise to many; but those who have been praying for a result that shall be to the glory of God, have been divinely encouraged at every stage.

Mr. Hunt is now organising for the discharge of his great undertaking. He hopes to procure the services of some experienced evangelist for every Sunday evening, and to promote a sound and strong effort to arouse the people. The proceedings will be entirely unsectarian, and the collections will be given to the local hospital. Already some earnest friends have promised to sustain Mr. Hunt's hands. We trust others will join them, and that there will be much prayer for grace and wisdom on the part of the workers, and for blessing upon their efforts.

THE "BRIDGE OF HOPE."

On Wednesday last week there was an interesting gathering in Ratcliff Highway. The Baroness Burdett Coutts visited the "Bridge of Hope," and many of the subscribers and friends of the mission were invited to meet her. This was made the occasion for the opening of a recreation room for the inmates of the Refuge. Mr. Joseph Howard, M.P., the treasurer, presided at the meeting. Rev. Preb. Harry Jones gave a brief but interesting address, speaking of the sympathy with which he had watched the work from its earliest days.

Miss STEER explained that the recreation room had become an absolute necessity to the health and well-being of the young women in the Refuge; for the industrial occupations carried on had so increased that one room after another had been taken for the purposes of the laundry work and knitting, and she considered that the girls themselves had earned the money to build the room, which had cost about £130.

All present were delighted to see Miss ELLICE HOPKINS; though still an invalid, she said she could not refrain from adding a few words. She had known Miss Steer before the work was begun. It was at a meeting which she held at Miss Macpherson's Home of Industry that Miss Steer gave herself up for this work.

The BARONESS BURDETT-COUTTS spoke most sympathetically, and urged all those who were present to help Miss Steer to bear the burden of the financial difficulty which always seemed to be laid upon those who undertook work such as this for the good of others.

The children from the cottage homes (124 in number) made a pretty procession in passing through the room, each little girl carrying flowers, which she had brought from her country home for the inmates of the Refuge. As they passed from the room Miss Steer related the story of some of the children. They were not little orphans—not even all destitute children, but each one had been rescued from grave moral danger. Life in the workhouse, the streets, the hospital, or the prison, would, humanly speaking, have been their destiny had they not been received at the "Bridge of Hope." Here were some of the most shamefully ill-used children from Mr. Benjamin Waugh—while a large contingent came from the National Vigilance Association and similar societies.

The visitors were evidently deeply touched at the sight of the children. Their bright, innocent, happy faces testifying to the tender care and mother-love which now guarded their little lives. By the kind permission of the rector, the children were entertained at tea at St. George's Mission Hall, before going back to their homes. The friends then went over the large Refuge, inspecting the night shelter, and seeing the young women at their various industries.

Much was said about the changed condition of the neighbourhood. We hope the sight of the children, as they passed through the well-known streets, was an object lesson that will not be forgotten. There was many a "God bless you!" from the rough women in the Highway, who, however sunk in sin they may be themselves, are always glad to know of little girls saved from their own sad life. The economy with which the work is carried on was dwelt upon by several of the speakers. It was stated that £70 a week at least is required to support the various homes, and although there is no debt on any branch, the balance at the bank on that day only amounted to £22 15s. 6d.

DAYS IN THE COUNTRY.—Will any lady living near London invite our factory girls down to her garden on a Saturday afternoon? To these girls a few hours in the country, and especially in private grounds, are a real pleasure, and it is often the only day in the year that they get into the fresh air.—Miss A. B. BUTLER, Hon. Sec. for "Days in the Country," Y.W.C.A., 13, Onslow-square, S.W.

JOHN STREET MISSION, PENDLETON.—The thirtieth annual meeting in connection with the John-street Gospel and Temperance Mission, Pendleton, was lately held. The Mayor of Salford (Mr. Alderman Keeyney) presided, and promised prizes in connection with the plumbing and wood-working classes of the institution. Mr. J. Sugden read the annual report, which stated that the progress of the mission was continuous and encouraging. A good work was done in spreading pure literature. The cottage visitation had proved a very useful work, resulting in the relief of many cases of sickness and distress. Other gentlemen addressed the meeting.

LIVERPOOL SHELTERING HOME.

THE work of the Sheltering Home has been sustained and carried on during the winter with its usual vigour. A few weeks ago a party of eighty-six sailed for Canada, and have safely arrived on the other side, where suitable homes and situations were awaiting them. A second party is now being prepared, and will sail next month. Since August, 200 poor and neglected children have been admitted, clothed, fed, schooled, and trained.

Many a tale of woe is contained in the histories of some of these young lives. They were sadly disadvantaged by environment, hard pressed by poverty, hunger, and suffering, with scarcely a chance to grow up good, truthful, honest, and strong in high moral principles. Now, however, their conditions have been wonderfully changed, and in Canada they enjoy a healthy, free, new life, with congenial and regular employment, good wages, and a fine chance of improving themselves, and rising by degrees to an honourable and useful life.

A letter received yesterday illustrates the advantages gained by good adoptions, and how one good and successful case opens the way for another. A lady writes:—"We are highly pleased with our little boy; all who meet him unite with us in thinking him one in a thousand. He certainly is the best-dispositioned child we ever met, and we have never seen him out of humour. He is kind-hearted, thoughtful beyond his years, obedient, truthful, and a remarkably bright child to learn. He has been quite healthy, and is growing fast, and seems very happy and contented. Please let us know when you expect to bring over more children, as we think of adopting a little girl, and would like a good one."

Scores of remarkable cases of success might be given, all showing how well these children turn out when they get a fair chance. The need of the work in Liverpool is as great as ever. There are very many poor, starved, helpless victimised children, needing to be rescued and saved. Intemperance, poverty, overcrowded and unwholesome courts and alleys, and the lesser evils arising out of these, are by no means easily mitigated or swept away, and while these remain we shall still have poor and neglected children in our midst. No greater work can be done than to uplift and save some of these little ones.

CHRISTIAN READING FOR INDIA.

DEAR SIRS,—Though I have been in this great country but a few months, I have been greatly struck with the increasing need for English tracts and books, especially of an anti-infidel type. The number of people learning English is rapidly increasing. English scholars evince a strong desire to read all they can, and infidels and others are making strenuous efforts to supply them with their pseudo-philosophical books, which appeal strongly to the imaginative minds of Hindus.

Much good is being done by the various Tract Societies, which are aiding the missions, and by the Christian Literature Society, whose publications are terse and cheap. Missionaries working among the educated classes are very grateful for all such help, yet there is need for tracts and booklets, such as those of Mr. H. L. Hastings, of Boston, U.S.A. Many of us would be very grateful to anyone who would send us parcels of such for free distribution to inquirers. Many are honestly searching the Bible, but like men everywhere are more ready to listen to arguments against its teachings and veracity than to those in its favour.

Allow me to urge upon all lovers of missionary work the need of warmly supporting the Tract Societies, which have a very heavy drain on their resources for free publications. Without these free grants most missionaries would be unable to circulate much literature. To help them is therefore to help materially the missionaries in their work.

There is much cause for thankfulness in the work here, but more need for prayer. This is a centre of education, and my work lies largely among college students and the like. It is very interesting, but difficult, as the Eastern mode of thought is so different from ours. I shall greatly value the prayers of your readers.—Yours in Christ,

WORK IN MOROCCO.

SINCE our summer change here four years ago, we have felt the desirability of opening a station at Sifro. It is a mountain town about twenty miles south-east of Fez, standing much higher than the latter city; it is cooler, and would be a pleasant place of change from the great heat there. Besides, the people were more friendly, and seemingly open to the Gospel.

Hitherto the Moorish Government has opposed our getting a house, declaring the place unsafe; but at last we have succeeded in renting a three-roomed house, the best we could get, and Miss Mellett and myself are at work here. We trust that an increase in our Fez staff will enable the work here to be permanent. In the room which we have devoted to the people, we are able to seat about fifty on the floor, mattings, and sheepskins, with a couple of mattresses serving instead of chairs.

We have planned out our work thus:—Monday and Thursday mornings we devote to sick Moorish women and children, attending to their ailments as far as we can; and it is a great pleasure to relieve them. Numbers come, and with them quite as many others who only wish to hear our hymn-singing and Gospel message. Tuesday morning we have sick Jewesses. Wednesday afternoon a sewing class for girls. Thursday afternoon a class (Bible teaching and singing) for Moorish boys, it being a school holiday. Friday (the Mohammedan Sabbath) we invite women to come and hear our singing and teaching. They have few home duties, and generally go out to the cemetery. Now it is becoming an institution that they should come here also. These Friday gatherings have been happy times; we have never had fewer than a hundred in our house on that day. One Friday the number reached two hundred, and we might have had overflow meetings in the court for those waiting their turn for admission, although nothing was to be gained by it.

On Saturday we are almost equally busy with the Jews. Women and girls come to us in the morning, and we have a nice class of Jewish boys in the afternoon. Last Saturday we had forty-seven boys, the largest number we have had. Sunday we keep quiet, except for a class of girls which we have in the afternoon. We have visited several houses, Moorish and Jewish, including that of the principal Rabbi. We have not time to go to all the houses open to us.

We know that curiosity in a great measure has brought the people to our house; still, we are only too thankful for the opportunity of telling them our message. Many remember the words they heard from us four years ago, and in one house at least the Bible is being read. Many of the people are really kind and friendly; grateful patients have sent presents of butter and milk. One day a sheep arrived at our door, a present from one of the principal men here. Oh for the light of the Gospel to shine in! We feel it a great privilege to be the only witnesses for Christ here, and we are certain that hearts will be reached by the power of the Holy Spirit. "Pray for us."

MAY MEETINGS.

FROM churches that seem divided,
From every tribe and shore
From burning zone to arctic,
Some who never met before.

They meet in their Father's presence,
As a household long apart,
As the children of one roof-tree,
And heart communes with heart.

They know and they love each other,
As the family traits they trace—
One spirit in every heart-breath,
One light on every face.

They have found the same Ark of Safety
From the deluge of sin and woe;
They are bound for the same bright heaven
Where storms can never blow.

So they sing in the flowery springtime
A prelude of the lay
That is sung where the blossoms fade not
In the great eternal May.

A MISSIONARY PLEA.

"For I know that the Lord is great, and that our Lord is above all gods." "The idols of the heathen are silver and gold, the works of men's hands. They have mouths, but they speak not; eyes have they, but they see not; they have ears but they hear not; neither is there any breath in their mouths." "They that make them are like unto them; so is everyone that trusteth in them."

After reading these verses in the Scripture Union portion for the day, my thoughts instinctively turned to the dark, gloomy, heathen temple not far from where I live; and the sad sights I had often witnessed within its walls—men, women, and little children, old and young, the rich together with the poor, bowing down and worshipping these idols in whom they trusted, the works of men's hands.

Many times I have quietly stood by and watched the worshippers, as one by one, or in groups, they have come in, obtained the incense sticks from one of the priests, for which they paid a few cents, light them and wave them before the god they are worshipping, then present the offerings they have brought—dried duck, vegetables, cakes, oranges, tea and wine; prostrating themselves upon the mat placed for the purpose, I have heard them praying for protection to those which have eyes but see not, ears but hear not, neither is there any breath in their mouths.

Brightly-coloured paper clothing and paper money are next set fire to, and placed in a large iron cauldron, a priest tolling meanwhile a huge gong or bell to call the attention of the gods to what is being done. The deluded worshipper, fully believing that the gods have received the money and clothes just consumed in the flames, and also in like manner the essence of his offerings of food and wine, packs up the visible remains of what he brought with him, and goes happily away.

"How sad!" you say.

Away on the mountains wild and bare,
Away from the tender Shepherd's care.

But how, then, shall they call on Him in whom they have not believed? And how shall they believe in Him of whom they have not heard? And how shall they hear without a preacher? And how shall they preach except they be sent?

It is midnight, and in the ward of a hospital not far from the heathen temple mentioned above, the patients lie sleeping, forgetting for a time all pain and suffering. But one young girl tosses restlessly from side to side, both mind and body ill at ease.

"I thought that I had truly worshipped all the gods," she says to herself over and over again, "and yet a voice said just now, 'Pray to the one true God to forgive you your sins, and He will.' Who is He, where is He, that I may pray to Him?" Then ignorantly and blindly, but from the depth of her heart, goes up the cry, "Oh God, I have sinned against Thee; forgive my sin, and save me."

And out in the desert He heard her cry,
Sick and helpless and ready to die.

And the sweet peace of sin forgiven steals over the weary storm-tossed soul, and the fevered frame is soon wrapt in dreamless sleep.

How eagerly she listens to the old, old story, as it is told to her next morning by the lady missionary who daily comes to teach the women patients! No less wonderful than beautiful is it to see before long her loving trust in that Good Shepherd who was even now "searching and seeking out his own," and to see her heart opening, like a flower to the sun, to his divine love. There is joy on earth—in the heart of the sick one, in the heart of the missionary, for "when one for whom Satan hath struggled as he has for me, has gained at last that blessed shore of peace, oh, how this heart doth glow with gratitude and love." And there is joy in heaven,

And the angels echo around the throne,
"Rejoice! for the Lord brings back his own."

Another hospital scene.—The young girl who figured in the last has come out from the ranks of heathenism, and professed her faith in the Lord Jesus by baptism, and now is an earnest worker for the Master amongst her own countrywomen, striving by every means in her power—by example, by earnest believing prayer, by faithful teaching, and loving entreaty, to lead them to the Saviour's feet. As the woman by whose bedside she sits hears from her lips the story of Jesus, the mighty to save, and her own simple testimony, the Gospel is again proved to be the power of God unto salvation unto everyone that believeth; and the strongholds of superstition and heathenism in that woman's heart fall before it. She yields herself in simple faith to the one true God to be cleansed and forgiven, and again the angels echo around the throne, "Rejoice! for the Lord brings back his own," and over another sinner that repenteth there is joy in heaven.

A man's enemies are the men of his own house, and petty persecution from some, bitter opposition from others, follow as a matter of course the decided stand taken on the side of Christ by ———, and her open avowal of Him as the only Saviour of men. But the witness has not been borne in vain. First one and then another of those who had been foremost to oppose are gradually won over by the beautiful influence of a life lived in fellowship with the Master, to love and serve Him, too, and eternity will reveal the influence for Christ this one soul won from heathenism has been enabled, under God's blessing, to exert on others. One verse says, "For I know that the Lord is great, and that our Lord is above all gods." But how many millions do not know, who, if they did, would gladly love and serve Him? The Lord says, "Whom shall I send, and who will go for us?" Who will answer, gladly saying, "Here am I, send me, send me"?

Often since coming out to work amongst the heathen I have been reminded of a beautiful painting exhibited a few years ago in the Royal Academy, called, "If thou hadst known!" It is twilight—the stars just beginning to come out in the deep blue Eastern sky, and alone, on one of the slopes of the Mount of Olives, is the figure of Christ sitting, looking down sorrowfully upon the city beneath, with its thousands of inhabitants who are rejecting him as Lord, and saying "If thou hadst known!" Looking down from his throne above, and beholding the millions of those who worship the works of men's hands, knowing not Him who is above all gods, can we not hear Him to-day saying "If thou hadst known!" But "how shall they believe on Him of whom they have not heard, and how shall they hear without a preacher?"

LITTLE CHRISTIANS.

Mark x. 14.

Happy little children,
God's own sunbeams bright,
Seek to live for Jesus,
The dark world's true light.
He, your loving Saviour,
Once was young, like you,
All your joys and sorrows
And temptations knew.
For your sins He suffered
On a cross of wood,
Died, to make you, like Him,
Gentle, pure, and good.
Say, will you not serve Him?
Brave, obedient be?
So that all your dear ones,
Christ in you may see.
Loving little children,
His own precious flowers,
Seek to bloom for Jesus,
Spend for Him your powers.
Let each word and action
Of his beauty tell,—
He, who ever loves you,
He, in whom you dwell.
Seek to do his bidding,
By the dear home hearth,
Or where'er He calls you,
In life's daily path.
Follow his example,
In his footsteps tread,
Thus may you, fond children,
His own sweetness shed.
Darling little children,
Like God's angels fair,
Seek to be earth's blessings,
Chasing sin and care.
Seek to follow Jesus
For his own dear sake,
Swift to run his errands,
Messages to take.
Kind unto the needy,
To the sick, the old,
Melting with your sweet ways,
Hearts that once were cold.
Bringing smiles of gladness
Into faces sad,
Shedding all around you
His own lovelight glad.

HOMES FOR WORKING GIRLS.

A gathering for praise and prayer in connection with the Homes for Working Girls was held on Wednesday in Hyde House, 27, Somerset-street, W.

From a statement made by the director, Mr. John Shrimpton, it appeared that the Homes had been helpful to many thousands of girls, to whom they have been true homes and peaceful harbours of safety and rest. Too often it is assumed that such cannot want help because they are respectable in appearance. They must dress properly, else they cannot retain their employment, but often enough their hearts are sore and lonely, and their pockets sadly empty, while they are exposed to great danger and constant temptation. The Homes, of which there are now nine in different parts of London, have been established for the benefit of respectable girls employed in London, who, living away from their business houses, would otherwise be left, after these had closed, to their own devices for residence and amusement. All these girls pay for their accommodation, which, if simple, is bright, clean, and comfortable. The latest report shows that the payments made by the residents for their board cover not only its entire cost, but the board of the superintendents and helpers; and the management therefore point out that there is not the slightest pauperism about the work. In the nine houses there is accommodation for 502 residents, and full board—breakfast, dinner, and tea—is provided for 4s. 6d. per week. The rent of bedroom accommodation (including the use of dining and reading-rooms) varies from 2s. to 4s. per week. During 1892, 2022 young persons lived in the Homes for longer or shorter periods, while 17,500 have resided in them since the work began. Every endeavour is made to cause the lives of the impoverished but always industrious and respectable girls who live in them to be as cheerful as possible, and this being the case, there can be little wonder that the demand for accommodation in them is much in excess of the supply.

Every effort is made to win the girls to the Saviour, and the Bible classes and Bible talks, in which several ladies and gentlemen co-operate, have been blessed to many.

A season having been spent in earnest prayer for the blessing of God, brief addresses, warmly commendatory of the whole work, followed by Mr. Daniel Wellby, Revs. James Paterson and J. C. Elliott, and Dr. Gordon Brodie.

In the course of the afternoon it transpired that ere long it is hoped to open a new home in Fitzroy-square to accommodate from fifty to sixty, and eventually, perhaps, a hundred girls. This has been manifestly an answer to prayer. To finish and furnish and open this home free of debt, about £500 is still required.

ATHENÆUM HALL, BRIGHTON.—The work going on in this hall, under the superintendence of Mr. Edward Hurditch, is most encouraging. The attendance has increased so much that the question now is where to plant a permanent work. Towards this end a drawing-room meeting was held last week at Mr. Lewis Ingram's, of Lewes-crescent, Brighton. This was well attended, and addresses explaining the work of the Evangelistic Mission were given by Messrs. C. Russell Hurditch, W. Fuller Gooch, and Dr. M'Killiam. A site has been offered for purchase, but the wherewithal is an important item. A hall could be put up to hold 1500. It is our privilege to hear of souls being saved on every hand. Good open-air services are also being held on the West Front every Sunday afternoon.

Burt Sharp, Secretary.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, MAY 14.—2 CHRON. XXIII.

The true King of the world is just now in hiding. The kingdom is in mystery. True hearts resort to Him. The Levites have access to Him. But there is a promise of his restoration, which is as sure as that which guaranteed the succession of David's throne to David's line, "Behold, the king's son shall reign, as the Lord hath spoken." The world can never be at rest until the usurper is driven out, and the true King installed.

The certainty of the covenant did not lead to any looseness in Jehoiada's arrangements. He laid his plans with consummate skill. First, the solemn covenant of consecration; then every man entrusted with specific work—no quarter to the enemy, and yet no profanation of the sacred house (8). God's work done in the spirit of obedience to his word. And all the weapons were furnished by the house of God itself. Carnal weapons are useless in spiritual enterprise (2 Cor. x. 4, 5). And then how noble the faith which dared to proclaim Joash while Athaliah was yet alive. Oh my soul, dare to anticipate the hour when thy Lord shall take his great power and reign; prepare for that day; hasten its coming; but ever obey the rules of high spiritual warfare.

MONDAY, MAY 15.—2 CHRON. XXIV.

"Minded to restore the house." It is a good thing when our mind is fully made up in the cause of God. For He who works in us to will, will work in us to perform, and will secure the concurrence of others. The cause of God should ever be a matter of chief concern to those that love God. They cannot bear to see it broken up, and grieve when those who should take the first interest in it hasten it not, as was the case with these Levites. Oh that the zeal of God's house might eat us up. But the king found the people more eager for God's cause than the Levites were, and when the appeal was made to them money flowed in abundantly. How often do poor and ordinary people shame those whose office promised better things. We remember the churches of Macedonia, the abundance of whose joy abounded to the riches of their liberality (2 Cor. viii. 1).

How mighty one life may be in averting evil and affording a channel for holy influences to pass through to others. It would have been almost incredible that king and people should have so soon resorted to idols, did we not know something of the fickleness of our own evil hearts. "Wrath came upon Judah and Jerusalem for this their guiltiness, yet. . . ." God does not leave us unpled with. Beware when flatterers make obeisance, it is the beginning of apostasy. And how soon the heart hardens. Zechariah's blood did not flow unnoticed by God, and it was required, not only at the hand of the Syrians, but afterwards (Matt. xxiii. 35). Disaster followed on disaster, so that the king was finally assassinated and refused burial in the sepulchres of the kings. To what depths may we not fall apart from the grace of God. What need for the daily prayer, "Hold Thou me up."

TUESDAY, MAY 16.—2 CHRON. XXV.

Amaziah began right. But his heart was not perfect. There was a little rift in the lute which presently made the music mute. And the first symptom was in his proposal to ally himself with Israel. The experiences of his predecessors should have warned him against this. But he persisted till the man of God remonstrated with him and told him that however strong he made himself God would cast him down. What precious words are here. "God hath power to cast down and to help." How often we court defeat by making ourselves strong, instead of putting ourselves in living fellowship with God, and asking Him to show Himself strong for us.

The question about the 100 talents was very natural. It is not pleasant to forfeit absolutely that which has cost us much. But it is cheap to sacrifice all, if we may count on the presence and blessing of God. Let us dare then to separate ourselves; whatever advantage may have seemed within our reach, let us put it absolutely away; we shall get infinitely more than we lose. The Lord is able to give thee much more than this. In the case of Amaziah victory was easy, the Lord fought for him. But how absurd to worship the gods of Edom, who could not defend their votaries!

WEDNESDAY, MAY 17.—2 CHRON. XXVI.

May we be like Uzziah at the opening of his reign. It is a beautiful record. "He set himself to seek God in the days of Zechariah, and as long as he sought the Lord he prospered." True prosperity is always mated with true religion. If we would set ourselves more deliberately and earnestly to seek God, it would be better for us in every way. We should prosper in our wars, in our aggressions upon surrounding evil, because God would help us. Our name would spread abroad, because we should be marvellously helped. But, ah! how ominous are those words! "He was marvellously helped till he was strong." We are prepared for the announcement which follows, "When he was strong his heart was lifted up, so that he did corruptly" (R.V.).

We cannot stand unbroken prosperity, unless we are extremely watchful. This is probably why so few of God's children comparatively pass through life in unbroken sunshine. Plants and fruits need the dark as well as the light. If things are well with you, do not temper your joy by introducing self-inflicted mortifications, but occupy your heart with the Giver more than with his gifts, and accept all from his hands.

Uzziah wanted to combine the offices of priest and king. This is reserved for one only among the sons of men, who is a Priest upon his throne. The remonstrances of the faithful priests were of more avail, and only aggravated his guilt, till the leprosy branded his forehead, and till he died he was doomed to be excommunicated from the sacred courts. God cannot be trifled with, and those who cast themselves on the sharp point of his prohibitions are necessarily impaled. Oh for grace to walk humbly with God!

THURSDAY, MAY 18.—2 CHRON. XXVII.

The record of Jotham's reign is very brief. But how weighty! He followed in the steps of his father, so far as they were good and right, but avoided his mistake and sin. "And he became mighty, because he ordered his ways before the Lord his God" (R.V.). It was not altogether easy to do this, as the stream of popular feeling and action was in the contrary direction, "The people did yet corruptly." But there was the more honour to him for taking so noble a stand. Do we order our ways before the Lord our God? When from the height of our morning watch-tower we anticipate the coming day, when we are making our plans, when we are preparing for some assault on the sin and evil of our times, do we lay all before God, taking his counsel, and waiting on Him for grace? If only we did, we, too, should become mighty, if not in the eyes of newspaper correspondents, yet in the unseen and spiritual world. Zinzendorf said, "I have one passion only; it is He, Jesus." Jotham's might appeared in his buildings (3, 4), his wars (5), and the tribute paid by the Ammonites. We have not all received the two or five talents, what we have let us consecrate to God and use for Him. Life is flying so quickly away, we shall soon stand before the King; let us so live, let us each moment sow such seed, that there may be golden harvests to reap in that world, where all the issues of life will be clearly perceived.

FRIDAY, MAY 19.—2 CHRON. XXVIII.

What a terrible chapter! Such a son of such a father! "This is that King Ahaz!" (22). The good of the previous reign was scattered to the winds. The worst atrocities of heathenism were imported into Israel. Babes flung into the brazen caldrons, amid the noise of the horrid drums that drowned their cries, while all kinds of abominations were perpetrated in the groves. People and king alike forsook the God of their fathers (6). A graphic picture of the sins and miseries of the time is given by Isaiah, whose righteous soul was sorely vexed by what was transpiring around him. Then, disaster and chastisement befell. First, at the hand of the king of Syria, then of the king of Israel, then of the Edomites. "The Lord brought Judah low because of Ahaz, king of Israel, for he had dealt wantonly in Judah, and trespassed sore against the Lord." How infatuated and precipitate his course. Bribing the king of Assyria, but it helped him not. Sacrificing to the gods of his conquerors, though they were the ruin of him. Shutting up the house of God, and so cutting off the gracious help that would have accrued from his Almighty Helper. Drowning men catch at straws, but if they would only lie back and trust, they would float. If God be against us, who can be for us? When we are right with God, we are strong against a world in arms; when we are wrong with Him, vain is the help of man. What a sweet contrast is presented by Israel's treatment of the captives!

SATURDAY, MAY 20.—2 CHRON. XXIX.

How wonderful that Ahaz had such a good son. Hezekiah was one of the noblest of the Kings of Judah. His reign recalled the memories of David's and Solomon's. He began with the house of God. In the work of reform we must begin within and work outwards. There must be sanctification on the part of those who are to do the work of sanctification. Those who would lead their fellow-believers to a purer, sweeter life must themselves be free of reproach. "Sanctify yourselves and sanctify the house of the Lord." It is a blessed privilege when God calls us to stand before Him, to minister unto Him, to be his ministers and burn incense. Let us esteem our position very highly, and not be negligent to fulfil these high and sacred tasks. When the priests and Levites were sanctified and set to work on the cleansing of the holy place they found enough to occupy them for eight days. They perhaps passed from the Sabbath to the first day of the week with its message of resurrection.

INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSONS.

MAY 21.

AGAINST INTEMPERANCE.—PROV. xxiii. 29-35.

GOLDEN TEXT: PROV. xx. 1.

THIS has been not inaptly called "the drunkard's looking-glass." He who has commenced, or is in danger of commencing, a career of intemperance would do well to consider the consequences likely to follow. The wise man is not theorising, but describing what must have been frequent in his day, and is not less frequent now.

Present effects of intemperance (29, 30).—These may be classified. First, is heart-grief, "woe, sorrow," or in margin of R.V. the interjections, "Oh! Alas!" The forms of grief are too many to be described. Remorse, coupled with a sense of utter helplessness, is the chief ingredient. The thought of what his life might have been but for this indulgence; of the distress brought upon others which might have been avoided; of the very small amount of pleasure enjoyed: fills the heart with bitterest anguish. To this is added social distress. "Contentions, babblings," or R.V. complainings. Drunkenness and brawling are companions. The tongue is loosened as the sense departs. Hence the proverb, "When wine is in, wit is out." Someone wisely remarked that he thought the wit must be out first or the wine would never get in at all. There could be no more inappropriate sign for a public-house than that of "The Peaceful Home." I have been in a home when the father has returned full of drink, and have seen the mother take up the child and flee from the wrath of the man who really loved her. Next is physical trouble, "wounds, redness of eyes." A soldier may have some pride in his wounds received while fighting his country's battles, but who can feel anything but shame over wounds received through intemperance? The whole countenance of the man bears witness to his sin.

Every daily newspaper furnishes illustrations of these effects following from drink. They are sure to follow in some measure all excess in the use of wine (30). What is more humiliating than the end of Alexander the Great? At the second night's carousal he called for Hercules' cup, which held an incredible quantity, and, after drinking from it twice, he fell to the floor. There lay the world's conqueror, himself the helpless victim of intemperance. In a few days he died, at the early age of thirty-eight.

The Remedy (31, 32).—Since the evils are said to result from excessive indulgence, and from seeking mixed or drugged wine, it might have been expected that the remedy would be found in the use of ordinary wine in moderation. Wisdom does not speak so. It calls for the most rigid total abstinence. Nothing is said here of mixed wines. The fascination lies at first in wines as they sparkle in the cup. Look not even upon such wine as this. The associations to which this may lead prepare the way for the use of the more dangerous drink. Avoid even looking at it. How often has the look of the eye led to sin! (Gen. iii. 6, Josh. viii. 21.) Is not this a safe course? Is it not a possible course? Should we not either recommend the adoption of this, or indicate a better? The drunkards' ranks include hundreds who were once scholars in our Sunday-schools. The remedy is needed to save others from a like ruin.

The final result of intemperance (32-35).—The second term "adder" refers to the cerastes, a horned snake, exceedingly venomous. We have the greatest horror of the bite of a poisonous serpent; the end of indulgence in drink is compared to that. There is an incident told concerning a man who had charge of the snake house at the Zoological Gardens. Meeting one day with a friend, he spent some time drinking, and, returned to his work with his brain muddled, he imagined himself a snake-charmer, and to the horror of the bystanders played with one, then another of the snakes. Finally he took out the cobra—a most deadly snake—and after playing with it, in his folly he held it towards his face. The creature made one dart at his forehead, and left only one little mark there. The man was at once roused to his senses; and laying the creature back in its place, he fell into a chair. The poison very speedily did its work. In an hour or so he was a dead man. It is as dangerous to play with strong drink as with a cobra!

Drunkenness is not alone (33). Impurity is its frequent companion. And, notwithstanding such evils, see how infatuated the man is (34, 35)! He will not see the danger, becomes utterly reckless, waking from one debauch to hasten to another. His course is down hill, with ever-increasing velocity.

Two things should be remembered in applying this lesson: First, that the Gospel can save one who has become the victim of drink; and secondly, that intemperance is a type of every form of sin. The joys of the service of Christ are better for this life, and beyond conception for the life to come.

Ministering Women

AT THE HOME OF INDUSTRY.

By An Observer.

The late Lord Shaftesbury was wont to remark, in his public addresses, that this is, par excellence, the age of women and children. It has often been said by other watchful observers of current movements that nearly all the specially benign and successful agencies for the betterment of this generation owe their success to God's benison on the consecrated energies of Christian women. The readers of The Christian at any rate will have little difficulty in assenting to that. The share that women have taken in the varied kinds of service which its pages have recorded, for the past thirty years or more, has been a large and ever-increasing one. Among the many godly women who have laboured faithfully and fruitfully in the Gospel in this great London, none has been more signally guided, supported, and honoured by the Master and Maker of us all than Miss Annie Macpherson. Her name is a household word in both hemispheres. Not only for what she has herself been enabled to do, but for what other Christian women have done at her suggestion or by the inspiration of her example, she will be remembered with affection and gratitude long after her own course of earthly service is ended. May that day, however, be far remote.

Older readers of this journal must be tolerably familiar with the many-sided work which radiates from that happily-named East End centre, "The Home of Industry." But a new generation has grown up since this colony of working bees began to gather the honey of loving help and earnest testimony from the somewhat unpromising fields of East-London slumdom. Even those outsiders who know best can scarcely realise without specially acquired knowledge the far-reaching scope of the ministrations of our devoted sister and her helpers. It may be well, therefore, in this and several succeeding sketches to set down, if only in brief outline, the chief features of a mission which embraces both sexes, and all ages of dwellers in the teeming East End, and which has had a marvellous reflex influence on work done for God and humanity in many distant parts of the earth. The enumeration of the leading branches of the work will be a fitting prelude to more detailed accounts, and must in itself excite a deeply sympathetic interest. These departments may be thus set in order:—

(1) Gospel effort among all and sundry.
(2) Infant Sunday-school classes.
(3) Rescue and emigration of destitute children.
(4) Sunday classes for boys and girls.
(5) Night school for lads.
(6) Sewing classes and other agencies for young women in factories.
(7) Adult Sunday classes.
(8) Mothers' meetings.
(9) Meetings specially for widows.
(10) Visitation of the poor and of lodging houses.
(11) Flower mission to hospitals.
(12) Colportage work.
(13) Training of lady workers.
(14) Mission to railway gate-keepers.

This long list is not at all exhaustive, but sufficiently indicates the trunk lines out of which diverge many lesser side-lines of service on behalf of those who need the Gospel of love and help.

PREACHING IN BIRD FAIR.

In her evangelistic work Miss Macpherson has anticipated Mr. Moody's famous solution of the problem, "How to reach the masses—go to them." She begins at Jerusalem; which in this case is "Bird Fair." If it be true that one half the world does not know how the other half lives, it is equally true that one half of London is ignorant of the way in which the other half spends the Sunday. London on the Sabbath is another city from what it appears to be on the six working days. Many thoroughfares which from Monday to Saturday are full of moving traffic, are then given over to comparative desertion and silence; others, in defiance of the law, are turned into busy marts. Of the latter order are the streets abutting from Bethnal Green-road which comprise what is known as Bird Fair. As to the history of this strange institution it is needless for present purposes to inquire. As it exists in the present day it is much more than an open-air exchange for traffic in canaries, larks, finches, and other feathered songsters. These are still the staple articles of sale or barter; but dogs, pigeons, parrots, fowls, and rabbits, not to speak of goats, hedgehogs, and we know not what beside, are here exposed for sale. Shops of many kinds are open in Slater-street, Brick-lane, etc., and there are all the concomitants of a miscellaneous market. Loafers who come to spend an idle hour or two, mingle with the crowd of sellers and buyers, and altogether it is a curious, motley throng, made up almost exclusively of men and lads.

Into this Babel of Sabbath-breakers Miss Macpherson and her helpers have descended week after week for years past. Be the day wet or fine, it matters not. There are two preaching points, one at either end of the fair, under the Brick-lane and Wheeler-street arches of the Great Eastern Railway. There, amid the noise of the passing traffic, the chaffering of the fair, and the rumble of railway-trains overhead, these heralds of the Cross take their stand and deliver their messages. The audiences are shifting, and not local in any sense, for those who frequent the Fair come from all parts of London. A goodly proportion of them are hulking fellows, who go bird-snaring during the week and foregather here on Sunday mornings, each with a cage under his arm, seeking to dispose of their ill-gotten wares.

If the sympathetic reader had visited the Fair with me on a recent Sunday morning, he would have been greatly interested, as I was. Let me try and give (to use an appropriate metaphor) a bird's-eye view of the scene as it presented itself on one of the brightest Sabbath mornings of this bright springtime. As I walked leisurely down Cheapside going eastwards, that otherwise deserted thoroughfare seemed given over to successive shoals of cyclists careering towards the west, en route for some suburban resort. Reaching Slater-street before eleven, I found the Fair in full blast, though additions to the crowd came dropping in for some time after. About eleven Miss Macpherson's workers divided into two bands, one taking up a position under the Brick-lane arch, and the other in Wheeler-street, at the western extremity of the crowd. Miss Macpherson and some other lady workers threaded their way through the closely-packed streets, distributing pictorial Gospel leaflets, and speaking a word of counsel as occasion offered. With almost no exception these silent monitors were kindly and courteously received, some promising to read them. At Brick-lane I found Mr. Edward Merry in command, with two harmoniums to lead the song. A considerable company stood around, many of whom seemed transfixed by the hearty singing of the hymns. What an unpriced boon to evangelists is these bright and telling Gospel songs in Mr. Sankey's collection. Many a listless ear is reached by the message of salvation in song that would never be opened to the spoken word. Weak voices are rather at a discount in these noisy streets, but practice in outside speaking and singing improves the tone and timbre wonderfully. Mr. Edward Merry has developed a voice of surprising power. It was a sight to see how the people listened with ears and eyes and mouth as he rang out in a penetrating tenor the urgent notes of the hymn—

> Behold Me standing at the door,
> And hear Me pleading evermore,
> Say, weary heart, oppressed with sin,
> May I come in? May I come in?

Prayer followed the song, and then came exhortation illustrated with striking incident—all well calculated to arrest the attention and create soul concern. The congregation was a shifting one, more or less, but I noticed that some were rivetted to the spot, and drank in eagerly the hot and rousing words of the young preacher. Jewish and other women passed to and fro from their morning's marketing, and to most of these Miss Macpherson did not fail to speak some kindly word of advice or warning.

After spending a little time at Brick-lane I once more traversed the fair, with Miss Macpherson as pilot, and then we joined the band at Wheeler-street, where Mr. James Merry was earnestly and experimentally exhorting an audience that was as attentive as the most sensitive pulpiteer could wish. Here also were two harmoniums played by lady workers, and, in addition, a family group of violinists—a father with three of his children. This good man, a tradesman in the neighbourhood, has taught his olive-branches to play the violin, and they regularly support the workers at these Sabbath-morning open-air gatherings. While Mr. Joseph Merry and his two sons are the unfailing mainstay of the Bird Fair preaching, there are many earnest and able helpers who place themselves at Miss Macpherson's disposal, and give Gospel addresses or personal testimonies as desired. They come from different religious associations; for of course in the Bird Fair work no names are known except the Name that is above every name.

One of the helpers who spoke on the Sabbath of my visit was a young man who is himself a trophy of grace, gained through the work at Bird Fair. A few particulars as to his conversion and subsequent career will better illustrate the blessed fruits of these efforts than anything else I could give the reader. Some four or five years ago this young man, who was then in training for a prizefight, chanced to stroll along Bird Fair way, to pass an idle morning. He sauntered to the edge of the little crowd that was listening to the preaching. Mr. Joseph Merry was at the moment occupying the stand, and his appeals went home, to use the young man's own pugilistic phrase, "like staggering blows." Next to speak was Ned Wright, under whose recitals of prison life and straight square talk about evil-doing and its consequences, this young man was fairly "knocked over." He knew something practically of what the evangelist was describing, and, though altogether unaccustomed to such talk, he felt its truthfulness and left the Fair a convicted sinner. The encounter for the championship for which he had been in training, was to come off the following Wednesday, but the visit to Bird Fair had taken all the fight out of him. As his backers had risked money on him, he was in a quandary as to how he should get out of his engagement. With the new vista of life that had dawned on him, he knew, however, that he should inevitably lose. When Wednesday came, instead of appearing in the prize-ring, he was found on his knees entreating God that He would reveal Himself as a pardoning God and Saviour.

To cut short a story that is full of tragic human interest, I may say that this young man yielded himself to God, and was back at Bird Fair next Sunday to tell of the marvellous change which had come to him. He passed through some severe vicissitudes of trial after his conversion, but God kept him true, and now he is one of the most acceptable speakers at the Fair. The way in which he held the closest attention of the motley audience of men the other Sunday morning was clear proof that God has anointed him for the service of testimony among his fellows.

Space forbids me to enlarge further on this deeply interesting department of the work circling around the Home of Industry. It is, so to speak, a happy hunting ground for souls, and is, of course, a feeder of the other branches of the work. I had purposed referring in this sketch to the many engagements of the Sunday afternoon and evening at the Home of Industry, but that must be deferred to a future issue.

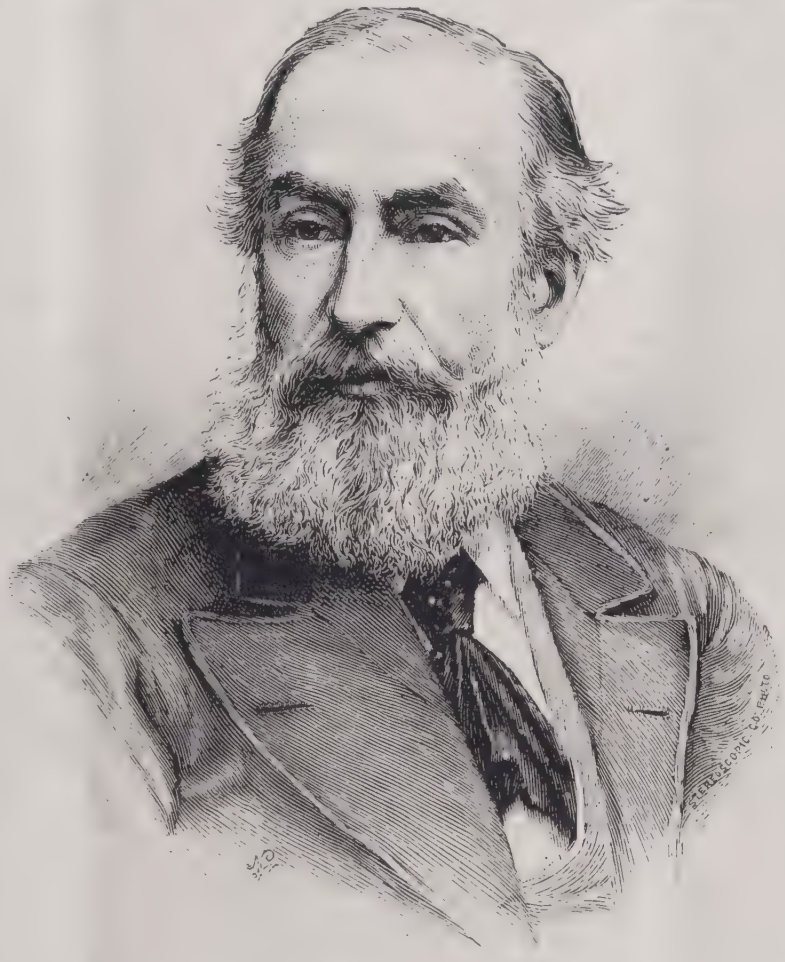
THE PUTNEY CRECHE.

Many poor women in this district working in the laundries are compelled to leave their little ones all day alone or in the care of some incapable person. Finding this need some ladies opened several years ago at 82, Gardner's-lane, a crèche, which has been highly appreciated. More than 3000 attendances were registered last year, and many of the children now attending have been almost brought up there. The Inspector of Health, when he visited the crèche, said that he had never seen a better-conducted institution; and in fact the absence of epidemics at the crèche, in such a neighbourhood, testifies to the watchful care of the matron, a motherly Christian woman, who, having lived before her marriage as nurse in a gentleman's family, is experienced and very particular as to cleanliness, etc.

But all this costs money, and the crèche is dependent on its friends for its maintenance. The money the children bring in does not quite pay half what it costs to keep them.

It would be a sad day for the babies, and their mothers too, if this institution had to be closed for lack of the needful money to carry it on. Thirty or forty pounds a year more than the present income would place the Putney Crèche beyond the reach of financial anxiety. Communications should be made to Miss Redford, Crest House, Putney, S.W.

SAILORS' BOOK MISSION.—The ladies who carry on this mission state in their report that 934 sailors' bags (with books) and 513 Gospel bags have been distributed throughout the year. Ladies willing to help by making bags or sending books, tracts, or other gifts, should write to the secretary, Mrs. J. C. Harris, Hillside, Hampton-road, Redland, Bristol.



The Late CHARLES MORTON SAWELL,

OF THE LONDON CITY MISSION.

THE nineteenth century will be distinguished as the century of Christian organisations. Its first half saw the rise and development of many of the great religious societies whose anniversaries are being held during this month of May. In 1835 the London City Mission was formed at a little cottage beside the canal that runs through the north-eastern part of the Metropolis. At an obscure cottage beside that humble stream on an early morning, three men knelt in prayer to God, and rising from their knees said, "We three form the London City Mission." One of the three was the great Christian organiser, the young Scotchman, David Nasmyth.

The new society soon developed under the guidance of its first clerical secretary, Rev. John Garwood, and eighteen years after its establishment there entered its office a young theological student fresh from New College, Hampstead. The name of that young Christian man was Charles Morton Sawell. A severe illness, a too active brain, and an extremely fragile frame, had unfitted him for the strain of public work. He threw himself enthusiastically and unsparingly into the organisation of the Mission, and lived to see it develop into one of the best agencies for the evangelisation of London. To do this he had to work behind the scenes, to be at the desk rather than on the platform, to arrange for the publicity of other men, whilst he continued in the shade; to work hours and hours at the office, whilst others basked in the sunshine of popularity and favour. But he realised that

> All work is good and each is best,
> As most it pleaseth Thee;
> Each worker pleases, when the rest
> He serves with charity;
> And neither man nor work unblest,
> Will God permit to be.

(From a Photograph by the Stereoscopic Company, 54, Cheapside, E.C.)

Charles Morton Sawell was born at Tooting, in Surrey, from whence his parents soon after removed to Esher, in the same county. He served the Lord from his youth. At the age of fifteen, through the devout reading of the Sacred Volume, he gave himself unreservedly to the work of God. His great desire was to be a missionary to heathen lands; but the heathen of England's million-peopled city were to be his care. For the poor of Whitechapel, Poplar, Bethnal Green, and the Borough of Southwark he lived and laboured. London was ever on his heart and on his tongue. He was ever talking of the masses of the Metropolis. He was the fast friend of every London City Missionary. For them he cared as no other one man has done. The holiday fund, the seaside homes at Folkstone, Ventnor, and Weston-super-Mare are largely the outcome of his thought and effort. He was anxious that every City Missioner should have a City Mission room, and he often told the writer that he would never rest satisfied until this was accomplished.

In the work of the London City Mission Mr. Sawell found a sphere for his unusual abilities. Its Catholic basis, its unswerving adherence to the eternal verities of the Evangelical faith, its arrangement by which various classes of the artisan and labouring population are visited, not only in the spheres of their daily calling, but from house to house and room to room, secured his warm adhesion. Much of his time was taken up, during the years he spent at the City Mission House, in organising missions to foreigners, to Jews, to sailors, to postmen, to policemen, to public-houses, to cabmen and omnibus-men and stablemen, and to various other trades and occupations. He was always holding meetings, or writing letters or appeals, on behalf of the various branches of the work.

In 1859 he called a conference of Christian leaders, which resulted in forming the United Committee for holding special religious services in theatres, halls, and mission rooms in London. This work has continued for thirty-four winters, and during the winter just closed the blessing has even been more marked than in any previous season. When the services were first commenced the novelty of holding religious meetings in places of public entertainment evoked severe criticism, particularly from the secular press. Its promoters were caricatured in the public prints; but the movement is now acknowledged by every section of the Christian Church. It at once secured the warmest support of the late Lords Shaftesbury and Kinnaird, Sir R. N. Fowler, Sir Wm. MacArthur, Sir Francis Lycett, Mr. R. C. L. Bevan, Mr. Samuel Morley, Mr. George Moore, Mr. Thomas Scrutton, and others. All these gentlemen passed to their eternal rest and reward before Mr. Sawell, and have no doubt welcomed him into heaven.

During the past winter, Mr. Sawell's activities were as great as ever. Night after night he attended at the various City Mission stations, cheering the hearts and upholding the hands of humble mission toilers. Only a few weeks since he said to the writer, when walking with him in a narrow street in Whitechapel, "I have been pacing these East End streets for more than forty years; I wonder when I am to cease walking them, to walk in the streets of the New Jerusalem."

He was unceasing in his labours. He would not believe he was getting old or needed rest, although a weariness and pallor was often observed on his countenance by his friends.

On the Thursday after Easter he was at the office in Bridewell-place for the last time. His appearance greatly alarmed his fellow-officers, and only on their most urgent entreaty did he consent to go home to his residence at Notting Hill. After four days of continuous pain and delirium, he passed away, soon after the close of the earthly Sabbath (April 9), to that Saviour he loved and served, and to that Sabbath which has no end.

His face and familiar form will be sadly missed at Bridewell-place; but he rests from his labours, and his works do follow him. The memorial service at Kensington Chapel will not soon be forgotten. Nearly five hundred missionaries and officers of the City Mission, and two hundred other friends and supporters, filled the floor of that large sanctuary. Strong men wept at the loss of a true and brave comrade. The reading of Scripture and the prayer by the young pastor, Rev. C. Silvester Horne, M.A., were most appropriate; the singing of the hymns by the voices of City Missionaries was very effective. Tributes of affection were offered by Rev. T. C. Udall and Captain Lowe, co-workers. Mr.

Geo. Nokes, of the Pavilion Theatre services, closed the service with prayer.

At Hanwell on a beautiful spring day, amidst the singing of birds and the springing of flowers, the tired worker was laid to rest.

Now the labourer's task is o'er,
Now the battle's day is past,
Now upon the farther shore
Lands the voyager at last.
Father, in thy gracious keeping,
Leave we now thy servant sleeping.

Helps for Teachers and Preachers.

The Biblical Illustrator—Hebrews, Vol. I. Rev. J. Exell's marvellous collection of homiletic and expository matter on the various books of the Bible proceeds apace. Here are 650 full pages on the first eight chapters of the Epistle to the Hebrews; and if in any sense the volume differs from its predecessors in the series, it is in the greater length of the outlines and summaries of discourses. The pages are a mine of suggestion for busy preachers and teachers. (7s. 6d. Nisbet.)

The Sermon Bible: Colossians—James. (7s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton.) This is the eleventh volume of a large undertaking, and includes portions of Scripture that are peculiarly attractive and important to the preacher. On the Epistle to the Hebrews alone nearly two hundred pages of outlines and references to published discourses are given, and the other Epistles comprised in the division are illustrated by a large number of homiletic summaries. The selections are as varied as the tastes of preachers, and contributions are presented from quite recent sermonic literature. Another volume will complete the series, and place within the reach of generous patrons of the pulpit a handsome and useful set of volumes, suitable for presentation to hard-worked pastors.

The People's Bible: Discourses upon Holy Scripture. Vol. xx., Mark and Luke. By Joseph Parker, D.D. (Hazell, Watson, & Viney. 7s. 6d.) These discourses on the New Testament are quite equal to those on the Old, pregnant, suggestive, incisive, evangelical. We know few books more useful to a young preacher. Many look for the successive volumes with eagerness, and read them with enjoyment. We quote one brief passage: "Read the Sermon on the Mount, and say, Where is the evangelical truth? It is precisely here that a profound mistake is often made by men. Let any man try to carry out literally and morally the Sermon on the Mount, and he will soon find where the evangelical element is. Let a man set himself, when he is smitten on the one cheek, to turn the other also, patiently and nobly, and he will soon begin to inquire for the Cross of Christ. . . . In all our endeavours to carry out a truly noble and heavenly life, we feel that we cannot take one step in the process without knowing Christ alike in the fellowship of his sufferings, and the power of his resurrection."

The Oxford Bible for Teachers* is an edition which many studious Christians have reason to admire and value. Beautifully printed and well bound, these issues of God's Word leave nothing to be desired; while the appended "Helps," covering a very wide field, give the most reliable information as to the history and authenticity of the various sections of what has, with peculiar appropriateness, been styled "The Divine Library." We welcome with special pleasure the publication of a new edition of the "Oxford," with revised and illustrated "Helps" much more compendious and diversified than hitherto. All points of Biblical study—analytical, critical, chronological, historical, and geographical—are treated in an eminently satisfactory manner, the whole being digested with commendable accuracy and succinctness. The book is thoroughly up to date in point of learning, and one of its greatest excellences, in our judgment, is that it takes little or no account of the vagaries of destructive criticism or the views of unbelieving speculation. In every sense the present edition is an improvement upon its predecessors, many scholars of distinction having had a share in the work. There are over sixty engravings of documents and monuments connected with the Bible story, a number of excellent maps, a full subject-index to the entire Scriptures, and a very serviceable concordance. For preachers, teachers, and students in general this is a veritable treasury of knowledge. In due course Bibles of various sizes will be issued with the enlarged "Helps." Already an octavo edition has been published in bold minion type—ordinary paper from 7s. 6d., thin India paper from 13s. 6d. upwards, according to binding. The Helps* have been issued separately in 8vo, printed in long-primer type, from 4s. 6d. upwards. (Henry Frowde, Oxford University Press Warehouse.)

The Old Testament and the New Criticism. By Alfred Blomfield, D.D., Bishop Suffragan of Colchester. (5s. Elliot Stock.) A considerable portion of this little volume has already appeared in serial publications. The boastful claims and confident assertions of critics are examined in a common-sense manner; and the "scientific" method and its results shown to be unreliable and profitless.

Barnabas; or, The Great Renunciation, by G. Buchanan Ryley. (1s. 6d. Religious Tract Society.) The New Testament tells us but little of the Son of Exhortation, but what it does say has been worked up by Mr. Ryley into a very readable and instructive monograph. The secondary title is suggested by the fact related in Acts iv. 37, "Barnabas having land, sold it, and brought the money, and laid it at the Apostles' feet."

The Path of the Redeemed. Sermons by Rev. A. Moody Stuart, D.D. (Edinburgh: Macniven & Wallace.) A worshipper, some years ago, in Free St Luke's Church, Edinburgh, took notes of several of the sermons; and, in the retirement of old age, Dr. Moody Stuart has, in compliance with the desire of friends, prepared them for the Press, adding a discourse which he delivered before the General Assembly in 1876. Those who enjoyed any portion of the author's fifty years' ministry will hear his voice again as they peruse these pages, which, while they have a message for all who may read them, are specially calculated to promote peace and joy in the souls of those who have tasted of redeeming grace.

Principles of Biblical Criticism. By Rev. J. J. Lias, M.A. (3s. 6d. Eyre & Spottiswoode.) This new volume of the "Bible Student's Library" is a popular statement of important facts and principles. There is a useful description of textual criticism in regard to Old and New Testaments, and an impartial account of the higher criticism. The point of view is that of a Christian scholar and believer in Scripture revelation. There is not much that is new in the book, the object of which is, rather, to outline the contents of many works on inspiration and the canon, the text of Scripture, and the evidences of its integrity. We do not follow Mr. Lias in some of his views, and do not think the time has arrived for such concessions as Evangelical writers are wont to make; but, nevertheless, we thank him for the assistance he has rendered to the exact study of Scripture, and the exposure he has furnished of the irreligious character of much that passes under the name of criticism.

Nature, The Supernatural, and the Religion of Israel. By the late Josiah Gilbert. (9s. Hodder & Stoughton.) Mrs. Gilbert edits this work, upon which her husband was engaged when he died last summer. It is the outcome of prolonged thought, and is an attempt to correlate, from the artist's standpoint, the phenomena of nature, the significance of human life, and the supernatural as historically illustrated all down the ages. The foundations of the Christian faith are shown to lie deeper than the negative critics imagine; and the truth of the Scripture story is supported by unexpected arguments. In a chapter on "the Arena of the Supernatural," the author quotes Delitzsch's remark that "the resurrection of Christ is the Ariadne thread to lead out of the labyrinth of Old Testament criticism," and says of the record of the religion of Israel:—"Stopping short of the consummation in Christ, it would be anomalous and perplexing; the climax clears all. It is the climax of a history; the climax of a doctrine; the climax of a supernatural revelation. We call it a history, but it is rather a drama, with a plot running through ages of time, and a dénouement which gathers up the whole into one vivid crisis of suffering and of glory." The book surveys the Bible story from beginning to end, and will be specially valued by those who study the evidences of Christianity.

The Protestant Alliance, 9, Strand, W.C., has issued a timely pamphlet on Convents (2d.) Some of its collected facts should startle into serious concern those who view with cold indifference the multiplication of Romish institutions in our land.

Mr. W. G. Wheeler, 21a, Warwick-lane, E.C., has brought out an ingenious little article called Gasking's "Seek and Find" Scripture Roller (6d.) It consists of a wooden cylinder, round which revolve seven cardboard rings, on each of which are printed twenty-four words. Children will be well occupied in adjusting these words to the formation of texts of Scripture.

Letters to the Editor.

DR. BARNARDO'S HOMES

Sir,—It was my privilege, a day or two ago, to be one of a party of members of the Hampstead Young Helpers' League visiting Dr. Barnardo's Stepney Homes, and though I was to an extent conversant with the various ramifications of the work, still it proved, I may say, to us all a great revelation of a noble and Christ-like work.

It would be impossible to enumerate briefly the many branches of the work (all tending to one end), but I would strongly urge your readers to take the first opportunity of seeing for themselves exactly what the magnificent work known as "Dr. Barnardo's Homes" really means.

Such a visit would never be forgotten, and would have a dual effect: first, of stirring up sympathisers into greater zeal and interest for the cause, and to those who, for various reasons, are at present holding aloof, it would unconsciously draw them into active and financial sympathy.

People sometimes ask whether "Christianity is played out," but I rather think that such can never be the case so long as there exists a blessed combination of true faith and works, as exemplified in the noble Doctor's work amongst the poor and outcast children of our land.

Yours obediently, Chas. M. Schomberg, Jun.

COLPORTAGE AT EASTBOURNE.

Dear Sir,—The colporteurs in the Eastbourne branch of the Christian Colportage Association for England have, for over ten years, during the season (August and September) had a stall on the beach for the sale of Scripture and Christian literature. Thousands of Bibles and Christian books have been bought by visitors and residents.

Last year towards the close of the season the Eastbourne Town Council issued notices that permission must be obtained from them for placing stalls, etc., on the beach. Application was accordingly made, but permission was refused, and the stall was consequently removed.

Many of our townspeople have expressed great regret at the removal of the stall, and it is proposed to approach the Town Council again with a request for permission to place it on the beach during next August and September when the children's services are held, and a petition to the Town Council is being prepared, to which the signatures of several of the clergy and ministers of the town have been obtained.

My object in writing this is to ask any visitors to Eastbourne, who have appreciated the stall, kindly to support us by writing to me to that effect as soon as possible, as the application must go in to the Town Council in time for their meeting on the first Monday in June. This would be most valuable help, as the wishes of visitors naturally carry great weight.

Yours truly, J. W. Reid.

The May Meetings.

The Orphan Working School.

AT the anniversary dinner in aid of the institution, held on Friday evening, Lord BATTERSEA, who presided, said that the school was one of the oldest, and ought to be one of the very best known in this great city. Its age extended long beyond the century—he thought he was right in saying that it was nearly a century and a half old. Like many another institution which started in a small way, it had now become one of the most important of the many important schools. Thirty years ago only twenty boys were educated at the schools, but to-day no less than 630 children were receiving the benefits of the institution.

In 1877 a commodious orphanage was started under the auspices of the Prince and Princess of Wales at Hornsey Rise, where at the present time 200 small children were located, and where they were taught everything which was required in the present day to make a boy or a girl worthy of the generation in which they lived and of the nation to which they belonged. At the age of nine they were drafted from the child-life of Hornsey into the more advanced life of Haverstock Hill, and there they received all the advantages of a modern education, and were instructed how to become good citizens of a great country. At Haverstock Hill 600 children were being day by day trained in the way in which they should go, to fight in the battle of life. No boy or girl left the school without a fitting situation having been found for him or her, and by this means much good work was done.

Last year they obtained £4000 to pay off an extraordinary debt which had been incurred in order that the place might be put in a perfect sanitary state, and made what it now was—the centre of light, of learning, and of health. At the present time they had a debt hanging over them of £5000, and for that reason he asked his hearers to contribute generously towards the funds. He pointed out that many boys and girls who had been educated at the school were now occupying respectable positions in society through the beneficence of former supporters, and he earnestly begged them not to allow the good work which was being done to suffer for want of funds.

Church Missionary Society.

SEVERAL meetings were held on Monday and Tuesday last in connection with the Church Missionary Society. The principal gatherings were on the latter day, in the morning of which Exeter Hall was crowded, while a large "overflow" assemblage listened to addresses in St. James's Hall.

The general review of the year's operations, which Rev. R. LANG read at Exeter Hall, was interesting from beginning to end. It opened with the statement that the interests of foreign and home missions are inseparable; and while praising God for blessings vouchsafed on the inadequate efforts of Christ's servants to spread his name among the heathen, expressed thankfulness to know that the friends of Evangelical truth are urging an aggressive forward movement to combat the irreligion which abounds in our own land. After a survey of the field from Japan to North-west America, specially dealing with the Chinese, Indian, and African fields, there was an appeal for more men, and a plea for a larger place for missions in the prayers and interest of Christian people.

Sir JOHN KENNAWAY, M.P., who presided, concluded a hearty address by some remarks on present opportunity. He said: Everywhere the call is for men, aye, and women too—men of consecrated culture for aggressive work among the higher schools of thought; men of less attainments, but full of love for Christ, and a burning desire to save souls, as evangelists, teachers, artisans, ready to go forth. The Medical Mission is a distinct feature. There is room for all. The calls of Africa, East, West, Central, the millions of China, the intellectual and scientific aspirations of Japan, North-West America, and the unsatisfied needs of India—those young men whose faith has been destroyed by our education, and who as yet have got nothing to put in its place—all raise their voices and cry, "Come over and help us." And what shall be the answer of England, rich in wealth, proud in imperial position, great in power—what shall be the answer but "The fields are white; shall we not send the reapers to enter in and gather the harvest?" The opportunity is ours to-day: it may pass away, never to return. We have the wealth now; it may take to itself wings and fly away. The living agents are to our hands—thousands of young men and women, earnest workers for Christ at home, whose places could be filled here—what hinders them from going forth!

Bishop BARRY delivered a powerful address, dealing for the most part with India, in which he has recently made a tour. He said: What is our highest duty to God in respect to India? It is to impart the moral and spiritual gifts which we owe, in the name of Christ, to the inhabitants of India. In earlier days English rulers in India seemed ashamed of the name of Christ, and the people of India believed that we had no religion at all. This shows what arrears we have to make up, and what a little we have done in this great work. But yet there has been poured forth a marvellous blessing. The population is increasing, but the Christian population is increasing, I think, some sixfold beyond the general increase. We have much to do, but within the last twenty-five years there has been an increase such as has hardly been known upon the earth since the days of the Apostles themselves. We are going on with the work, and, in spite of hindrances, want of faith, and the wretched religious differences, which are a cause of scoffing on the part of the heathen, the opportunity is there, and that opportunity has been wonderfully made use of to do an enormous work in India.

It was my privilege in various centres to deliver lectures, at which I had from 500 to 1000 in the audience of English-speaking natives—many of the highest class—and I was enabled to give my testimony with perfect openness. I was permitted to speak in the presence of the agnosticism that is now largely professed, and I was allowed to declare that Christian morality as a living power could never be dissociated from Christian truth. And in all this I was listened to with marked attention, and even some difficult trains of reasoning were followed with a kind of delight by those audiences of the higher and more intelligent classes of the people. There are scores of thousands of educated men who have gone out to important positions in India, all having appreciated a certain amount of Christian truth, and all having gained at least some reflection of Christian morality. I believe that in this we have a great underground preparation, as it were, for the future, and that when the time comes—and it will come in God's good time—that which is now below the surface will rise to the light of day, and we shall find that we have not been labouring without result, knowing that yesterday, to-day, and for ever, is as one to the Lord Jesus Christ and his Gospel.

Mr. J. MONRO, C.B., spoke of work in Lower Bengal, in which the greater part of his life has been spent. He said that at the present moment the vast majority of educated Hindus have abandoned their old superstitions. They are not crying out for Christianity, but for something better than their discarded fancies and agnosticism, and atheism. There is a most remarkable movement among the women, who, after once hearing the Gospel, implore the lady missionaries to teach them more of the marvellous and wonderful words. The door is wide open, but how is the Church at home embracing the opportunities presented? In conclusion, the speaker was very direct in his appeal, saying: Why do so many of you come here and listen to what missionaries say, instead of going out and sharing the difficulties of their life? Why stop at home and hear the accounts of the battle, instead of going forward into the fighting line, which is sore beset, and very gravely in need both of recruits and reinforcements? It may be wise, it may be prudent, it may be consistent with a limited interest in mission work; but is that obeying the command of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ? Put it to yourselves, and answer it honestly in the sight of God.

Rev. T. WALKER, of Tinnevelly, gave instances of the encouragements which missionaries have in their labours. Rev. H. TUGWELL, from Yoruba, spoke of work in West Africa, and was followed by Rev. ISAAC OLUWOLE, who was greeted with much warmth as a future native bishop of the Niger.

Rev. H. B. MACARTNEY, of Melbourne, in some earnest words said:—You are possessing Christ. You have got the secret of his mighty blood, which gave God power to act in mercy towards guilty sinners; just, although the Justifier; the blood that clears the conscience, the blood that sanctifies the soul. How many people, how many nations, have you sprinkled with that cleansing element that has its mighty virtue still? Mr. EUGENE STOCK concluded a great meeting with a few searching words.

In the evening Bishop BICKERSTETH, of Japan, presided over another crowded meeting, which was addressed by Revs. J. S. Hill, Bishop-Designate of the Niger, Ruttonji Nowroji (formerly a Parsee), E. J. Peck (a labourer among the Esquimaux) and others.

Wesleyan Missionary Society.

THE annual meeting of the Wesleyan Missionary Society, which was held on Monday, last week, in Exeter Hall, was characterised by the customary warmth and enthusiasm. Rev. F. W. MACDONALD read the report, which opened with a reference to the revival of missionary interest in Methodist circles. It went on to sketch the widespread operations of the year, and recorded cheering progress in many fields. The total income was £127,000, an increase of £1,900 upon the year.

Mr. R. W. PERKS, M.P., who presided, delivered a hearty address, in which he called attention to the fact that the native Christians in foreign lands contribute towards mission work in a proportion equal to the home churches. Referring to the opium traffic in India, he spoke of the commercial blunder of deriving revenue from such a source. Anything, he said, which tends to sap the commercial and physical strength and the mental energy of a people, and that tends to vitiate a nation, cannot be advantageous, but must bring commercial ruin. In schools and pulpits, in the Press and on the platform, the evils by which India is oppressed must be exposed and condemned.

Rev. Dr. RIGG, president of the Conference, compared the meetings to-day with those of fifty years ago. There may be some diminution in the unique character, interest, and feeling which attaches to the meetings. But taking all things into account, there is circulating amongst Methodist people a deep tide of feeling that grows from year to year. There have been hindrances, mistakes, and unintended rivalries; there has been a little weariness, because God's plans are not our plans. But, the speaker proceeded, more and more every year we are getting to understand what the counsels of Providence are like in regard to the conversion of the world, and patiently, firmly, abidingly to wait on God, doing his work, and never wearying whilst He does not weary, but has patience from age to age. That is the temper, that is the spirit, I believe, which is growing more and more amongst the supporters of Christian missions, not only in our own church, but in all the churches of Christ in this land and in other lands.

Dwelling upon the work, the speaker said: We never were so successful in the heathen field in the whole history of Methodism as we are to-day. There never was so much good being done that means spiritual power, deep conviction, thrilling energy, the influence of the Holy Ghost—there never was so much good in connection with our church as is being done to-day, and we never had such a band of disciplined, skilled, devoted missionaries, many of them masters of the science and philosophy which belong to mission work, especially amongst the ancient races on the Indian and Chinese continents. Let us ask ourselves whether we are worthy of such representatives on the field, whether we are worthy of such labourers. Let us ask ourselves whether we are doing all that ought to be done. It is in point of practice, in point of home organisation, where we fail; not in home intelligence, not in home interest when appealed to, but in home organisation bringing such knowledge as this to the minds of all our people, and therefore bringing to them the opportunity of contributing largely and lovingly to our cause.

Rev. THOMAS COOK told the story of his mission tour in South Africa, where he preached by interpretation to the Kaffirs, with results that were reported at the time. He said that though he spoke upon the law written on the conscience, and the certainty of future recompense, nothing moved the people like the story of the Cross, whereat the audiences wept aloud. He found the fields white unto the harvest, and now thanked God for sending him to South Africa.

Mr. DIGBY F. SHILLINGTON having avouched Ireland's interest in the work, Rev. G. W. OLVER delivered an address, in which he described his recent visit to the mission stations in India and Ceylon. In conclusion, speaking to young men in training for the ministry, he said: There is not a grander work anywhere than that in India; and if the Missionary Committee were only to tell me that they believed I could serve the cause, I would go to India again. Such is my conviction, that not only is there a great movement going on outside the Christian churches, but that the power of God ere long will come down upon that mighty empire.

Rev. Owen Watkins related his experiences in pioneer work in the Dark Continent. He was followed by Rev. Joseph A. Elliott, of Faizabad, who told many stories of work in India.

Miss Weston's Work for Sailors.

A meeting was held at Exeter Hall last week, when Miss Weston, whose labours amongst the sailors of the Royal Navy are so well known, delivered an address, in which she gave an interesting account of her work. After detailing the origin of the work, the speaker said that a branch of the Royal Naval Temperance Society was now to be found on every vessel of the Navy all the world over, and one in every six sailors in the Royal Navy and Coastguard Service is a total abstainer. The Merchant Seamen were not forgotten, and 72,000 of the periodicals were circulated last year amongst them, but of course the Royal Navy called for special attention.

Last year Ashore and Afloat circulated to the extent of 380,670 copies, and The Monthly Letter enjoyed a circulation of 529,682 copies. Pleasing testimony was constantly being received of the acceptableness of these periodicals, and their welcome by the men. She narrated a touching incident of the conversion of one sailor by a monthly letter called The White Ensign. The Sailors' Rests at Portsmouth and Devonport were a great success in every way, and were more than self-supporting. Last year at two Rests they had taken over the counters for tea, coffee, and light refreshments, in pence and sums of less than one shilling, no less than £11,578, and had lodged in comfortable beds 115,637 sleepers.

Miss Weston told how drunken sailors find their way to the Rests, or are "shipped" there by comrades—how attached some of those drunkards became to her—and how many of them had been reclaimed and become not only teetotallers, but good Christian men. She pointed out the immense influence sober and Christian sailors exercised by their presence in foreign lands, and how, when their life and conduct was seen, it must strengthen the hands of the missionaries abroad. She concluded by pleading earnestly for continued support, sympathy, and prayer.

South American Missionar Society.

The Archbishop of Dublin presided over the forty-second annual meeting of the South American Missionary Society on Tuesday last week. Interesting extracts from the report were read by Rev. R. J. Simpson, clerical secretary. There has been encouraging progress in the mission to the Indians of the Paraguayan Chaco, started four years ago. Mr. W. B. Grubb and his three able assistants, Mr. Bailey, Mr. Hay, and Mr. Pride, together with Mrs. Hay, have amply fulfilled the hopes entertained of their faithfulness, patience, and energy. Mrs. Hay's medical and surgical training has already been of signal use, and the committee anticipate a very bright future amongst the many tribes that inhabit that vast territory, hitherto utterly uncared-for. The influence which Mr. Grubb has justly acquired over the Indians of this territory has led the Paraguayan Government to appoint him "Pacificador del Chaco," while his genial kindness, united to his tact and firmness, has won the respect and affection of the Indians, by whom he is looked upon as a protector as well as a pastor. While the missionaries were encouraged to promote industry amongst the Indians, the committee were strenuously opposed to the society "ranching" or farming on its own account.

With regard to Lota it was stated that, though the civil war in Chili had happily come to a close, it had left sad traces which it would take years to efface. Rev. W. H. Elkin's unwearied ministrations and friendly offices have been a great stay and comfort to his people during this dark and dangerous time. Mr. Robertson was still labouring at Chanaral and Las Animas, where there were also to be found sad traces of the late civil war. As pastor and medical adviser, Rev. Dr. Humble is doing his best in Patagones. Not only English people, but many Danes and Germans have availed themselves of his ready and valuable advice and help. The Rev. H. Davies is carrying on a good and faithful work amongst the Welsh in the increasing colony of Chupat, Patagonia, and the spiritual work among the sailors at Buenos Ayres, Rosario, Rio, and Pernambuco has, under favour of God's good providence, signally prospered.

Addresses were delivered by Messrs. F. A. Bevan, Holmes White, Sydney Gedge, and the Bishop of the Falkland Isles.

British and Foreign Bible Society.

There was a large gathering in Exeter Hall on Wednesday morning last week, in celebration of the anniversary of the British and Foreign Bible Society. The abstract which was presented of the report of last year told of growing interest in Bible work in many lands, and showed how wonderfully the operations of the Society have developed during recent years. The outlay for 1892 was more than met by the income, and the large deficit substantially reduced. The circulation continues to increase, and has reached the total of 4,049,756 copies—over four million Bibles, Testaments, and portions.

The Earl of Harrowby, who presided, delivered an encouraging address, which he concluded by appealing to his hearers to exert themselves in the multiplication of Bible-readers. He said: Sometimes I think that our young people are not so much trained in the Bible now as formerly; sometimes I think that the holy texts are not so much taught in our schools and colleges; sometimes I have thought that the reading of the Bible was not so much part of the family habit as it was formerly. Well, if we want to help our great Bible Society for the good of the wide world—the greatest help we can give it is our prayers; and then we can make everybody within our reach more and more studiers, readers, and learners of the Sacred Book, to have more and more reverence for its truth, and therefore be more and more impressed with the infinite importance of circulating the Book amongst the nations of the earth.

The Bishop of Ripon enlarged upon the greatness of the ministry of the Semitic race, to whom "were committed the oracles of God." Having explained the work of the Prophets of Israel, and maintained that a similar function is to-day performed by the Bible, he urged reliance upon God rather than upon religious organisations. He proceeded: We must remember that deteriorating influences still exist; the dangers of going back are still amongst us, but the treasures of what I would call the moral and spiritual aspects of religion lie here within the covers of the Bible. In other words, if I want to bring my faith back to the purer faith and to a loftier sentiment and larger devotion, I will not read devotional manuals, for I believe the best devotional manual is the Bible, carefully and wisely studied. We have our temptations, and are a little disposed to substitute some other method than this in feeding our souls. We have still delusions, and I do not think these will be the means of forming strong, sterling, worthy Christians.

If there is ever to be a communion among the various denominations of Christians throughout the world, it can only come by the honest, patient, careful, reverent, determined, and unself-willed study of the Book of God. If there is ever to be in communities a high and lofty standard of civic duty and individual duty, and of the life which a man and a citizen ought to live among his fellows, then you can only have that by reverencing once more the Bible. Whatever else has been stolen from us, this remains, and no one has dared to place his hand upon the sacred ark. From the standpoint of the spiritual in the future, if you are still to supply that which would make the hearts of men and the spirits of men to lay hold of God, and the character of men, to ripen into His life, you must still give to them the Book which chronicles the life and reveals the love of the Eternal Father in Christ Jesus our Lord.

Rev. Dr. Glover spoke as a representative of the Baptist denomination. He said: I would like to accentuate the fact that the Bible Society aids missionaries in all fields, and that especially its work enters where missionaries cannot enter. Our missionaries have been driven out of Russian Mongolia. Your translations can still enter there. No English missionary would be admitted into Russia. Neither their orthodoxy nor their politics would permit him to stay there. But you have nearly one hundred labourers in the great Russian Empire, carrying light into the prisons of Siberia, and into the dark, comfortless hearts that rot in sorrow there. We have too little English missionary work in the islands of the Eastern Archipelago. Mohammedanism is there, but Christianity has hardly begun to touch the fringe of that very great demand. But your Society supplies to a considerable extent the lack of the service of the Church of Christ, and is carrying on a great work there. So in South America, so in the Islands of the Sea, so in many places where Christians do not go.

Emphasising the obligation of sending the light of God into the dark places of the earth, the speaker proceeded: It is not a question whether the heathen can do without the light. They have small glimmerings of it. We have the daylight, and we ought to give it to them. Some say that they will not receive it. I do not under-estimate the evil of heathen lands; I have seen it, and know its measure. But beneath and behind all this evil, remember, there is no land in which there are not seekers after God—no land in which there are not men that search for wisdom as for hidden treasure, and say, "Oh! that I knew where I might find Him." Carey's first converts were such—seekers after God. Our first converts in Africa were of that class. What wonderful work God has wrought through our missionaries in North China, where during sixteen years they have gathered in 2000 members; and probably half of these converts have been drawn from those who were worshipping the secret God, and seeking to know and do his will. No Christian missions have ever failed in the past, so far as I know; and when they seemed to have failed they have often become a permeating Christian influence, purifying and ennobling heathen thoughts, and evident in the higher conceptions of the people and in the higher aims by which they live.

Mr. Albert Spicer, M.P., representing the Congregationalist body, declared his warm sympathy with the work of the Society. He was followed by Mr. John Haffenden, the Society's agent for Malaysia, who, in the course of his address, said that region has a population of forty-five millions, among whom Scriptures are circulated in forty-five languages. Mohammedanism is the prevalent religion, but there has of late been a more respectful attitude towards the Bible.

Rev. H. B. Macartney, of Melbourne, eulogised the Bible, saying: Many of us believe that all Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and, outside errors of translation or of copying, we believe there is no mistake—that the Bible is sound as a book of geology, or chemistry, or astronomy, and of science altogether, just as it is sound as a book of morality or religion. My father has been reading the Bible and books about it, both of hostile and friendly criticism, for the greater part of a century, and his belief in the Word of God is more sound and fast to-day than ever it was. He says that everything, as Churchmen, as Protestants, and as believers, rests on our being firm and sure of our ground. Yes, we believe we have sound standing ground here; and I was glad to hear a venerable missionary say to-day, "It is not 'Thus said the Lord,' but 'Thus saith the Lord'"; for He has neither past nor future relation to Himself, but lives in an eternal present, and what He said thousands of years ago is just as true as ever it was. The first thing is believing in the Word, in its truth; and the next is circulating the Word. "Man doth not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God."

My father's mother trained him to read the Bible every morning at eight o'clock; and my father had all his children to read with him for twenty minutes every morning, and he catechised us, without missing a word, from Genesis to Revelation. That is part of the Divine command, "Teach it to thy children diligently." If we are to be full of God, we must be full of his Word; "if ye abide in Me, and my words abide in you"; "let the word of Christ dwell in you richly." If you are found to be one whose character is built on the Word of God, you will be a power in the world. It is a terrible thing to live in unbelief in the Holy Book "Better that man had not been born, who lives to doubt or lives to scorn."

The London City Mission.

IN the large Exeter Hall, Tuesday was devoted to foreign missions, Wednesday to Bible work at home and abroad, and Thursday to home missions as represented by the London City Mission. True, many warm friends must have grieved sorely when the financial statement showed a deficit of close upon £10,000. Surely this must arise from passing and temporary causes, and not from any slackening of interest in this great work. Whatever other plans be tried, the churches cannot afford to dispense with or weaken the house-to-house and door-to-door visitation of the London City Missionaries, reaching, as this does, thousands who otherwise would never hear the Gospel story, or have the necessity for personal salvation pressed upon their attention.

At the annual meeting of the City Mission, the hall was fairly well filled. After prayer by Canon Christopher, Rev. T. S. HUTCHINSON read a summary of the report, showing that the missionaries, numbering 483, made last year over three and a-half million visits, seeing nearly three hundred thousand sick and dying, holding some sixty-nine thousand meetings, resulting in the conversion of many, the adding to the Church of 2445 persons, the reclamation of 1867 drunkards, and the rescue of 500 fallen women. A careful survey of the report disclosed two special features of the work—first, that there was scarcely any form of vice, of sin, of error, with which the missionaries were not called on from time to time to grapple; and secondly, that when the work of any one missionary was summarised, it left on the mind the conviction that only by faithful constancy could so much have been achieved. The exact number of missionaries on the staff on March 31 was 485, that being thirteen less than on the same day in 1892. Financially there had been a decrease in receipts, the total for the general fund having been £50,597, a decrease of £8975. This was partly due to a decrease of £3792 in legacies.

The expenditure was also less than in the preceding year, but had reached a total of £60,333. The ordinary receipts of the Disabled Fund had been larger, and had reached £4491. An important feature of the work was that of missionaries to special classes, of whom there were 113, embracing such varieties as the North London scavengers, theatrical employés, gipsies, foreign sailors, Jews, and coalheavers. Indifference was met with everywhere, and was one of the evils hardest to remove. The poverty of many was appalling, and owing to the high rentals charged, people herded together; overcrowding was followed by immorality, disease, and death. With regard to intemperance, in districts not a few a decrease in drunkenness was reported. Gambling had sadly developed, not only among men, but among women and children. Infidelity, said the report, was not so strong and "barefaced" as once it was. Socialism was active, and ministers had the full weight of the hatred of those holding anarchist views. Theosophy now presented itself as a foe to the truth. Sabbath profanation was rife, and Roman Catholicism was also mentioned as a difficulty with which the missionaries had to deal.

Sir DOUGLAS FOX, who presided in place of Sir Edward Fry, took a hopeful view of the whole position. It was true that for the moment there seems a slackening of liberality, but the hand of God had been too manifestly shown in the whole history of the mission to permit of serious fears as to the future. The chairman, recalling something of his quarter of a century's experiences in the mission committee, made effective use of various incidents which had come under his own notice.

Rev. G. D. WYATT, the rector of Bermondsey, gave sound reasons for his love of the London City Mission. He regarded the house to house and room to room visitation as the most important and pressing work of the present day. It is, he confessed, monotonous, but while monotonous it is very blessed. Only thus is it possible for the story of God's love to reach the people. They will not come to church or chapel, and unless the good news be carried to them they will never hear of it. Illustrating this point, the speaker described a "prospecting" visit paid on the preceding Sunday to certain courts. In one he found 331 poor families, not twelve of whom even sent their children to Sunday school, let alone the very idea of going to church or chapel. The state of things found in other courts explored was of a similar kind. To get at such people the living agent must go to them with the love of God in his heart and the Book of God in his hand. After touching on various phases of the work, Mr. Wyatt showed how greatly God had blessed it, and how it had been the means of saving many hopeless and fallen. Hence the London City Mission had, he felt, peculiarly strong and pressing claims on the liberality and support of all Christians.

Sir MARK J. STEWART, Bart., M.P., urged the size and extent of London and its rapid growth—outreaching the capabilities of churches and chapels of every kind—as a proof of the necessity for the L.C.M. Further he dwelt on work of the special missionaries among special classes and under circumstances which tend to isolate them from all ordinary Gospel agencies.

Rev. PEDR WILLIAMS, in a racy and rousing speech, adduced strong grounds for his contention that the L.C.M. is one of the most important of our societies, and that, urgent as foreign missions certainly are, we simply dare not leave our own suffering population to perish, or starve the agencies which strive to carry to them the Gospel. Our home foes—intemperance, impurity, discontent, overcrowding, and the like—must be met by godly and earnest men with the Word of God in their hand and the love of God and of men in their hearts, else the result must spell ruin to our nation. In the course of his address Mr. Williams referred to Mr. Charles Booth's researches, as given in his recent volume on the life and labour of the people, showing the state of things among the poor and the need for loving Christian work. Our weapon in this great conflict is evangelisation, and that weapon cuts deeper than any other. By the help of the Holy Spirit we will labour until we change the infidel motto, "God is nowhere," into the rendering of it by the child, "God is now here."

Mr. HAXTON, missionary to the public-houses in Bermondsey, spoke next, and spoke well. He has a fine voice, and is full of fire and life and humour. His style of rendering some of the conversations at the bar was simply delightful, and during his speech more than one Pressman remarked that "A new John McNeill seems to have come south."

The Sunday School Union.

ON Thursday last a series of meetings was held in connection with the Sunday School Union. In the morning Dr. MONRO GIBSON presided over a conference, at which several practical questions were discussed. At an afternoon session, Alderman S. EDWARDS, of Birmingham, in the chair, reports were read of progress in Sunday School work. In the evening the annual meeting was held in Exeter Hall, which was crowded. Sir JAMES WHITEHEAD, M.P., President of the Union, occupied the chair. He said he believed in the Sunday School Union because it included all denominations, and was Evangelical. Mr. F. F. Belsey read a synopsis of the report, and stirring addresses were delivered by Rev. Dr. Glover, D.D. (of Bristol), Rev. W. J. Dawson (of Highbury), and Dr. Phillips (of India). During the evening the silver medals won in the recent teachers' local examinations throughout England were distributed, and the London Sunday School Cantata Choir and Orchestra rendered a programme of music.

Seamen's Christian Friend Society.

THE annual meeting of this society was held at Exeter Hall last Thursday, under circumstances gratifying in almost every particular. Mr. George Williams, the veteran president, occupied the chair. He gave the keynote of the meeting in a touching reference to the needs of sailors, and the claim they in particular had on all classes of the community.

Rev. G. J. HILL, secretary, gave a digest of the report for the year. This told of thousands of Gospel services at the society's various stations, missionary visiting of crews on shipboard and seamen at their boarding houses, the supply of good literature in the form of libraries and bags of books on ship-board, and an immense distribution of portions of Scriptures texts and Bibles in home or foreign languages. At each of the society's stations a rest and reading room is provided. In the course of next month the society will open the new Institute for Seamen, erected at a cost of about £6500, of which about £3000 had still to be raised. Unfortunately the year's expenditure has exceeded the income by £160, making the overdraft at the bankers' upwards of £1150.

Mr. W. S. Caine, M.P., Canon Barker, Rev. C. Leach, Mr. Maynard, and Rev. S. P. Townend, gave addresses in furtherance of the work.

Moravian Missions.

THE London Association in Aid of the Moravian Missions held its annual meeting on Thursday afternoon. Mr. S. GURNEY SHEPPARD, who presided, dwelt briefly on the glorious history of the Moravians, the first Protestant Mission Church, the most romantic, the most wide-reaching, the most devoted and deserving of all the churches of the present day.

Mr. G. E. ROBERTS read an outline of the Report, showing that progress and increased spiritual results have characterised every field, while in the two new missions in North Queensland and East Central Africa there have already been tokens of a coming shower of blessing. Details followed of the Leper Home at Jerusalem, the African Mission, the Australian Missions (to the Blacks), Greenland, Labrador, Alaska, Central Asia (Tibet), Dutch and British Guiana, the Moskito Coast, the West Indies, and among the North American Indians. On the facts shown by the report a strong appeal was based for increased aid, and for personal service among the heathen.

Prebendary WEBB-PEPLOE said that we might well be proud to enrol ourselves as brothers and sisters of the Moravians, and we do so by rendering the assistance which they, a small and poor body, so much need. Surely it is a standing rebuke to us to find that one in sixty of the Moravians is in the mission field, while in our own churches the proportion is more like one in five thousand. Turning, by way of illustration, to the two newest missions of the Moravians, the speaker indicated the marvellous success which has attended even the youngest missions, viz., those in East Central Africa and North Queensland. God had been during all the past years, and is now pleased to make very manifest his presence with these brave, resolute, self-denying Moravian missionaries. Certainly there have been losses, sore losses, but every grave dug among the heathen seems to be a fresh witness to the love and mercy of God. He felt that it is a splendid thing to hear of and minister to such people. The speaker closed with a telling plea for missionary consecration.

Rev. F. B. MEYER, in giving reasons for the support claimed for the Moravians, showed that they were Protestants before Luther was born, and that throughout the centuries they have borne wonderful testimony to the truth of the Atonement, the indwelling of the Holy Spirit, and other fundamental truths. He had been reading the life of Count Zinzendorf, who might be looked upon as the founder of modern Moravianism. Describing the associations formed by the Count, Mr. Meyer showed how a few young men banded themselves together to love the whole world for Jesus' sake. That spirit lives still in the breast of the United Brethren of Moravia. Like the Count, they say,

> I have one passion, and one alone;
> It is He, and He alone.

As illustrative of this heroic spirit, the speaker recalled how two young Moravians actually sold themselves as slaves, this being the only way they could get out to St. Thomas to preach the Gospel among the slaves. So long as such a spirit survives God will bless the work of the Moravian missionaries.

Mr. T. A. DENNY having given various good reasons why he warmly supported the Moravians?

Dr. A. T. PIERSON pointed out that these Bohemian brethren had been the first to utilise the printing press among the heathen. Apart from that, God has given to this church to lead the way in the matter of missions. They follow on apostolic lines, and therefore God has poured out his blessing. They have been taught to regard a Church which is not a missionary Church as a dead Church. They assume that every believer in the Lord Jesus Christ is under marching orders to go where He would have him. Count Zinzendorf said, "Wherever Christ needs me, I will find my native country," and that is the spirit of these brethren to-day. So far, comparatively speaking, the Christian Church has done nothing in obedience to the Lord's command; has yielded nothing in response to his just demands. These facts are, alas! too often forgotten, but they must be driven home into the hearts and consciences of the Lord's people. He believed in teaching the children missionary hymns, training them in a missionary spirit, impressing on them the claims of the dying heathen, and the just demands which God makes upon us. He felt the Church would never accomplish what she ought to accomplish until she awakes to the self-denial and devotion demanded of her by Him before whose judgment-seat she so soon must stand to give account.

Dr. Wilfred Grenfell, of the M.D.S.F., told something of what he had seen of the devoted Moravian missionaries on the Labrador coast and among the hard unemotional Esquimaux. He felt we are called not merely to support the United Brethren, but also to be United Brethren by being ever ready to give up, to do, and suffer for his Name's sake.

The West London Mission.

St. James's Hall was crowded on Friday evening by an enthusiastic audience fully alive to the importance of the aggressive work carried on by the West London Mission. This, it was clearly explained, was not the anniversary—that being held in the autumn—but was simply the "May Meeting" of the friends of the Mission.

Mr. Walker, of Bolton, who stepped into the gap caused by the unexpected absence of Mr. W. Mather, M.P., who was to have taken the chair, opened with a few hearty and warm words on the work of the sisters—a work which he believed must, by reason of its tenderness, be very near the heart of the Lord Jesus. He trusted that in every department the West London Mission would be loyally and largely supported, and enabled to go on extending and triumphing until the whole district was touched by the power of God.

Rev. T. Morcom Taylor was called upon to give some account of the work at Cleveland Hall. While the great centre of the Mission is at St. James's Hall, the weekday operations are carried on at Cleveland Hall, and some other places. Strangely enough, Cleveland Hall was built as a socialistic and atheistic rendezvous; then it became a dancing resort, then a German Club, and now for some years it has been used for mission purposes. It is open every night of the week. There has been hard, sore work sometimes, but God has given much blessing, many souls have been saved, and those who were open sinners have become earnest and useful workers for Christ. Passing on, Mr. Taylor gave appalling indications of the pitiful circumstances under which many of the children grow up. Amongst these a very large work is now going on at Cleveland Hall. Special missions have lately been held there with most encouraging results, both in the salvation of men and women and the reformation of the slaves of strong drink. The work of the sisters has indeed been much blessed, and their influence in the neighbourhood and over the most sinful is acknowledged by all familiar with the locality to be very remarkable. As to means, the people of the hall have done nobly out of their poverty, but outside help is needed to meet rent, gas, and taxes.

Dr. Clifford said he was present as an advocate of this wonderful Mission, in which he himself had great faith, inasmuch as its fruits were satisfactory and its influence wholesome. To him it seemed a new incarnation of the true spirit of Christian evangelism; a re-expression of the grand old Gospel of the early Methodists. This Mission is alive, it is wide awake, it is all aglow with the intensity of John Wesley, on whom was the momentum of a Divine impulse. That same passion and ardour is on the leaders of this West End Mission. Another feature of the work is that it is an expression of the pity which throbbed in the heart of our Lord when He walked among the sons of men. True Christianity is always most at home among misery: for there it is most needed. Moreover, there is in this Mission the personal principle. Men precede books. The personal wins acceptance for the general. Christ, experienced in the heart, and presented through the warm susceptibilities of those who know Him, is God's means of spreading the Gospel. The question has been put "Can the Churches save London?" It ought to be "Will they?" Going in the spirit and power of Christ, they can save London.

Mr. Thomas Owen, M.P., desired to bear testimony to the great encouragement the success of this Mission, in such a peculiarly difficult centre, has been to thousands of Christians in the country. He dared to say it had been the means of setting many to work on lines which had proved to be adapted to the needs of the times. He was thankful to find such a Mission as this, which preached the old Gospel, established in such a position and so signally owned by God.

Rev. Hugh Price Hughes said that there were only two things about the Mission that ever caused him the least anxiety. First, the need for watchfulness on the part of all the workers, that they should be kept humble and faithful in doing the will of God. The second point is the strange and inexplicable slowness of God's stewards to rise to the wondrous privilege of maintaining such a Mission to all sorts and grades of society. He urged that not a penny of the funds subscribed by friends goes to the support of the ministers, or indeed the working of what might be called the ordinary church expenses. But the opportunity for service is simply unique and unparalleled; and yet the churches generally do not seem to rise to the occasion, and send in their gifts in anything like the proportion demanded by the possibilities. He maintained it was an unsectarian work, that theological differences were unknown, and all seemed animated by the consuming desire of winning souls. As to the spiritual results, these are now greater than ever, as shown by the fact that there are over seventeen hundred enrolled members, most of whom have been converted in the Mission. Mr. Hughes made a strong plea for more workers, especially men, and he rather hinted that he hoped to see a "Brotherhood" formed somewhat on the lines of the "Sisterhood," which has done marvellous things. He then went on to deal in impassioned terms with the evils of gambling, intemperance, and impurity, and closed with a telling appeal for funds, his claim being specially based on unprecedented opportunity and unprecedented success.

Mr. Percy W. Bunting spoke of the victorious and hopeful spirit which had always animated the workers in the Mission, and which he regarded as a happy augury of still better things yet to come. A few words followed by Mr. Bamford Slack, and the proceedings closed, although many were disappointed that Mr. Mark Guy Pearse did not find an opportunity of speaking, as had been expected.

Religious Tract Society.

There was a crowded meeting in Exeter Hall on Friday evening last, when the ninety-fourth annual meeting of the Religious Tract Society was held. The abstract of the report, read by Dr. Borrett White, exhibited an income, including subscriptions, collections, donations, legacies, and trade returns, of £200,146. The trade receipts amounted to not less than £169,905, but the voluntary contributions of £27,328 show an increase of £8563. Expenditure amounted to £174,958. Out of this expenditure grants to societies and individuals, at home and abroad, were made to the extent of £36,702. During the year 639 new publications had been issued, of which 171 were tracts. The total circulation from the home depôt, including books, tracts, periodicals (counted in numbers), cards, and miscellaneous issues reached 50,427,050, of which 19,701,300 were tracts. In addition 15,000,000 were issued from foreign depôts.

Sir Gainsford Bruce, who presided, in a hearty address thanked the society for the assistance it renders to religious education in Board schools. The only way to meet the lying, immoral, and corrupt literature which is so plentifully circulated, is to disseminate pure reading matter such as the society provides.

Archdeacon Sinclair remarked that in the present day, when it is possible for quite humble people to penetrate the most delightful paths of literature, the society renders a great service to the community. It has also solved the religious difficulty, by placing it upon the broadest and simplest basis of Christian truth. Rev. C. Silvester Horne, M.A., Canon Fleming, and others delivered brief addresses.

Native Races United Committee.

On Friday last a meeting of friends was held in the Mansion House. The Hon. T. H. W. Pelham took the chair after the Lord Mayor had opened the proceedings. The report expressed satisfaction that the Brussels General Act, which deals with a vast zone in Central Africa, was ratified by the Powers represented at the conference. Evidence that has been brought before the United Committee shows that the liquor traffic is a great hindrance to missionary effort and legitimate commerce.

The Duke of Fife was glad to know that a large measure of success has attended the Committee's efforts. The British South Africa Company, with which he was intimately connected, strictly prohibited the importation of spirits into their territory, as well as gunpowder and arms, and the administrators were determined to enforce that prohibition.

Sir George Baden-Powell, M.P., related some of his experiences in Australia and South Africa in endeavouring to mitigate the evil.

Dr. Harry Guinness gave a thrilling narrative of his personal experience of the evils of the drink traffic among the natives of Central Africa, and most earnestly appealed to the committee to continue their efforts against it. Rev. J. S. Hill, Bishop-designate of the Niger, Rev. Wardlaw Thompson, of the London Missionary Society, and Captain Lugard also spoke.

Palestine Nurses' Mission.

The annual meeting of this society was held on Thursday last, in the Conference Hall, Clapham-road.

The chair was taken by the Rev. Canon McCormick. The meeting was deeply interesting throughout. The information given by a nurse from the Lebanon showed a great increase in the number of patients attending the dispensary. Baakleen is situated in the midst of a large Druse district and the adjacent villages are all within touch of medical relief. The Mission has a good native doctor, whose services are appreciated, but those of the nurses are indispensable. It is so everywhere in Syria and Palestine. Nurses are the great need to carry the Gospel into households, hitherto jealously guarded against its light.

Rev. H. Graham Thwaites made a stirring appeal for a reinforcement of nurses to go out as missionaries to all lands, and especially to the society working in Palestine. Mr. Waterfield, the secretary, read the report, which was encouraging in spite of difficulties and hindrances at Jerusalem. A party of nurses went out last March, and are already busily at work in the districts outside the walls.

The Ragged School Union.

The bright faces and sweet singing of nearly a thousand elder scholars from the Ragged Schools afforded on Monday evening, at the annual meeting held in Exeter Hall, strong testimony to the reality and vigour of the work of this society. The Right Hon. Lord Reay presided, supported by Lady Jeune, Lord Kinnaird, and many other influential friends of the Union.

From the report presented by the secretary, Mr. John Kirk, it appeared that the work of the Ragged School Union has a two-fold aspect. First, it has large operations for which it is directly responsible; secondly, it is the Central Union of 210 local schools and missions, deriving from it support and aid. The Poor Children's Aid Branch has received 1221 parcels, containing 21,341 garments; also 84,722 books, cards, scrap-books, toys, flowers, etc.; 789 pairs of boots have been purchased, together with large supplies of new clothing. The Holiday Homes Fund shows marked progress during the year. In all 5106 children, seniors, and adults, were sent away for at least a fortnight last year. The Drift Branch is aggressive, and operates upon the many children who, from various causes, are liable to "drift" away from religious influences. Beginning in the East End, it has now been extended to the south of the water, and interesting work among the gipsy and other drift population has been begun. Last year 291 Drift Meetings were held, attended by 59,920 children. The Ashley Mission has continued its useful career in a crowded part of Bethnal Green. Details are given of the Snow's-fields Mission, Hoxton Market Christian Institute, Fox-court, Dove-row, Lansdowne-place, Ogle-mews, Abbey-street, Lamb and Flag Ragged Schools, in all of which building operations have been or are being carried out.

Notwithstanding the help that is rendered by separate organisations, in the way of feeding the hungry, much more has to be done to relieve the destitution which presses upon the local centres. Not less than half-a-million meals were provided last year. This varied and expanding work needs ample means to maintain its efficiency. Not only have the Council these direct responsibilities, but by means of grants-in-aid they also contribute to the work carried on in the local schools. Without such grants, many of the smaller struggling effort would be unable to continue. The receipts from all sources last year show an increase under several heads, but this is unfortunately counteracted by a falling off in other sections. The result is a serious deficiency for the year, amounting to £1329 19s. 9d. For this the council make an earnest appeal. In the 210 mission centres affiliated with the Union, there are eighty-five Sunday morning schools with an attendance of 6377, 154 afternoon schools are attended by 26,666, whilst in the evening there are open 110 schools with 23,506 in regular attendance, giving a total for the two sessions of afternoon and evening on Sunday of 50,172 children. Children's services allied with these Sunday-schools exist to the number of ninety-five, with an attendance of 9893, there are also thirty-six Christian bands with 1988 members. The 199 separate Bible classes are attended by 5144 young people. Details follow of a vast variety of useful operations.

Lord REAY, in a high-toned and statesmanlike speech, enforced the claims of the Ragged School Union on all unwilling that the children should be left to perish. By such loving and self-denying labours tens of thousands had been changed into good citizens, and better still, citizens of the kingdom of Christ.

Dr. BARNARDO maintained eloquently that the Ragged School Union merited the warmest support, because it had been the germ of most of the efforts on behalf of neglected children, which are the glory of the present day. In illustration of this the speaker showed how the National Refuges, as well as his own Homes, sprang out of the Ragged School. Moreover, the R.S.U. ought to be supported because of its faithfulness to the old Gospel, which it has proved to be God's remedy for the woes of the slums. The results of this work have been marvellous—tens of thousands have been saved and raised; while the restraining influence on the dangerous classes has been of the most valuable character. On these and many similar grounds, Dr. Barnardo earnestly urged the claims of the Union for large and liberal support.

Rev. WILLIAM WILLIAMS, of Upton Chapel, thanked God that the beneficent, benevolent, and divine institution had as its great head the Lord Jesus: it was his work, and He would care for it. The speaker enlarged on the spiritual side of the movement. He was sure that in the many loving and lovely operations, the grand aim of all, the winning of the children to Christ, would never be forgotten.

Rev. A. J. PALMER (Folkestone) addressed the children earnestly and pointedly, adding a few cogent words on the importance of the Ragged School movement.

Lady JEUNE moved a resolution of congratulation to be sent to the Duchess of Teck and Princess May—both warm friends of the poor children. Her Ladyship then distributed the prizes gained by 1084 young people for good conduct and steadiness in situations; while quite a number who had kept their places with credit for over five years received special prizes. One or two bright songs came next, and the proceedings were concluded by the singing of the National Anthem.

Factory Helpers' Union.

THIS society, a most useful and much-needed department of work of the Young Women's Christian Association, recently had a successful demonstration at the Mansion House, when the Duchess of Teck attended to distribute prizes to the members. A considerable portion of the audience was composed of girls and young women, most of them members of one or other of the various institutes connected with the Union, and a large number of these joined in competitions during the evening in singing and musical drill. Among those who took part in the proceedings were the Lord Mayor, Earl Compton, M.P., Lord Kinnaird, Mr. C. E. Tritton, M.P., Mr. Alderman Pound, and Rev. Marcus Rainsford, jun., who specially addressed the girls from the words, "Look unto Me and be ye saved."

The institutes are situated in such neighbourhoods as Bermondsey, Bow, Islington, Holloway, Walworth, and Spitalfields, besides which there are a large number of smaller centres, both in London and the provinces, affiliated to the Union, where Bible-classes and other meetings, specially for the girls, are held. Considering that in London alone there are more than 200,000 factory girls, in addition to those employed in laundries, the need for such a work is very evident.

THE FAMILY is God's ideal Band of Hope.—G. A. Smith.

THE CONGREGATIONAL UNION.

THE spring meetings in London of this assembly began on Monday evening in the Memorial Hall, under the presidency of Mr. A. Spicer, M.P. The report of the executive committee referred to the treatment of social questions during the year, and the need of creating a healthy public conscience on the evils of oppressing and underpaying the toiling thousands.

By 400 votes Rev. G. S. Barrett, of Norwich, was chosen Chairman of the Union for 1894.

THE PRESIDENT'S ADDRESS, delivered to a densely crowded assembly in the City Temple on Tuesday morning, was a very unambitious but businesslike and thoroughly practical deliverance. Mr. Spicer entitled it "The Congregational Churches and their Opportunity." After glancing cursorily at the past and present distinctive testimony of the Congregational body, he went on to show that among the pressing duties of the immediate future are a witness-bearing against sacerdotalism, and such an apportionment of church work as will fully utilise the gifts of the membership. Mr. Spicer said:—

"It seems to me a mockery and a farce for members able to render service to join and remain in our fellowships without contributing in some way to the actual work of the church (apart from donations); better far, small and real fellowships, to larger numbers, with a majority of those who receive but fail to give. Churches, too, must manage themselves more and be managed less, either by minister or by deacon, or by both combined. Many of our churches to-day, both large and small, are being dwarfed and enfeebled by ignoring our Congregational principles in practice."

Here is an interesting reference to the growth of women's work, characteristic of the present time:—

"No class in society has been as largely benefited by Christianity as women, and to-day they occupy a position unknown in bygone centuries. Society has recognised the change, and secular governments are recognising it too by making women eligible for many useful and honourable public positions; and it is very clear that the time is not far distant when all posts for which their fellow-citizens think them eligible will be thrown open. Surely, then, our churches should recognise the change and withdraw the limitations that preclude women from being chosen as church officers where they have the necessary qualifications."

One of the most warmly-applauded parts of the address was that which dealt with the social upheavals and movements of the time:—

"I recognise to the full that the work of our churches first and foremost is to try and save men from their sins; but when they have accepted Christ as their Saviour, what is to be the influence of the Church's teaching on their conduct and life? Are we to defend and apologise for our present social conditions, or are we to make it clear that, being followers of Christ, we must be prepared to do everything we can for the improvement of the material as well as spiritual welfare of our fellow men? Are we to be sincerely desirous of saving our fellow men from their sins, and then go direct from our services to homes we are sustaining on a scale higher than we can afford except by use of the extreme benefit of a low market price of labour? Are we to be known as defenders of true Evangelical faith, and, at the same time, supporters of those who resolutely and systematically oppose every suggestion that means removal of privilege from the few and the extension of these privileges to the people as a whole? I am anxious that we should save men's souls, but I believe we should be more successful in that work were we more solicitous for the welfare of their bodies; and I hope the time is not far distant when we shall take a larger share in the double work (1) of saving men from their sins, and (2) of calling those who are saved to a life of service and self-denial for the material as well as the spiritual welfare of their fellow-men."

Lastly there came an appeal from the pew to the pulpits, desiderating a more comprehensive and close treatment of all topics that affect the practical life and testimony of the churches. We give the following paragraph:—

"We look to you, as Christ's ambassadors, to let us constantly hear his call to go into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature. Your own teaching and influence will very largely decide the part that your church will take in this great enterprise. If they are to have an intelligent appreciation of the obligations resting upon the Christian Church to fulfil the trust which our Master has laid upon us; if they are to know something of the work that is being done already in our own land, in Europe, in our own Colonies, and in the great heathen world, and of the work that still remains to be done, it will be because you yourselves have heard the Master's command, and because you study the great subject of missions systematically and sympathetically, and do not relegate that part of your churches' education to the annual visit of a missionary deputation or to other visitors. In the measure in which we obey our Lord's last command, we shall strengthen our own faith and widen our horizon as to the glorious possibilities that still await the faithful service of his children."

HELP FOR EPSOM.

DEAR SIR,—The time for making arrangements for the Evangelistic campaign on Epsom Downs has come. You will be glad to hear that a larger number of workers have volunteered for this work than ever before; all seem moved by the Holy Spirit and love for the souls of men.

We go to Epsom on Monday, May 29, and return Friday evening, June 2. With nearly 100 men to keep all that time, we need many things, and I pray that the hearts of all who love Christ and these perishing people will strengthen the hands of those of us who are willing to attack evil in this stronghold. We need £50 in money, 5000 penny Gospels, 50,000 tracts, the loan of a furniture van, some mattresses, bedding, sheets, and blankets, 100 yards blue ribbon, some tea, coffee, sugar, tins of beef, salt beef, hams, gammons, bacon, eggs, cake, biscuits, in fact, anything and everything that is good and wholesome to eat and drink.

Do not let anyone suppose this is a picnic. I am always busy in mission work, but this Epsom week is the most trying and difficult of the whole year. As God has stirred the hearts of his servants to try to reclaim the fallen, let everybody show their sympathy with this earnest attempt to win the racing world for Christ.

Please send money and goods not later than May 26th to JOSIAH NIX.

Needle-drivers' Band.

THIS is the short title of an East-end agency, which is otherwise described as "The Thrift and Thrive Needle-drivers' Band, affiliated to the Anti-pin-me-rags-together Association"! Its organiser is Miss Lily Ewer Benn, who has at present over fifty "needle-drivers" and their parents under her care. She writes:—"I am responsible for from twenty-five to thirty meetings a month, twenty for the children, and the rest mother-meetings and Dorcas. On this account I break down every three months from over-strain, and therefore am obliged to have a paid lady helper, which, of course, means extra expenditure; but, thank God, He has never left me without funds up to the present." Miss Benn's address is 38, St. Peter's-road, Mile End, London, E.

SOUTH AMERICA.—Mr. Herbert Bidlake is one of Mr. Grubb's mission party for South America, not Mr. Ewbank.

PRESBYTERIAN FOREIGN MISSIONS.—In our last week's list of May meetings it was stated by mistake that the annual missionary meeting of the English Presbyterian Church would be held on Friday, 5th inst.; the date should have been Friday, May 12 (to-morrow), in Exeter Hall.

TORTURED CHILDREN.—The National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children states that the officers in the course of last month investigated 1132 complaints of starvation, neglect, ill-treatment, and other wrongs, implicating 1875 offenders, and involving the welfare of 2932 children. In 760 cases warnings were given, in 134 prosecutions were necessitated by the gross nature of the cruelty (convicted 133, discharged one), and the rest were otherwise dealt with.

THE HOME OF REST at Walton-on-Naze, opened for respectable women requiring change of air, goes on well. The report states that 225 cases and nine children passed through the Home of Rest during 1892, including young women from the Y.W.C.A., dressmakers, mechanics' wives, young people engaged in shops, warehouses, factories, and servants, all needing change of air. These have been blessed bodily and spiritually. Full information as to this work may be had of Mrs. R. H. Moore, 102, Regent's Park-road, N.

THE Y.M.C.A.

The Scottish National Conference is to be held in Falkirk in September.

The Montreal Association is sending out a missionary secretary to China.

In Winnipeg, special evangelistic services have been accompanied by great interest.

From various points in Kentucky come good accounts of progress in the railway branches.

A new Association has been successfully launched at Bangor, the principal summer resort for the people of Belfast.

The annual meeting of the Carrickfergus Y.M.C.A., which has now 113 members, has been held under hopeful auspices.

A united social meeting of the members of Auchterarder Y.W.C.A. and Y.M.C.A. was lately held, and proved very interesting.

The Norwich Y.M.C.A. has increased its membership in eight months by 136. The spiritual work is in a very healthy condition.

Mr. J. A. Smith, of Aberdeen, lately conducted a fifteen-days' mission in connection with Portsoy Association, with many tokens of interest.

The Carrickfergus Y.M.C.A., which held its annual meeting on the 27th ult., has fine premises of its own, free of debt, and has a membership of 113.

At a representative meeting of the Fellowship Associations and the Y.M.C.A., lately held in Perth, negotiations were entered into for a united institute.

A French Y.M.C.A. has just been started in Philadelphia, U.S.A., and already from 150 to 200 French Protestant young men have become members.

The new building of the Paris Association was opened on Sunday. There are 100 Associations in France at the present time, the three largest being in Paris, Lyons, and Nîmes.

The Berlin and Lausanne (Switzerland) Associations are doing each a very fine work amongst various sections of young men, and are enjoying a season of great spiritual and material prosperity.

The Hackney Association has arranged an excursion to Dovercourt on June 15. On July 1 and 8 Archdeacon Sinclair will personally conduct members of this Association over St. Paul's Cathedral, and entertain them to tea in the Chapter House.

The thirtieth international Convention of the Y.M.C. Associations of North America will be held in Indianapolis, Ind., next week. The topics to be discussed will embrace the subjects of Bible study, educational work, and a wide range of interesting points incident to associational work.

In our report last week of the annual meeting at the Mansion House of the Aldersgate-street Y.M.C.A., we represented the chairman, Mr. George Williams, as saying that the secretary "was not afraid of a little debt." It appears that the remark was intended to apply to Rev. H. Price Hughes, who sat near the chairman, and who has a special gift for clearing off these inconvenient incumbrances.

The Cork Association has issued a capital report showing that the evangelistic department has been much blessed. The missionary branch goes on well. Two members have gone to Mr. Moody's college as missionary students. The Quaiboe mission also goes on well. At home open-air preaching, Bible class, and other work goes on steadily; but as the work extends fresh and further aid is greatly needed.

The appalling need of Association work (writes a correspondent in Minnesota) for the young men of our farms and country places was well illustrated at the recent annual convention of the Rice County Association, held at Fairhault. More young farmers were found in the saloons of the town at 10.30 Saturday night than there were Christian young men in the surrounding county. The presence of, and hearty words of commendation from, the Christian country young men testified to the value of the work already undertaken.

The movement makes measured progress in France. There are now ninety-five associations, with 1154 active members, and 1127 associates. The growth of the past three years is very substantial, and is attributable in a large degree to the energy of the general secretary, Mr. J. Hughes, who, since his appointment in 1889, has given much time and labour to the work. During the present year he is giving all his time. Communications to Mr. Hughes should be addressed, French National Council, Y.M.C.A., Quai de Retz 6, Lyons.

The committee of the Polytechnic have arranged this year, besides many other delightful tours, a yachting cruise to the North Cape, the Land of the Midnight Sun. The route taken will permit of visits being paid to some of the most beautiful of the Norwegian Fjords, with opportunities for land excursions to the chief glaciers and waterfalls, and the Lapp Encampment at Tromsö. The cruise starts Saturday, July 1, lasts three weeks, and will cover 4500 miles. The accommodation is limited to 160 persons, and 100 berths have already been secured. The inclusive fare is £12 15s. Further particulars may be obtained upon application to the secretary of the Polytechnic, 309, Regent-street, London, W.

The Aldersgate-street Y.M.C.A. have issued a comprehensive guide-book under the title, "Summer Holidays for Young Men at Home and Abroad." Routes are sketched out for tours in Switzerland, Italy, and Norway, and useful hints are given as to hotels and points of interest, as well as many little matters likely to be overlooked, yet greatly conducive to the general pleasure. Full details are also given of the proposed walking tour in Scotland, while the Chicago exhibition is not forgotten, both conducted, and independent tours being outlined. Information is also afforded as to the various Y.M.C.A. Seaside Holiday Homes. The Guide may be had at 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C., for the marvellously low price of one penny.

The monthly meeting of the National Executive was held at Exeter Hall on Friday afternoon, under the presidency of Mr. George Williams, and was largely attended by members from various parts of the country. Some preliminary arrangements for next year's Jubilee Conference having been confirmed, it was resolved to issue, as a jubilee celebration, an appeal for £25,000 for the provision of an additional staff of home and foreign travelling secretaries. Of the remaining business, the most important item was the adoption of a report pledging the council to recommend to the Associations of the country to undertake further aggressive missionary work among various sections of young men unreached by existing agencies.

THE Y.W.C.A.

The Oxford Y.W.C.A. has now 120 members, and at the headquarters in New Inn, Hall-street, homes are provided for young women engaged in business.

The fourth international convention of the Y.W.C.A. of the United States and British provinces was held at Toledo, April 27 to 30. Among the speakers were Dr. Thomas C. Hall and Prof. Graham Taylor, of Chicago; Dr. James H. Brookes, of St. Louis; Mr. L. D. Wishard, of New York City; and a number of Association workers.

Mrs. Lloyd, of Hoddesdon, lately started a junior branch of the Y.W.C.A. at Waltham Abbey. A very successful meeting was held. The young people were much interested, and listened attentively. Forty were afterwards enrolled as members of the junior branch. We are trusting this "nursery," in which everyone is a total abstainer, will by-and-bye swell the ranks of the senior branch, for which we hope to train them. C. L. B.

The third anniversary of the Bermondsey branch was held on April 27, when a large proportion of its three hundred and fifty members were present. After tea, Mr. Alfred Lafone, J.P., took the chair, supported by the Rector, and several of the heads of the neighbouring firms. The year's report was read by the hon. secretary, Mrs. Ellson, showing a small balance of cash in hand, and marked prosperity in all its departments. The work is entirely among the upper class of factory employées, and is carried on by its working associates and members of the "Ready Band." The missionary and junior departments are more particularly successful. The mission pennies are bringing in a large increase to the fund. The Bible classes are well attended, and the liberty in prayer grows steadily, proving the branch to be truly a "servant of the Church."

HOW ARE WE TO SAVE THE BOYS? Try to understand the boy-nature. Let us put ourselves in his place, let us try to think what we would like and what would interest us if we were boys.—Dr. Dille.

IN MOST CASES the boys who come to school with a character of positive good are benefited; it is the neutral and undecisive characters which are apt to be decided for evil by schools, as they would be, in fact, by any other temptation.—Dr. Arnold.

CITY OPEN-AIR SERVICES.—The mid-day services in St. Botolph's Churchyard, Aldersgate-street, which last year attracted considerable attention, were resumed for the season on Monday, when the Bishop of Japan spoke on the power of the Gospel, as illustrated by its progress and triumphs in the isles of the Far East. These services are arranged by Rev. T. S. Henrey, in response to whose invitation a goodly band of singers mustered on Monday, while the crowd of listeners seemed to represent well-nigh every section of city life from the merchant to the porter and workroom girl. The names announced as speakers for the season includes quite a number of Bishops and Canons, also such men as Archdeacon Sinclair, the Dean of Norwich, the Earl of Stamford, Lord Radstock, Sir G. G. Stokes, and Preb. Webb-Peploe.

UNIVERSITY NOTES.

OXFORD.

The Bampton Lecturer for 1894 has just been appointed Rev. J. R. Illingworth, one of the writers of Lux Mundi.

The P.S.A. at the Oxford Y.M.C.A. maintains itself as a large gathering of men, chiefly non-churchgoers, who thus hear the "wonderful words of life" from various speakers.

The Principal of Wycliffe Hall (Rev. F. J. Chavasse) is preaching a course of sermons this Term at St. Peter-le-Bailey Church on the "Appearances of the Risen Lord" recorded in Matt. xxviii.

The Y.W.C.A. continues its quiet but most valuable work among city young women under the guidance of Mrs. Palmer, wife of Archdeacon Palmer. The need of such work in Oxford can hardly be overestimated.

CAMBRIDGE.

The University sermon was preached on Sunday, May 7, by Rev. J. A. Robinson, D.D., Morrisian Professor of Divinity. Very graceful reference was made to the loss sustained by the University in the death of Professor Bensly.

On Sunday evening, April 30, a meeting of University men was held in the Divinity School to hear an address from the Bishop of Japan. The attendance was so large, that it was necessary to adjourn from the library to the large hall. An interesting and encouraging account was given of the missionary work in Japan. The Bishop mentioned the striking fact that more conversions had taken place through private conversation than by any other means.

The missionary spirit in the University has received a distinct impetus from the visit of Rev. J. S. Hill, Bishop Designate of the Niger, and Mr. Eugene Stock. An interesting meeting was held at Ridley Hall on Friday last, May 5, under the presidency of Rev. H. C. G. Moule, and on Sunday evening in the Henry Martyn Hall. Successful open-air meetings are now held by University men in various parts of the town on Sunday evenings. Earnest testimony is borne to the power of the Gospel to meet all the needs of the human heart.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR NOTES.

At Christchurch, Hants, a Christian Endeavour Society has been formed as the result of a recent mission.

The Christian Endeavour Union of Cleveland, Ohio, where the convention of 1894 is to meet, now includes 109 societies.

The Y.P.S.C.E. is making considerable progress in the neighbourhood of Dublin. Branches have recently been started in Brighton-road and Sandymount Methodist Churches.

A Christian Endeavour Society at Galesburg, Ill., has placed a telephone in the room of one of the invalid members, and made connection with its church building in such a way that the unfortunate one may "go to church" though unable to move.

The Marple Branch celebrated its fourth anniversary on Saturday last, when delegates were present from Oldham, Openshaw, Hazel Grove, Macclesfield, Stockport, and other places. At the afternoon conference, a paper was read by Mr. D. Morris, on "The Pledge: the Necessity of its Strict Enforcement." Rev. Robert Allan presided in the evening, and Rev. J. B. Morgan gave an address.

There are now 25,000 societies of Christian Endeavour in the world, with a membership of 1,500,000. There are 3400 junior societies. The movement is growing as never before, an average of over 100 new societies being enrolled every week. There are over 500 societies in Australia, nearly that number in England, and 1500 societies in the Dominion of Canada. Every foreign country and missionary land also has its society.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on efforts being made to awaken Christians to the danger of the leaven of rationalism in the Churches.—For a week's services at the Home of Industry by Mr. Richard Weaver's two sons; that God may give much blessing.—For a special address by Rev. E. A. Stuart on Sunday afternoon, at St. Peter's Men's Service, Upper Holloway.—By a widowed mother for her children and grandchildren; that they may be converted. Many prayers have been offered for them, and one, to his mother's agony, has become a Roman Catholic.—For a blessing on the visit of the Keswick Mission under Rev. G. C. Grubb to the River Plate this month.—For the wife of a labourer in the Gospel who has been seriously ill, and has suffered much for the past month.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

MR. LAPSLEY has been evangelising for three weeks at Markinch, Fifeshire.

Six years ago, when Dr. Stalker was settled at Free St. Matthew's, Glasgow, the membership was 647; now it is 1098. There is great difficulty in finding sittings for all who wish to attend.

Rev. H. A. Stewart, Emeritus Minister of Penicuick Free Church, has died at Elgin, at the age of seventy. His colleague and successor is Rev. S. R. Crockett, the author of "The Stickit Minister."

In preaching for Dr. Whyte at Free St. George's, Edinburgh, on Sunday week, Dr. Pentecost made a fervent appeal to young men and women troubled with intellectual doubts to imitate Abraham's faith.

Rev. J. Swan, Congregational minister of Elgin, who is leaving for America to engage in Gospel work, has been presented with an address and a cheque for fifty guineas by the citizens of the town in token of their esteem.

The General Assemblies of the Established and Free Churches both commence their sittings next week. The chief topic of debate in the former will doubtless be the Government proposals for disestablishment. At the latter, the jubilee celebrations will overshadow all other matters that come for consideration. The U.P. Synod opened on Monday.

In a recent sermon on the return of the Jews from captivity in Babylon, Rev. W. J. Macdonald, of Kirkcaldy, said the history of the Free Church of Scotland for the last fifty years proved that the State and the Church are best separate. He thought, however, that while the Church should be free from State control, the State might give pecuniary aid for preaching the Gospel.

On Saturday afternoon a demonstration of Christian workers was held in Glasgow in favour of the Liquor Traffic (Local Control) Bill. A procession, consisting of contingents from all districts of the city, was formed in Blythswood-square, and marched by way of the principal thoroughfares to the Green, where addresses were delivered from four platforms at Nelson's Monument. Resolutions were passed calling on all citizens to unite in seeking the overthrow of the drink evil, and expressing approval of the bill now before Parliament recognising the right of the people to self-protection.

IRISH NOTES.

THE mission services held during the winter with such encouraging results in the Central Hall, Cork, have been brought to a close for the season.

At the Mission Church, Townsend-street, Dublin, on April 30, the interesting ceremony was carried out of admitting twenty-six converts from the Church of Rome into the Protestant Episcopal Church in Ireland.

Upwards of 150 Roman Catholics were present lately at a meeting held in co. Donegal by Rev. G. W. Baile on behalf of the Sunday-school Society, and were so much pleased that they insisted on taking up a collection in aid of the Society.

THE P.S.A. MOVEMENT.

P.S.A. services have been commenced at Conisborough.

At the quarterly meeting of King-street Wesleyan P.S.A. Society, Tunstall, upwards of 400 prizes were distributed, and it was announced that there are over 600 members.

At a meeting held at Ashton-under-Lyne, attended by about seventy representatives, it was decided to form a federation of P.S.A. Societies in Lancashire and Cheshire for the purpose of fellowship, counsel, and co-operation. The total membership of the societies in the two counties is between 30,000 and 40,000.

The first half-yearly distribution of prizes to the members of the P.S.A. carried on by the Birmingham Young Men's Christian Association was held at the Town Hall on Tuesday evening last. The chair was taken by Major Seton Churchill, of Lichfield, who presided over an audience of some 2500. Mr. Whitwell, the president of the class, gave a brief outline of its history. Altogether, between 1200 and 1300 men have been enrolled, and there has been an average attendance of 950. The workers tell that there is cause for devout thankfulness to God for the blessing that has rested on the movement in every way. An address was delivered by Rev. C. B. Sawday, of Leicester. The prize distribution embraced 800 books and 250 certificates, the latter being for full attendances throughout the half year.

THE POPLAR PUBLIC-HOUSE TRACT SOCIETY, during the past twelve months, has distributed 27,000 religious papers or tracts in some seventeen public-houses.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

THE question of Prohibition for Nova Scotia is being agitated in the New Brunswick Assembly.

The recent licensing courts in Scotland have shown a tendency to a reduction in the number of licences.

A Bill for Saturday and Sunday closing of public-houses in Ireland has been read a second time in the House of Lords.

Shrimant Sampatrao, Gaekwar of Baroda, recently stated that his father, the late Gaekwar of Baroda, had never tasted intoxicating liquor.

Nine-tenths of the missionaries in India are total abstainers, and a large proportion of them actively engaged in the promotion of temperance.

Brigadier-General Sir H. Collett, in a farewell speech at Peshawur on leaving India, contended against the idea that a total abstainer is a milksop as a soldier.

Fifty-three per cent. of the lunatics in the asylums of Bengal are there entirely as the result of using "hashish," a poisonous drug, against the sale of which there are stringent laws in Egypt, Greece, and Turkey.

Two new branches of the Army Temperance Association have recently been formed in India, one among the men of the 49th Field Battery at Trimulgherry, and the other in the 1st Devonshire Regiment at Rawal Pindi.

Lord Roberts has recently expressed his opinion that the remarkable good health of the British troops in India is due to the sobriety of the men, one-third of the sixty thousand soldiers being members of the Army Temperance Association.

In Belfast a Presbyterial Temperance Association has been formed, with the objects of diffusing knowledge with regard to the drink traffic, getting people to become total abtainers, and influencing the Church to manifest an uncompromising attitude towards the drink traffic.

The Young Abstainers' Union held its thirteenth annual meeting in the Portman Rooms on Wednesday week, Mr. A. C. P. Coote presiding, supported by Mr. Hind Smith (founder of the union), Rev. Thos. L. Johnson (a missionary from Africa and an old member of the union), Mr. Tinling, an "A" member, who made a very happy speech. Mr. E. J. Kennedy and Dr. Gilbart Smith gave telling addresses, which were very much appreciated.

EPSOM RACES.

DEAR SIR,—For more than thirty years it has been the privilege of the Open-air Mission to organise a special mission to the frequenters of Epsom Races, and under the devoted leadership of our late beloved and lamented secretary, Mr. Kirkham, to achieve notable Gospel triumphs, often amid fierce opposition. The work is quieter now, but none the less needful, and hence we are seeking to gather all available strength for the campaign.

May I ask your readers for special gifts of sound Gospel literature of an attractive character, which may be sent direct to me, care of Miss Alexander, Town Mission Room, Epsom? There is also ample room for an increased number of men of God who can preach and sing. I shall be very glad if any such will come to the practice of our male choir, at 59, Cornhill, on Fridays, May 12, 19, and 26, at eight p.m.

The races are from Tuesday, May 30th, to Friday, June 2nd, inclusive. Will the Lord's people everywhere pray for a special blessing on this difficult work?

Yours faithfully,
FRANK COCKREM, Assistant Secretary.

ZENANA MEDICAL COLLEGE.—There are at present some vacancies in this college for ladies who desire a short period of medical training with the view of entering on foreign mission work. Applications should be made to the hon. sec., Zenana Medical College, 58, St. George's-road, Pimlico, London, S.W.

THE FRENCH PRESS.—Protestants of France anticipate the realisation, in the near future, of their desire for a daily newspaper that shall be pure as literature and helpful to evangelical principles. M. Eugéne Réveilland, editor of Le Signal, is throwing his energies into the undertaking. M. A. H. G. de Rougemont writes to us:—"The need of such a paper is greatly felt, in order that the influence of publications of a hurtful character may be combated. Negotiations have been entered into with an existing journal that will, it is hoped, facilitate a daily issue. About £4000 will be required as share capital; and friends are earnestly requested to take shares of 100 fr. (£4). A deposit of £1 per share may be sent to Mr. Clarence Hooper, Y.M.C.A., Exeter Hall, Strand, treasurer for Great Britain, who will give further particulars."

Obituary.

MRS. HERBERT TOWNEND.

AT Drenewydd, Bromley, Kent, there passed away on April 26 Ellen Jones, aged fifty-two, the beloved wife of Mr. Herbert Townend, an earnest and useful Christian. She who has gone home bore in home and family life a sweet and fragrant testimony to the grace of God. She was a reader of THE CHRISTIAN from its earliest days, and was deeply and warmly interested in labourers at home and abroad, many of whom will miss her loving ministry.

MRS. MARY HILL.

The mother of Mr. Henry Hill, founder of the Working Lads' Institute, Whitechapel, recently passed to her rest in her seventy-ninth year. While always taking the deepest interest in the above institution, her sympathies were not confined to that, nor to a few charitable objects. Peace, Protestantism, temperance, the anti-opium and anti-tobacco movements; all the protests against vice in its varied forms; all opposition to slavery and every kind of oppression—in fact, everything concerning the welfare of humanity, found in Mrs. Hill a ready sympathy and, as opportunity offered, practical help.

SERGEANT-MAJOR FURMINGER.

ON May 4 the mortal remains of Mr. Frederick Thomas Furminger, late Sergeant-Major 12th Lancers, were laid to rest in the Military Cemetery, Curragh Camp. Mr. Furminger served in the 9th Lancers in the Crimea, and many other places. He has been hardly able to get out of bed for twenty years. He lived in a house on the Curragh, and in the room where he lay used to have a Bible class. Many devout officers, non-commissioned officers, and men went there to learn from him. He often seemed to be half way between heaven and earth. He used to receive tracts and papers, and pass them out to many on the Curragh who would go to see and hear him.

MRS. CAMERON, OF THE CONGO MISSION.

Many will hear with sorrow of the calling home, on March 8, of the beloved wife of Rev. G. Cameron, of the Baptist Missionary Society. As Miss Cassie Silvey, Mrs. Cameron went out to the Congo from Manchester early in 1888, and was stationed with Miss Butcher at Bolobo. She returned to England on account of health in 1890, and in the following year went out again, and was married to Mr. Cameron, settling at Wathen. She is the second of her family who have given their lives to the Congo Mission. Her brother, Rev. Samuel Silvey, after three years' faithful labour, was forced by shattered health to leave the country in 1889, but died on his way home, and was buried at sea. Mr. Cameron and his child, who is a year old, are returning home, and the work at Wathen will be left in the charge of Mr. Philip Davies.

MISS M. J. MARTIN, DUBLIN.

The death is recorded of this lady, who is described by an Irish secular paper as "the last of the Martins of Ballinahinch." Of Miss Martin and her sister (who died two years ago) it may be said that they "stretched forth their hands to the poor." Possessed of independent means, they loved to help every good work, and many left penniless were pensioned by them. All was done so unostentatiously that it seemed as if they were only performing a simple duty. Many will miss their gentle, loving ministry. Their father, Mr. Richard Martin, was at one time a well-known figure in Ireland, England, and also on the Continent. He was an M.P., and is remembered as the author of a bill for the protection of animals. He was a great sympathiser with all oppressed and suffering ones, and anticipated the day of rescue missions and midnight meetings.

"HIS SHADOW."

Isa. xxxii. 2.—The shadow of a great Rock—Rest.

S. S. ii. 3.—I sat down under his shadow—Delight.

Ps. xvii. 8.—Hide me under the shadow of thy wings—Protection.

Ps. lxiii. 7.—In the shadow of thy wings will I rejoice—Joy.

Isa. xlix. 2.—In the shadow of his hand hath He hid me.—Place of repair or harbour. (Joel iii. 16, marg.)

Lam. iv. 20.—Under his shadow we shall live among the heathen—Resolve.

F. I. B.

ITALY.—Mr. E. C. Newbery, writing from San Remo, tells of a revived interest in spiritual matters in connection with the mission efforts at Pigna, Alberga, and Cisane. Eager crowds, he says, come to hear the Gospel. Mr. Newbery speaks in strong terms of the ruin and misery that continue to result from the gaming-tables at Monte Carlo.

Personalia.

Dr. Culross has, we hear, intimated his intention of retiring, owing to advanced years, from the presidency of Bristol College.

Rev. William Thomas, of Llanelly, who has been accepted as missionary by the London Missionary Society, will start for Tanganyika at the end of this month.

Mrs. C. H. Spurgeon, it is stated, will retain Westwood, and will make it, as opportunity offers, a home of rest for ministers suffering from overwork or ill-health.

Dr. McAll, of Paris, lies seriously ill. He is in much weakness, and often suffering. Special prayer is asked for him and for the mission under his charge.

Principal Edwards, D.D., of Bala, who is now staying in Rome, is making satisfactory progress towards convalescence. He hopes ere long to be able to resume his work.

Mr. A. Forder.—A number of friends met at the City Y.M.C.A., Cornhill, last Thursday evening to bid farewell to Mr. A. Forder, who was to set out on the following day to Kerak, Moab.

Rev. J. Lawson Forfeitt arrived at Underhill, Congo River, on March 9, and his colleague, Rev. R. H. C. Graham, who had been in charge during his absence, will return to England to recruit.

Mr. Henry Varley is, we regret to hear, suffering from a cold, and was unable to speak as expected at the Central Noon Prayer Meeting on Monday. It is hoped the indisposition will be but temporary.

Mr. William Forbes has closed his services at Finsbury Park Hall, and is now open to conduct Evangelistic services or Gospel Temperance meetings. His address is 71, Tollington-road, Holloway, N.

Revs. Charles Phillips and Isaac Oluwole have, at the suggestion of Rev. J. S. Hill, been nominated by the C.M.S. to the Archbishop of Canterbury for the new assistant bishoprics of the Yoruba country.

Rev. S. Tamatoa Williams, son of Rev. John Williams, the "Martyr of Erromanga," has been elected chairman for the year of the Council of the Metropolitan Auxiliary to the London Missionary Society.

Mr. Elcum has worked for forty years in connection with the Fox-court Ragged School, Gray's Inn-road. Feeling now the weight of years, he has resigned the treasurership to Mr. Alderman Beachcroft, L.C.C.

Rev. E. A. Lawrence, minister of the First Congregational Church in Baltimore, has, in order to obtain a better understanding of the condition of the working classes, left his own residence and taken lodgings in a house in which four families of labourers reside.

Mr. Stephen Burrowes, of the Naples Sailors' Rest, has been lecturing acceptably in London on mission work in the East and on "The Wonderful Book." He purposes having a lecturing tour in Scotland and Ireland, in order to advocate the claims of his work at Naples.

Miss Cusack, "the Nun of Kenmare," has had to cancel her engagements for the present, owing to a throat affection, supervening upon a condition of extreme debility. She has keen anxieties; but so far friends have been raised up to sympathise with her in her solitude. Communications may be addressed to her, for the present, at 67, Warrior-square, St. Leonards.

The Shaftesbury Memorial, which is now being erected at Piccadilly-circus by Mr. Alfred Gilbert, R.A., as a memorial to the late Lord Shaftesbury, is nearing completion. Arrangements are being made for its dedication on June 1, and the Duke of Westminster has consented to perform the ceremony. Mr. H. R. Williams, of 6, Lime-street, E.C., is the hon. secretary of the committee.

Mr. Robert Wilder has been giving at Kolhapur a series of lectures in English to educated natives. The attendance is quite good, the attention marked, and the inquiry meetings are full and promising. The American Presbyterian missionaries state that as a result many are showing much interest, an investigating spirit, and an attitude of sincerity that we hope will ripen into true knowledge of Christ.

Rev. John McNeill accompanied by Mr. J. H. Burke, sails this day (Thursday) for America, to assist Mr. Moody in the special evangelistic services he is holding in Chicago in connection with the exhibition. Mr. McNeill, as his good-bye testimony in Ireland at the present time, preached in Rev. S. Prenter's church, in Dublin, on Sunday week. There were overflowing congregations morning and evening.

Rev. C. S. Horne.—The Independent states that under Mr. Horne's ministry, "the best days of Kensington Chapel are being recalled. He is happy in the affection of a united people, whose only fear is that his passion for evangelistic work, together with the calls for services which he is constantly receiving from all parts of the kingdom, may urge him to exertions beyond the measure of his allotted strength."

Rev. Charles Spurgeon has been warmly welcomed on his return from Australia. At a special meeting held at Greenwich, for this purpose, Mr. William Higgs, of the Metropolitan Tabernacle, presided, and the chapel was crowded. Several local ministers took part. It was stated that during Mr. Spurgeon's absence the congregations had kept up well, and all the organisations of the church had been maintained in efficient condition.

Evangelistic Notes.

Mr. Jas. A. Smith, evangelist, conducted a week of special meetings from April 24 to 28 in connection with the Aberdeen Y.M.C.A. Although the attendances were not large, much blessing resulted.

Chesham.—A fourteen days' successful mission has just been concluded at Zion Chapel, by the pastor, H. Trueman, and several local preachers. The Lord's people have been graciously revived, and numbers have professed faith in Christ.

Christchurch.—Mr. G. Clarke has conducted a fortnight's mission in the Town Hall with much spiritual blessing. There has been no outward excitement, but the convicting power of the Spirit of God has been very manifestly made known.

Vacation Evangelisation.—Various students at Harley House and Cliff College would be thankful to hear of openings for evangelistic work during the coming summer vacation. Friends should address Mr. Joseph Fox, Cliff College, Curbar, near Sheffield.

Lichfield, Hants.—For six weeks Rev. Walter Bradbury has conducted a mission in this parish, whilst taking the sole charge of it. Much attention was given to the children and many services were held for them which resulted, through God's blessing, in conversions.

Putney.—For various reasons this riverside suburb has been regarded as a difficult place for evangelistic work. A special mission has, however, just been held at the Presbyterian Church by Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Maynard, and great interest was aroused, followed, it is believed, by not a little blessing.

Mr. Rowland Sturt has concluded a fourteen days' mission in the parish of Newington, Hull. The services throughout, considering the excited state of the town consequent upon the strike, were well attended. Mr. Sturt was assisted during the mission by the vicar and his curates, Revs. W. Brailsford and W. G. Footit.

Shrewsbury.—Mr. Wm. Sampson has held a ten-days' mission at the Gospel Hall, Coleham, where Mr. Whitridge Wordale has for many years laboured with success as honorary superintendent. The power of the Spirit was manifest at every service, and most interesting cases of conversion occurred. Backsliders were restored, and Christians drawn nearer to Jesus, and filled with new joy.

Barking.—On Sunday, April 23, a mission was commenced in the Board School Play-hall by Mr. A. A. Harmer, assisted by Miss Clarkson, who sings the Gospel. The hall was crowded at each service, and many anxious souls were led to the Saviour. During the week the services were conducted in the Baptist Chapel, and each evening there were some seeking the Lord. Mr. Harmer's mission closed on Monday evening, when many testified to blessing received.

Mr. T. W. Canning, Evangelisation Society, has been engaged on a fortnight's mission in Hamilton. The meetings were all well attended, and the audiences on Sabbath steadily increased. Mr. Canning's addresses, in which the Gospel was presented in a clear, thoughtful, convincing, and impressive manner, were greatly enjoyed, and proved the means of much refreshing and stimulus to many Christians. Several young men and women were deeply impressed and brought to decision, and a few backsliders were restored. G. B.

Great Assembly Hall.—Mr. F. S. Ball, of the Evangelisation Society, has closed a successful fortnight's mission in Mr. Charrington's Hall. It was the first time Mr. Ball conducted services in the Great Assembly Hall, and his pointed stirring Gospel addresses made a great impression upon the frequenters of the meetings. Night after night men and women found their way into the enquiry room to be dealt with personally about salvation. Outdoor meetings have been held on the Mile-end Waste before the week-night services in the Great Hall, conducted by Mr. Joseph Clarke.

Mr. Alexander Clark, of the Evangelisation Society, has concluded a three weeks' mission in Watton, Norfolk, which has proved a refreshing time to all. Many of the Lord's people have been stirred up to earnest activity, and not a few have been led to put their trust in Christ. There has not been such a united spirit amongst the Christians in Watton for many years. The meetings were held in the Congregational Church and Primitive Methodist Chapel. On the last Sunday evening there was a united service, when church and chapel people mingled in one holy thanksgiving service. J. E. A.

Coldstream, N.B.—A three-months' mission was brought to a close here on Wednesday night, April 19. The meetings were held in the Mechanics' Hall by two lady evangelists belonging to the Faith Pilgrim Mission. From the first the audiences were good, especially on the Sundays. Both Mr. Govan and the pilgrims dealt faithfully with sinners and sin, and also with Christians and the necessity of a consistent, separated, Christ-like life. Many Christians were led to a higher and grander realisation of the great salvation. Scores of sinners were led to decision. We marched the streets nearly every night, singing, and held a short open-air service with testimonies before going into the hall. Testimonies were often given at the close of the after-meetings, when many declared what God had done for them. A prayer union has been formed, numbering between eighty and a hundred members. J. W.

OPEN-AIR MISSION.

A PUBLIC meeting to inaugurate a Finsbury Park Auxiliary of the Open-air Mission took place on Tuesday week in Finsbury Park Hall. There was a large gathering of Christian workers from the various chapels and missions in the district. Mr. B. Barry Wake presided, and addresses in support of the movement were delivered by Rev. William Pierce (New Court Congregational Chapel), Rev. John R. Wood (Upper Holloway Baptist Chapel), and Mr. Frank Cockrem (assistant-secretary of the Open-air Mission). The speakers endeavoured to impress upon the Christians present the importance of open-air preaching, and the need of a more united and effectual effort to reach the hearts of the many thousands in the neighbourhood who never enter a place of worship, especially those who congregate in the park on Sundays listening in large numbers to the pernicious doctrines of the Freethinkers, Socialists, Spiritualists, and other false teachers.

The honorary secretary's address is 15, Russell-road, Holloway, N., and he would be glad to hear from those wishing to join in the work.

A CHEERING LETTER.

DEAR SIR,—Through the kindness of God's people I am receiving THE CHRISTIAN weekly. I do enjoy it so very much. Could you also send me The Herald of Mercy? I am engaged as missionary in connection with the Congregational church. If I were able to pay for these papers I would gladly do so. My district is a very hard and difficult one, but God is with us and souls are being led to Jesus. When I was a little fellow I used to go into a shop on Ludgate-hill and buy a copy of THE REVIVAL, I having just been converted at one of Wm. Carter's meetings at Victoria Hall; so you may guess how much I appreciate THE CHRISTIAN now. Any kind of Gospel books, tracts, etc. are very useful to me in my work for God. With Christian regards, yours, in his service, GEO. MARSH, Missionary.

Lacon, Marshall Co., Ill., U.S.A.

To start free of debt, we require during the next few days £20."

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we purpose giving a portrait and sketch of the late Dr. Burns Thomson, founder of the Edinburgh Medical Mission.

We thank the friends who have sent post-card reports in response to our suggestion; most of those received appear in different parts of this issue. Correspondents will kindly bear in mind that advertisements or appeals are inadmissible; what we desiderate are "facts as to real work done in the Master's name."

The work of the London Samaritan Society, under the direction of Mr. John James Jones, having been severely criticised, we are informed by Mr. J. Tyler, a member of the firm acting as solicitors of the trustees, and himself a trustee, that the trustees and council are investigating the matter, and, as soon as their deliberations are concluded, we shall be able to lay the result before our readers.

The most recent official returns show a great increase in pauperism in Great Britain; there were over eighteen thousand more applications for relief in February of this year than in the corresponding month of 1892. The greatest increase was in the northern counties—a fact due doubtless to the unhappy strike in the cotton trade in Lancashire and in the iron trade in Northumberland; but London also contributed largely to the alarming condition of things. It is to be regretted that there is no commensurate falling off in the Drink Bill.

Mrs. Lewis, who recently discovered an ancient manuscript of the Gospels in Syriac, has been relating the story of her travels and researches. Accompanied by her sister, Mrs. Gibson, she penetrated the Arabian peninsula last year, and unearthed the precious document in the Convent of St. Katharine. At the very outset the gentle bearing of the two ladies disarmed the prejudice of the monks; and when, after some waiting, they had been accorded access to the library, they were richly rewarded for their trouble and daring. They were allowed to examine the MS. with care, and photograph it at leisure. Both ladies have a serviceable knowledge of several languages, ancient and modern; and their conduct may furnish an example to others of like taste and talents.

We are grieved and disappointed to see that the income of the L.M.S. from the week of Self-Denial is not so good this year as last. The beginning was a glad surprise to many, and the hope seemed to be cherished that this year would be a further advance. Minor causes, no doubt, have played a part in diminishing the amount, but there must surely be a major cause somewhere. Is it this, that the method has been employed rather as a means of obtaining money than as a means of educating the churches into a higher spiritual life? There is always a danger of resting satisfied with the acquisition of material means, rather than remembering that they are of inferior worth to the motive from whence they spring. It cannot, at any rate, be said that the wealthy Congregationalists practised much Self-Denial during the week specially devoted to that privilege.

Mr. R. F. Horton's new book "Verbum Dei," which we hope to review next week, is characterised by the two qualities for which he is so well known, great liberty of view with regard to the composition of the Bible, and evangelistic fervour. Why he should have pressed the former so prominently into a series of lectures on preaching, delivered to a number of young students, is not very apparent, but we hope they will not fail to notice some inconsistencies in his position. His one aim is to show that every true preacher has a word of God given to him, we presume every time he preaches. Yet Mr. Horton, who is so anxious for him to possess this treasure, can speak of the Bible in a way which, however much he may dread it, will inevitably lead some to undervalue its Divine message and authority. On the other hand,

> Science is a word of God; the Imitatio Christi is a word of God. All the great poets, from Homer and Hesiod, down to Browning and Walt Whitman, utter, in the stress of their poetic afflatus, truths and feelings which we can only explain by attributing them to God Himself.

The book is confusing for the stress laid upon this word of God, direct from God Himself, and the equal stress laid upon knowing "the word of God outside the Bible," and then the stress laid upon character in him who has the word to speak it, while character counts for nothing in others who also had the word and spoke it.

The Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children is one to make Englishmen ashamed. It presents in plain, hard figures some of our domestic sins. From one point of view we are brutal people—"without natural affection" is one of our characteristics. In one year as many as 11,336 cases of cruelty to children were investigated, and of these 10,171 proved true. The crimes against these poor helpless creatures make one's flesh creep; neglect and starvation, assaulting them with sticks, thongs, straps, boots, and poker, roasting and burning them, sending them out into the cold and wet, perpetrating upon them gross and cruel immorality. The operations of the Society do not yet cover the whole of the kingdom, so that we do not know the worst, but to think that in so-called Christian England more than 25,000 children should have been so abused as to entitle them to the protection of law makes one wonder where we live.

The action of law in these and perhaps many more cases is absolutely necessary; an increase of legal power over parents may even be required, but let us not delude ourselves into the idea that our work and responsibility end here. Power over children by the State is dangerous to a sense of parental responsibility; and until that sense of responsibility and love is deepened and extended cases of neglect and cruelty will always arise. That matters would be unspeakably worse than they are if the law were less inquisitorial, and if less were done for children both by the State and by private philanthropy, we are perfectly sure; nevertheless, there are parents who quietly disencumber themselves of their duty and privilege because they know that someone else will stand in loco parentis to their offspring. We may not, even for a temporary advantage to some children, weaken the parental feeling all round. The primary duties of parents to children and of children to parents seem to need a fresh and urgent setting forth in these days.

A correspondent pleads for our insertion of the following letter, which recently appeared in a contemporary headed, "Are Choirs Irreverent?":—

> People really do not know one half of what goes on in church while the sermon is being preached, and I think a surpliced choir, consisting entirely of men and boys, is, as a rule, worse in the matter of behaviour than a mixed one.
> Two members of our family are at present choristers in a surpliced choir, and think nothing of writing notes, eating sweets, and laughing during the service, while the elder members settle themselves comfortably for a nap, troubling little about the boys, who relate the account of any special "joke" they have had, when they come home, in very self-satisfied tones.
> I have known the vicar of one of our principal churches to stop, not once, but many times, during his discourse, in order to request the choir to make a little less noise.
>
> The boy part seem to think it good fun to be in the choir; it gives them extra pocket-money, helps to train their voices, and makes them feel very important when they come into church. No higher motive for giving his services ever enters a boy's head.
> Very few of them derive benefit from attending church twice each Sunday, and often during the week. They do not go in the right spirit, to begin with. They do not think of giving their services to the Church or to God, and what is said in a sermon they regard as meant for the congregation only, their exalted position on the chancel giving them leave to do exactly as they please. Then, when they come out, they do so in the same spirit as they would come from school, or any other place where they have been held under restraint, glad that service is over, and that they are free once more.

We hope this is an exceptional description, and yet we fear it sometimes exists, even where the boys are not surpliced.

The French are peculiarly a newspaper-reading people. Sad to say, however, they have few journals that are elevating in purpose and tendency. There is no Protestant daily paper in France; but we rejoice to learn that plans are being matured for the supply of this urgent need. The present is a very auspicious time, for while everyone reads, many are quite weary of the popular Press, which, as may well be expected in a country where Romanism and rationalism hold sway, is essentially corrupt and degrading. M. Réveillaud, who has long directed the weekly paper Le Signal, is one of the promoters of the enterprise, and his name is a guarantee of high motive and journalistic ability. M. Rougemont, another Protestant editor, is lending his support; and although the difficulties are many and great, we cannot doubt but success will attend the exertions that are being made.

We understand that arrangements calculated to help on the enterprise have been made with a Paris daily paper; and we are not surprised also to learn that our French brethren are expecting a sympathetic interest in their undertaking on the part of British Christians. There can be no question of the deep importance of the project, and the special opportuneness of the present moment. Help can be rendered by taking up shares (100 francs—£4 each), in the company which has been formed. Further particulars may be had from Mr. Clarence Hooper, Y.M.C.A., Exeter Hall, Strand.

Lord Roberts has emphatically denied the accuracy of the statements made by Dr. Kate Bushnell and Mrs. Andrew with regard to the continuance of a system of state-regulated vice in India since Parliament decided that it should cease. We said last week that something of the kind would be done. Fortunately a departmental committee is now sitting to receive evidence, and Lord Roberts can appear and give his evidence. We fear no overthrow of what the American ladies have said. We quite expect that Lord Roberts has come home to learn a great deal about the country where he has spent such a large portion of his life, and about the army of which he was the head. One of his complaints, that if the American ladies found "regulation" in existence anywhere, they ought to have told him, and he would have set things right, is amusing, for its naïveté. Does he think they believe that anything would have been done at their suggestion when the will of Parliament was being contemned? And does he think that ladies who were going round the world on a given errand for a great Society, would feel that they had anything to do but fulfil that errand according to the best of their judgment? It was not in their commission to play into the enemy's hands.

MISS LEIGH'S PARIS HOMES.

The lady in charge of these Homes, writes:—"A very acceptable break in our daily routine has recently been given us by the mission held in the Rue d'Aguesseau church, by Rev. W. Hay Aitken. Our Bible-readings and prayer meetings have thereby had a fresh impetus given to them, and we ask our Christian friends in England to join in prayer with us that the young lives in our Homes now consecrated to God may be faithfully devoted to his service.

"Mrs. Crouch addressed some heart-searching, and yet encouraging words, and described our work as one of urgent necessity and of grand opportunities. How often we find her words to be true, for our work is so extensive and touches so many sides of life."

The orphanage has recently admitted an English baby of three weeks old. A sad story encircles this young life—a story sad enough for tears, but too sad to be related here.

These Homes, which radiate so many Christian influences through the hearts of our struggling young country-women in Paris, and help to brighten their lives, are languishing for want of funds.

R. McLeod.

REPENTANCE is but a kind of table talk till we see so much of the deformity of our inward nature as to be in some degree frightened and terrified at the sight of it. There must be some kind of an earthquake within us, something that must rend and shake us to the bottom before we can be enough sensible, either of the state of death we are in, or enough desirous of that Saviour who alone can raise us from it. We must with our blessed Lord go over the brook Kedron, and with Him sweat great drops of sorrow before He can say for us, as He said for Himself, "It is finished."—William Law.

The Witnessing Church.

THE MESSENGERS OF THE CHURCHES AND THE GLORY OF CHRIST.—2 Cor. viii. 23.

The past century has been in many respects the most remarkable in human history. It is very literally "the heir of all the ages in the foremost files of time." But its paramount interest to Him that sitteth upon the throne, and to the angels that surround the throne, must surely be the reviving obedience of the Church on earth to the great Commission of her ascending Lord: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature."

The first Missionary Society was organised and endued with the needed power in the upper room on the Day of Pentecost. The Missionary Society was the Church, and the Church was the Missionary Society. That the Church, as a whole, or the churches of which it is composed, should transfer the responsibility of preaching the Gospel at home and abroad to Home and Foreign Missionary Societies is entirely opposed to the mind of God as expressed in the New Testament.

The Missionary Societies have done splendid work, and God has richly rewarded them. As Obed-edom, the Gittite, received the ark of the Lord, and was blessed in all that pertained unto him, so the societies have accepted the great Commission to evangelise the world, and have been blessed accordingly. But the ark was not at home in Obed-edom's house, nor is the Great Command at home in the Mission House. Its home is in "the House of God, which is the Church of the living God, the pillar and ground of the truth."

We have Pentecostal organisations and much exhortation to surrender self, to seek the fulness of the Spirit, the baptism of power from on high. But the hundred-and-twenty men and women who formed the nucleus of the Christian Church, did not merely wait during those ten days for the promised power of the Holy Spirit coming upon them. They had been constituted by their Lord his witnesses in Jerusalem and Judea, in Samaria and Galilee, and to the uttermost parts of the earth, and it was to equip them for this world-wide and age-long warfare that the power of the Spirit was promised. They accepted the Commission, and they waited for the power, which was abundantly bestowed. God giveth not the Spirit by measure unto his Son; and the only measure by which the Spirit of the Father and the Son is now measured out to us is our capacity to receive. The Lord has never recalled his Commission to every member of his Church to be one of his witnesses, and He has never withheld the promised power from any who have yielded themselves to be his ambassadors.

What God has joined let not man put asunder. To attempt to preach the Gospel without the promised power of the Spirit, and to seek the power for any other purpose than to become Christ's effective witnesses, is to separate into two parts what is one purpose in the mind of God, and must end in failure and disappointment. How slowly we learn. The Keswick Convention began by seeking power, but declined to include the direct advocacy of missionary work. By-and-by it admitted a supplementary missionary meeting. These missions became a distinctive and prominent feature. Soon it formed a Keswick Mission, and sent out missionaries. Their reports and other missionary intelligence and exhortation became the most enthusiastic and most welcome part of the proceedings. Now, it is not so true that Keswick has a home and foreign mission, as that it is a home and foreign mission. The most hopeful feature of our multiplying conventions is that they tend to equalise the Church's feet (2 Sam. xxii. 34); and that the Church may fulfil its true function, to receive the fire of the Spirit and transmute it into evangelising force.

If the brethren who were entrusted with the temporal relief which was sent by the Churches of Macedonia and Corinth to the poor saints of Judea were in reality "the messengers of the Churches and the glory of Christ," much more must this honourable designation belong to those who bear the bread of life to the heathen world. This greatest honour which God ever put upon men is the inalienable prerogative and duty and privilege of the Church of God, which He purchased with his own blood. It is in the fitness of things that they who live by the Gospel should preach the Gospel; that they to whom the Gospel has brought eternal life should bear the living water to the dying millions for whom the Saviour died. They are the members of the body of the Son of God, the Primal Missionary from heaven, who made the Great Commission to his people possible by Himself fulfilling his mission from the bosom of the Father to suffer without the gate. They have an altar whereof they have no right to eat who serve the Tabernacle; it is given to them to eat of that sacrifice once offered, by going forth to Him without the camp and bearing his reproach.

As Christ claimed the Churches in their every member as his witnesses, so they who carry the truth to souls "far, far away in heathen darkness dwelling" are pre-eminently "the messengers of the Churches and the glory of Christ."

When Jonathan went up against the garrison of the Philistines, he bade his armour-bearer "Come up after me, for the Lord hath delivered them into the hand of Israel." Not in their own name, nor in the name of their family or tribe, did those two men go up to beard the lion in his den; but in the name of the Israel of God. Not in their own name, nor in the name of their denomination or society, does God recognise our missionaries as sent to the heathen world. "Do any inquire about them? They are the messengers of the Churches and the glory of Christ."

The Churches have too much denuded themselves of this, their highest honour. We have neglected the Pentecostal Commission, have largely ceased to be Christ's witnesses, and have, therefore, lost the Pentecostal power of the Spirit. Subscription to a missionary society cannot be substituted for personal witness for Christ. A witnessing Church will be a Missionary Church, and a Missionary Church will be continually receiving the power of the Spirit coming upon it.

The Society, composed of devoted and trusted members of the Church of Christ, is the indispensable executive of the witnessing Church, and every such Society will surely become a thousandfold more useful and more blessed, when the Church of Christ assumes her rightful attitude, and employs the Society to carry out her acknowledged privilege and her accepted responsibility.

THERE IS NO BETTER GAUGE of a nation's progress than the treatment it awards to the young generation.

A LADY MISSIONARY in Africa, in her last letter to her mother in America, said that, as she looked from her window while writing, she saw nine men lying upon the street dead drunk from New England rum.

WHAT IS CHRIST TO ME?

HIS ASCENSION.

An old saint once surprised her minister by saying that there was one thing which our Lord left unfinished. When asked to explain, she quoted the words, "And it came to pass that while He blessed them He was parted from them, and carried up into heaven" (Luke xxiv. 51). He was in the act of blessing them when his ascension took place. Was the blessing interrupted by his removal from them? Not so: He ascended that He might continue and perfect the blessing, as would not have been possible had He remained on the earth. If you have never understood the value of his ascension, seek to understand it now.

Long before it took place our Lord foretold it, and led the disciples to expect their highest blessing in connection with it. Recall some of his words: "Because I go unto my Father" is given as the reason why he that believes on Him should do greater works than his own (Jno. xiv. 12). In his departure from them they were to find reason for rejoicing, because He said, "I go unto the Father, for my Father is greater than I" (Jno. xiv. 28). Still more remarkable is the promise, "A little while and ye shall not see Me; and again a little while and ye shall see Me: because I go to the Father" (Jno. xvi. 16). After his resurrection their thoughts were still led in the same direction. "Touch me not, for I am not yet ascended to my Father" (Jno. xx. 17). His resurrection, wonderful and valuable though it was, was only a stage on his way to the Father. Think of these promises. They are for us as well as for those who heard them at the first. Put it to yourself like this: Jesus says that his going from me to the Father is a reason for great rejoicing; that it makes it possible for me to see Him, and to do greater works than those which He did. It is to be feared that few of us have got such blessing as this from his ascension.

But the Apostles did.—Recall the story, and see whether that is not true. The forty days during which the risen Saviour has repeatedly appeared to his disciples are now closing. His last interview with them is on the Mount of Olives, not far from the city of Bethany (comp. Acts i. 12 with Luke xxiv. 50). His last word is spoken; his hands are uplifted in blessing; and lo! He rises before them, and they watch Him as He ascends up toward heaven, until a cloud receives Him out of their sight. With what feelings will the disciples return to Jerusalem? Will they sorrow over their loss with bitter tears and breaking hearts? That is not what we read. "They worshipped Him, and returned to Jerusalem with great joy" (Luke xxiv. 52). Will they be powerless now as the nine were when He was with the other three on the Mount of Transfiguration? That is not what we read. Only ten days after his ascension, Peter, standing up with the eleven, witnesses to the multitude in Jerusalem with a power he had never previously possessed, and a success unknown even during the life of Jesus (Acts ii.). And this he attributed to the fact that Jesus was exalted to the right hand of God (Acts ii. 33). The words of Christ concerning his ascension were fulfilled to the Apostles. Much as He had been to them while with them in the flesh, He was far more to them when He had gone into the presence of the Father.

How may his ascension be an equal blessing to us? The special and oft-repeated promise of Jesus was that at his ascension the Holy Spirit should be given (Jno. vii. 37-39). And the experience of the Apostles proves that only after they had received from the risen Saviour the fulfilment of this promise did they know the full measure of blessing designed for them. They obtained much when they forsook all to follow Him in his life; more, when they understood the meaning of his death; still more when they knew certainly that He was risen; but most of all when they were filled with the Spirit after his ascension. To you, and to all of us, his ascension makes possible the same indwelling of the Holy Spirit. Say it to yourself now: Jesus is exalted that I might be filled with the Spirit. His risen, victorious, enthroned life is mine, and will perpetuate itself in and through me. "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ" (Eph. i. 3).

WHAT IS PREACHING FOR?

BY THEODORE L. CUYLER, D.D.

A bright young minister in Iowa writes to me in regard to his work, and says:—

"Here in the West it is very difficult to keep on spiritual lines. Many people desire on Sunday a simon-pure oration; they want a man in the pulpit who can 'draw,' and they think that in order to draw, one must be flowery, dramatic, emotional, sensational—anything and everything but the one great thing. When this sort of pressure is brought to bear on me, I read 'Finney's Autobiography,' Albert Barnes's 'Way of Salvation,' B. Fay Mills, and kindred writers."

A wise young man he is; for he understands the one great thing for which he entered the ministry; in fact, the one chief purpose for which the Lord Jesus Christ established a Gospel ministry.

The demand for preachers who can "draw" is not confined to Iowa, or to the West; it is quite universal. Within certain proper limitations it is a reasonable demand; for a minister can do very little good to people who do not like him, and none at all to those who will not come to hear him. Every minister is bound to make his Sabbath services attractive; there is a legitimate and also an illegitimate way of doing this. To many a man the temptation is strong to entice people to God's house by flowery rhetoric, or dramatic delivery, or by divers sensational devices that I have no time or space to enumerate. When he once begins this style of "drawing" he must rack his brains and tax his ingenuity to keep it up, or else his auditors will vanish away. The vital question ought to present itself to his mind—For what purpose have I drawn all these immortal beings into God's house on God's holy day? Have they come here to be entertained, or to have their ears tickled or their sensibilities played upon, or even to have a certain degree of intellectual profit? If they are attracted to the sanctuary for no other reasons than these, it is indeed better for them than to loiter at home, or to squander sacred time in some sort of Sabbath-breaking amusement.

But to draw the possessors of immortal souls into a church edifice, and not to use every possible means to draw their souls to Jesus Christ, is but a pitiful travesty of the Divine art of preaching the Gospel. The chief end of every true minister's labours is to awaken careless souls, to warn the endangered, to instruct the ignorant, to comfort the sorrowing, to help the weak, and to edify believers; in short, to make

BAD PEOPLE GOOD, AND GOOD PEOPLE BETTER.

The man who does not aim at this was never called of God into the ministry. He may attract auditors for a time to his pulpit, but he does not attract them to a Christian life; he may win a salary, but he does not win souls. No man has a moral right to enter a pulpit unless he comes there as the ambassador of the Lord Jesus Christ, and comes also—as Moses descended from the Mount—from communion with God, and with a direct message from God. And when he enters his pulpit in that spirit and for that purpose, God will come with him. His preaching will have a power from on high, even though his scholarship be very moderate, and his rhetoric be very unadorned, and his delivery undramatic. Such preaching as this, if it flows out of a warm heart, and is delivered with an honest glow, will draw; and it will continue to draw, long after the fireworks of pulpit pyrotechnists have all exploded, and all the tar barrels of the sensationalists have ended in smoke.

My young Western brother is wise in recruiting, and confirming his high and holy purpose by turning to such effective ministers of Christ as those whom he names. If there be one established fact in the history of the Church, it is the fact that those preachers of the Gospel who have aimed the most directly to save souls and to bring men to Jesus Christ have been the preachers who have achieved the most solid results. The ministry of the Apostles had this single aim, and Paul struck its keynote when he proclaimed, "I am determined to know nothing among you save Jesus Christ and Him crucified." The great Reformation, under the lead of Luther and Calvin, was far more than a protestation against Romish errors; it was a direct bringing of souls to Jesus Christ, and the reliance of these heroic reformers was on the SUPERNATURAL POWER OF THE HOLY SPIRIT.

When a spiritual famine prevailed in Great Britain during the last century Whitefield and the Wesleys rose at once to the demand of the times. They clove at once to the root of the matter; they addressed their fellow-countrymen as sinners exposed to the "wrath to come," and their business was to lead sinners to the only One who could save them for this world or another. Converted hearts made converted lives. Out of these labours sprang the world-wide labours and philanthropies of Methodism. The real power of that great Church to-day lies in its soul-saving power. And if the Methodist pulpit, or the Presbyterian, or Baptist, or Congregational, or any other pulpit should ignore the tremendous facts of man's utter depravity and need of regeneration by atoning blood and the Holy Spirit; if it busies itself mainly in answering the scoffs of the sceptics, or in philosophising, or in pyrotechnics, or even in unfolding general principles of morality, it would soon become

A SHORN SAMSON.

Let every young minister understand that the men who have never failed to "draw" have been the Finneys, the Guthries, the Lyman Beechers, the McCheynes, and the Maclarens, who lifted up Jesus Christ as the only attraction of their pulpits. Spurgeon is admitted on all hands as the most effective preacher of modern times; and he once addressed to me the characteristic question, "How far do your chief American preachers aim at the conversion of souls?" The question showed his estimate of the true mission of the Christian ministry. I feel quite sure that if Phillips Brooks could revisit this scene of his noble, unselfish labours, he would care infinitely less about the universal plaudits of his career, or the promised statues in Boston's public squares, than he would for the sweet satisfaction that he brought many a soul nearer to God. He once said, "Work is everything or work is nothing, according to the Lord we work for"; and again he said, "Our religion is not a system of ideas about Christ; it is Christ." That one word describes his "drawing" power. This age of ours boasts loudly of its culture, but no culture is a substitute for converting grace; it prates glibly about its "advanced thought," but for its redemption God means that this world shall never advance one single inch beyond the cross of Calvary.

Let my young brother encourage himself that he is working on the right "spiritual lines." Pulpits are not built for the delivery of "orations." Their drawing power—in God's sight—depends on their power to draw weak, sinful man up nearer to Him. Nor let my friend under-estimate his work because his pulpit is in a small Western town. For aggregate spiritual influence on the whole land, the country ministry outweighs the city ministry. In New England's best days rural ministers moulded its character, and rural pulpits shaped the theology of America. In our times the names of a few conspicuous city pastors figure in the public journals; and some rural pastors long to fly, like moths, into the candle—a very vain and foolish ambition. Country boys have always become the rulers in this nation, and they are trained by the country ministers and homes and Sunday-schools. Let every minister of Jesus Christ in the villages and farm regions, who has a strong foothold among his people, and whose only purpose is to win immortal souls to the only life worth living, let him "learn therewith to be content." If he is preaching Jesus and saving souls he is doing a work that an archangel might covet.

WHEN WE FORCE A CHILD to remember trivial details, we do not strengthen, we really weaken its memory, because these useless details take the place in his brain of more important ideas.—M. Guyeau.

TO READ ALOUD A STORY to a child, and see how far the child is able to repeat the story for the benefit of another child, forms an admirable method of developing attention.

BOSTON MAY FAIR.—For the third year in succession the Boston open-air mission have hired ground in the heart of the Pleasure Fair, and proclaimed the glorious Gospel of God's grace. Lieut.-Colonel Phayre, Major Liebenrood, Captain Tottenham, and Mr. George Heath joined the local friends for the fair week, and many hundreds stopped to listen to the old story. A large band of consecrated workers were present each evening, and the Gospel was sung into the hearts of some who, perhaps, would not stay to listen to an address.

Archdeacon Farrar on Ritualistic Aggression.*

It ought to be the merest matter of course that we, as members of the Reformed Church, declare ourselves to be true to the principles for the maintenance of which that very Reformed Church, as a Church, exists. We have in our favour, as we believe, both the letter and the spirit of the New Testament, and every authoritative document of the Church of England. In spite of the Prayer Book, in spite of the Rubrics, in spite of the Homilies, in spite of the great utterances of all our greatest divines for centuries, the extreme Ritualistic party (and I do them no wrong in saying it, for they openly avow it) have been doing for the last twenty years their best, and are now doing their best, to Romanise our worship, to Romanise our doctrine, our clergy, and our whole institution. I can understand and I respect the intellectual position of a Romanist, but I cannot so easily understand or so easily respect the position of an English minister, who, being a minister of the Reformed Church, under the shadow of that Church, and in the pay of that Church, is yet, to all intents and purposes, a Romanist. Many have said to me that they are grieved and hurt and even indignant at the present state of things, but they do not wish to mingle themselves up with the question, because, they say, the crisis must come, and when it comes they will take part in it. That seems to me to be absolutely a mistake. The crisis has come. We are in the very midst of the crisis now; and when you consider the very extraordinary rapid development of what we know as Ritualism, I say when we consider what has taken place within the last ten years, if the Evangelical party is timid, if they are supine and spiritless, if they are afraid either of loss of popularity, or from love of peace, or of loss of promotion or preferment, to take their part openly and strongly in this struggle, they will have none but themselves to thank if, ten years hence, they find themselves members of a Church which has largely alienated the great heart of the English people, and which is to all intents and purposes Romanist.

ROMEWARD DEVELOPMENT.

I want, if you will allow me, to illustrate this extraordinary rapidity of Romeward development. I take it there are 7000 of the clergy who are avowed supporters of the Romeward movement—that 4000 of them are members of the Church Union, who are pledged to support vestments, lights, wafer bread, the eastward position, and the mixed chalice. In 1882 there were 2581 Ritualistic churches. In 1892 there were 5042. In 1882 there were 336 only in which what may be called "Eucharistic vestments" were used, and now there are 1029. There were then only nine churches in which incense was illegally used, there are now 177. Then there were 581 which had altar lights, and now the number is 2048. That has been the development in ten years. Now, as far as clothes and as far as candles are concerned, I, for my part, am supremely indifferent to them in themselves; but they become a very serious matter when they are the avowed badges of a party, when they are meant as a sign that those that use them are, to a great extent, determined to reverse the position held by our first reformers, and when they are the sign of teaching principles which we believe to be unprimitive, unscriptural doctrines—and false. The essence of the question lies in this extraordinary rapidity of advance, and, therefore, let me give you another illustration on it which is shown by the immense difference of position held by the extreme members of the Ritualistic party now to those who were their leaders only twenty years ago.

When I was a youth I was at King's College, London. It was regarded as a High Church institution. It was under a most esteemed and venerable head—my old friend, Canon Jelf, who was distinctly a High Churchman, and it had a High Church council, of which the present Prime Minister was a member. In those days we were universally taught that the man who was the greatest, most learned, most representative, and most admirable teacher of the true theory of the Church of England was the judicious Hooker. What is the position that the Ritualistic party now holds towards that great acknowledged teacher? I myself have known the Eucharistic liturgy since I was a boy, and I agree with every principle and every word of it. Hooker says, "It hath properly now no sacrifice"—that sacrifice is now no part of the Christian minister. Hooker says "Presbyters" seems to be more agreeable than "Priests." Hooker says the Holy Ghost throughout the body of the New Testament does not make so much as mention of them. Now I may mention that a few months ago Lord Nelson, doing me the honour to write about me, said I was an unfair representative of the Church of England because I posed (whatever that may be) as a denouncer of sacerdotalism and Christian priesthood. Personally, I am profoundly indifferent to what Lord Nelson thought fit to say of me, or what an entire battalion of Lord Nelsons may say. But I think that it is a somewhat extraordinary thing that that remark is made to a man who holds exactly, identically and verbally, the same principles and the same beliefs about sacerdotalism and about a Christian priesthood as were held by Hooker, even by Andrewes, and my late tutor, the Bishop of Durham (Bishop Lightfoot), and as were held—I will not say anything about the writers of the New Testament, but—by every great divine of the Church of England during twenty years. I might show you that they left Bishop Andrewes, who was regarded as a great leader of the Anglicans, far behind them; they even left Archbishop Laud far behind them, because now apostolic succession is made of the existence of the Church. Even Archbishop Laud said that Apostolic succession was a very good thing if you might have it. He by no means expressed himself that the doctrine of Apostolic succession could be absolutely proved.

I want to show you that the movement has not only left these old leaders far behind, but they have also left their leaders of yesterday. It is well known that Keble had no regard for Eucharistic vestments. When he went into a London vestry and saw them, he looked at them with strange surprise, and showed his disapproval of them. Dean Burgon used language about Ritualists that I, for one, should entirely shrink from using. He called them "Congregationalists," he called them "Sectarians," he called them "Separatists," and he used other words about them: "A party," he said, "which would have been disowned by Churchmen of every age and every school, and, I may add, of every clime from the beginning until now." I will only now quote one more testimony of proof. You all know that the eminent, able, and beloved Wilberforce was regarded as a Father of the Anglican school, and you know in that memorable address, that he gave only four days before his lamented death, to the archdeacons and others of his diocese, he used language in which he spoke in the most unsparing terms of Ritualism. If in twenty years we have had this enormous advance, what shall we come to in ten years more? If they do these things with the green tree, what shall be done with the dry?

There are some things in the Ritualistic movement which we heartily dislike, and some, perhaps I may venture good-humouredly to say, we despise; but there are some things which by the very principles of truth and by what we believe to be our allegiance to the teachings of Christianity, to be the herald of religious materialism and superstition, and in regard to which it is our bounden duty, as true and faithful members of the Church of England, to repudiate with every nerve and fibre of our religious conviction. Convocation is usually regarded as a High-Church body, certainly some of the bodies of Convocation are, at all events, High Churchmen, but the prayer used in Convocation is that we may earnestly repudiate the errors, corruptions, and superstitions of the Church of Rome. We now see how there have entered into the very heart of the Church of England some of the things that we, at any rate, regard as the most serious of those errors, corruptions, and superstitions. I should like just to mention three of these, and I do so with the abject deference which is due from one who is "an unfair representative of the Church of England" to so illustrious a light as Lord Nelson! One of those principles which we repudiate is sacerdotalism. By sacerdotalism we mean the changing of the English presbytery into a sacrificial priesthood, which means the interposition of a class and caste of men between the soul and the most precious and undefinable privilege purchased for us by the blood of Christ, which is a free, immediate, and unimpeded access straight to the footstool of our God! We mean by sacerdotalism the putting forward of a set of men as vicarious and not representative ministers, and as men who are supposed to offer on our behalf a sacrifice such as we declare they have no power to offer.

NEW TESTAMENT TEACHING.

Here certainly we have the whole of the New Testament on our side. Bishop Lightfoot, than whom I can quote no greater authority, says distinctly that the Church of England has no sacerdotal system. It interposes no such barrier between God and man, and St. Paul said: "Let a man so account of us as of ministers of Christ and stewards of the mysteries of God." The word "priest," which we now hear on every side, as though it were the proudest title in the world, is not used in the sense of presbyter, but in the sense of a sacrificial priest. It does not once occur in all the thirteen Epistles of St. Paul. St. Paul wrote to Timothy and he wrote to Titus, and he used ten different names as the names of members of the Christian ministry, and the one name he never gave them is the word "priest." I turn to the Epistle of Peter, and the word "priest" does not occur in it. I turn to St. John, and it does not once occur in it. I turn to St. James, and it does not once occur. I turn to the Apocalypse, and it does occur; but how does it occur? It occurs as a name in a secondary and materialistic sense, and is not given to any ministerial class, but is given to every member of the Christian brotherhood. The Ritualistic party may writhe as they like round the spearpoint of the Word of God; but it is impossible while we have as the Magna Charta of the liberty of the Church of England the great Sixth Article; it is impossible by any amount of sophism or special pleading, by any amount of garbled or misunderstood quotations of the Fathers—it is impossible for them to convey to the mind of any man of ordinary religious judgment the fact that they do not use as the very keynote of an entire system the one express name which from first to last the New Testament absolutely refutes and ignores.

I will only touch on the second doctrine, and that is the doctrine of transubstantiation. The doctrine of transubstantiation was not even accepted by one act of even the Romish Church until the Lateran Council of the thirteenth century. The doctrine of transubstantiation appears to us to be a very terrible

RETROGRESSION INTO MATERIALISM.

It seems to us to be a local materialising of the presence of God which is alien to the entire spirit of the New Testament; and when I hear of a distinguished Canon of the Church of England getting up in a great English cathedral, and saying (if my informant be correct) that he is confident his God "lies on yonder altar," I only say he is using there an expression and a misinterpreted metaphor which we should repudiate with all our energy.

I will only touch on one other doctrine. We may repudiate the other two, we may heartily dislike them; but this is one which I think we ought to more than dislike, and which we ought most energetically to condemn, and that is the doctrine and practice of auricular confession. Auricular confession is a late innovation which was unknown to primitive antiquity. It was unknown, I need not say, to the New Testament, and was unknown to the Fathers. Auricular confession in every country and every age in which it has existed, has brought forth the most bitter and deplorable fruits. Auricular confession is now avowed and openly practised in a large number of parishes in the Church of England, although auricular confession has been branded age after age in history and on the highest testimony with the stigma of intolerable horrors. I have no hesitation in saying that auricular confession as now introduced into the Church of England seems to me to be much more dangerous even than it is in the Church of Rome. In the Church of Rome the abuses of the confessional have been condemned by Council after Council, by Bull after Bull, by Pope after Pope, by writer after writer, in generation after generation, and in country after country. The abuses of the confessional have been condemned by a list of Popes—by Alexander IV., by Gregory XV., and others, and by various writers. Even at the Council of Trent a Romish Archbishop laid before that Council a letter on the abuses of the confessional, which contains as damaging an indictment against it as any Protestant could have written. In the Church of Rome I believe a man cannot take the position of confessor unless he has a licence to do so, but here in the Church of England any little priestling—for when he is a priest he is just as much a priest in one sense as another; he may be a mere boy in age; he may be portentous in ignorance; he may be remarkable for his stupidity; he may scarcely have been able to get merely a minor degree without being two or three times plucked; he may have found it almost impossible to pass the ordeal of the Bishop's examination; and yet in spite of all this he may go into a parish, and in the first month of his residence he may put in the Parish Magazine that anybody may come to mass, that they are none of his parishioners unless they confess to him, and that—to quote an expression from a Ritualistic manual—they are to kneel before their confessor as a culprit before his judge. Now I do say this, that it is a most dangerous and even

* An address delivered at the meeting of the National Protestant Church Union.

A MOST PAINFUL STATE OF THINGS.

I do not for a moment deny that many of the Ritualists are excellent men—earnest men and sincere and religious men. Many of them are, I was going to say, my own personal friends, but I can hardly say that; I am their friend, but I say this—supposing that they were an innumerable multitude of angels, what possible guarantee have you that there should be something different in their case from the case of every other body of priests in the world, and that you would not find amongst them somebody who would reintroduce some of the abuses of the confessional, which have existed wherever it has prevailed? May not some intriguing priest—for you have got bad priests as well amongst them—poison the peace of your family, dividing the love of the family, and separating the wife from the love of the husband, and alienating the feelings of the daughter against her mother, acting upon the weak, the ignorant, and impressionable, and filling their minds, in all their ignorance and weakness, with a mass of falsity and superstition?

It has been said that this work rests in the hands of the laity of the Church of England—this work of upholding what our fathers died for in battle and at the stake. All I can say to you English members of the laity is this, that if you allow the system of the confessional to be brought back, as it is being brought back into the midst of you—if you are content to see men trumpeted as saints and in all probability elevated to bishoprics in proportion to the eagerness with which they proclaim these views—it will be absolutely and entirely your own fault, and you will have spoilt the heritage of truth and liberty which was won for you at the Reformation. I will ask you, and I will ask the whole Ritualistic party of the Church of England, what they think they would achieve if they carry out this innovation to the bitter and ruinous end.

It is not as if we had no object lessons all around us where the system is carried on in different European countries. Look at Spain. Only yesterday I came across a passage from an eminent writer, who said that in proportion as the Church of Rome reached its highest power, in that very proportion did it sink lowest in scientific inquiry and every moral attribute. Will you compare Roman Catholic Ireland with a Protestant country or Presbyterian Scotland? What do you say to France? A great divine there taught that unless the laity went to mass on Sunday, and confessed and communicated at Easter, they were guilty of mortal sin, which nothing could wipe out except the confessional. Do you wish to see England with a state of things such as you have in France, if Ritualism prevails? I do not believe that Ritualism will ever lead back the English nation to Romanism; it may drive a great part of the English nation into indifference, but I believe the English nation would rather reel back into barbarism and savagery than be led back into the intolerable tyranny of priesthood.

SUNDERLAND.—Pastor F. E. Marsh and his friends hope to hold in Bethesda Chapel, Sunderland, May 23—25, a united convention on the second coming of Christ. Amongst the speakers will be Revs. F. B. Meyer, J. Hudson Taylor, J. Urquhart, and J. Wilkinson. In the letter of invitation it is stated that:—Feeling the importance of this "glorious hope" the above Conference is called that we may prayerfully ponder and practically hear what the Lord has to say upon this subject through his servants; for if the coming of Christ is a living reality to God's people, it must make them prayerful in spirit, holy in life, joyful in soul, pure in heart, earnest in service, clear in testimony, and all for Christ.

The Witness of the Spirit.

A WHITSUNTIDE MEDITATION.

BY REV. MARK GUY PEARSE.*

The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit that we are the children of God.—Rom. viii. 16.

The only religion that can satisfy is the work of the Spirit of God in our hearts. By all means look to your creed, and see that it stands firm and square with the Word of God. By all means seek the forms of worship that help you to get nearest to God; and do not think the same form of worship is alike helpful to everybody. But be sure of this, that creeds however true, and forms of worship however solemn, or impressive, or earnest, can never give you the religious life. We must be born of the Spirit. . . . .

There are some who think of the witness of the Spirit as a kind of revelation from heaven; or a thrill of rapture; or a wonderful vision; or a celestial manifestation—something which lifts us up above other people, and singles us out as the recognised and distinguished favourites of God. If anything could make a man a pharisee it is surely that. If anything could fill a man with spiritual conceit—that most deadly and most damnable of all conceits—surely it is a distinction of this sort.

The witness of the Spirit is not to our spirits that we are the children; it is with our spirits that God is our Father. That is immensely different. The gaze is turned not within, but without—not downward at self, but upward at the Saviour. "He shall testify of Me," said the Lord Jesus, in promising the Holy Ghost. There is in Jesus Christ a sight of our sin that humbles and shames us; yet there is a sight of love that overwhelms us. There is a declaration of righteousness before which we tremble, yet a height and depth and length and breadth of love that is infinite. "The love of God is shed abroad in the heart, by the Holy Ghost given unto us." A blessed consciousness is wrought within us which has no room for pride, but only for self-forgetfulness, wonder, gratitude, and glad obedience. His light and love make our sin a thousandfold more dark and loathsome—a love that humbles and bewilders into lowliest adoration by its constancy and fulness. This is the great truth to which the Holy Spirit witnesses—not to our goodness or superiority, but to the love and glory of Jesus Christ, to the greatness and fulness of his salvation, to the infinite loving-kindness of our Father. Hence it is that there is no place for that which separates a man from the rest of the world and exalts him above other people.

In thinking of this witness of the Spirit, let us remember that it is no less Divine because it moves on the ordinary and natural lines of spiritual influence. There are men and women who, by their contact, do help to create within us a new experience—rest, peace, truth, love, hope, are often imparted to us by contact with others. We cannot mark exactly the influence, how it came and how it wrought. It is in this quiet and natural way, for the most part, that the witness of the Spirit is given. The word witnesseth with is one that we need ever to lay emphasis upon as distinct from witnesseth to; but the word in the Greek is yet stronger, and may be rendered co-witnesseth with our spirits. The idea is of a blending and mingling of spiritual influence.

The Gulf Stream in its beneficent and hidden influence may be taken as a sort of parable of this. England should be naturally and properly a land of almost eternal winter. For some eight months of the year our very seas ought to be frozen over, so that no ship could approach our shores. Our island should be a rough rude tract of country where only the hardiest forms of life could survive—a land of forest where wild beasts should roam, whose furs should give to the place almost its only value, and where the deep snows should make agriculture almost impossible.

What mystery is this which delivers us? Away in the distant southern world, in the fierce heat of the tropics, starts the Gulf Stream. It gathers the warmth of the sun, and sends it for thousands of miles across the seas to lave our shores. Thus the Arctic winter is driven from us and our ports are open all the year round; over us stretch the kindlier skies; about us blow the gentler winds; our fields are covered with grass, our valleys are thick with corn; the pastures are covered with flocks and herds, and this favoured land is shut off from extremes, and has the summer of the north with the winter of the south.

The parable is a many-sided illustration of the truth of nature. Of ourselves we do dwell in a land of winter, frozen and well-nigh dead, without the energy to put forth any life for God. But lo, about us there flowed gracious influences from another world; we know not how, but by the Holy Spirit of God there is breathed about us and within us the love of God, softly transforming, bringing to us a new heaven and a new earth. And now do grow and flourish blessed things which before we knew not. This gift is ours for the simple asking; by the surrender and submission of the heart to his grace.

MISS KRIKORIAN'S MISSION.

The first half-yearly account of this very interesting work is now issued, and copies may be had on application to Mr. J. McDonald, Exeter Hall, Strand, W.C. Miss Krikorian (a sketch of whose life we gave in August last) describes in her report the greatness of the field, and gives encouraging particulars of the progress made in establishing different branches of work, with head-quarters at Aintab, Turkey in Asia. There are a ragged school, meetings for women, Gospel meetings on the Sabbath, temperance work (which has been singularly fruitful), night schools, visitation of the sick and poor, etc. In offering some suggestions to friends in this country, Miss Krikorian says:—

"I have been unable to do any special work in midwifery, as I had intended. The evangelistic work has taken such an important aspect that it required my whole time and strength, and therefore a well-qualified lady physician or an efficient midwife is much needed. Not only am I unable to give time to midwifery, but even the evangelistic work has grown so much that it is impossible for me to carry it on without more helpers in that department too. I hold as many as ten to twelve meetings every week, and thus more than 1000 persons hear the blessed Word of Life. Could the friends of this Mission encourage me to find more helpers for the growing work, or I shall be obliged to cripple it on account of limited means?

"Further, it seems to me that I shall soon require a mission hall to be erected for these meetings. The occasion for it is as follows: Those who attend my meetings are mostly Gregorian Armenians, and they feel rather loth to go to the Protestant church, and the Gregorians are not inclined to give their church or school buildings for such a purpose, as they feel rather suspicious about it. Therefore, when I have a mission hall, then they will feel more free to come. Above all, I need the prayers of God's people."

A letter received on May 4, says:—"Since I wrote last there has been remarkable progress in the work; the number of our temperance society has reached 233; the number of those who attend these meetings has increased to such an extent that no private house could accommodate them, and so we have been obliged to have the meetings, as well as the women's, in our second Protestant Church, which is my father's. Last Sunday there were quite 800 men, most of whom were given to drink. Such a striking progress has roused the anger of our Gregorian priests and elders against us, and they have begun to persecute us in many ways. They want me to stop preaching the Word of God, claiming the whole of the society as members of the Gregorian Church, and insisting that I must stop this work. The greater the persecution the faster the work is going on."

HOME OF REST FOR SUNDAY-SCHOOL TEACHERS.—Tresidder House, Wykeham-road, Hastings, is a "Home of Rest," where female Sunday-school teachers may, at a small cost to themselves, enjoy refreshing repose in comfortable circumstances. More than 1500 teachers from schools in all parts of the kingdom have availed themselves of the benefits of the Home, which has been a great blessing to those who have spent their holidays there, and to others who, in delicate health, have been invigorated by brief residences of from two to four weeks. A subscriber of 10s. 6d. per annum may nominate one teacher for a fortnight. The terms for teachers as visitors are, upon the recommendation of a subscriber, 10s. weekly, to include all expenses of board and lodging. Communications should be sent to Mr. J. E. Tresidder, Sunday School Union, 56, Old Bailey, E.C.

At the World's Fair.—1.

It was not without some timidity that a party of twelve ladies and gentlemen, going west to join Mr. Moody in Chicago, committed themselves and their belongings to the new Cunard steamship, the Campania. The anxiety of their friends had found expression in sundry doubts as to the wisdom of so doing, in view of possible delays incident to a vessel on her first trip. But the die was cast and the start made, with the result that every fear was allayed, and the utmost confidence established.

The speed and safety of the renowned Cunard fleet are matters of history, and the Campania bids fair to eclipse all previous records of that company, if not of the world. For steadiness she is, I should imagine, unsurpassed; and as she rode one day for several hours through half a gale, the unanimous verdict, even of those who suffered from inevitable sickness, was that she "behaved splendidly." In every respect, Captain Hains, one of the oldest and most experienced of the Cunard officers, may well be proud of his position as her commander.

Touching at Queenstown on Sunday morning, April 22, Major Whittle (with a few of the party) went ashore to bid a final farewell to some friends who had been associated with him, some in spirit, others in person, in his recent Irish campaign. It was well on in the afternoon before, on the arrival of the mails, we steamed out of the harbour. The presence of the great ship, owing to the publicity given to her launching, had attracted a multitude of small boats, filled with soldiers and curious sightseers, as well as a contingent of the native element who had wares to offer for sale. One could not help regretting that so well-conducted a line as the Cunard should, by the dates of its sailings, cause so much Sunday labour ashore in addition to that which is unavoidable on board the ships themselves. Some other lines obviate this. We should like to see this company follow so good a lead.

In the evening, and on various subsequent occasions, an open-air service was held on the lower deck, in which various friends took part, under the untiring leadership of the Major. These meetings brought forward several other Christians who joined the party in smaller gatherings of a more private nature, which were held day by day. Among these may be mentioned Capt. Maclean (a veteran commander of the Allan Line, known to many of our leading mission workers), accompanied by his wife; Miss Smith, an American lady, who has been at work amongst Armenians; and Mr. Warner, of Dublin, associated with Rev. Hugh D. Brown's Church at Rathgar. On arrival at New York, it was found that Bishop Taylor, of Africa, had also been a passenger, but being in need of rest he had not shown himself in public.

Quite an interest was aroused among the saloon passengers, many of whom gathered round to listen to the "part-singing" of the hymns, with which an hour was occasionally passed on deck. In the drawing-room, too (which was fitted with a fine Collard piano and a Mason and Hamlin organ, encased in rich satinwood, in keeping with the rest of the beautiful appointments of the saloon), frequent demands were made upon the vocal ability of Miss Whittle, as well as of Lord Bennet, and it was pleasing to note that many who professed no sympathy with Gospel work could not withhold an evident interest in these little services of song.

Some curiosity was manifested as to who we were, where we were going, and what we proposed to do there; and it was amusing to learn the conjectures that were put forth on these points, e.g., Salvationists going to marshal at the World's Fair, of the far West, etc. But, best of all, there were some who evinced personal anxiety as to their own standing in the sight of God, and who listened gratefully to the good news of a Saviour's love. In this connection must also be mentioned Mr. Ed. Kjorkenheim, of Finland, who by dint of private conversation, as well as by interpreting for the English speakers, brought the Gospel before the two or three hundred Swedish and Finnish emigrants who were crossing the ocean to new scenes and spheres of toil.

MISSIONARIES TO THE COWBOYS

It was an inspiring sight to watch these "hardy Norsemen" crowding up to the spot where they heard in their own tongue of the wonderful works of God. Mr. Kjorkenheim was formerly a student in Dr. Grattan Guinness's college, where he learned not only a little of the English language, but received also such a grounding in the truths of the Gospel that his work on board was most valuable.

A day of storm and another of fog, especially the latter, impeded our progress, so that we did not reach harbour till the Saturday evening, too late to land. We found the New York Press jubilant that the American liner, the Paris, had arrived first, overlooking the fact that by leaving the Irish coast some twelve hours ahead of her new rival that ship had escaped the fog which afterwards settled down.

On Sunday morning the party was met by Messrs. Sankey and Stebbins, whose genial welcome was very refreshing. In the afternoon a crowded meeting was held in the fine hall of the Brooklyn Y.M.C.A., where General Howard, Major Whittle, and Lord Bennet spoke, the song service being led by the singing evangelists mentioned above.

It was much regretted that our arrival was not in time to witness the great naval parade of the day before. In tribute to the discovery of America, the navies of the world met in review in the wonderful New York Harbour, of which Americans are so justly proud, and celebrated the "peace of nations" which now happily reigns. The event formed a text for discourse in several of the city churches the following day, where the paradox of was alluded to as a hopeful augury of the triumphs of peace, and the superseding of the law of force by that of love.

On Wednesday (May 3) Mr. Moody, Mr. Sankey, Major Whittle, and the English, Scotch, and Irish friends who had made up his party, all met in Chicago, where plans are being threshed out for the Gospel campaign which Mr. Moody is inaugurating. This will furnish matter for future letters. As regards the World's Fair itself, its arrangements are in a state of chaos, from which it will take more than a week or two for order to emerge. But a greater evil by far than this is the announcement that in spite of strenuous opposition it is after all to be opened on the Lord's Day. This is looked upon as a breach of faith, inasmuch as Government money was voted for the Exposition on the express condition that it should be closed on that day.*

In concluding I will add, for the interest of the great throng of friends in the home country whose hearts are in this work, that Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey are both hale and hearty, and, like Moses, with eye not dim nor natural force abated. I regret to say, however, that Lord Bennet found it necessary to remain at Brooklyn with Mr. Stebbins, owing to a slight chill he had taken. He hopes to come on here when recovered. G. E. M.

SAILORS IN DUNEDIN.

Miss Child, of the Welcome Home, Ratcliff Highway, has received a letter from Mr. A. R. Falconer, of Dunedin, New Zealand, in which he speaks of the work among sailors there:—

"A few months ago I received a short note from you regarding the wisdom of something being done for sailors at The Bluff. I also had thought of the need. Your few lines brought me to decide to act. I took a trip to The Bluff and spent three weeks in the district, endeavouring to stir up some interest in this work. I returned and waited a month to see if any action would be taken either at The Bluff itself or its chief town, Invercargill.

"As nothing transpired during these few weeks, after asking God's guidance, I wrote to the chief newspaper in the district, The Southland Times, of Invercargill, a letter headed 'A Plea for a Sailors' Rest,' and followed it up with another. Since then the commander of one of our large inter-colonial steamers has sent a letter on the subject to the same paper. The paper itself has had two leading articles very favourable to the work. The Earl of Glasgow, Governor of New Zealand, was lately in Dunedin, and having been for many years a sailor himself I wrote to him. In reply, he wrote a kindly letter and offered to give £5 to start a subscription towards a Bluff Sailors' Rest. The Postmaster-General of New Zealand also gave £5, so a start is made.

"Southland is the province, The Bluff is the seaport, Invercargill, the chief town, being inland twenty miles from Bluff. If this matter goes forward, as I fully believe it will, I shall keep you posted up. I think the mayor of each town, The Bluff and Invercargill, intend to call public meetings to consider the Sailors' Rest question."

Letters to Dorothy.—4.

(Concluded.)

A few evenings afterwards I joined in the mother's family prayers. We sang with all our hearts, and then she knelt with her boys around her, pouring out her full heart of praise, as if the very floodgates had burst, more than once beseeching God to bless "the dear little woman who wouldn't give me up." She said to me to-day, "I had a feeling from the very first that if you gave me up I should be surely lost: that you were God's last messenger to my soul."

My star, my new star, so hardly won, most precious of all my heavenly crown, when I lie awake to think of its gleaming!

We are friends in a new sense now. She prays for all my people. She comes to my cottage meetings, and adds her newly-restored, rich faith to my own in all my work. A dozen words of hers to her infidel sister are worth more than all my pleading. the first time she went with me to "mothers' meeting." "O, Sally!" she said when she returned, "it's sort of makin' an home instead of losin' it, you come home so rested like; there's such a free feelin' here in your heart, that you can go to work stronger.

"You just sit there, and you needn't to pray or say or do anythin', and there's nobody to talk at you. You needn't be a bit scared to come. Everybody's free and easy, and tells, if they want to, such beautiful stories about their lives. One woman who has an awful hard time of it, worse than you and me has, got up and told what a life she used to lead of it with a whole family of boarders making fun of her when she got religion, and went off to meetings—which she got, this little lady says, at that very mothers' meetin' after bein' come for and come for and refusin' more times than ever this little woman come after us.

"But now, she says, since she began kneeling down every day to pray a prayer for each one o' them boarders, callin' over each o' their names and the number o' their rooms, so the dear Lord will know exactly where to find them, they come, if you'll believe it, and ask her, very civil and nice how she liked the meetin', and what it was about that day; and one gentleman asked her to please leave one of the tracts, as she was accustomed to put in the rooms regular, changin' once in so often.

"And others tell stories as interestin'. It's like readin' a story-book to hear them, tho' some is awful sad, and they prays for each other beautiful and tells how their prayers has been answered in most wonderful ways." Sure enough Sally went next time, though I had told her all this many times, and she had listened as to an "idle tale."

My friend's long unused but once highly-cultivated instincts as a Christian worker reveal themselves once more. She is "a light" not only "to all that are in the house," but in other homes. She interested herself in everyone, and helped us wonderfully by her prayer of faith, which brought the Spirit's power among us. Still, there is the wicked husband of my dear returned one. As little Johnny says, "If papa was only a Christian, there wouldn't be any more trouble in this house;" and we pray "in faith nothing wavering," as that dying thief's mother might have prayed for him, that He who can make "white as snow" even the scarlet sins may remember him.

It is beautiful to see this famished one whose soul had fainted for the courts of the Lord, refreshing herself once more in the House of God; beautiful to see how she is being used again of God, as she hunts up a little orphan boy, once her neighbour in another street, and tells him of the One who "will not leave us orphans but will come to us;" explains the way of salvation to the coloured cook at the club house where she scrubs, or here and there gathers in some poor wandering sheep that reminds her of her old-time self.

Dorothy, these are the delights which do not end. The sequel to such stories is written above. Would you rather, your own self, paint a beautiful picture, or, with the Holy Spirit's help, redeem a life from destruction? And now a loving good-bye. Yours,

Edith E. Metcalf.

"IN PERILS BY THE HEATHEN."

BY DR. HARRY GUINNESS.

In the history of the Congo Free State we question whether there have been any murders quite so audacious as those which have occurred quite recently at Basa Nkosu, one mile from Ikau, the third station of our Congo Balolo Mission. Two brave officials, Messrs. Peters and Termol, were apparently surprised by hostile natives, and before their black soldiers could interfere, the Mongos had beheaded Mr. Peters and speared Mr. Termol, leaving the latter to welter in his own blood, whilst they carried off the head of the former in triumph. The State soldiery immediately sent messengers down country to the station at Wangata, on the main Congo, from whence reinforcements were obtained to punish the murderers and to restore tranquillity in the district.

This was the second occasion in which our friends at Ikau were in imminent danger. Early in December, after the tragic death of his young wife, Mr. Haupt nearly lost his life in a determined attack that was made upon the station by these very people. His goods were stolen but his house was eventually saved from destruction.

Matters had not really quieted down before the occurrence of the atrocious murder alluded to, the success of which fired the people with the desire to exterminate all the white population. They attempted to bribe our neighbours to bind the missionaries, and give them over into their hands, and to this end they offered several slaves, besides other inducements, which were, however, refused by our faithful friends.

For at least a week matters were in a very critical state, and it was quite impossible to say what a day might bring forth. The popular impression that a white man was invulnerable, and could not be killed by a spear, was now exploded, and even at our station at Bonginda, ninety miles below, the effect of this revelation of our weakness inspired a violent chief called Ibengi to threaten death to the missionaries there. One night the feeling at Bonginda was so strained that it was deemed wise to get up steam on board the Pioneer, so as to be able, in the event of a night attack, to escape by the river.

The most distant outpost of Christianity in these regions is Bongandanga, where last October brave Scarnell died alone, before relief, which was on its way up river, could reach him. His devoted black boys buried him near the little chapel, and then bore the sad tidings to Mr. Ellery, who only reached the station to find that his companion in labour had finished his course, and been called into the immediate presence of the King. The corn of wheat had fallen into the ground, and the harvest was ensured.

To-day Messrs. Haupt and Coote are holding the fort at this station; they are the only white men within three days' journey, and in case of native attack, or sickness, it would take at least a week to send a canoe down river and receive assistance. We are hoping, at the earliest possible opportunity, to strengthen this station to its full complement of five helpers, and are only hindered in this through lack of means.

After the murders at Basa Nkosu, 120 miles down river, the whole of that district was thrown into a state of ferment, and, in order to escape the vengeance of the State, many of the people deserted their homes and escaped up river. Some of them reached Bongandanga, and their howls could be heard in the bush at night-time. Our brethren were in danger of being murdered by these refugees at any time. This was only an accentuation of their ordinary difficulties, for there is a neighbouring tribe of Ngombe, whose cannibal ferocity has been a perpetual source of peril.

We are most thankful to add that our brethren are in good health and spirits, and God is abundantly blessing their preaching among the people. A chief of one of the villages is amongst the anxious inquirers, and scarcely a day passes without some coming to ask the old question, "Sirs, what must we do to be saved?" After a recent baptism some of the native lads engaged in prayer, and concern them Mr. Coote says:—

"I have heard a great many prayers, earnest, pathetic, and learned, but I never remember hearing any which so affected my heart. I thought what these boys once were when in heathen darkness; I noticed the great change that God had made in them, and I thought of what God might make of them. Mr. Haupt and I are no doubt reaping the harvest that has been sown by Messrs. Scarnell and Cole. Several of those who have professed conversion have testified to the life and teaching of these dear brethren. Scarnell's death seems to have been the means of bringing out many boys to a definite decision for Christ. In addition to the thirty-four who have recently confessed the Saviour, we have a church membership of six boys."

Oh, friends in England, pray, pray, pray for these people. It does not require much to move God's mighty arm—only a little faith even as minute as a grain of mustard seed.

A SEA CAPTAIN'S LETTER.

Dear Sir,—Allow me through your columns, on behalf of my crew and myself, to thank the Presbyterian missionaries at Swatow and some Christian friends at Amoy for their kindness while at these ports. Your space will not permit me to describe how kindly we were treated, and made to feel at home. The meetings were splendid—several souls converted and the hearts of all touched.

Evidently our friends are not yet in the position of "when all men speak well of them." One resident derided them, and stated, as a personal grievance, that his barber had become a Christian and would not shave on the Sabbath. We heard of little communities of seventy or eighty in the villages exposed to all sorts of persecutions. They not only held on, but from their necessities support their own native pastor. I think this is a sufficient reply to the question, "Do the converts stand?"

Passing Port Said, I was glad to find the Sailors' Rest at last located in larger and more commodious premises. Now a few visitors can be accommodated with board and lodging, as well as seamen from the hospital waiting to ship again. Formerly there was only a Greek ginshop for them to go to. As a frequent visitor I can testify to the good work done by the manager and his wife, Mr. and Mrs. Locke. The Rest is not connected with any society; they do not ask subscriptions, and the Lord has always sent sufficient for all their needs, and they believe He will continue to do so. The rent is now much more; will friends willing to help please take notice?

Yours very truly,
St. Ives. Wm. Burgoyne.

In sending the foregoing communication Captain Burgoyne wrote another letter, from which we take the liberty of quoting:—

I think you do not get worried with many letters from ships; at any rate, I have never seen one in The Christian. With nearly a quarter of a century of sea life, I have never before seen so many Christian seamen together as there are in this steamer. As the Lord chose certainly the chiefest of his disciples from seafarers, it seems strange that the Church neglected seafaring people so long. Fortunately that is being altered, and numbers are being brought in. If all workers gave their Master's message with the sanctified common-sense of the friends out in China, there would be more.

We were entertained at the mission in Swatow by Mr. and Mrs. Gibson and Mrs. Milner, and at Amoy by Mr. Hobson, the Commissioner of Customs. Miss Ricketts was staying there, and completed the good work begun in the former port.

Reunion Pilgrimage to Jerusalem.

The Bishop of Worcester has accepted Dr. Lunn's invitation to take part in the discussions on Old Testament criticism at the Lucerne Re-union Conference this year, and has also arranged to join in the Re-union Pilgrimage to Jerusalem which is being organised by Dr. Lunn and the Bishop's son, Mr. Woolrych Perowne. Archdeacon Farrar will also be a member of the party, and will deliver lectures to the pilgrims during their stay in Jerusalem.

A WOMEN'S FOREIGN MISSIONARY UNION has been formed at Ealing, W. Local associations are thus united in one for prayer and effort, and in addition to monthly meetings for prayer and praise there is an annual convention whereat the cause of each society will be pleaded by its own representative. It is the desire and prayer of the members that a missionary should be sent from Ealing, to be supported by Ealing ladies. Friends desiring to co-operate in the scheme are asked to communicate with Mrs. Hanwell, 5, Greffield-road, Ealing, W.

ON THE POLISH FRONTIER.

Mr. Samuel Wilkinson, son of the director of the Mildmay Mission to the Jews, has been journeying on the Polish frontier in company with Mr. Day. Describing meetings in Upper Silesia, he says that, arrived at Beuthen, with Pastor Kradolfer, of Breslau, they hired a concert-hall, advertised a meeting, and notified the burgomaster of their purpose. He proceeds:—

A few minutes before eight o'clock, the time for beginning, the room was fairly filled, and people were still arriving. With the exception of three ladies, the whole of the assembly were men, who with but one or two exceptions were well dressed. Fully a hundred if not more were Jews. We placed our stock of German, Hebrew, and Judeo-German Testaments on a side table, and mounted the little theatrical stage which was to serve us as platform. At this moment the commissioner of police arrived, accompanied by a policeman, and placed themselves at opposite sides of the room, though near the platform, and the constable made his preparations for taking notes. While others still kept entering the room, I studied our audience. Several, who probably were frequenters of the same room for dancing or mirth, and whom the novelty of what are here termed "religious lectures" had brought out, had evidently come to be amused. They conversed jocularly with one another, requisitioned the waiters to bring beer and cigars, and seemed to anticipate a novel entertainment. We reminded the waiters that the beer-drinking and smoke were not according to our wish; but there was no help for it. It was customary; we were not the masters of the situation, and we realised that if we entered the world's stronghold for our Lord's sake we must expect to have to "smell smoke."

One man had settled himself in the front row with the evident object of causing us confusion, if not disturbance, and made remarks in a loud tone of voice to those around him. Under these circumstances, Mr. Kradolfer, as president, opened the meeting by asking all to rise for an opening prayer. Most of them complied. After reading portions of Scriptures Mr. Kradolfer spoke, but not without occasional interruption from the man in the front row. After this I betook myself to the grand piano just below the stage in front of the audience, to sing as a solo a German rendering of "One there is above all others." We could not expect our audience to sing, and the next best thing seemed to be to sing to them. After this, Mr. Day rose to speak, and succeeded for a time in maintaining perfect silence. This was not according to the mind of the man in the front row, who was of the atheistic type; and he recommenced a series of ejaculations, to the amusement of his comrades. The commissioner of police now rose, beckoned to Mr. Day to stop for a moment, and, inquiring who the disturber was, politely requested him to be quiet.

German law is more stringent than English with regard to disturbers of the peace; and I believe that after warning has been given in the manner described, a man who persisted in offending would be liable to pretty severe punishment. From that moment we had a perfectly peaceful meeting. My word was on the Sonship of the Lord Jesus, and ended by a sentence or two of personal testimony to his power. We had nearly 100 Testaments. When at the close we distributed them, they did not hold out to the demand. Old and young stretched out their hands, saying, "I am an Israelite," in order to justify their claims to one.

The next day, having supplied the waiters and servants at the hotel with Gospels, we took train to Oppeln. Some forty or fifty people gathered at the meeting, about half of them Jews. In the morning we had telegraphed to Breslau for more New Testaments, but they did not arrive in time; and we could only give away some odd copies and a few tracts. I proposed that someone in the meeting should volunteer to receive a packet of twenty-five Testaments and distribute them among Jews. Two gentlemen responded, and begged, not only for Testaments, but also for tracts. At the close several Jews stopped for friendly conversation, and confessed themselves much interested.

For the Young.

THE BABES IN THE WOOD.

"Oh! mother, if it is only as nice inside as it is out, our Nan is doing a treat." So said two little brothers who had walked all the way from Bow Common to Leystonstone, one Sunday in May, to have a peep at the Cottage Home where sister Nan "was doing a treat." Little Nan was indeed having her happiest, merriest time; a season of boundless freedom to her. From one little room in a dreary street, which she shared in common with father, mother, two brothers, and a baby sister, where they all slept, dressed, washed, ate and lived—to a home where she had a room to eat in, a room to play in, a room to work in, a room to sleep in, and a little cosy bed all to herself, and a beautiful forest to roam in. Little Nan knew nothing about May Day, or Maypoles, but she gathered the sweet-smelling blossoms and decked herself with their creamy garlands, and was as happy as any May Queen could be.

Only too quickly sped the happy days, and Bow Common had to be thought about once more. Bow Common does not sound so very bad; surely at least there will be fresh air and green grass to look at. But, alas! the common is only a name, and brings to the mind of those who know it a dreary picture. Street after street of little dull houses, each sheltering two or three families, all poor, and many anything but clean. The Earl of Meath, writing to the Daily Graphic, February 27, 1893, says:—

"There is no recreation ground of any kind in the parishes of Bow or Bromley, although their population amounts to over 100,000. The houses in the parish are all those of the working-class. An open space is sadly needed here."

Nan's one-roomed home was not by any means the worst; if there wasn't much space, there was love, for her mother was a Christian, and the love of Christ will do much, even within four bare walls.

Not far from Nan's home there is another, equally poor, where the careworn mother sits stitching at her heavy work. Hour after hour she sits passing the work through the machine, and we wonder if she never means to stir from her seat. Is she not hungry? Hungry enough, no doubt, but there is little to eat, and less time to spare over the eating. She is making knickerbocker suits for the large sum of 4½d. each, and when she has finished twelve complete suits she will have earned 4s. 6d. Presently the children come home from school, and help themselves to the bread that is placed for their dinner. But the woman works on. "Mother, where is Florry?" asked one. Then the woman stops to smile, and tell the envious children that Florry is in the country. Yes, Florry was in the country, enjoying with all her might such a time as she had never known before. She had changed the dreary home and dull streets for glad sunshine, green fields, and shady trees; and instead of the click, click of the machine, the songs of happy birds rang in her ears.

In the country Florry has dinner. Meat is a novelty to her, and the first time she sees the joint arrive she runs in haste to fetch a companion, and, with beaming eyes, points out the almost unknown luxury. "Is that for us?" she asks the matron, and "How long must it last?" "Oh," said her little friend, "we sometimes have meat on Sundays for dinner, but there is never any left for Monday."

Good food and fresh air make a wonderful improvement in Florry, and when she returns home she has marvellous tales to tell to eager listeners of "plenty to eat, and, oh! such lovely pies and tarts, and long walks under the trees, and picnics in the forest, and lakes in the park, and ducks and swans; and when we got back, strawberries for tea!" and as she pauses in her rather incoherent narrative the wondering children echo with a sigh, "strawberries for tea," and wish they had been ill, just to have such a boundless treat.

But let us leave Florry well and happy, and go a little further up the Mile End-road, and turn for a few minutes into the offices of the Tower Hamlets Mission. A poor woman is applying for help, and we will listen to her tale. Tidy and clean, but so white and thin, that she seems scarcely able to carry the little girl, who, with whiter face and languid frame, nestles in her arms. "Yes, sir," she is saying, "I have been ill, and my husband, who is a seaman, has been ill for twelve months. He was eight months in the Infirmary, and he is still so weak that no captain will employ him, although he holds twenty years' good character. I go out washing and charing when I can get work, and generally earn 3s. 6d. a week, sometimes 5s. We have four children; one girl is in service earning 1s. 6d. a week, and my husband's father lives with us; he is old and feeble, and unable to work. My father pays our rent, or I do not know how we could live." "Your little girl looks ill," says the kind questioner. "Yes, sir, she has been very ill, and is still under the doctor: I hardly know what to do for her." This sad case, when investigated, proved only too true, and was promptly relieved. In a month's time little Martha came to the Forest Cottage Home for strength and rest. Just five years old, and a dear little girl. It was not long before she was running merrily about in the sunshine; fresh air, good food, and all the loving attention she received at the home, wrought wonders for Martha, and when she returned home, her mother hardly recognised in the rosy face and bright eyes that greeted her, her once sickly little girl.

Quickly the summer days sped away, every fortnight bringing fresh children to enjoy a happy health-giving time, both at Leytonstone and at Epping. When the autumn days come, blackberry rambles fill up the long sunny hours. I do not think you could give London children a greater pleasure. The long happy walk, revealing fresh delights at every turn, the lunch under the trees, the joy of picking as many berries as you please, and looking for more. No school, no baby to mind, no bundle of work to carry home through the hot dusty streets, no long weary waiting for the scanty pay, but all freedom, beauty, and joy for two short weeks. "But won't we have to pay for them?" asks a little maiden, who is having her first glimpse of the country. "No," said the matron, "eat as many as you like, and carry home as many as you can, and all for nothing." "Oh, my!" said the little girl, with round astonished eyes, and off she ran to follow out to the letter her liberal instructions.

Epping has again been the happy rendezvous of the children. Only an hour's ride from London, but situated in the midst of flowery fields and country lanes, and the forest close at hand. In the cottage homes of good motherly women, and under the kind supervision of the wife of the Rev. D. Granville Lewis, curate of Theydon Garnon, the little Londoners have spent a glorious time laying up stores of health and strength for the winter, and filling their minds with happy pictures that will not readily fade from their memories. What armsful of wild flowers they carry back to their homes; and in the autumn the carefully tied-up handkerchief filled with blackberries testifies to the wealth of Nature in which they have been rejoicing.

A FREED SLAVE'S LETTER.

Our young readers who contributed towards the redemption of the young Malagasy slave in response to Mrs. Peill's appeal, will be interested to read the following letter which we have received from the young man:—

Ampanory, Atsimon, Ambohimanga,
Madagascar, March 28, 1893.

Dear Sir,—I was very glad on hearing, from the letter of your relation, A. P. Peill, to Mary T. Bliss, that you helped them of my redemption. And when I heard this I was very much glad with all mind; and this is what made me glad: You do not know me, but you would have helped me in redemption; and I am convince that the love of Christ constrained you to do that. And who am I, that you should do that on me? Not to me, but to Christ Himself you have done that.

And therefore, Sir, although I am like the baby in the English language, I must write a short message to you to be thanksgiving you; and of which as I can I shall tell you. May God protect you in your many labours for Him.

Blessed are they who come by the Spirit to do good to the poor as me, much more the poor in soul and stranger to Christ. I am settle that I do not hold others in slavery, for even though I was a slave in the flesh, I am also adopted in Christ. So I have nothing glory besides the Cross of Christ which was bear a good for me. "Thanks be to God for his unspeakable gift."

And so I have not gold or silver to be given you, but what I have I shall be given you: mirth with all heart and thanksgiving with all love. I am exceeding glad and pour forth thank you. Thank you, my dear friend. May you receive my thanks from a full of love heart. Excuse me, dear Sir, that my skill in the English language is little, therefore I cannot talk you more word in writing; even I have most mirth with my heart. I am waxed mirth over my body as the grafting tree.

If you will, my dear Sir, I long to see your face in drawing that I may know you. I have sent my drawing to Rev. F. Peill, Edinburgh, and I hope he shall come it to you, that you may know me. And if you can, Sir, I hope to get your drawing. I long to be one of your own friends, because I have pray to God in order to have one friend in England, and thanks be to God now, for he has answered my prayer in his beloved Son Christ Jesus.

Says your son, Rajamaria.

SEASIDE SERVICES.

A children's service on the beach is now a familiar sight at many of our seaside watering-places in August and September. But probably this is the first time that such a thing has been seen so early in the year. On April 24 and for the following fortnight, each morning a service was held on the shore at Brighton, by Mr. A. G. Dodderidge, of the "Children's Special Service Mission," and two or three undergraduates. Brilliant sunshine, a cloudless sky, and blue sea are what day by day all saw. God's blessing on the work, his definite guidance as to little details, and the seal of his loving approval, are what his children daily recognised and praised Him for.

On Sunday week between 600 and 700 children and adults gathered on the beach and groyne, and listened most attentively to the simple Gospel message. Each evening meetings were held in St. George's Mission Hall, kindly lent by Rev. W. Selwyn, who, with other local friends, co-operated most heartily in the work. There were special meetings for girls, boys, young Christians, and parents and guardians, etc., and most interesting were some of the testimonies as to blessing received.

A schoolgirl of sixteen said, "A fortnight ago I only knew of the Lord Jesus as someone we read about in the Bible. Now I can look up to Him and say, 'Thou hast saved me,' and oh, it makes such a difference." A lady said, "I had got bothered with religious doubts and difficulties, but through the words spoken to the children I saw that I had never come to the Saviour myself. I shall thank God throughout eternity for what I learnt at three gatherings on the beach, and three in the hall." F. E. T.

FOREST GATE, E

Mr. Lewes Sayer, of the C.S.S.M., has just concluded special services for young people in this district. The meetings were held in the Woodgrange Church, two others uniting in the special effort. The attendances were very large, on two occasions reaching a thousand. The mission extended over twelve days, and great blessing rested on the work. Two testimony meetings were held, and the numerous testimonies of blessing given by teachers and scholars alike were very delightful. The missioner was greatly aided in his work by the singing of Mrs. French.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S MISSION, WALTHAMSTOW.—For three and a-half years unsectarian mission work among the young has been carried on in the Wood-street neighbourhood of this town. The attendance has been continually growing, and this is more the case than ever, increased accommodation obtained early this year already proving inadequate. The reverent and seemly behaviour of the children is commented on by visitors, and changed lives testify to good accomplished. F. Wimp, Hon. Sec.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, MAY 21.—2 CHRON. XXX.

No true heart is happy by itself. When once we have tasted of the joy of God, like Hezekiah we send to those who are even beyond the pale of our own school of religious thought. "He wrote letters to Ephraim and Manasseh." The invitation to this convention was the first of many which have followed, and follow even to-day.

The Paschal Lamb is the true centre of unity. National distinctions and ancient feuds are dissipated as we meet around the slain Lamb. To the Lamb in the midst of the throne gathers a great multitude of every nation and tribe. But the pity is that so many scorn the invitation. Indeed, only those can accept it who have humbled themselves. "The one heart" is the gift of God.

There were many mistakes in the ordering of this Passover. In time, and purification, and in respect to the Levites, the ancient ritual was set aside, but as Hezekiah prayed, God looked upon the heart of those who set themselves to seek Him, and accepted it. Better the well-ordered heart with the wrong-ordered rite, than the well-ordered rite and the rebellious heart.

Oh, High Priest of our profession, arise and bless us, and fill our hearts with joy, and let our prayers come up to Thy holy habitation.

MONDAY, MAY 22.—2 CHRON. XXXI.

The cleansed life leads up to festivals of joy and prayer, and from these we again descend to fresh cleansing of things which had escaped us. Hezekiah and the people, fresh from the Passover, became iconoclastic, and then upon the broken ruins of idolatry, arose the right ordering of the worship of God.

If we give ourselves to the service of God, He will see to it that all needed provision is given for the body, and his gifts include not corn only, but wine and oil and honey. He gives us all things richly to enjoy. Happy is the church that depends upon the free gifts of a consecrated people. The munificent generosity of Israel, which gave the priests not enough only, but plenty, sprang from that Passover where they had learnt something of the meaning of redemption.

The small, as well as the great, receive their portion. In God's thought none are small save those whose souls are actuated by mean and selfish principle. It is enough for us to do the duty that every day requires, and to be reckoned in the genealogy of the priests, and we may claim all that we need for this life and the next. No priest went without his portion. No soul goes without the supply of its need. Trust in the Lord and do good; so shalt thou dwell in the land, and verily thou shalt be fed.

A delightful sketch of Hezekiah's character. He began nothing till he had made God first. Whatever he did, he did with all his heart; and what he wrought for God, was prospered by God.

TUESDAY, MAY 23.—2 CHRON. XXXII.

Very remarkably the Revised Version of this chapter opens. "After these things, and this faithfulness, came Sennacherib." An extraordinary conjunction! But how true in life! Faithful men are often tried men, that they may be greatly delivered men. Never underrate the power of your foe, and never trust in God to the exclusion of making the best possible preparations to meet emergency. Stop the fountains, build up the wall, and make weapons and shields. Do your best as if all depended upon you, and trust in God as if you had done nothing. How heroic the confidence of Hezekiah in God, and how sweet the restful confidence of the people in him. Restfulness is contagious. It would almost seem as if he were quoting Elisha's words to his servant (see marg. R.V.), "There be more with us than with them." Oh my soul, descending into the battle of life, be sure that the Lord your God is with you to help you, and to fight your battles!

It was of little matter what Sennacherib or his servant thought of Hezekiah's action in destroying the altars. They could not understand him, any more than the ungodly can understand us. Our life is hid with Christ in God. Against their jibes and taunts and insinuations, Hezekiah and Isaiah had one reply, "They prayed, and cried to heaven," and the Lord's angel delivered Israel. There is none like our God to show Himself strong for those who trust in Him, but beware lest your heart be lifted up amid the golden summer of success, and you forget that all is due to the unmerited grace of God. We may well pray that He may never leave us to try what is in our hearts.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 24.—2 CHRON. XXXIII.

After a Hezekiah comes a Manasseh, who entirely changed his policy, and undid the work of reform, and the men of Judah and Jerusalem followed him into more evil than did the nations of Canaan. How frail and changeable we are. There is no stability in human virtue. As a garden will return to a wilderness if it be not constantly tended, so would all goodness soon die out of the world if it were not for the grace of the Holy Spirit. The very existence of lovely and noble life among us is a perpetual witness to his being and energy.

There was no sin practised in those dark times that did not flourish under the patronage of Manasseh, until there was nothing left but the severe chastisement of captivity to Babylon. If speaking to us by prophet and holy impulse does not avail, then we must suffer the rod. It may be that this would explain the sad experiences of some who may read these lines. They are suffering the chastisement due to their sins. But let them take heart, and do as Manasseh did. Humble yourself greatly before the Lord, and pray unto Him, and He will hear you and bring you again. If Manasseh was forgiven, there is hope for the most abandoned. "All manner of sin and blasphemy may be forgiven to the sons of men."

THURSDAY, MAY 25.—2 CHRON. XXXIV.

Josiah got the ideal and inspiration of his life from David. How much we owe to the words and lives of the great saints and martyrs of other days. Few subjects have a more salutary effect on young hearts than the study of Christian biography. While only eight years old, he began to seek after God. This was the basis of his strong and useful life. Happy are they whose religious life grows with the dawn of consciousness.

Josiah's fresh young spirit seems to have gathered around him noble men, who entered willingly into his schemes, ignited with the flame of his enthusiasm. He will do most in the world, who can repeat himself through others. Better set a hundred men to work than do the work of the hundred.

FRIDAY, MAY 26.—2 CHRON. XXXV.

Again the solemn Passover was observed, and on the proper day. The King and his princes were very generous in their gifts to the people. So must it ever be with those who prize the Paschal Lamb.

The Levites were conspicuous in the services they rendered, specially in preparing food for those who were busily engaged at the altar, in the choir, or at the gate. It is a work by itself to minister to those who minister, and to provide for their wants, so that they may not be diverted from their high offices. There seems to have been a special interest in this Passover, it was quite unique, and largely so because of the way in which all Israel took part in its holy rites.

Josiah was infatuated in pursuing his suicidal policy of measuring himself in battle with the King of Egypt. He hearkened not unto the words of Nechoh from the mouth of God. And beloved though he was, nothing could avert the disaster which ensued. What need there is to watch and pray against the pride, which inflates our heart, after any, even religious, successes. Only God knows, and He alone can help us.

SATURDAY, MAY 27.—2 CHRON. XXXVI.

Here the story of Judah ends for the present. The people had shown themselves so bent on sin, that clearly no ordinary discipline would suffice to eradicate their strong tendencies towards idolatry. Everything had been tried in vain, and now the blow long threatened fell. We may be sure that God will not use the fire and the knife if his purpose can be served by processes less painful and terrible.

But is it not an awful revelation of the depravity of man's heart to find that, in spite of the memories of Hezekiah, Manasseh, and Josiah on the one hand, and in the very shadow of the coming eclipse on the other, the king and people still perpetrated the worst abominations of Canaan? Zedekiah hardened his heart from turning to the Lord. Moreover, all the chiefs of the priests and the people trespassed very greatly after all the abominations of the heathen. Let us magnify his grace, which makes us differ. The exile was blessed in many ways. We owe to it Psalms and prophetic writings of the utmost value. It was a great step in preparing the world for Christ by scattering Jewish conceptions of God. It wrought so effectually on Israel that they have since been as devoted to monotheism as before to idolatry. And then there came the return. The land might enjoy her Sabbaths, but it could not be alienated from the possession of the children of Abraham. The covenant of God could not be broken. Neither height nor depth can separate from the love of God.

INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSONS.

MAY 28.

The Excellent Woman.—Prov. xxxi. 10—31.

Golden Text: Verse 30.

Of King Lemuel we know nothing more than this chapter tells us. He was blessed with a godly mother, whose counsel to her son was deemed worthy a place in the sacred Scriptures; and he appears to have been wise enough to value and retain this counsel (see verse 1).

In the Hebrew this lesson is an acrostic poem of twenty-two verses, which begin with the letters of the Hebrew alphabet in order. It forms a part of his mother's counsel to the young king, and is valuable now for young people of both sexes. To young women it is a picture of what they should seek to be, and to young men it is a description of the kind of life-companion they should seek for themselves. In his quaint manner, Matthew Henry calls this a "looking-glass for ladies, which they are desired to dress themselves by, and, if they do so, their adorning will be found to praise, and honour, and glory, at the appearing of Jesus Christ."

Verse 10.—The term virtuous is best explained by what follows. "The fear of the Lord" is the basis of the whole character (30); but the religious life here described is not that of a recluse. The highest degree of consecration is not attained in separation from the duties and activities of life. Home is the true sphere for the exhibition and exercise of the qualities of a virtuous woman. The question "Who can find?" suggests the value and rarity of such a woman. Without such a treasure for his wife, a prince is poor—with it, a peasant is rich. Perhaps one reason why such women are so rare is that they are not so often sought for.

Verses 11, 12 describe the confidence a husband has in such a wife, and her constant care to deserve his confidence. Need of spoil is, in R.V., "lack of gain," and refers to the result of the economy and frugality with which all the affairs of his home are managed. She doeth him good—is a true helpmeet for him in living the godly life. Two are better than one when joined together in mutual affection and in devotion to God. "We are told of a Persian bird Juftak, which has only one wing. On the wingless side the male bird has a hook and the female a ring. When thus fastened together they can fly." A virtuous woman and her husband are mutually helpful and necessary as are these birds to each other."

Verses 13—27.—The home-life here introduced is, of course, widely different in many things from that with which we are familiar; yet the qualities required in a home then are not less needful now. What are they? Here are some:—(1) Industry (13, 19, 27). Idleness on the part of the mistress will mean negligence in the servants, and disorder in the household. "Wool and flax"—the materials with which she made her clothing. The distaff held the bunch of flax from which the spinning wheel drew the thread. Such labour was not deemed unworthy of the mistress of the house. Alexander the Great is said to have shown to the Persian princesses his garments made by his mother. Augustus would wear no clothes but such as were made by the members of his own family. It is a mistake for a woman to regard labour as an undignified thing. (2) Judicious management (14, 15). Two things she provides for her house, "meat" and "tasks" (R.V.). Either without the other would not be good. The best of servants are none the worse for having wise supervision. (3) Business qualities (16, 18, 24). By her own exertions she adds to her husband's wealth. Why should not such qualities be cultivated? There are not a few daughters of clergymen in places of business in London, who prefer the occupation there to the uselessness of a fashionable life. (4) Propriety in dress, for herself and for her house (21, 25). "Scarlet was supposed to absorb and retain heat, and, being made of wool, the garments would be warm, as well as stately in appearance." It is this wise preparation for the winter that enables her to "laugh at the time to come" (25 R.V.). Her own dress befits her station. "Silk" should be "fine linen" (22 R.V.). Peculiarity and negligence in dress are no evidence of special piety. (5) Benevolence (20). Her manifold cares and duties at home do not make her indifferent to the wants of others. She does not give merely through organisations, but adds to the value of her gifts by her own personal loving ministry. (6) Intelligence (26). Her mind has not been uncultivated. She has fitted herself to be her husband's companion; and her words are "with grace, seasoned with salt" (Col. iv. 6). These are some of the qualities which are found in the virtuous woman. They are not likely to be found without cultivation and watchfulness. The beginning of them all is "the fear of the Lord" (30); and it is only as that fear influences every part of life's conduct that such a character can be produced.

THE CONGREGATIONAL UNION.

The meetings last week of the Congregational Union were occupied with several discussions of great denominational interest; but all the same, questions of widespread importance were dealt with at some of the sessions.

Church Extension was one of these, introduced by Rev. T. Robinson, of Colchester. Having shown that the Wesleyans and Baptists are both making special exertions to supply the need of the great towns, he said: I find on looking at the census returns over the thirty years—1861 to 1891—that the forty-seven largest towns in England, exclusive of London, have increased in population by the enormous ratio of 67 per cent.; and even that does not tell the whole tale, for there is not only an ever-increasing drifting of the population from the villages to the great towns, but there is also in the hearts of great towns themselves an enormous drift from the central area to the outside suburbs. The result of this double emigration is that large populations are springing up like mushrooms on the rims of our large towns, and especially London, and their cry for church and chapel accommodation is, as Mr. Mearns has said, rapidly becoming "an exceeding bitter cry." The bodies which face this great duty will receive an ample recompense, for this is a subject not nearly so difficult to deal with as we might suppose at first sight. If we keep our eyes open, it is possible to hit upon sites in the large towns, if we only look far enough, at a comparatively reasonable rate.

Then, again, an iron chapel may be had on extremely easy terms, for I am told that the builders of iron chapels have discovered that church extension in the large towns is a far better mine of investment than a great many investments that are abroad at the present time. Plant your iron chapel at the right place, and before very long it will be filled with a congregation that will not only be able and willing to sustain its own church organisation, but to contribute largely to the needs of the poor churches in the villages and central areas of the large towns, which these people have for the most part left. Those bodies which have the courage and enterprise to step into this fine harvest-field will be rewarded, not merely by the extension of their own borders, but by tapping sources of supply for their home and foreign missionary enterprise, which will go on perennially increasing.

Looking at the three decades to which I have called attention, there is a very startling fact that meets us on the threshold, that, whereas in the first of these decades, from 1861 to 1871, the increase of Congregational accommodation fairly kept pace with the increase of population, in the last of those decades, from 1881 to 1891, that increase has fallen off by the large ratio of 30 to 50 per cent. If we lose hold of our great towns, we shall also lose hold of the villages. As a matter of fact, our village churches, and the churches all over the land outside the largest towns have been more or less on the decline for the last thirty years, and especially for the last ten years, simply because of the diminution of the population round about; and unless we recoup ourselves by laying hold of those great populations that are forming in the large towns, and which have largely come from the village chapels and the small town chapels, we shall lose our hold as a denomination, and our failure will injure more or less the whole of our operations.

A special representative committee was appointed to consider the whole subject of a national movement for church extension in the large towns of England and Wales. Resolutions were also adopted in favour of substituting arbitration for war; and in advocacy of local option in respect of the liquor trade.

In a paper on "Adult Morning Schools," read on Friday, Mr. Edward Smith (Bewdley) said there is abundant evidence that the conscience of the churches is being quickened, and the conviction is being brought home, that Christians must be up and doing if the working men of England are to be won for Christ. The success which has attended the establishment of morning adult schools in Birmingham, since they were started by the late Mr. Joseph Sturge, in 1845, demonstrates the utility of these institutions. The movement has extended to Yorkshire, East Anglia, Somersetshire, Dorsetshire, Wiltshire, and London. The kindly service which these schools—mainly conducted by laymen—render to working men, causes them to alter their views of religion, and to believe that "there is something in it after all." Rev. J. K. Nuttall (Liverpool) read a paper on "The Pleasant Sunday Afternoon Movement." The strongest and best preachers, and the most gifted Christian singers, assist at the meetings in Liverpool. The simpler and more unconventional the service the better, but it should be distinctly and decidedly religious.

In Memoriam.

REV. R. W. McALL, D.D.

Dr. McAll's serious illness, mentioned in our last issue, has proved the King's messenger sent to summon him home to his rest and reward. In the dark days of the Commune Paris was peculiarly laid on this devoted labourer's heart, and (as detailed in our sketch of his career, given December 2, 1886) his early efforts amongst Communists became the seedplot whence, in the wonderful ways of God, has sprung up the McAll Mission, with its network of agencies and stations, not only in the French capital but throughout the land. There are, of course, other good workers in France, but none the less Dr. McAll may be called the pioneer of evangelisation amongst the French people.

The Paris correspondent of The Times telegraphs:—"Much regret will be felt on both sides of the Channel and of the Atlantic at the death of

(From Photograph by Ch. Reutlinger, Paris.)

Rev. R. W. McAll, which took place on Thursday night at Auteuil. His grandfather, a Scotsman, was one of Lady Huntingdon's ministers; and his father, Robert Stephens McAll, was an Independent minister, the author of several theological treatises. Mr. McAll was born in 1821, and was for many years a minister at Sunderland and other places. Visiting Paris for the first time in August, 1871, sympathy for the Communists, who had made their last stand at the north-eastern extremity of the city, took him to the corner of the Rue de Belleville, where he was giving away tracts, when a working man, evidently French, but speaking English, said to him. 'You are at this moment in the very midst of a district inhabited by thousands and tens of thousands of us working men. To a man we have done with an imposed religion of superstition and oppression; but if anyone would come to teach us religion of another kind—a religion of freedom and reality—many of us are ready to listen.' Mr. McAll went home, made arrangements for resigning his charge, came back to Paris, engaged a room, and in January, 1872, held his first meeting with twenty hearers, a number increased the next night to 100. Possessing a small competency, so that he never drew a penny from the subscriptions which gradually flowed in, first from Scotland and England, and ultimately from America, Mr. McAll thenceforth, assisted by his wife, devoted his whole time and energies to the mission bearing his name, which has now forty-three meeting places, with 7,400 sittings, in and round Paris, eighty-nine in the provinces, and six in Algeria and Tunis. The 'lapsed masses' being the sole objects of the mission, care has always been taken to avoid attacks on any form of Christianity, or to form a sect encroaching on the French Protestant Churches, and many of the mission converts join the latter. The 'Encouragement du Bien' Society, which comprises eminent Catholics, showed its sense of the admirable character of the mission by awarding Mr. McAll a medal. A testimonial was presented to him on the twentieth anniversary of the mission, chiefly subscribed for by French Protestants; and the riband of the Legion of Honour was conferred upon him last July. Last autumn, under urgent medical advice, he reluctantly left Paris for Norwood, leaving the direction of the mission to Rev. C. E. Greig."

As to his end, a colleague and helper writes:—"For him it is indeed gain, but for the work and all here the loss is heavy. Dr. McAll had been very seriously ill for many months, and we had feared that he might never return to Paris, which he had quitted in October last. He was able to be back again in the beginning of April, and to attend a few of his much-loved meetings, but we saw that his strength was failing. His wonderful energy held him up in spite of the extreme exhaustion of the system. On the 2nd he attended a committee meeting, and the next day was ill again. He had to give up completely, and, after a week of much suffering, he peacefully fell asleep on Thursday evening. He died at the post of honour like a true soldier of Christ."

The funeral took place on Monday, at the Church of the Oratoire. We ask the prayers of all our friends for Mrs. M'All and for the mission in this time of bereavement.

SOUTH-EAST AFRICA MISSION.

After two years of pioneering in South-east Africa my husband and myself embark in a few hours for England, where we hope to spend some months. Our earnest desire is that fitted workers may be led to this wide and needy field, large portions of which still remain untouched.

We have just had the joy of opening our new mission house and a mission hall for Zulus in Durban. Those who attend the meetings are not nominal Christians, but raw heathen, many of whom hardly know how to enter the door, or what to do when in. A night school has also been started for them in the hall. They are taught to read and write their own language in the hope that those for whose conversion we work and trust may carry the Gospel message to their distant homes.

Three hundred miles from Durban, hidden in the valleys around Majuba, are hundreds of kraals. One of these valleys has a population of 2,000 heathen. In this district we are forming a mission centre. The Misses Grieve, of Edinburgh, who joined us a year ago, are already at work there. During our absence they will live in our small cottage at the foot of Majuba. With thankful hearts we have watched their work for some weeks past.

The school held every night for men must continue in the little dining-room (12ft. by 12ft.) until the Lord gives a schoolroom. Meanwhile, we praise Him for using our dining-room, but how to seat the scholars is becoming a problem. A day-school for children must be started also.

On Sundays the Misses Grieve sing and read the Gospel, and will soon be able to speak it. Their ponies will carry them to the kraals, and we are endeavouring to find a native worker to assist them.

Our mission-centre near St. Lucia Lake, Zululand, is now fairly established, and Mr. and Mrs. Olsen-Tryling find their beehive hut both cool and healthy. They will spend the winter months in evangelising the fever district lying below them, impossible work during the summer.

On the Zambesi Mr. Herald represents the S.E. Africa Mission. He writes of the darkness and the need of the thousands on the banks of the great river. Another member of the mission is on the eve of starting for the Zambesi. He also will maintain himself whilst learning the language.

During our stay in England communication may be addressed care of Mr. A. S. Day, Lancaster-road, Wimbledon.

REV. J. E. MARTIN,

SECRETARY, BAPTIST MINISTERS' AND MISSIONARIES' PRAYER UNION.

THIS brother comes of an old Irish family, and was born at Hammersmith. His grandmother, a woman of indomitable will, had a large share in his training, and she mapped out the course in life that he and his brother should pursue. One was to enter the Navy, and the other the Church or the medical profession, and thus keep up the traditions of the family. If they would be dominated by her, all her fortune would be divided between them; if not, the proverbial shilling was to be their punishment.

JOHN MARTIN decided to enter the medical profession, and commenced by studying chemistry and by being registered at one of the London hospitals. At that time he was living at Edmonton with his family, all of whom were staunch "Church" people of the Evangelical school. The church there was ritualistic; and as one of less formal ceremony could only be reached by going a long distance, he strayed one day into a Baptist chapel near home. The anniversary services were being conducted by the late Rev. W. H. Burton, of Dalston, then of Kingsgate-street, Holborn. The simple service compelled his attention, and the straight direct sermon went home to his heart. He felt that Christ was there and needed him: then and there he gave his heart to the Saviour.

Later on the feeling came that this was not enough. Work must be done for the Master. He joined the Baptist Church at Edmonton, and under the helpful care of its pastor, Rev. David Russell, entered joyfully into Sunday-school and mission work. Out of this grew work elsewhere, and he was found in the Sunday-school, and taking mission services at Ponder's End. This developed the preaching faculty latent within him, and caused him to feel a longing to consecrate his life to the service of Christ by entering the Baptist ministry.

Mr. C. H. Spurgeon gladly received him into his College, where he passed a most pleasant and helpful period of training, to which he often makes grateful reference. Long before the end of his course of study he was sent out preaching. While at College he acted as students' secretary, and was also secretary to the College Temperance Society.

A short time after Mr. Martin had attained his twentieth year, Mr. Spurgeon was anxious to found a Baptist church at Erith to reach the lower stratum of society not touched by the existing organisations. Services conducted by Sir Arthur Blackwood had awakened in many hearts the desire for Evangelical teaching for the masses. There were only seven Baptists ready to assist in the work, but they secured the Public Hall for services, and Mr. Martin began to preach. Difficulties arose through the insolvency of the owner of the Hall. Mr. Martin and his helpers determined, by God's help, to build a chapel of their own, and did not rest until they had a pleasant building, which cost about £1700, and held 200 people. The pastor's work was so arduous at this time that his health seriously suffered in consequence, but he would not give in, though sleep went from him through over-strain. To induce it, he often took long walks at the end of the day's service. On one of these occasions, as he was standing admiring the picturesque view presented by a little hamlet under a flood of softening moonbeams, he was startled by hearing terrified screams and yells from one of the nearest houses. Fearing murder was being committed, he entered the door, and found a man ramping round, in the madness of drunken fury, upon wife and children. Having settled the dispute, he at once arranged with one of the neighbours to allow him to hold cottage meetings at her house on certain days of the week. The inhabitants of this place were worse than heathen, not because they were not invited to attend Church by the clergy and ladies who visited them, but because they would not do as they were requested. Perhaps the need was that the service should be brought to them, if they would not go to it. At any rate, they made Sunday their chief day for dissipation at the public-house; the men worked in their gardens, the women did their washing, and the children were sometimes sent out in the streets stark naked, when the open-air services were first started. On one occasion a woman who was notorious as a drunkard came out, beer-jug in hand, on her way to the public-house. Seeing the crowd and hearing the singing, she stopped to listen, and stayed to hear the speaking, the result being that instead of going to buy the beer she went home to seek the Saviour. She gave up the drink, and is now a member of Mr. Martin's church. This was the commencement of his mission work. Now there are three mission stations—Northumberland Heath, Ivy Room (North End), and Slade Green.

(From a Photograph by Messrs. Russell & Sons, Baker Street, London, W.)

John Martin's early and deepest sorrow came through the death of one who was to have shared life with him. It is too sacred a subject for him ever to mention, but a man is made by the sorrows he bravely surmounts and the temptations he vigorously tramples under foot. He has had his share of the ills of life, yet by God's help has bravely overcome, and is therefore able to succour others.

As the years passed, the chapel which the first members caused to be reared became too small. Many invitations have come from time to time from larger and richer churches to our friend, but he has refused them all, feeling that God called him to Erith, and that He has still work there for him to do. At the expiration of seventeen years of Mr. Martin's faithful ministry, his devoted people resolved to build again, so as to accommodate the overflowing congregations. The new building was opened about a year ago, without the payment of one penny interest on borrowed money, and called the Queen-street Baptist Chapel. The old chapel was turned into a school-room and lecture-hall. At the present time seventeen services of various kinds are held every Sunday in connection with the church, and thirty-nine meetings comprise the weekly programme, without counting committee meetings, which are necessarily numerous. It is no uncommon thing for a series of engagements to keep the doors open from seven in the morning until ten o'clock at night.

One bit of work specially near Mr. Martin's heart is his Sunday-afternoon Bible-class for men, which is held in the dining hall of the Erith Iron Works. All men over sixteen are eligible. In a place like Erith, which is inundated by a stream of men constantly coming and going in the fluctuations of work, this is very necessary.

Many of these men are imbued with infidel notions, and some of them are very rough characters. Drink is ever present among them. As a proof of God's blessing on the work, Mr. Martin can point to men whose lives have been transformed. One secret of his influence is that he presses every one of his congregation into service of some sort for Christ, carefully searching for the visible or latent talent possessed by each. Over thirty men from the Bible-class joined the church in one year. Among his band of workers may be seen those who were once fighters, wife-beaters, drunkards.

For the last ten years Mr. Martin has done splendid work in organising temperance fêtes on Bank Holidays for any who may wish to attend. Temperance meetings for the young, combined with a form of "Christian Endeavour," are conducted personally by the pastor every week.

For five years he wrought single-handed to provide dinners for poor children whose parents were out of work. Then he requested the co-operation of others to form a united committee. During last winter they gave over 5000 children free dinners.

In 1887 a sketch of Rev. F. B. Meyer appeared in The Christian. This so impressed Mr. Martin that he wrote to Mr. Meyer asking his methods of work, and was invited by him to a conference of Baptist ministers at Leicester. From this dated a friendship which Mr. Martin feels has helped to produce in him richer fruitfulness in service and fuller enjoyment of personal religion, and through this teaching and influence a more entire consecration of heart and life to Christ. It was a sense of this personal indebtedness which led him to accept the onerous position of secretary to the Baptist Ministers' and Missionaries' Prayer Union, which Mr. Meyer formed, and which now numbers over 700 members in every quarter of the globe.

Mr. Martin, we regret to say, is down with small-pox at present, and has been very ill. A man converted through coming to his Sunday afternoon class was taken with the disease, and his one desire was to see Mr. Martin before he died. The pastor went and caught the complaint; but he is so loved in Erith that two doctors volunteered to sit up with him each night, taking it by turns, and they have helped to pull him through. We trust such a valued life will long be spared.

SAVED TO SAVE.

In the Parish of Coats, Coatbridge, there is a stimulating instance of the way in which the Gospel is diffused. A working man, labouring in the iron-furnaces of that town, had led a "gutter" life for many years. A little over a year ago he was led to enter a mission hall in a part of the parish where Rev. Wm. Hutchison, minister of the parish, was holding a special mission. He was enabled to receive Christ, and his life was changed.

One or two months ago, as he stood at his door, looking out upon the working men's square in which he lives, where the children were playing, he felt urged to seek for their souls. Twice a week they have met in his kitchen. On Tuesday last week, he invited a brother working-man, who testifies to a full salvation from a life of continued debauchery and vice, seven years ago, and now a fellow-member with him of the Parish Church of Coats, to address his meeting. At the close, ten of the young people over twelve years of age definitely chose Christ as their Saviour.

MISSIONARY DECLARATIONS.

We, the undersigned missionaries of Madras, regretting the misapprehension which has been occasioned by the action of the Decennial Missionary Conference of 1892-93, in withdrawing the resolution relating to legalised impurity, and desiring to allay the anxiety caused thereby in the minds of Christian people, do hereby declare our abhorrence of any system which provides for or sanctions the practice of vice.

At a session of the Lucknow United Missionary Conference, representing sixty-five missionaries, of five different missionary societies, and stationed at eleven different stations in the North-Western Provinces, which was held on April 17, 1893, the following resolutions were presented and unanimously passed:—

"Resolved, that in view of the fact that the attitude of the Decennial Conference towards great moral questions has been widely misunderstood and misinterpreted, and that on that account Indian missionaries generally have been condemned by public opinion in Great Britain, the missionaries of the Lucknow United Missionary Conference desire to emphasise the fact that, in common with other Indian missionaries, they are unalterably opposed to the State regulation of vice, and to the opium and liquor traffic. Against the State regulation of vice, this Conference sent petitions to the Governor-General in Council and to the British Government as early as January, 1888. In 1891 it sent a memorial to the British Government, urging the abolition of the opium traffic, and suggesting that a grant, on a sliding scale, should be made from the Imperial Exchequer to meet the loss of revenue. It also sent a letter to the churches of Great Britain, setting forth the evils of the Government policy, and urging them to unite heartily in opposition. Last year, on the subject of total abstinence, the Conference passed the following resolution:—'That as a Conference we advocate total abstinence as a principle, to be held before our churches by precept and example, and that by all practicable means we will endeavour to induce all our members to conform to this principle.' VILLAGE EVANGELISATION.

Sir,—The interesting report of the conference on Village Evangelisation in your issue of April 27, leads me to contribute a few lines to the subject. For the past twenty-five years we have been allowed to carry the good news to the poor of Norfolk by means of tents, and every succeeding year only shows more plainly the suitability of this mode of evangelisation.

But for want of money, our three tents would have been already in the field; and it is a matter of much regret that we have had to lose the light evenings and magnificent weather of the present month. I hope, however, God willing, to start again in June; and, by your kind permission, would appeal to your readers for help. May I say that for the £50 for which I ask, three of our tents can be kept going for the season, which lasts from the present time to the beginning of harvest, about the middle of August.

Our plan has always been to take the villages, so far as is possible, in rotation, each tent accomplishing about four separate missions of from four to six weeks each. A shorter period is, humanly speaking, of but little value when dealing with the slow agricultural mind; but the results of reiterated and prolonged Gospel preaching are encouraging beyond words. Our speakers are provided by the Evangelisation Society, and by this instrumentality about sixteen series of simple, well-planned, unhurried Gospel missions may be held during the coming summer, and literally thousands, whose ears would otherwise be strangers to the joyful sound, may hear of Jesus and his finished salvation.

I ought, perhaps, to say that the population amongst which we work is wholly agricultural. The average of wages would be about twelve shillings a week, and many of these people give "to their power and beyond their power," not only to the support of their own ministers, but for the tent work. Still their utmost can be but a few pence. The farmers occasionally help us by the loan of a standing for the tent, and of their horses to cart it from place to place; but do not give much else in these "bad times." The depression is so severe that the greater number of the properties in the county are let to strangers, who recognise no local claims. I might add that the wear and tear of many years have reduced our fourth tent to a mass of rags. A second £50 would replace it.

BLANKENBURG, THURINGIA.

A winter of unusual severity has been followed by spring in all its beauty. The scenery around us is a perfect garden of white and pink blossoms, giving rich promise of fruit. We can thankfully testify that spiritual fruit has not been wanting in the past months; souls have found peace in Christ, and the work entrusted to our hands has progressed in many ways. The children have been kept in health and safety, the meetings and Sunday-school were well attended, and our missionary is well received in the villages of the "forest."

Crosses and difficulties have not been spared us, and the enemy has put hindrances in our way wherever he could; yet we know that the Lord of Hosts is on our side. Our work of Bible and tract distribution among the navvies of various nationalities has been taken up again with the fair season, and, in addition to the Evangelisches Allianzblatt, a small weekly Gospel paper, the Thüringer Evangelist, has been started at the price of about one-twelfth of a penny, so as to put the Gospel message within reach of everyone.

Our new house is ready for occupation, and we hope to have English visitors with us in this, as in former years. I shall be glad to give any particulars as to terms, etc. Our yearly conference for the deepening of spiritual life will open (D.V.) on August 28. After our delightful gathering of last year, we trust again to see our English friends amongst us at that time.

The May Meetings.

Prevention of Cruelty to Children.

The Mansion House was crowded as we have seldom seen it, on the afternoon of Tuesday week, when the annual meeting of the National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children was held. The report issued, under the title of "The World of Forgotten Children," gives full details of the society's beneficent operations, and reveals a sea of unmeasured sorrow and shameful wrong-doing towards the little ones. We do not propose now to enter on any analysis of this pregnant report. It demands fuller and more careful treatment than can be accorded it in the report of a meeting; besides, it was not read at the gathering, and may, therefore, be fairly left over for subsequent reference.

The Lord Mayor, in opening the proceedings, said it was a proud thing for the Lord Mayor of London to preside over such a meeting, which had the interests of the children at heart. They were met to do justice to the children and to endeavour to obtain justice for them as for themselves. By the action and influence of this Society the Legislature had granted a great instalment of legal protection to our children, and those who acted as magistrates knew how greatly that protection was needed. He concluded with a reference to the Royal betrothal.

The Hon. A. H. D. Acland (Vice-President of the Council of Education) said that all who were connected with the work of education in the country might well be proud of the advance we had made in the last quarter of a century; and if there were any schools of which we might be specially proud, they were our infant schools, where the little children received so much that was pleasant and happy in their lives. Yet, he thought we must often ask the question—If in what is called their homes they are receiving ill-treatment, and are suffering cruelty at the hands of those who ought to treat them well, what kind of preparation are they receiving for the education the State can give them? It was to remove that evil imputation, which lay upon us as long as these cruelties remained in our midst, that this Society had done such splendid work. He congratulated Mr. Waugh and his friends upon what they had done: he wished them "God speed" in their work, and he hoped every town and village in the country might come under the beneficial influence of this admirable Society. If ever an Act of Parliament had proved itself to be useful, it was the Act of Parliament passed in 1889, which was, indeed, Mr. Waugh's charter. He was now engaged in drawing up an Evening Continuation School Code, and amongst the subjects to be introduced were the duties of citizens, and he should suggest that the Acts of Parliament relating to the prevention of cruelty to children and animals were particularly deserving of careful study. In conclusion, he made an earnest appeal for increased financial support to the Society.

Rev. J. H. Rigg, D.D., said that Mr. Waugh and his co-workers had brought about a revelation of knowledge on this subjectto the people of England; and for himself, though he had had more opportunities than many people of gaining knowledge of the truth, the information given by Mr. Waugh had opened his eyes to what was no less than a terrible revelation. The heart of England, he knew, was engaged in that great work, and he hoped that English people would show by their subscriptions their practical sympathy with the exertions that were being set forth. It was, he thought, a noteworthy circumstance that 96 per cent. of all the cases taken up had actually been successful in the courts. That proved beyond a question the extreme prudence and wisdom with which the affairs of the Society had been conducted. Its work had increased with marvellous rapidity, there being now 225 centres in various parts of the country.

Sir F. Milner, M.P., said that the operations of this Society must appeal to everything that was human in every man and woman. One thing which distinguished that Society was that its aims and objects were such that men and women of all creeds, parties, and classes could heartily co-operate to support it. The work of the Society was in-indeed a branch of our national education, and he would like to see the Society obtain an annual grant from Parliament. Then came Cardinal Vaughan, who heartily supported the claims of the Society. Addresses followed by Lord Barnard and the Earl of Ranfurly, after which

Mr. James Monro, C.B., said that the country was greatly indebted to Mr. Waugh for the work he was doing. It was a real and substantial work in every sense. Personally, he would like to see the day when the Society would be abolished by reason of there being no cruelty to punish; but the way to achieve that object was by increasing their subscriptions in the meantime.

Mr. W. Willis, Q.C., deprecated the suggestion which had been made that it was by terror that the people could be brought to a better sense of their responsibilities. He did not believe the world was becoming more barbarous, and he was sure there was an increasing knowledge of the love of Christ, whose teachings would accomplish the object of that Society.

Zenana Bible & Medical Mission.

This Society's annual meeting is always an interesting occasion, and the gathering in Princes' Hall on Tuesday afternoon, May 9, to hear the annual statement of the Society's work was really a time of cheer and hope and encouragement.

Lord Kinnaird presided. Rev. A. R. Cavalier, secretary, gave an abstract of the report. Two special features were noted—thanksgiving for a year remarkably blessed in its results; from almost every station came tidings of converts, and increased interest. Again the report shows that never before have such pathetic and urgent calls come from India as at present. The Society has eighty-two European missionary ladies in the field, with 206 native helpers. At Lucknow, Benares, and Patna the medical work has relieved 10,604 patients in various ways; some very difficult operations have been successfully performed. A site has been obtained at Patna for an hospital, and the building is to be commenced immediately. No less than 140 millions of women in India live outside the areas reached by lady doctors, and for this vast array in time of sickness no skilled medical aid is available. Educational work is being vigorously continued; the Bombay School is greatly appreciated, and there is also a splendid work among the Beni Israel; 115 young Jewesses are being taught. From the various schools many native Christian workers go to labour in the villages or carry the Gospel message to their own homes. At Poona Mrs. Sorabji's new school has now been completed, and much is hoped for in that place.

Village work is the present crying need in India. Ladies and native Bible-women who go and itinerate are greatly encouraged, and the Society mean to push forward this part of their work. Western India is very short of workers, and there very much might be done in the villages. From Patna, Benares, Lucknow, come cheering news of individuals, and in some cases whole families, accepting the Gospel and being baptized. Twenty-seven candidates are ready to go to India, two fully-qualified doctors and five trained nurses. If the Society only had the means, these fresh missionaries would go forth immediately.

The financial statement was given by Mr. W. T. Paton (hon. finance sec.). The income during the past year had been £19,147, and with a balance of £600 in hand they begun this year. A site at Patna had not only been secured, but also the £3000 required for building the hospital. £1000 had been given by a lady for extending medical work in Ceylon. The Society are very anxious to send out twenty further missionaries at least. To do this they would require £3000 more per annum, and he asked £5000 to begin with. The need for this extension was strongly and eloquently urged on the friends present.

Rev. Ruttonji Nowroji, C.M.S. (Aurungabad), spoke on the work in Western India and the great value of the Christian schools. He showed the marvellous influence missionary ladies had in the homes, and how the native Bible-women going about in the villages had produced a remarkable change; in several districts where some years ago he could not get a hearing, the people now flocked to listen to the Gospel. This was due to the quiet influence of the ladies and the Bible-women in the homes.

Rev. R. A. Squires (from Bombay) testified to the splendid work done by the Society in the district with which he was acquainted; its work is complete so far as its scope is concerned, though, of course, there was need and room for great expansion and increase in every direction. He wished to put one question, "How much owest thou?" Let Christians see that their obligations to God were fulfilled.

Rev. A. T. Pierson, D.D., did not like it that appeals are necessary for such work. Christians should have the facts laid before them, and the methods pointed out; and the response should come at once; if they were really consecrated to God for his service, they should only require to know the need, and it would be met. The way to the women and girls of India is now opened. Many years ago Dr. Duff said that it was like trying to force walls of adamant and gates of steel, but now God has done his mighty work, and Christian ladies may enter in.

The annual report, with full details of the Society's operations, may be had at the office, 2, Adelphi-terrace, Strand.

London Missionary Society.

The anniversary of the London Missionary Society was celebrated last week by a number of meetings and special sermons preached in various centres. The large public gathering in Exeter Hall was held on Thursday, and it was characterised by much enthusiasm.

The chair was occupied by Mr. Mark Oldroyd, M.P., who opened the proceedings with a hearty address. He maintained that the sacrifice of contributors to mission funds is small in comparison with that of the missionaries. The Society began the year with a surplus of £9000, and closed with a deficit of £5000, having in the meantime appropriated £8000 from reserve funds. The total expenditure was £164,550. He laid it as a duty and privilege upon the churches to improve the financial condition of the Society.

Rev. R. Wardlaw Thompson, in an interesting statement, admitted being disappointed at the financial state of affairs, but he would not listen to any suggestion of depression. The anxiety that has been experienced regarding funds arises from the urgent facts that the work advances, the needs increase, and responsibilities become greater year by year. As showing the extent of the work, the speaker called attention to the fact that there are in the field no fewer than 1736 ordained native workers, 6416 native preachers, and 96,116 church members in full communion. Moreover, 69,000 boys and 53,000 girls—children of heathen as well as Christians—are under instruction in the schools of the Society. The forward movement is not failing; God will not let it fail, but will find someone to carry it on if the supporters of the Society are not faithful.

Dr. Sargood Fry, late of Travancore, now superintendent of the Edinburgh Medical Missionary Society, outlined the history of Christian work in the sphere which he occupied in South India. Dwelling upon medical missions, he described the hospital as the most important centre of operations. All of the three last medical missionaries in Travancore have had to build new hospitals; and the one he was enabled to erect had a remarkable history, having been provided in a way that plainly showed the finger of God. Many thousands have benefited by the institution, in which the Gospel is freely preached. There are about a score branch dispensaries, and the influence of the work is unlimited, among Christians and heathens, high and low, mission families and the natives round about. Being an important aggressive agency, mission hospitals should command cordial support.

Rev. W. Pierce, of New Court Chapel, delivered an earnest address. In the past many motives have impelled men to go forth to preach the Gospel to the heathen, and many motives touch our hearts to-day; but slowly and surely there is emerging one great motive that embraces and absorbs all others. That is, the imperial idea of Christianity, that Christ is King and must reign over all lands. In the light of that idea we discover that our own future is involved in the victory of Christ, and that there can be no "Day of the Lord," there can come to us no millennial glory, so long as half the world is lying in ignorance and sin. We are going to conquer the world for Jesus by rendering it the highest service which man can render to his fellow. Two great passions possess human hearts—ruling and serving. The one is the ideal of the world, and the other the conception of Christ and his people. Sometimes benefit accrues from the lust of power; but Christ has told us that, though "the kings of the Gentiles lord it over" their constituents and dominions, those who would be chief among us must "be servants of all." Serving in the name of Christ, we shall have power to subdue the nations unto Him.

Miss Hewlett, of Mirzapur, spoke of the condition of the women of India. Living in ignorance and degradation in the Zenanas, they hesitate to believe the story of God's love, and it has to be rehearsed to them again and again. None of the children who have been in the mission schools can afterwards be what their mothers were. Women as well as children have come out of heathenism, and have endured persecution for the name of Christ. The workers, however, long for fuller blessing, and await with confidence the time when the heathen strongholds of North India shall fall down, and the reign of Christ progress.

Dr. Pentecost delivered a stirring address, claiming that missions have yet their romance, and that there never was such enthusiasm in regard to the work. The doors of service are open, and the need is that Christians should be consecrated in heart so as to enter the doors.

Rev. T. W. Pearce, of Canton, described work among the Chinese. The native churches are freeing Christianity from the reproach of being "a foreign religion."

Some thoughtful and serious words were spoken by Rev. Eric Lawrence, of Halifax. Until we understand and practise self-denial to a larger extent than hitherto, we shall not support mission work as we ought. Self-denial is really a denial of self, and not simply a denying oneself of something. It means the dethronement of the self in us and the exaltation upon the vacant throne of Jesus Christ our Lord. Christian self-denial is realised in us in the measure in which we are able to say with the Apostle Paul, "It is no longer I that live, but Christ that liveth in me." When this position has been attained, we shall look out upon the world with the eyes of Christ, see its needs as He sees them, and hasten to meet them as He did; for it is not we who act, but Christ who acts through us. When John says that Christ "laid down his life for us," he adds, "we also ought to lay down our lives for one another."

Medical Missionary Association.

The annual meeting of this Association was held in Lower Exeter Hall on Thursday afternoon, when Mr. T. A. Denny presided, and in his opening remarks dwelt on the value of medical missions, and, not least, that of women, who were thus enabled to reach and help their dark and sorely-afflicted heathen sisters.

Dr. J. L. Maxwell gave an outline of the report, showing the progress of medical missions by the number of men and women consecrated to this special form of Christian service. On the foreign field there are now 164 medical missionaries. Of these, sixty-three are at work in China, forty-six in India, thirty-one in Africa, nine in Palestine, the remaining fifteen being scattered in various other parts of the world. Of the whole number, one hundred and forty-five are men, and nineteen are women. Of even more interest, however, is the prospect afforded by the present attitude of medical students toward foreign missions. Of women there are in London twenty-six, in Edinburgh twenty-two, and in Glasgow eighteen, or sixty-six in all, who are in various stages of medical study with a view to full qualification, and whose aim is to serve Christ on the foreign field. On the men's side, the numbers are diffused over a much larger number of schools, and are not so easily fixed, but the following are known: In London there are forty; in Edinburgh, fifty; in Glasgow, twenty; in Aberdeen, three. We may be satisfied that there are at least as many missionary students in our medical schools to-day as there are medical missionaries on the field, and that, the Lord opening the way, it should not be many years before the present number on the field is doubled.

Rev. F. E. Wigram gave some account of what he had seen of medical missions during his recent tour, and spoke of the attitude of the C.M.S. towards medical missionaries as one of increasing appreciation. For certain fields, such as in Mohammedan lands, medical missions had proved to be of peculiar advantage and service.

Dr. A. C. Hall gave an account of the Islington Medical Mission, which is carried on by the Association.

Dr. Valentine, Principal of the Medical Missionary Institute, Agra, made touching reference to the death of that pioneer and able minister, Dr. Burns Thomson. Passing on, he gave some experiences in India, enlarging particularly on the Institute at Agra for training Christian natives to do medical missionary service among their fellow countrymen.

The Bible League.

The first annual meeting of this League was held last week at the Conference Hall, Mildmay Park. Mr. W. H. Seagram presided at a business meeting in the afternoon. Mr. A. H. Carter, assistant secretary, read the report, which showed that during the past year a large number of conferences and meetings in support of the verbal inspiration of the Bible had been held in many parts of London and the provinces. Letters were read from friends in the various districts, testifying to the importance of the meetings and the great blessings that had attended the efforts of the League.

Lord Kinnaird presided in the evening, and in an earnest address set forth the claims of the Bible, and the necessity for living out individually the Christian life as laid down therein. Dr. A. T. Pierson, in the course of a powerful and closely reasoned address, said that the more he studied the Bible the more he became convinced of its verbal inspiration. Rev. John Urquhart (hon. sec.) advanced many proofs from historical research of the absolute integrity of the Bible. Rev. R. Wright Hay (India) and Rev. Wm. Cuff also addressed the meeting.

British Jews Society.

The meeting held on Friday evening last, at Exeter Hall, was in celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the very interesting organisation which is specifically known as the British Society for the Propagation of the Gospel among the Jews. The Jubilee motto, "The world for Christ through the Jew," served as a key-note for the entire proceedings. The chair was occupied by Rev. Dr. Hiles Hitchens, president, who intimated that the Society now stands in a better position than ever before.

Rev. John Dunlop, secretary, read a long report, describing work in London, the provinces, and abroad. Incidents were given showing the widespread and deep influence of the work; and the Jubilee visitation of the centres was shown to have yielded great encouragement. The medical mission has been so overcrowded that hundreds have been sent away. The meetings for preaching, praise, and prayer had been times of refreshing, one Jew after another having stood up and prayed in the name of Jesus for pardon and peace. Mr. Dunlop pleaded for increased consecration to the cause of Jewish evangelisation.

Rev. Dr. Cave, of Hackney College, referred to the grand history of the Society; and urging present responsibilities, spoke of the breaking up of the terrible stagnation which has so long characterised Judaism. Yet the claims of Israel are not realised as they should be. A brother minister said to him, "Are you going to speak at that Jews' meeting?" Being answered in the affirmative, the questioner rejoined, "The Jews do not want your mission; they have the Gospel as well as we." Do not "want"? Ah! but they need! If the Jews hold high views of the righteousness of God, they know nothing of the blessedness of life in Jesus. They may have a stern sense of duty; but we have learned that "by the law is the knowledge of sin." Instead of the depression which follows this, Christians are enabled to enjoy exhilaration. But over and above these considerations, there is the Lord's command, "beginning at Jerusalem." Dr. Cave showed how we can present the Gospel to the Jew with special promise of blessing—by recognising the splendid traditions and unique genius of the race.

Rev. Theodore Hitchens, of Teddington, eulogised the Jewish people. Rev. Dr. Leach having spoken, an address was delivered by Rev. John Urquhart, who declared his belief that the Jews are going back to their own land, but that they will be put in the furnace, that their stubbornness and hardness of heart may be melted out of them. The Jew will, however, yet be a priest unto God in the earth, and the world would receive the truth from him.

The last of three resolutions contained the following picturesque sentence: "This meeting beholds, with deep indignation and profound sympathy, the iron hand of persecution tightening its grasp upon five millions of Jews, and earnestly prays to God that it may soon be lifted, that the manacled and bleeding Hebrew victims may be drawn to Christ, the great Emancipator, by the magnet of his love as revealed on Calvary; that they, with us, may receive the baptism of fire, the Spirit in his fulness, and thereby be prepared to go everywhere as missionaries of the Cross, that through them the whole desert of the world may soon bud and blossom as the rose."

Barbican Mission to the Jews.

The annual gathering of friends of this Mission was held on Friday last at Exeter Hall; and the attendance included a number of interested workers connected with various organisations engaged in the evangelisation of Israel. The superintendent, Mr. C. T. Lipshytz, gave an outline of the year's operations, which include evangelisation and placing outcast converts in a position to earn their livelihood; Bible classes and meetings for women and children. The reading-room is an important adjunct of the Mission House work.

Archdeacon Richardson, who presided, delivered an address, which showed a warm interest in the subject, and an acquaintance with it in its many aspects. Jewish mission work is, he said, not a matter of choice, but a distinct responsibility devolving upon the Christian Church. As the message of God's grace came from heaven to earth, so from age to age it is handed from man to man, and in this the Divine order "to the Jew first" cannot be ignored.

Rev. J. H. Scott, rector of Spitalfields, advocated work amongst Jews on three grounds: The Jew inherits precedence in the preaching of the Gospel, "to the Jew first"; judgment begins with the Jew—on account of disobedience God has caused "blindness in part" to happen unto them; and, finally, the conversion of Israel will bring life to the world. The speaker showed how during recent years the Jewish people have been marvellously stirred by Christian testimony; and while many are inquiring as to the claims of Christ, others are anxious to witness for God against the materialistic tendencies of our time. Sunday schools have been established in Spitalfields for the religious instruction of the young; and some eight thousand Jewish children are assembled in the neighbourhood every week, and taught to read the Old Testament by ladies and gentlemen of their own community. Long-existing prejudices are disappearing; and though a rabbi has claimed that the work of the missionaries has resulted in an increased earnestness and stronger union on the part of the Jews, those who have watched the movements of Israel more perfectly must admit "that Israel is being provoked to jealousy" in accordance with Scripture prophecy.

Mr. Edwin Smith pointed out that the Church cannot be without its Jewish question any more than the nations of the earth. Rev. T. R. Waltenberg, missionary among the Mohammedans in India, spoke some words of practical encouragement. After some remarks by Rev. A. J. Brideman, of Islington, an address was delivered by Rev. A. Bernstein, of the London Jews Society, who rejoiced the meeting by intimating that a German rabbi has followed the well-known Dr. Lichtenstein in speaking boldly for Christ in the synagogue.

In conclusion, Rev. J. B. Barraclough spoke highly of the Barbican mission, and commended Jewish history and characteristics to the attention of all who would read their Bibles with intelligence, and be in sympathy with the revealed purpose of God.

London Jews Society.

The eighty-fifth anniversary of the London Society for Promoting Christianity amongst the Jews was held a few days ago in Exeter Hall. The president, Sir John Kennaway, Bart., occupied the chair, being supported by an influential company of friends of the work. The report showed that the income had reached the sum of £36,487. God's blessing on the work was cordially acknowledged, encouraging reports being given regarding the schools in London for Jewish children. The hearty welcome given by the parents when visited by the missionaries is a testimony to the value of the school influence.

The Chairman spoke of Christian obligation in regard to Israel. While this is the largest Society engaged in evangelising the Jews, it is by no means the only one, and he was thankful for all who are engaged in the blessed work; and also for the many converted Jews who are labouring for the evangelisation of their kindred. Great blessings are yet in store for the Jews, and the Church will receive great blessings through them.

Sir Joseph Savory, M.P., in a brief address, referred to Israel as "the most interesting nation in the world." As to results, he said: If one is engaged on the old lines in making known the Gospel of Christ, as I am satisfied that this Society is, the promise of God is sure—"So shall my word be that goeth forth out of my mouth; it shall not return unto Me void."

Canon Trefusis, of Exeter, commended the work to all Christians, and expressed the hope that one result of the increasing numbers of young men studying Hebrew would be a wider interest in the Lord's work among his ancient people, and help to hasten the day when both Jews and Gentiles shall be one flock under one Shepherd.

Rev. J. C. Bachert, of Hamburg, described the work in which he has been engaged for more than twenty years. He had seen a statement to the effect that it cost a thousand pounds to convert a Jew. Another account had estimated the expense at three hundred pounds. He humorously refuted this statement by a reference to the report from Warsaw, where in 1892 seventy-eight Jews had been baptised. Had they cost £1000 each the report would show the expenses of that mission £78,000, whereas the real fact is the expenses are £234. Referring to a resolution which thanked God for the preservation of the missionaries during the cholera, he said that thankfulness was not only due for the missionaries, but also for the converts, for not one of them was attacked during that terrible visitation.

Addresses having been delivered by Canon O'Connor and Rev. J. Turckheim, Mr. T. E. Zerbib, a missionary from Morocco, told the story of his conversion twenty years ago, of his experience as a colporteur, schoolmaster, and lay missionary. A young man once asked him if he could not be his friend without always speaking to him about Jesus. He told him that he could not be his true friend if he neglected to speak of Him who alone could give him peace in this world and make him happy for eternity. Some time afterwards he asked the young man to pardon his persistency. The young man replied, "I not only pardon, but I bless you." There is a good work going on in Morocco. Bibles and Hebrew New Testaments are being distributed, and there was every encouragement not to forget in prayer and sympathy dark Morocco and its missions.

Evangelical Alliance.

Thursday last was a hot, tiring day, and it was a great relief to get out of the dusty streets into the quietude and shade of the grounds at Regent's Park College. A similar feeling fills the mind of one who mixes in the clash and turmoil of religious debate so prevalent in these days, as he enters the calm concordant atmosphere of an Evangelical Alliance gathering. It was pleasing beyond degree last week to mingle with the almost œcumenical assembly gathered under Dr. Angus's hospitable roof, and to find Christians of many names and from many lands all drinking tea together, and discoursing on the common salvation. The meeting may not have been so large as on some former occasions, but we have never been at a previous conversazione of the Alliance where the interest was fuller and more absorbing.

A capital chairman was found in the person of Mr. John Paton, a Scoto-American, who has now largely transferred his interest and residence to the land of his nativity. He introduced the speechifying by an admirable little address, with just a spice of Yankee tall talk to flavour words of warm commendation of the noble work of the Alliance on both sides of the sea.

The report, read by Mr. A. J. Arnold, covered the past six months only, as the Alliance year has been changed, and the spring gathering will now be the annual meeting proper. Mr. Arnold told of new branches formed in Jamaica, South Germany, and elsewhere, and of a revived interest in the objects of the Alliance in several European countries. The growth of the week of prayer movement was thankfully referred to; and of course special allusion was made to the recent interpositions on behalf of persecuted Christians in Russia, Armenia, etc. The autumn conference this year will be held at Dublin, and the U.S.A. branch is to hold a great convention at Chicago.

The formal reappointment of the Council was moved by Dr. Murray Mitchell, and seconded by Dr. Hiles Hitchens, both of whom found occasion to say something in praise of the work of the Alliance.

Three addresses followed. Dr. J. L. Phillips, from India, waxed eloquent to a degree as he expatiated on the beauties of Christian unity and the need for a greater exhibition of it in the face of a world's heathendom. He urged that the spirit of the Alliance should not be merely "an organised sentiment," as some cavillers thought it was, but that it should be a vitalising power in work at home and abroad. How much waste might be avoided if Christian workers would agree not to overlap each other, and would combine for united and aggressive effort. On this head he commended the movement under the Alliance in America for the evangelisation of the large cities throughout the States. He urged the need for showing a united front in Papal as well as in pagan lands.

The next speaker was Mr. John Haffenden, a Bible Society agent at Singapore, who described his work in the Malaysian Peninsula as being on Alliance lines—the absence of party names and the union of all for the furtherance of the one cause. He spoke very strongly as to the baneful influences of Popery in these Eastern lands, and the great need there is for counteracting it. Dr. Herrick, of Marsovan, was the third friend who claimed our attention, and some interesting particulars were expected from him as to the Turkish persecutions in Armenia, as he has been for some time in correspondence and treaty with the authorities on the subject. His speech, however, created disappointment on this score, as he went off at a tangent into a strongly-worded protest against godless Government education in India. That is a burning topic, but it was scarcely germane to the object of the gathering. However, Dr. Herrick is in feeble health, and said he had not been able to prepare an address. What little information he did give about the Marsovan prisoners was of an encouraging sort.

Before the proceedings closed, Mr. Donald Matheson proposed the cordial thanks of the assembly to Dr. and Mrs. Angus for the kind hospitality oft repeated in giving their beautiful rooms for the annual conversazione of the Alliance. In a brief reply Dr. Angus said the advantage had been as much on the side of himself and the college as on that of the Alliance, and he had counted it a privilege to invite them.

The following late information as to M. Thoumaian, one of the Marsovan prisoners, will be read with pleasure:—

"Sir F. C. Ford, the British Ambassador at Constantinople, has written a reply to an inquiry from Mr. J. Galloway Weir, M.P., concerning the case of M. Thoumaian, lately referred to in the House of Commons, stating that this case was engaging his best attention, that M. Thoumaian's brother-in-law—a Genevan pastor named Hoffman—was now in Constantinople, and about to start for Angora with letters of introduction from the Ambassador at Constantinople to the British Vice-Consul at Angora. Sir Clare Ford adds that he has no doubt that M. Thoumaian will meet with full justice and a fair trial."

Metropolitan Tabernacle Colporteurs.

The Metropolitan Tabernacle Colporteurs celebrated their anniversary on Monday evening, Dr. James A. Spurgeon in the chair. In the report read by the secretary, Mr. W. Corden Jones, reference was made to the great loss sustained by the death of the president. When the veteran leader fell, it was feared by some that the enterprise would languish, but though faith may have sometimes wavered, "believing prayer and persevering effort were requited, and the committee gladly record the faithfulness of the covenant-keeping God, who has supplied the need as it arose." There are now eighty-seven men on the staff, and nearly all of the districts occupied at the beginning of the year are still retained. A subscription of £40 a year is needed on account of every district maintained. The spiritual work of the year is regarded as being satisfactory, the colporteurs acting as sick-visitors, evangelists, or preachers, as opportunities offer. Many more agents are needed to diffuse Evangelical light in the dark corners of the country; on account of those who seek to propagate sacerdotalism or Romish doctrines, the colporteur is frequently the only teacher of the Gospel in many villages, while numbers of earnest pastors find in the packman a valuable supplement to their labours.

During the afternoon a number of the men met together, under the presidency of Mr. S. R. Pearce, when many striking details of service were given. An address was subsequently given by Dr. J. A. Spurgeon, on "Discouragements in the work, and the secrets of success."

The public meeting in the Tabernacle in the evening was addressed by Dr. Spurgeon, a number of colporteurs, and Dr. Pierson.

Presbyterian Missions.

Judging from the fine attendance in Exeter Hall on Friday evening, the cause of missions lies near the heart of many Presbyterians in London. Comparatively they are a somewhat feeble folk in numbers; let us trust they make up for it in "wecht," to use an expressive Scotticism. They certainly seem to be moving with the times in the matter of vocal praise. A large choir from North London gave selections from Handel, etc., and it was a not inappropriate idea to open the formal proceedings with the Hallelujah Chorus, while the audience stood according to usage. A quite revolutionary item was the voting of thanks by the assembly to the choristers, before the meeting began. It must be said, however, that they thoroughly deserved them.

One of the most familiar figures in London Presbyterianism is Mr. H. M. Matheson, who filled the chair in his own dignified and earnest fashion. After a song of praise, and reverent petition by Dr. Dykes, Mr. Matheson made an introductory speech, taking occasion to make a very warm reference to the jubilee celebration of the Free Church of Scotland Disruption. It was in that time of revived spiritual interest that the China mission of the English Presbyterian Church was started, with the revered William Burns as the first worker.

Presbyterians are proverbially grand listeners, and they had need to be on Friday evening, for there were four speakers set down on the programme. Dr. Swanson was one of the expected speakers, but an attack of influenza kept him in bed, and at short notice Dr. Pentecost took his place.

The opening address was by Rev. W. J. Dawson, of Highbury, who, in rolling rhetoric, gave out his optimistic views as to the worth of missions to civilisation and commerce, as well as to Christian progress at home. The address was quite epigrammatic, but rather filled up with glittering generalities. Commerce follows the Cross. Missions have done more for the home churches than these churches have done for missions. Missions have advanced the federation of Christendom; we must not shatter without reconstructing. God has not given us a vast extension of empire simply that we may make calico for the world. The birthrate of the world is outstripping us, and unless we multiply our workers and our energy we shall never meet the need. The mighty Samson of events has unhinged every door that barred the way to foreign missions. Europe sends fifty missionaries annually to the West of Africa; but she also sends nine million gallons of spirit to that part of the world every year. Mr. Dawson wound up with a little story of missions on the East Coast of Africa, of a young missionary whose expiring words were, "Let a thousand die, but never give up Africa."

The portly figure of Dr. Pentecost next filled the vision; and he filled his twenty minutes by eloquently pressing home afresh the divine sanction that all Scripture reveals as to the claims of missionary effort on the churches of Christ. Ancient Jewish history afforded him abundant and effective illustrations of his absorbing argument. An important difference in the reading of the Great Commission according to the R.V., was very suggestive—"beginning from Jerusalem." The work of missions, said the Doctor, with vehement emphasis, is not incidental to the work of the Church; it is fundamental. Send all the pastors on this platform out to China, or India, or Africa, for a year, and they will come back not less devoted to their own respective Church systems, but a thousand times more devoted to the cause of missions. The Doctor was carried away by his theme, and as he perorated he evoked unusual enthusiasm from the phlegmatic, self-contained Anglo-Scots before him.

A member of the L.M.S., Rev. Arthur Bonsey, of Hankow, spoke happily of the harmony and unity that exist in that central city of China, between his own Society and the Wesleyans. Hitherto the speakers had treated the subject in the abstract, but Mr. Bonsey soon landed us in the concrete by a lively and sometimes witty description of the crowding in a Chinese street; of the indiscoverable intricacies of the Chinese character; of the fine field for preaching among these masses, so that 10,000 people may be reached in one city every week; of the way in which the work spreads to remote places as the result of the chapel meetings; of the grand work being done by the medical missions and hospitals, etc. This young missionary is not only enthusiastic in spirit, but able in statement, and we wish for him a lengthened, fruitful career. His closing words were, "The evangelisation of the world ought to be the passion of the Church of Christ."

Last of all came Rev. John Watson, of Liverpool, who seems to be rapidly taking the position of a leader in his denomination. He humorously dubbed himself, as representing Liverpool, the "commercial traveller" of the evening's platform. His theme might be called "the philosophy of missions;" it was really a protest, couched in choice and telling language, against imposing Western ideas of theology and of church government on Eastern peoples.

No report either of the year's work or of finance was given viva voce. The following summary was printed on one of the pages of the programme:—

Our Foreign and Jewish Work.

Mission Fields and Staff.—1. At Amoy (forty-nine stations, thirty-nine native agents), Rev. Dr. Swanson (employed in England), Messrs. McGregor, Sandeman, Thompson, Watson, and Dr. MacLish, with Misses McGregor and Johnson. At Chinchew, Drs. Grant and Paton, with Mr. Wales, Misses Graham, Duncan and Ramsay. At Changpoo, Dr. Howie, with Misses Maclagan and Lecky. 2. At Swatow (twenty-nine stations, thirty-one native agents), Rev. Messrs. Mackenzie, Gibson, Maclagan, Milne, Steele, and Dr. Lyall, with Mr. Paton, Misses Ricketts, Mann (employed in England) Black and Harkness. At Chao-chow-foo, Dr. Cousland. At Ng-kang-phw—Hakka Country—(twenty stations, eleven native agents), Rev. Messrs. MacIver, Riddell, and Mackenzie, Dr. McPhun, with Misses Falconer and Balmer. 3. In Formosa (thirty-six stations, thirty native agents), Rev. Messrs. Campbell, Barclay, Thow, and Ferguson, Drs. Anderson and Cairns, with Mr. Ede, Misses Butler, Stuart, and Barnet. 4. At Singapore (ten stations, three native agents), Rev. Messrs. Cook and Lamont, with Miss MacMahon. 5. In India, at Rampore Bauleah (two native agents), Dr. Morrison, with Misses Thomson and Sutherland. 6. In N.W. Africa, at Rabat (Jews), Dr. Kerr, with Miss Graham. 7. In London, at Whitechapel (Jews), Rev. Theodore Meyer and Mr. Poland.

Hospital Work.—Our ten hospitals now average over 3000 patients a year; thus, at least 25,000 seeking bodily healing hear of the Great Physician.

Special Feature.—The aim to raise up a Chinese Church in China, which shall be (a) Self-Governing—already the business of the three local presbyteries is conducted in Chinese, the native pastors and elders taking part; (b) Self-Supporting—already twelve pastors are entirely supported by their own flocks; and (c) Self-Propagating—already the Chinese Christians have in turn become missionaries to others. The Amoy Christians, in this respect, took the lead years ago; the Formosa Christians lately began work in the Pescadores; the Swatow Christians have just begun a new mission on the large Island of Namoa. The cost of these three last-mentioned "forward movements" is borne by the native Churches. Chinamen for China is our motto. Already our native Chinese agents outnumber the European staff by two to one.

Growth.—Compare 1876 with the present time. Sixteen years ago (abroad) we had only 1927 Communicants; now there are 3944. Then we had fourteen organised congregations, now forty-four. Then forty-nine native evangelists, now 110. Then fifteen European agents, now thirty-three. Then only two hospitals, now ten. Then no native press-work; now one station alone issues 139,600 pages a year. Then no lady missionaries were employed, now nineteen, exclusive of missionaries' wives. Then no native pastors entirely supported by their own congregations, now twelve.

Home Organisation.—This is still our weak point. The majority of our congregations still depend upon an uncertain annual collection for Foreign Missions. Those who have tried the Association Plan, with quarterly calls, report a greatly increased and a far steadier income. Why should not every well-organised church have (a) a General Association, (b) a Women's Missionary Association, and (c) a Juvenile Missionary Association in connection with its Sunday-school, and loyally supporting our own missions! Why should not all our congregations distribute to every family a (free) copy of our greatly improved Monthly Messenger, and defray the cost by an annual collection, or from the church funds?

THE TAUNTON VILLAGE EVANGELISTIC SOCIETY have received a report from their mission committee of the most satisfactory character. In several adjacent villages small churches have been formed as the result of evangelistic services held during the past winter. In one village twenty names of those decidedly "turned to God" have been taken, and weekly prayer meetings are in full swing. This society has of late received a new impetus.

SPITALFIELDS LODGING HOUSE BAND.—The annual meeting of members and friends of the above band (most of whom are engaged in business houses in the City, west, and north of London), took place recently at the Hebrew Conference Hall, Old Montague-street, E. Mr. J. Gilchrist, jun., hon. sec., epitomised the report, dwelling upon the spiritual nature of the work, and giving instances of blessing attending it. Rev. D. B. Hankin (vicar of St. Jude's, Mildmay) gave an inspiring address to workers. Mr. A. T. A. Millership (superintendent), and Mr. Williams, leader of the London City Mission choir, also spoke.

A QUESTION OF FINANCE.

"Will it pay? will it pay?"
Asks the statesman day by day:
Opium has an evil sound,
But, till new resource is found,
Opium gains are no disgrace,
And reform is out of place."

Does it pay? does it pay
Wrong to do if far away;
Vicious appetite to spread,
Poison substitute for bread;
And, by force and fraud allied,
Teach the heathen suicide?

Does it pay, does it pay,
As the thief or ruffian say,
Weakness to ensnare and spoil,
Wealth to gain, avoiding toil;
And content in pelf to find,
Casting honour to the wind?

Does it pay, does it pay
Indian youths and babes to slay;
Multitudes in vice to steep,
Criminals to make and keep;
Stalwart races to unman,
Working out the devil's plan?

Does it pay, does it pay?
From false figures take away
Cost and loss and waste and blight
Till the net is read aright;
Little gain will then be found
From the poison-cursèd ground.

Does it pay, does it pay,
To be hated in Cathay,
Where a quarter of the race
For our commerce would find place,
But for ire and penury
Wrought through a woeful century?

Will it pay, will it pay,
In the great revealing day,
When the murdered millions rise,
And, from out the rending skies,
He to whom all life belongs
Comes to right the nations' wrongs?

Ragged School Union.

Even in the stifling slums of poorest London the sunshine is bringing bright hints of the summer which is soon to dawn upon us. Last year the Union sent over 5,000 City bairns right away from courts and alleys, and smoke and noise, and for a fortnight they lived pure, joyous lives in the radiant country or by the breezy seashore. This is work that should be largely increased. There are thousands of little ones who need such a refreshing change. The Ragged School Union has Holiday Homes at Folkestone, Bognor, Ramsgate, West Brighton, East Grinstead, Godalming, etc.

In place of the old ragged school which for many years has done good service at Snow's Fields, a new building is being erected by a Christian lady who desires to remain unknown. The memorial stones were laid a few days ago by Mr. S. R. Pearce and other friends.

English Sailors at Bayonne.

During the past winter a friend and I have been holding services at Bayonne among the English sailors. There are frequently English ships in the port, and there is no institute for the men, nor any English service nearer than Biarritz, five miles off. During the twenty-one Sundays since we began our work, there have been twenty-five ships in port (besides others which came in and went out during the week), and we have held eleven services, with an average attendance of eight men. These services have been always held on board the steamers, through the permission of the captains, and I may mention that only on two occasions were we refused the use of the saloon.

Now that we have left the place a young lady has undertaken to distribute tracts on the ships, and through the kindness of friends we have been able to leave her a large number of these. Will your readers kindly remember this work in prayer?

E. M.

THAT BABE, lying in its little ark, floating down the dark stream of London life, like its early prototype, starts a grave question. What does it need? Refuges? No! but to be hidden away within a human love.—Mrs. G. S. Reaney.

THE R.T.S. BREAKFAST.

This annual gathering was held on Tuesday morning, when from two to three hundred friends interested in missionary work assembled in the Cannon-street Hotel.

Mr. Eugene Stock, who presided, opened with a brief reference to his recent tour, and to the deep debt of gratitude which missionaries everywhere are under to the Religious Tract Society. Rev. James Nicholson gave instances from over thirty years' experience in Ceylon, showing the value of good tracts.

Miss Ashburner told of work among Mongol women in China, mentioning, in a very happy way, that, while in her district there are societies labouring, they manage to present a united front, working together in the fullest harmony. In village and hospital work the literature issued by or aided by the R.T.S. is of the greatest service.

Rev. Frank E. Lawes told how Niúe (Capt. Cook's Savage Island) had been changed and transformed by the Gospel. Rev. T. Bailey spoke of service at Orissa, Rev. W. Hopkyn Rees of tract work in North China, and Rev. J. S. Treanor of the usefulness of the Society's literature in missions to seamen; while, finally, Rev. R. H. Walker gave some account of work in Uganda, where no tracts are yet known, but where the large Bible pictures issued by the Tract Society have proved of the utmost service in conveying to the natives some comprehension of certain unfamiliar words and terms used in the Scriptures, and based on habits and ideas entirely foreign to them. Many of these the eagerly-inquiring natives have found easy of comprehension when presented pictorially.

SOLDIERS' HOME, WOOLWICH.

A largely-attended drawing-room meeting was recently held in Onslow-gardens, S.W., in aid of this Home.

Prebendary Webb-Peploe presided. General Stirling, C.B., testified to the value and necessity of the Home for the spiritual welfare of the men, and Colonel St. Quintin spoke of its pecuniary needs.

Mrs. Digby Dent, for many years the hon. lady superintendent, has now been succeeded by Miss M. Shubrick, who is anxious to raise funds for improving the building and providing greater comforts for the soldiers. One or two baths are much needed, as well as sleeping accommodation for soldiers and their wives, for which constant application is made. A small house in the immediate neighbourhood could be rented for the purpose, but special help would be required for furnishing and fitting it up. This would then prove a source of considerable income.

The spiritual work has been very encouraging. It pleased the Lord to convert to Himself last year a number of soldiers at this Home. These are now for the most part scattered in different parts of India and elsewhere, where He is using them to the salvation of their comrades.

Should any feel led to help in this work, Miss Shubrick, Soldiers' Home, Hill-street, Woolwich, would be very grateful to receive communications.

DUBLIN VISITING MEDICAL MISSION.

The first annual meeting of this mission was recently held at the mission premises, 6, Chancery-place. The chair was taken by Rev. Samuel Prenter, whose church is close to the mission. He thanked God that the mission had opened in such a needy district. Mr. W. R. Wigham, one of the hon. secs., read the report, and expressed deep thankfulness to God for the marvellous way in which his power had been seen and felt each step of the way since the mission was first thought of.

Colonel Yates bore earnest personal testimony to the value of the work. Mr. Alex. Stewart, of Glasgow, also testified to the wonderful growth and progress of the mission. Dr. J. J. Long, mission doctor, gave many touching incidents from his daily experience. Mr. C. F. Hogg, from China, gave the concluding address.

Dr. H. T. Bewley, hon. treasurer, stated that £400 would be needed for the year's current expenses, making, with claims due, about £700 to be made up this year. Mrs. E. J. Figgis, jun., 6, Simmonds Court-villas, Donnybrook, Dublin, is one of the hon. secretaries.

THE "WELCOME" MISSION, PORTSMOUTH.—This branch of Miss Robinson's work, under the care of Mr. T. Hogben, has for a year and a-half had daily services with much blessing. The need of the work is felt to be great. A new hall was opened on Sunday week, when stirring meetings were held, and at least ten men professed faith in Christ.

Letters to the Editor.

"MISSIONARY METHODS."

Cheo-kia-keo, Province of Honan, China,
March 12.

MY DEAR SIR,—THE CHRISTIAN, of January 12, has just reached us, and I am writing to thank you for it, and to draw attention to an error that I think you will like to rectify.

We are always glad to see THE CHRISTIAN. Among the various papers that reach us by the much-looked-for mails from home, none are more welcome than yours. However busy we may be, we always find time to read that.

This number, however, contains an anonymous letter, or part of one—under the heading "Missionary Methods"—that seems to me (unintentionally) misleading, and not only misleading, dishonouring to God.

From the article in which it occurs, and the one in your previous issue of which it was the sequel, I gather that this letter refers to the China Inland Mission,* and I think many of your other readers, at home and abroad, will come to the same conclusion.

As the question raised is one of principle, and not of merely passing interest, I venture to call your attention again to the subject.

The principle involved is a wide one—that it is reasonable and right to trust God for supplies, when sent to a heathen land by Him, about his business.

And this must be applied, of course, with common sense. But this letter proves, so it seems, that when so applied it does not hold good. A very serious charge to bring! And one that ought, surely, to be supported by very convincing facts.

It had seemed to me, that the way God honoured the wholesale application of that principle for many years in this Mission and other similar organisations was one of the strongest proofs that could be found in modern times that "the Lord is King": that if we seek first his "Kingdom and his righteousness," the "all these things" will, as a matter of fact, be added to us now, as much as 1860 years ago. And surely it is so!

But your correspondent—who writes very kindly—says that these things are not so, in our experience, and implies that he has been "the round of the stations." Could a more serious statement be made against the organisation of the work?

I think, however, his facts will not bear close investigation. Surely he cannot mean quite as much as he says, when he speaks of "going the round of the stations." It would be a small thing by comparison to visit the capitals of Europe. If he refers to the C.I.M. (which I take, in what follows, for granted),* he could not do that in a year! And to do it in two, in flying visits, would be an arduous task for an experienced Chinese traveller, if not impossible.

But that is a small point. I should not refer to it but for the sweeping force it gives to the next statement: "Nearly all the missionaries whom I have met have told me how sometimes—yea, often—they have not known where the next meal was to come from—many and many has been the time that they have been obliged to live upon a few shillings a week."

Now, if such is the case, the sooner the constitution of the C.I.M. is remodelled the better. But in the interest of common fairness—to say nothing of the honour of God—is it?

True, I have heard of such things happening to members of our Mission. I know they have occurred. And I honour those men, and those ladies, who, for Christ's sake, have faced such trials, and have trusted God through them, for the same reason that I honour Elijah, who, through obeying God, had to depend on ravens for bread and meat, and afterwards on a poor lonely widow for bread alone.

But in Israel men like Elijah, whom God saw fit to trust with such trials, were rare. And in the last twenty-eight years, I think, the members of this Mission, who have had their faith so tried, might be numbered up, at the outside, on the fingers of one's hands! (I have only heard of four or five such cases, many years ago.)

Be that as it may, I can speak more definitely of the last three years, since I reached this country. During that time I have travelled a good deal, on mission business, never staying more than three or four months at a stretch at any one station, usually less; and have thus visited about one-sixth of our stations in one quarter of China. But, besides this, I have been in communication, directly or indirectly, with many other members (more than half—between two and three hundred—of whom are known to me personally) in every part of the country. But during these three years I have not known or heard of one instance occurring such as this letter describes.

So that, notwithstanding that these three years, taken as a whole, have been the time of greatest financial difficulty we have ever known since the work began—owing mainly to impressions that have got abroad similar to, and just as inaccurate as, the natural conclusion one would draw from this letter, written by one who is very evidently a well-wisher and a sincere friend of the Mission!—this difficulty, great though it has been at times, has been felt far more by the heads of the Mission at Shanghai and at home than by us the members.

In my own case, though remittances have occasionally needed to be a little low, all these three years I have had more—with one exception—than I needed for my current expenses. Extension only has been checked a little. (Was it that God saw the need for consolidation?) All my travelling expenses have been paid for me. My share of rent and taxes has been covered. More than sufficient funds have been sent for my medical work in the past: shall I doubt as to the future?

And over and above, the Lord has sent me, month by month unfailing, enough and to spare for my personal needs. These, up here in Honan, are not very serious items! "A few shillings a week" would amply cover them. It is not these things, as a rule, that constitute the self-denial and cross of missionary life. They go deeper.

Here in the interior I can live well and in comfort on native food (which means bread, rice, maccaroni, meat or fish twice a day, eggs in profusion, and as great a variety of vegetables and of fruit in season as one cares to take). In addition, I can have such few foreign stores as I care for, such as butter and milk; and board my cook and pay his wages easily all out of a guinea a month—less than half the lowest monthly remittance I have ever received. And when two single brethren or sisters board together, as we usually do, it costs much less, of course.

Good clothing is very cheap. And the salary of a native teacher (who is indispensable for the first five years, and useful afterwards) is seldom more than 17s. a month, at the present price of silver, not a very serious item when shared by two!

To sum up in a sentence, by God's good care of us, we are very well provided for. I, for one, live well, dress well, work hard, and take the best care I know how to of my health. And, thank God, I am in first-rate condition. And while the Lord reigneth on high, and his faithful servants below love his work, I have no fear of ever lacking ANY GOOD THING.

Forgive me that I have gone thus into detail. I have done so because I believe it is a sine quâ non, if the world is to be evangelised in this generation, that individual faith should test and prove the faithfulness of God, and grow strong thereby for spiritual uses, and that God's money should be made, by his stewards, to go as far as it can, consistently with the welfare of his work and his workers.

Thanking you for all the sympathy you have shown for many years in our work for the Lord, and our unknown friend for the evident kindliness of his intentions, believe me, yours very sincerely,

F. HOWARD TAYLOR, M.D., M.R.C.P.
(Son of J. Hudson Taylor.)

A QUESTION FOR CHRISTIANS.

SIR,—Your correspondent, "Anti-Narcotic," has raised a very vital question; one that is continually exercising the minds and hearts of young Christians. Shall they conform to the national habit of smoking or not? Devotees of the pipe question the fact that the use of tobacco is injurious. I know they usually safeguard their statements by the qualifying words, "in moderation." I prefer accepting the dictum of eminent medical and scientific men, that tobacco is a poisonous plant, and that the regular use of it is injurious in whatever quantity it may be taken, than the opinion of men addicted to the use of it. As a man I take this stand; as a Christian, endeavouring to lead a pure and useful life, I eschew tobacco. Further, I cannot afford it; smoking is a costly habit, and the Christian Church, the temperance cause, and humanity want all I can give. Smoking panders to an unnatural appetite, and robs God and man. The amount spent on tobacco, pipes, etc. (all for the production of a poisonous vapour), is nearer £25,000,000 than £16,000,000.

What a boon even the odd £5,000,000 would be to missionary societies, home and foreign, and what a grand extension of Christ's Kingdom such a sum would help to effect.

If I understand the teaching of Christ aright, it is that his followers should remove all things that will hinder their physical and spiritual development, or that of their fellows. Possibly I am wrong in my theory, and smoking ministers are right in their practice! If anyone as a Christian is at liberty to defile his breath, make foul his body, and poison the atmosphere around him by tobacco-smoking, is he not also at liberty to do other impure actions? I hold that no Christian is at liberty to do either one or the other, in however small a degree. See Romans xiv. 21. Yours, etc., J. F.

PENTECOSTAL LEAGUE.

DEAR SIR,—In your recent report of our annual meeting you liken us to the Salvation Army. You say that we are "virtually starting a new sect," instead of enrolling ourselves under the banner of General Booth, which you seem to think we ought to have done.

Let me say that the Pentecostal League is not, and, I trust, never will become a sect. We think there are more than enough sects already. Our principles, objects, and methods are not such as would tend to the promotion of a sect. We seek, not to reduce the membership roll of the churches, but to increase the efficiency of their members and greatly add to their numbers. We seek to teach those already in the churches to be over-comers rather than out-comers, and those outside the churches to be in-comers and then over-comers. Instead of being antagonistic to the work of the churches, we seek to combine forces with those already in the field, for the better and more speedy accomplishment of the larger purposes of God in the redemption and evangelisation of the world. The Pentecostal League is a fraternal bond of true Christian fellowship between those who love the Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity and truth and believe that he is able "to save them to the uttermost who come unto God by Him."

We believe that before any great revival takes place, the Church must retrace her steps to Pentecost, to the Pentecostal faith and obedience, to the Pentecostal experience of the Baptism of the Holy Ghost, and then will follow the Pentecostal and abundant service. We believe that every believer ought to be a soul-winner, and we are satisfied that a fire-baptized ministry and a fire-spreading people could win thousands upon thousands for God. We are not only convinced of this in theory, but we are daily witnessing the wonderful way in which God is owning among the churches of different denominations the proclamation of the Lord Jesus Christ as an uttermost Saviour.

Fraternally yours in his service,

READER HARRIS.

PRAYER FOR RAIN.

DEAR SIR,—May I suggest that it would be well to call attention through your columns to the long-continued drought, and the urgent need there is for Christians to pray that it may speedily come to an end?

A Christian farmer with whom I have stayed several times while conducting missions in his district writes:—"We had a prayer meeting in the market (Aylesbury) last Saturday for rain. It is getting very serious. All our crops are drying up, and there seems nothing for the cattle. Pray for us."

—Yours truly, W. MONRO COLLINGS.

LITERATURE FOR INDIA.

SIR,—As a help and part answer to the missionary appeal for H. L. Hastings's anti-infidel 32-page penny pamphlet expressed in "Reading for India," in THE CHRISTIAN, May 11, permit me to offer, through the generous kindness of a friend, an additional gift of half cost for three months on all purchases from the London publishers above 250 copies. Parcels can now be sent to India 4d. per lb. book post. If purchasers desire, we can circulate by own friends. Already over 100,000 of Mr. Hastings' valuable pamphlets have been distributed throughout India with glorious results.

Praying that God may raise up friends to help our missionaries with literature,

I am, yours truly,

JOHN H. MITCHELL.

A REST FOR WEARY WORKERS.

DEAR SIR,—I wonder whether Christian workers who need rest, or wealthy Christians who are anxious to send tired Christians away for rest, know of the charming home at West End, near Southampton. The home is founded for the purpose of benefiting those of limited means. The terms are:—Women, 7s., 8s.; men, 9s., 10s. per week. In every way the accommodation is equal to any ordinary home at a guinea per week. The very large deficiency needed to cover the expenses is gladly provided as a gift to the Lord by the devoted Christian lady who built the home.

Anything more charming for situation, climate, etc., it would be hard to find. It is situated on one of the highest points of South Hants, and is beautifully sheltered on all sides by glorious pine woods. The soil is gravel, and the place is easy of access. I have several times stayed there, and long for others to know the delights of the charming home. I fear to trespass too far upon your valuable space, but feel that at this season of the year there must be very many tired ones who would like to know of the pecuniary advantages of this place.

As a winter home of rest, for warmth and shelter I have never met its equal. Sixteen months ago I left Bournemouth for this place, and found the change highly beneficial. I write unknown to the Christian lady who has built and who largely supports the place.

All particulars may be obtained of the Lady Superintendent, Fir Cottage, West End, near Southampton.

Yours in Christ. SYDNEY WATSON.

ST. GILES'S CHRISTIAN MISSION.

Dear Sir,—It is with much concern I notice in your valuable paper the sad condition of the funds of the St. Giles's Christian Mission. I have much pleasure in enclosing a cheque, which I will thank you to forward to Mr. Wheatley. I hope many of my brother magistrates may be induced to do the same. All those who have had any experience in sitting on the bench in the Home Counties will be aware of the excellent service done by this Christian Mission, and of the valuable labours of Mr. Wheatley.

I enclose my card, and, hoping the £1500 asked for will soon be raised, remain, dear Sir,

Faithfully yours,

J.P. for the Counties of Middlesex and London.

THE P.S.A. MOVEMENT.

At the Independent Methodist Church, Ince, services have been inaugurated.

P.S.A. services have been commenced under good auspices at Market Deeping Congregational Chapel.

The Nonconformists of Henley have been holding united Sunday afternoon services, which have awakened great interest.

At Great George-street, Liverpool, the class has entered on a new session. Rev. J. K. Nuttall read on Sunday week a number of letters from working men and others who testified to good received from the service.

The P.S.A. gatherings at the United Methodist Chapel, Forest Gate, have been suspended for the summer, and an adult Bible class has been commenced instead. It is stated that as the result of these services nineteen have lately been received into the Church fellowship.

The following resolution passed by a conference of P.S.A. delegates, representing 4,500 members, in the Stockport and surrounding districts, should be regard as an important expression of what is fact as to the essential principle and purpose of P.S.A. Societies:—"In view of the statements made as to P.S.A. Societies that they are only Sunday afternoon entertainments for working men, this conference declares its strong conviction that they should rest upon a purely Gospel foundation, and that their sole aims and objects should be to bring men under the influence and power of the Gospel of Jesus Christ."

THE Y.W.C.A.

A new branch has been formed at Coventry.

At the Ramsgate Institute the number of boarders has increased during the year from 170 to 197, and since the opening of the Institute in 1890, 470 boarders have been received.

On Wednesday and Thursday, May 3 and 4, in connection with the Parsonstown branch of the Y.W.C.A., special evangelistic services were held in the Friends' Meeting House. Miss Wilson, of the Society's Institute, Harcourt-street, Dublin, conducted the meetings and gave earnest Gospel addresses.

The fourth biennial convention of the Y.W.C.A. of the United States and British Provinces met at Toledo, Ohio, April 27-30. This International Association includes 300 city and college Young Women's Christian Associations in thirty-seven states and provinces. About 300 delegates attended the convention.

JESUITISM.—Count Paul de Hœnsbrœch, a member of the "Society of Jesus" at Berlin, has just come out of the fraternity. In a manifesto he sets forth his reasons, specifying, among others, that "Jesuitism suppresses, and to a certain degreeannihilates, personal independence and individuality; moreover, it suppresses, and to a certain degree annihilates, legitimate national sentiment and patriotism."

UNION TABERNACLE, WANDSWORTH-ROAD.—The seventh anniversary meetings were recently held. Sermons were preached on May 7 by Rev. D. M. Cameron and Mr. Stephen Burrowes, from Naples. On Monday, May 8, conferences were held at 4 and 7 p.m., Dr. Dunbar presiding at four o'clock, and Mr. J. E. Mathieson at seven o'clock. Among those who took part in the proceedings were Revs. W. Fuller Gooch, P. A. Milne, E. Henderson, J. W. Rodgers, J. C. Pye, and Mr. Halk, Messrs. Stephen Burrowes, H. C. Crawley, C. Russell Hurditch, J. Brumming, and George Hefford. All who spoke expressed sympathy with the esteemed pastor and his earnest flock in the successful work they have maintained during the past seven years in the populous districts of Clapham and Battersea.

THE Y.M.C.A.

An Association has just been formed at Abertillery, Monmouthshire.

Dr. D. W. Torrance, of the Sea of Galilee Medical Mission, has become Y.M.C.A. correspondent for Tiberias.

The newly-formed Association at Alexandria has already enrolled forty-three members and twenty-four associates.

The Y.M.C.A. in Vancouver, B.C., is about to enter upon a new building which has been specially designed and built for the work.

The Cupar Fife Association has arranged for a series of evangelistic tent meetings to be held in June. These will extend over three weeks.

The Nanaimo Association includes the two flights of stairs leading to their rooms in their physical department, and pronounces them to be good for lung exercise.

During the tempting weather of last month the Young Men's Sunday Afternoon Bible Class of the Ipswich Y.M.C.A. showed the gratifying average attendance of fifty each Sunday.

The "Young Men's Own" meeting, held weekly at Steine House, Brighton, for prayer, Bible study, and conference, has been doing good work, and evidently supplies a felt need among young workers.

The College Association at Beyrout has ceased to exist, but there is a town Association there, which has been in existence for twenty-two years, and which claims affiliation with the home organisation.

Speaking at the recent annual meeting of the Clapham Association, Rev. Gelson Gregson gave a vigorous and rousing address on the unreached masses, and how the Y.M.C.A. gets hold of them.

Major Seton Churchill presided the other day at the first half-yearly distribution of prizes in connection with the P.S.A. attached to the Birmingham Association. Eight hundred books were given away.

Twenty-six young men have enrolled themselves as members of a newly-formed Association at Damascus. Rev. Dr. Crawford, the president, writes to the National Council's missionary secretary: "We are all very much encouraged, and look for a big blessing on this Y.M.C.A."

The Finsbury Park Y.M.C.A. Rambling Club commenced its season by a visit to the head-quarters of the Metropolitan Fire Brigade. During the summer open-air work is carried on by this Association every Sunday evening at St. Thomas's-road. Some of the members also assist in the park services.

A suggestion has been made in view of the Jubile Conference, to be held in London, June, 1894, that the Conference papers should be printed and circulated among the delegates prior to the meetings, at which they would be "taken as read," and thus more time be secured for the discussion of the various subjects.

The report of the Brighton Association contains many encouraging features. The Sunday afternoon and week-night Bible studies have gone on weekly, and the various evangelistic and open-air services have been much blessed, while the recreative portions of the work is flourishing and advancing. The members are full of hope, and looking forward to great things.

The Dublin Association has started for the season its open-air services in Phœnix Park. A worker writes:—We had sixty-two helpers out at a meeting last night in the park. Large numbers assembled to listen to the old old story. What a change from the past! No excitement and no noise; God was with us in power. Will our English friends remember us in prayer?

Mr. E. J. Palmer, secretary of the North Metropolitan District Union, has been, through pressure of other business, compelled to resign, much to the regret of his colleagues in the work. Mr. Eustace C. Brown, of the Camden Town Association, has been appointed secretary pro tem. In this district, as indeed all over London, the need for a metropolitan travelling secretary is increasingly felt.

The fourth annual Convention of Y.M.C.A.s in British Columbia was held at Vancouver in April. Delegates were present, and presented reports from Nanaimo, Victoria, New Westminster, and Vancouver. Two features are apparent in all the reports. Firstly, the determination to keep the spiritual work well to the front; and secondly, the readiness to use all lawful agencies as auxiliary methods of reaching young men.

On Sunday week a new central Y.M.C.A. building was opened in Paris. The structure comprises five floors, including an underground one, all fitted up with the most modern requirements. There is a handsome hall seating 600, a gymnasium, a running track, a bowling alley, swimming, warm, and shower baths, a dining room, class rooms, a music saloon, and several furnished rooms for young men. The opening meetings were attended by many influential friends of young men, both French and English.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

"Licences are blinkers on the eyes of the public." The Union Signal says:—For missions, £2,000,000; for saloons, £240,000,000.

The food of 3,000,000 people is said to be annually destroyed in Great Britain in the production of drink.

Jennie Smith's meetings at Springfield, Mo., last month were so crowded that standing-room was not available.

Mrs. Eliza Whitmore Roberts, active in every good work, and a member of the Illinois W.C.T.U., lately passed away in Chicago Lawn, Ill.

The Bolton Police-court Mission is being attended with successful results, and Mr. B. Burton, the missionary, has found plenty of scope for his work.

Twenty superintendents of Inebriate Asylums in America declare that the drink habit is acquired under conditions of comfort, and that destitution follows as a consequence.

Twelve thousand barrels of whisky exploded and burned during a recent fire at Louisville, Ky., the fumes being so intense that many persons were intoxicated by breathing them.

"Whisky is your greatest enemy," said a pastor to an intemperate man. "Well, doesn't the Bible tell us to love our enemies?" "Yes," said the pastor gravely, "but it doesn't tell us to swallow them."

Mrs. Ripley ("M. A. Paull") has been elected to the Board of Guardians for Plymouth, an office she has accepted, in the hope that she may be able to do something to lessen the large workhouse drink bill.

A certain saloon-keeper was boasting that he had made one thousand dollars in three months. A listener assured him he had made more than that, for he had made drunkards out of his two sons and a broken-hearted mother in the bargain.

"The temperance movement," says the Glasgow Herald, "is spreading rapidly among railroad men. Already 10,000 white buttons, stamped with initials signifying the Railroad Temperance Association, have been distributed among engineers and trainmen."

A notice has been issued by the Lancashire police authorities to the licence-holders in small towns and villages around the great manufacturing centres of the county, warning them of the risk they run by serving persons who, though they are beyond the three-miles limit, are not bonâ fide travellers.

The report of the Dalrymple Home at Rickmansworth records an increased number of admissions during the past twelve months, there having been forty-four admissions during that period. In the nine years of this institution's operations 320 patients have been received, and a record is presented of the 305 who have been discharged.

On Saturday last, a conference of Temperance workers at Bedford formed themselves into a "North Beds Temperance Union," the objects of which are: (1) To bring together for mutual fellowship and counsel members from all parts of the constituency. (2) To secure legislation for the better control of the liquor traffic. (3) To enforce existing and future licensing laws. (4) Generally to promote Temperance work by other means in harmony therewith.

The French Minister of Finance has just issued his official report of the totals received for duty on drink for the year 1892. The duties upon drink in France produced last year the enormous sum of 470,053,325 francs. Of this sum alcohol figures for 288,316,023 francs, wine for 142,463,806 francs, beer for 23,961,754 francs, cider for 12,866,370 francs. In comparison with the year 1891, wine has yielded an increase of revenue of 5,000,000 francs.—Leeds Mercury.

The New York Medical Times gives the following intemperance statistics:—In Great Britain and Ireland 145,000 persons are every year committed to prison as drunkards; 112,000 of these are men, the rest women. Three thousand and four women were murdered in the United Kingdom from January 1, 1889, to January 1, 1891, by drunken husbands. There are 30,000 criminals in German prisons, 14,000 of whom were arrested for crimes committed while intoxicated.

The committee organising the Hyde Park Demonstration in favour of the Local Veto Bill, to be held on June 10, writes:—"We are exceedingly anxious to adopt every legitimate means to give the fullest possible expression to the widespread sympathy that exists towards the Government measure, and to organise an unexampled demonstration of political enthusiasm in its support. From previous experience of the work, we estimate that about £600 will be required to cover the necessary expenses of committee rooms, clerical work, printing, advertising, the circulation of literature, platforms, etc." The treasurer is Mr. F. N. Charrington, and the offices are at 98, Fleet-street, E.C.

UNIVERSITY NOTES.

OXFORD.

Rev. C. R. Tyrwhitt has resigned the curacy of Cowley St. John in order to join the Universities' Mission to Central Africa.

Rev. F. W. C. Rigby, of Mildmay, is always welcome at St. Clement's, Oxford, where he recently preached for the Oxford House of Refuge.

Rev. H. Arnold Thomas, of Bristol, preached at Mansfield last Sunday, as one of the pastors who come there as "chaplains" for parts of the term.

A munificent gift of £15,000 is announced as having been received by Mr. Albert Spicer from a gentleman for the endowment of a chair of Pastoral Theology at Mansfield College.

Rev. C. Gore has resigned the principalship of Pusey House, and has accepted the living of Radley, near Oxford. Rumour is busy with the name of his successor at Pusey House, but nothing reliable is known at present.

The annual sermons were preached on Sunday last in aid of The London Jews Society, and on Monday the annual meeting was held. Rev. A. Lukyn Williams, of Palestine-place, and Rev. C. S. Paynter attended as a deputation, and gave most interesting accounts of the work.

CAMBRIDGE.

On Sunday, May 7, sermons were preached in most of the churches in Cambridge in aid of the Church Missionary Society, and on Monday afternoon, the 8th of May, the annual meeting was held in the Guildhall, under the presidency of the Ven. Archdeacon of Ely. There was a good attendance. Rev. J. Barton (hon. sec.) presented a most encouraging report. Out of sixteen graduates accepted for foreign service last year by the society, ten were from Cambridge. The student volunteer movement now numbers over ninety members in Cambridge alone, each of whom has thus indicated his willingness to go out to the mission-field whenever and wherever God may send him.

On Monday evening, May 8, Dr. Fairbairn lectured in the small room of the Guildhall on "Religion and Ethics, as a question of comparative theology."

The University sermon was preached on Sunday, May 14, by Rev. C. Gore, Principal of Pusey House, Oxford. His scholarly sermon was concluded by an able appeal for men not only of culture, but more particularly of sanctity, devoutness, and consecration of life, to fill the ranks of the ministry of the Church. Great St. Mary's Church was crowded with an interested congregation.

IRISH NOTES.

A fortnight's Gospel services have been held in Armagh by Rev. W. Maguire, Mr. Ernest Jones, and others.

A largely-attended meeting has been held in the Centenary Church, Dublin, to inaugurate the Central Methodist Mission.

The Methodist Church in Ireland shows a net increase of 352 members for the present year, as compared with the previous one. Several new churches are to be built, and there are eight candidates for the ministry.

Havelock-place Mission, Belfast, has completed the most successful winter's work which it has experienced since its commencement nearly six years ago. Some of the most degraded men and women have been reclaimed, husbands and wives have been re-united, and many have been won for Jesus.

The Dublin Free Breakfasts, which were commenced twelve years ago by Mr. J. S. Smithson, were continued during the past year with encouraging success. In that time 26,000 free breakfasts were given, and 31,322 penny dinners, while many for the first time in their lives heard the story of redeeming love.

A Mother's Prayers.

Amongst four who confessed Christ at a recent Sunday evening service, held at the Seamen's Bethel, Falmouth, was a young sailor, a Norwegian. His mother, a bright Christian, had prayed for several years for his conversion. He ran away from home, sailed round the world, and went deeply into sin. On Sunday evening, May 7, he attended the Bethel service. At the close he got to his knees, and thanked God for bringing him there. Three days afterwards he left for home, saying, "She has been praying for me for years. I go home to tell her I 'm Christ's; she will be glad." J. C. B.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

Jubilee meetings of the Free Church have been held in Inverness, Aberdeen, Dundee, and other towns.

Mr. W. M. Oatts, of the Y.M.C.A., Glasgow, who with Mrs. Oatts, has been paying a visit to Palestine, has returned to his post.

Many complaints are made at the way in which the licensing appeal courts upset the decisions of the magistrates, in regranting licences.

At the annual meeting of the Glasgow Society for the Suppression of the Opium Traffic, a strong resolution calling for Government restriction in India, was passed.

The meetings of the U.P. Synod have been marked by much lively interest. The subjects of foreign missions and of morals at home and abroad received special attention, and no uncertain notes were struck.

Miss Ida B. Wells, a coloured lady from America, has lately lectured in Glasgow on the wrongs her race endure from the whites in the Southern States. Miss Wells speaks very forcibly, gaining the sympathy of her audience, as she tells of the savage brutality the negro is the victim of, for he is now in almost a worse state than when in slavery. The cases of lynch law being applied to negroes for unproved crimes are growing very numerous, and the barbarity and cruelty exhibited towards the negro is a disgrace to Christian America. Miss Wells is seeking to arouse Christian sympathy for her race in this country. She has surely a reasonable demand when she asks that the negro may have the right of being judged and punished by law, and not by a lawless mob.

NEW HEBRIDES NOTES.

Details have been received of a terrible hurricane which swept over the New Hebrides in the middle of March. The storm is declared to have been of unparalleled fury. At Ambrim, the mission-station, the whole of the traders' houses and the native villages were completely wrecked, whilst the maize crops and coffee plantations were utterly ruined. The missionaries are urgently appealing for food for the starving people. The violence of the wind may be judged from the fact that it actually stripped the copper sheathing off a vessel which was driven ashore. Two other vessels were capsised, and every soul on board of them perished, excepting a native, who was picked up after he had been fourteen hours in the water.

Rev. T. Smaill, of Epi, writing to his friend, Rev. Oscar Michelsen, of Tongoa, now in Europe, says: "I am glad to see that you have got promises of help for the native teachers, for my district will require a good number. I have just got an additional three, for whom I have been begging for a long while. As to the unpaid salaries, they are still standing over. On Tongoa they can make copra and supply themselves; and on Tasiko they are getting credit for me for whatever things they need."

Dr. William Gunn, of Futuna, describing a trip round the islands, says: "When we were at Ambrim, Dr. Lamb had some natives undergoing training as teachers, and the work was promising. The labour trade is going on full swing in the islands, with abuses just as common as before." Rev. W. Gray, of Weasisi, Tanna, writes: "Here things are not prosperous; the old war chariot has been out, but peace has been since proclaimed."

In a letter to The Presbyterian Record (Montreal), Rev. H. A. Robertson, of Erromanga, says: "During the past year fifty persons have publicly renounced all heathenism and joined the Christian party. I have dispensed to, or put up medicine for, 1200 people. The usual early morning schools, five days a week, have been kept up, also the Wednesday prayer-meetings. There are every Sunday two services for the reading and preaching of the Word, and a Sabbath school in every district. During the year 2000 lb. of the finest arrowroot has been sent to Glasgow for sale, the proceeds to go towards printing and binding the Gospels and Acts of the Apostles. They have also given £10 in cash for the support of two teachers. Besides this, a large amount of free labour was given—keeping the schools in repair, and other work in connection with this large mission field."

THE PROTESTANT BIBLE SOCIETY OF PARIS distributed during last year 1840 Bibles and 4749 New Testaments. Three editions of the versions by Legond and Oltramare, justly held in high esteem in France and Switzerland, have now been published. Like other institutions, the Society has sent to the Chicago Exhibition copies of its reports, and a sketch of its history, also the catalogue of its library, which is probably unique in the world in its specialty, for it contains 890 French editions of the Bible and New Testament.

BETHEL SANTHAL MISSION.

Sir,—We have come in from itinerating; 220 villages were visited and preached in. On the whole the people were attentive to the Gospel message. In many places the villages were so hid away in the jungle that we found a difficulty to strike the right track leading to them; and on entering the villagers would en masse disappear into the jungle. The sight of a white man in these secluded districts is a wonderful surprise. In one village all the women came out, and bowed before me on their hands and knees. Ignorance and superstition have a great hold upon these benighted people. May God bless the message of salvation to them!

We camped at a hot spring "Mela," one of the largest Santhal gatherings in the Santhal "pergunnahs." For six days thousands of people flocked together—drinking and dancing crowds very prominent. From morn till sunset our band of Christian preachers and school lads were busy singing, preaching, and distributing Scriptures. We found a large picture of "Moses and the brazen serpent" hung in a conspicuous place, a good means to attract the people; hundreds came around, and ofttimes did we hear the cry, "bujouocolem" (make us understand). I think fully 25,000 people listened to the Gospel message.

A hundred and twenty people were baptized during the past fifteen months. Many more seem desirous to serve Christ, but the fear of persecution holds them back. We have now commenced building our fifth mission station. It will be a heavy expense, but our trust is in Jehovah. It is situated in the midst of heathendom, in a very dark and needy district. Two years ago, while itinerating there with Mr. Hearn, we were several times in danger of being beaten. Once I was surrounded by a dozen women brandishing clubs and sticks; at another time a company of men awaited us with sticks; and a lady missionary was grossly insulted in the same place.

Yours in Christ,
A. Hinder.

Bethel Santhal Mission, India.

THE ASHLEY DOWN ORPHAN HOUSES, BRISTOL.

As we have now a great number of vacancies for girls in our five large Orphan Houses, erected to receive 2050 boys and girls who have lost both parents by death, I earnestly request Christian friends kindly to assist me in filling up these vacancies by seeking out suitable cases for admission into our Institution; by letting the relatives or friends of orphan girls know that they can be received at the Ashley Down Orphan Houses; and by advising them to write to me for their admission.

We receive both boys and girls, bereaved of both parents by death, from their earliest days, keep the boys until they are between fourteen and fifteen years of age, when they are apprenticed, and the girls till they are about seventeen years old, when they are provided with suitable situations. Up to the time that our orphans leave the institution they have a most comfortable and happy home, they are boarded, lodged, clothed, and educated entirely free of all expense to their relatives, and, when leaving, each orphan is provided with an outfit.

When I began the orphan work, fifty-seven years ago, there was accommodation in this country for 3600 orphans only; but since that time, through the blessing of God, which has rested so abundantly upon my labours, such an impetus has been given to orphan work, that institutions have sprung up in various parts of Great Britain, by means of which more than 100,000 orphans can now be provided for; and for this reason it is that we have so many vacancies at the present time, and find it so difficult to fill them up.

I repeat, therefore, that I shall consider it an especial kindness if Christian friends will take the trouble to seek out destitute orphans, and advise the relatives of such to apply to me for their admission, as we have good and abundant accommodation for them and a large number of efficient helpers.

George Muller.

New Orphan House, No. 3, Ashley Down, Bristol.

COLWYN BAY CONGO INSTITUTE.—On Tuesday, May 9, the annual meeting was held, addresses were given by two coloured brothers, Rev. T. Johnson and Dr. Scholes. Four new boys have been received at the Institute, and others are writing most pathetic letters asking for admission, which will be granted as funds allow. It is hoped the number of students will be raised from nine to fifty in time. Cheering accounts are received from the students who have returned, and the missionaries find them a great help. D. D.

Personalia.

Rev. C. Spurgeon's future address will be "Haddon," Dartmouth-row, Blackheath, S.E.

The Bishop of Liverpool entered on Wednesday week his seventy-eighth year, having been born at Park House, Macclesfield, on May 10, 1816.

Mr. J. Cullen Reed, son of Rev. Andrew Reed, and grandson of Dr. Andrew Reed, has been accepted by the London Missionary Society for service in the mission field.

Dr. John G. Paton has (says The Manchester Guardian) given £5000 from the profits arising from the sale of his autobiography to the mission in the New Hebrides.

Mr. J. Start, who has for some nine years done good work at Speedhurst, Tunbridge Wells, has now removed to Salisbury, where his address is 1, Penrose Villa, London-road.

Mrs. Edith O'Gorman was to lecture in Hammersmith last Thursday, May 11, but a party of Romanists, headed by a Romish priest, came to the hall, and, by their violent conduct, caused the chairman to close the meeting from fear of personal violence to Mrs. E. O'Gorman.

Messrs. Smith and Bell paid a return visit to Derry last week, and had large fruitful meetings. The evangelists left for America by the s.s. Vancouver on Saturday last. Mr. Merton Smith's address on the other side will be 64, Beethoven-place, Chicago, Ill., U.S.A.

Gipsy Smith has reached his home in Manchester after nine months' evangelistic work in America, where he held about 300 meetings, saw hundreds confess Christ, and travelled about 12,000 miles by land and water. His address is 78, Brunswick-street, Manchester.

Dr. H. S. Lunn, in view of his strong conviction as to the action of the Bombay Missionary Conference in connection with the moral evils, and with a view to obviate further controversy, has felt compelled to tender to the president his resignation as a Wesleyan minister.

Rev. F. E. Clark, D.D., president of the Society of Christian Endeavour, will shortly reach England. It is proposed to hold a welcome meeting on Monday, June 5, at 7.30 p.m., in the City Temple, when doubtless many friends will rally to greet one who has been the means of starting a movement which has proved a blessing in many lands.

Mrs. Bramwell Booth is sketched by a friendly pen in The Young Woman for June, of which we have received an early copy. We note that it was through our columns that Miss Soper, as she then was, got her first introduction to the Army, and was also led to associate herself with its work. The account given of her rescue work is intensely interesting.

Pastor Thomas Spurgeon telegraphs from New Zealand that he intends sailing on May 20 by the San Francisco mail steamer for that port. He proposes to stay in Chicago for a little while, and will probably take part in Mr. Moody's evangelistic services before resuming his return journey to England to occupy the pulpit of the Metropolitan Tabernacle.

The late Principal Gracey was long pastor at New Southgate, where it has now become imperative to build a new chapel. It is proposed that a fund of £4000 should be raised for this purpose, and that when put up it should be called the Gracey Memorial Church. Communications should be made to the secretary, Mrs. M. Buchanan, Clydesdale, Palmer's Green-road, New Southgate.

A Greek Christian, residing in Turkey, has sent to the treasury of the American Board of Missions a draft for £264. "This man," says The Christian at Work, "became a Christian some years ago while at Constantinople. He has done much evangelistic work entirely at his own expense, has been the object of protracted persecution, has been often in prison, and from the first has calmly faced the probability of losing all his earthly possessions."

Mr. George C. Needham has, at Mr. Moody's suggestion, gone to reside at East Northfield, Mass. It is hoped that a period of rest amongst the New England hills will continue the work of restoration of his health that has already begun, and enable him to engage once again in active service for the Master. He asks us to thank his friends for the numerous letters of sympathy he has received. In future his address will be East Northfield, Mass.

Mr. George Smith, who has for over a quarter of a century laboured to rescue and bless the canal and gipsy children, and who twenty years ago gave up an income of £450 a year to enable him to prosecute the work, is now in the sixty-third year of his age, and in much need of help. An influential committee has been formed to raise a testimonial fund of £3000, to be put in trust for Mr. Smith and his family. The treasurer is Mr. Edwin Lawrence, 10, Kensington Palace-gardens, London, W.

Evangelistic Notes.

Mr. John Greenwood, of the Evangelisation Society, has just completed two missions at Melton Constable and Bristow, Norfolk. It has been a time of refreshing to God's people, and of great awakening among others.

The Scotch Fishermen have arrived at Queenstown. A number of them attended the mission service held on Sunday afternoon at the Bellevue Schoolroom, conducted by Mrs. Daunt, the rector's wife. Two of the men gave earnest addresses.

West Hampstead.—A fortnight's mission has recently been held at the Emmanuel Mission House, West Hampstead, by Messrs. J. Brown and George Hefford, of the Evangelisation Society. The hearts of the workers are full of praise to God, for many souls have been blessed.

Rev. E. P. Hammond, while recently in Chicago, held meetings for children in Mr. Moody's church. Principal R. A. Torrey greatly aided in the meetings. Mr. Hammond subsequently paid a short visit to St. Louis, where he is held in high esteem by reason of wonderfully successful labours in past years.

Mr. William Nobbs, after finishing at the East End, held services at Chalford and Brinscombe, and the Lord gave good times. Since then he has been at home resting and seeking to get rid of a cough. He is now much better, and last week was able to help with the Bible carriage at the annual fair in Hereford.

Aldham-by-Colchester.—A successful mission has been conducted at Ford-street, Aldham, by Mr. H. Collins, of the Evangelisation Society. The services were well attended, and many were induced to come to them who hardly ever are seen inside a place of worship. The Gospel was most faithfully preached, and many testified to the blessing they had received.

Sheffield.—Mr. W. E. Newell and Mr. W. E. Horley, students of Cliff College, Curbar, have concluded a fourteen days' mission at Ebenezer Chapel, Bramall-lane, Sheffield. God has richly blessed their labours. Many have professed to find Jesus; backsliders have been restored, and Christians have been greatly blessed. Great blessing resulted from the house-to-house visitation, and the open-air services held every evening.

Holborn.—The mission just concluded by Ned Wright and A. M. Kyd, at Kingsgate Chapel, Holborn, has proved a great blessing. The worst in the district have listened to the Gospel preached, and some remarkable cases of conversion are known. On Monday Ned Wright gave the story of his life, many being constrained to yield to the Christ who so manifested his love and power in his conversion. The word of God, through Mr. Kyd, on May 9 and 10, was also fruitful unto the salvation of sinners.

Messrs. Bewley and Frank Weaver have been used of the Lord to be a great refreshment to the workers who toil amid the ever-increasing masses around the Home of Industry. Saint and sinner, young and old, have felt the influence of their love to win precious souls; at most of their evening meetings men have decided to accept the Lord as their Saviour. May these youthful evangelists be upheld by the prayers of the Lord's people as they labour on, going from city to city upon their heaven-sent mission of wondrous love. A. McP.

Mr. Charles Inglis, who is this month preaching on Sundays at the Edinburgh Castle, E., with crowded audiences and great interest, held last week a special united mission in the Railway Mission Hall, Hastings. The hearty way in which clergymen and ministers, as well as Christians of various denominations, co-operated in the services is worthy of notice. The afternoon Bible readings were largely attended and much appreciated, while each evening the hall was crowded and the power of God seemed present to heal. We understand that Mr. Inglis hopes in August to go to America once more, for evangelistic service at Chicago and elsewhere.

A Remarkable Revival.—A correspondent writing from Collingwood, O., gives the following account of "a great revival without preaching." Special meetings had been held, and a few had sought an interest in Christ. The pastor had a great burden of souls upon his heart, and told his people that the work must go on, for there were many yet to be saved. The people were directed to do evangelistic work by means of personal labour. The news of the conversion of this father and of that mother soon spread through the community, and those converted immediately entered upon the same mission with tangible results. One most remarkable feature of the work was the fact that the converts were chiefly heads of families. A large number joined the Church and greatly enthused pastor and people to push the work more vigorously than ever. Two important elements used in the prosecution of the work are prayer and visitation.

Obituary.

PROFESSOR O. S. STEARNS.

The death is announced of Dr. Oakman Sprague Stearns, Professor of Biblical Interpretation (Old Testament) in the Newton Theological Institution, Mass., U.S.A. Born at Bath, in the State of Maine, in 1817, he inherited a love of Hebrew from his father, and developed valuable talents as an exegete. In 1846 he graduated in the college of which he was for twenty-three years a professorial pillar, a service which came after over twenty years of pastoral labour. He made valuable contributions to periodical literature, and was the author of several theological works. He had, throughout his useful career, to battle against much physical weakness.

PASTOR DJEJIZIAN, OF ADA BAZAR.

A faithful missionary has passed away in Pastor Alex. Djejizian, of the Evangelical Protestant Church at Ada Bazar, in Asia Minor, who died on April 22. When only nineteen years of age, immediately after completing his theological studies under Dr. Cyrus Hamlin, at Bebek, he responded to an invitation to take charge of the vacant congregation at Ada Bazar. Under his earnest ministry the work steadily prospered, until there are now 120 in full communion, and a Christian community of about 400. It has been described by Dr. Joseph K. Green, an American missionary in Constantinople, as "a self-taught, self-governed, self-propagating, and self-supporting body."

REV. FRANCIS HOARE.

Many will have heard with regret of the death, at Milan, on Friday week, of Rev. Francis Hoare, vicar of Holy Trinity, Derby, who had been in ill-health for some time. He was travelling for his health, and spent several weeks in Palestine. On the return journey home he had reached Milan, where, during his sojourn, he fell a victim to the malarial fever. In response to a telegram Mrs. Hoare at once proceeded to him, and arrived at his bedside on Wednesday week. His illness had in the meantime taken a very serious turn, and the end came on Friday morning. Mr. Hoare was ordained in 1857, and came to Derby in connection with the work at Holy Trinity in 1859. Nine years after he was appointed incumbent. The Derby Express says:—"With many phases of the movement which has been going on in the Church of England Mr. Hoare had no sympathy, and steadfastly held himself aloof from any countenance of it. His work in his own parish was marked by conscientious devotion to duty, and his death will be deeply regretted by his congregation, and by those interested in the various branches of Church work which have been successfully established there and vigorously cultivated."

SEED THOUGHTS.

Four Conditions of Successful Service.—1. Knowledge of God's Word; 2. Passion for souls; 3. Right methods of work; 4. Baptism of the Holy Spirit.

Hearing the Spirit's Message (Rev. iii, 22).—This text suggests: 1. Capacity—"hath an ear"; 2. Opportunity—"let him hear"; 3. Authority—"What the Spirit saith"; 4. Pertinency—"Unto the churches." These four unite to determine responsibility.—Dr. A. T. Pierson.

Christ's Priesthood.—Jesus is a great priest (Heb. iv. 14); a sympathising priest (Heb. iv. 15); a merciful and faithful priest (Heb. ii. 17); an unchanging priest (Heb. vii. 23, 24).

Faith is the hand that lays hold on Christ; the eye that looks to Christ; the ear that hears the voice of Christ; the mouth that feeds on Christ; the finger that touches Christ; and the key that unlocks the treasures of Christ.—Rev. F. Harper.

STUTTGART, WURTEMBERG.—Mrs. C. T. L. Hunt, Villa Luck, Degerloch, viâ Stuttgart, writes suggesting that Christians making holiday should visit that most delightful and health-giving place, where she says there exists a state of complete spiritual famine. She will gladly give information about hotels and pensions, which are inexpensive and comfortable.

MISSIONARY EDUCATION.—Preaching for the London Missionary Society, in Raleigh Memorial Church, Stoke Newington, Rev. W. Joss, of Madras, defended the educational system of missionary work against the criticisms of Dr. Pentecost and others, on three grounds. (1) The urgent necessity to train young men under Christian influences, for positions in the learned professions and in the Government service; (2) the opportunity thus afforded to give systematic instruction to all the students in the Old and New Testaments, two hours every day; and (3) the positive results of the system in conversions to Christ, to many instances of which he referred.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we purpose giving portraits and sketch of Mrs. Andrew and Dr. Kate Bushnell, of the World's Women's Christian Temperance Union.

It certainly will be difficult to deal satisfactorily with the extremely pressing question of the gambling and drinking clubs, and yet there are few directions in which early and drastic legislation is more urgently called for. The recent evidence before the Select Committee of the House of Commons points to the fact that only too many of the clubs are simply irregularly licensed drinking-dens, frequented largely by women; and the condition of things in Dublin and Manchester, and similar large centres, is almost too painful to contemplate, so widely spread is the influence for evil of the so-called clubs.

It is satisfactory to find that the Intoxicating Liquors Bill (Ireland) is making steady progress through the Upper House. The object of the measure is to make permanent the Irish Sunday Closing Act of 1878, a yearly Act; and also to extend its restrictive provisions to the five large cities and towns to which at present the bill does not apply. An additional clause has been added, which provides for the closing of all public-houses in Ireland at or before nine o'clock on Saturday nights. As Saturday night in Dublin and elsewhere is the period when there is most drunkenness, the new clause ought to have a remarkable effect upon the public morals.

There is danger in the well-meant efforts of those persons who would pass an Act for the compulsory commitment and detention of inebriates in some place of confinement. A Departmental Committee have just reported "on the best mode of dealing with habitual drunkards," and they are unhesitatingly of opinion that such compulsory power should be given. To say nothing of the possible abuses to which it might be put in ordinary life, and against which its advantages might be a set-off, many helpless and hapless creatures would be at the mercy once more of the policeman.

Our readers, we hope, noticed the request made by Mr. Müller, in our last number, that friends would find out and send to him girls who had lost both parents. He has never asked for funds, but is driven to ask for orphans! He has more accommodation than is occupied. Mr. Müller attributes this to the large number of orphanages started since he opened his, fifty-seven years ago. Then there was accommodation for only 3600 orphans, now for more than 100,000, an increase of nearly thirtyfold. Similar instances of multiplied good may be found. We know a district where only one minister did anything for the people from Sunday to Sunday, and who was the only abstaining minister, but now every church and chapel has a Band of Hope and some sort of Temperance Society. We have heard it said that the late James Parsons, of York, once as well known as Angell James, his intimate friend, was the means of causing every church in York to adopt Sunday evening services.

A return in regard to the prevalence of suicide in France has just been presented to the Government, from which it appears that the increase in the number of suicides is as steady as it is alarming. It goes without saying that the increase is largest in the notoriously irreligious districts, and that more men than women take their own lives. At the same time, too, it is noted that the average duration of human life in France continues to decrease. The inferences to be drawn from this condition of things are so obvious it is not necessary to repeat them.

A Blue-book issued on Thursday last, on the Kanaka traffic, contains serious reflections, of which more will undoubtedly be heard, regarding the New Hebrides missionaries. Of course this Government agent, whose animus is ill-concealed throughout his report, will have to give full proof of his extraordinary statement that the missionaries supply rival sets of natives with ammunition for exterminating each other. He says that at one mission store the goods consisted, not of Bibles, but of "several cases marked 'beer,' one case of 'Old Tom gin,' two large bags of shot, and eight boxes of percussion caps for Enfield rifles."

This Government agent shows a very suspicious interest in the work of the Romish priests; while against the Presbyterian missionaries he not only insinuates outrageous wrongdoing, but prefers the charge of neglect of duty. We are satisfied that his statements are not worthy of confidence. For instance, he reports the fact that missionaries are away on furlough, but he says nothing of the careful arrangements that are made for friendly oversight of their districts on the part of neighbouring workers! Again, he magnifies the efforts that are made in Queensland for the evangelisation of the Kanakas, but he conceals the fact that some of the best of these are Christians before they leave their native islands!

The horrors of the traffic are succinctly outlined by Rev. Oscar Michelsen in his recently published book, "Cannibals Won for Christ." He shows that the traffic takes away from the islands the greater part of the young and strong men, whose wives are left unprotected. He proceeds:

> They are engaged for periods of from three years to nine or ten, but in the majority of cases do not return. Instead of welcoming their husbands back, poor women only receive news of their death in a strange land. These circumstances are productive of immorality, and probably gave rise to the fearful destruction of infant life now so common on all the heathen islands. In a great many of the villages few people are seen besides women and old men and a very small number of children. The able-bodied men, who ought to be the strength of the islands and the strength of the Mission, are in Queensland.

These considerations do not seem to come within the survey of the Government agent; but because missionaries give to them the weight and value they demand, the exasperated agent of a policy of destruction indulges in sneers and reproaches which reasonable people cannot have any difficulty in understanding.

The Jubilee of the Scottish Free Church celebrated last week calls for special remark. No one day in the present century has more right to be marked as a red-letter day in the annals of Church history than the memorable 18th of May, 1843. As the birthday of what has proved itself one of the most valuable auxiliary forces of the Army of the Lord, and as an illustration of the blessing certain to attend loyalty to his name, that day speaks loudly to every thoughtful observer. Those who differ widely from the ecclesiastical standpoint of our Free Church friends, must admire the conscientiousness, courage, and faith, manifested by Dr. Chalmers and his co-secessionists. Every branch of the one true Church of Christ on earth would be the better to-day for an increase of similar virtues in relation to the cause of God and of truth.

A new Life of Dr. Chalmers, by Mrs. Oliphant, the well-known biographer of Irving, is timely in view of the Jubilee referred to. The volume deals largely with the renowned doctor's philanthropic spirit and marvellous organising ability. The latter was so marked that the authoress speaks of him as one who might have ranked among the foremost statesmen of his day, had he chosen the political arena as his sphere. A striking feature of his character was the intense love he had for work as done for Christ, rather than as judged from human estimates. This was so strong in him that, as the late Dr. Fraser has said in his memoir, "he was as glad to preach the Word of God to eighty or a hundred poor people in 'a loft' as ever he had been to address the crowds that hung on his lips in Glasgow or in London." A careful perusal of the story of his work in the Glasgow slums would be an inspiration to many hearts waiting for open doors to service.

The tenacious grasp of Rome has seldom been better illustrated than in the action of Prince Ferdinand of Bulgaria, who is a Roman Catholic, while his subjects belong to the Greek Church. When he came to the throne, it was agreed that he was to remain in his Church, but that his children were to belong to the Greek Church. He has married a Roman Catholic Princess, and now seeks to be relieved from his vows! What are his poor deceived people to do? Accede to his request? Then Rome will never rest till she has got everything into her hands. Refuse? Then they will never know any peace. Perhaps they will have little comfort of their lives anyway; for Russia will not be pleased.

Still, the intolerance against all that dare to differ from the Greek Church in Russia is on the increase, and there seems to be no hope, under the present régime, for any alleviation. Some excellent people are now under surveillance of priests and police, and are not allowed to leave their homes; others have been banished to the Caucasus; again others are under judgment, and some on transport to Siberia, numbered with the transgressors. No attempt is made to conceal these measures; indeed, they are freely spoken of in the Russian papers, and it seems very evident that no interference on the part of foreigners will be considered of weight, but will only make Pobedonestseff more determined to pursue his own course. It evidently is a call for united prayer of all the Church of Christ; human help and counsel are vain. But our brethren have a claim on our continued help and sympathy. Many of them are sent to places where they are not able to earn their bread; their families also have to be supported, or in some cases they have to be sent after the husband. Any sums committed to our care will be transmitted through trustworthy channels.

It was not comforting and reassuring to read the news from Paris last week. French deputies are not generally favourable to the spread of the Gospel, and now they talk of France putting her foot on the Hovas, and of her staying in Madagascar. They are interested in the doings of the Bible Society and the missionaries. The omen is bad. The doings of France among the islands of the sea to which missionaries had carried the Gospel have mostly been hostile to its influence. Madagascar would be a good deal better off, more settled, more prosperous, and more likely to develop her own resources wisely if France would leave her alone. The missionaries by whom the island has been evangelised may well be left to continue their useful work. Prayer has done great things for Madagascar, and it may yet avail to save it from French domination and Roman Catholic errors.

"The secret things belong unto the Lord our God; but the things which are revealed belong unto us and to our children for ever, that we may do all the words of this law." Our obedience seems in some way dependent upon our recognition of the limits of our own knowledge and of the unlimited knowledge of God. But one of the strange features of these times is the apparent reversal of this order. We are assured by the younger generation of our instructors that we do know the secret things of God's creation; but that we do not know those things which He has revealed concerning the atoning work of the Man which is his Fellow. One teacher expounds the evolution, from a one-celled protoplastic germ, of man, made in the image of God. Another discountenances all endeavour to expound the way in which the Atonement by the death of Jesus Christ makes man's salvation possible.

The pretension of men of science not only to unveil the secrets of the past, but to deduce from them, and to teach as truth, unproved conclusions which may or may not be found contradictory of the revelation which God has made in the Scriptures of truth, is scarcely just to those whom they profess to teach the way of God more perfectly; and not less unjust is it to cast a covering veil over those things which God has revealed, and which are the indefeasible possession of ourselves and of our children.

For if there is one thing which God has more fully expounded in his Word than any other, it is the significance of the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ. When John, his messenger, sent to prepare his way before Him, pointed to Jesus and said, "Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world," he identified Him as the antitype of all the offerings from Abel's lamb to the morning and evening oblation which had not yet been caused to cease. When the Apostle said, "Christ our Passover is slain for us," he read the New Testament into the Old, and implicitly taught us to read the Old in the light of the New. "The New Testament lies concealed in the Old; the Old is revealed in the New."

The conscience of a convicted sinner asks many questions to which, according to the modern view, no answer can be given. To every difficulty of the anxious inquirer it would have the soul-physician to reply, "Christ made atonement for sin; Christ died for us." But as to how that atoning death specifically meets the specific need which causes the inquirer's anxiety, it tells us we can give no specific answer.

The passover, the five offerings of Lev. i.—vii., the great day of atonement, the ashes of the heifer, are all invaluable aids in showing the varied way in which the precious blood of Christ meets the need of the sinner; but we are told that this is all Jewish, that the light of the New Testament has made the Old valueless except as history. And having thus cast off God's own teaching as to "the blood which maketh an atonement for the soul," it is not strange that these teachers, self-deprived of the typical teaching by which God foreshowed the manifoldness of the salvation effected by his Son, are unable to expound the doctrine of the Cross.

The thoughts of Tennyson on religious subjects are being added to almost every month by someone who knew him; the late Mr. Symonds has contributed some interesting reminiscences to The Century. Tennyson referred to the views of Bruno, the Dominican, who, for his departure from the faith of the Church, was burnt at Rome in 1600, and who held that the universe is infinite, and that each of the worlds in it is animated by the universal soul—a kind of pantheism. Tennyson said, "That conception must react on Christianity—I mean its creed and dogma; its morality will always remain invulnerable." "Somebody had told him that astronomers could calculate 550,000,000 solar systems. 'There is no reason why each of these should not have one planet inhabited by people like ourselves. Then see what becomes of the sacrifice for fallen men upon this little earth!'"

Did Tennyson mean that such a sacrifice was thus made to appear improbable? Or did he hint that thus it was shown to be of infinitely more value and power than is commonly supposed to be the case? If the former, why should God decline to redeem the countless hosts who have inhabited the earth? It is not the size of the globe, but the wealth and worth of the humanity that has been upon it, that is the important factor. Besides which, we know not how far the power of the death of our Saviour extends. Hints lie scattered up and down the Scriptures which seem to imply that it is felt far beyond this world. In this age, when it is a favourite axiom with men that out of the smallest proceeds the largest, we never could see why the smallness of our world could be an objection to its being the theatre of some of God's mightiest acts.

Stones for Bread.

A new euphemism has been invented to soften the repulsive idea which attributes ignorance to the Lord Jesus. While we are told much of the Science of man, we are instructed in the "nescience" of Christ. What a suggestive study for painter or poet—the Laodicean man saying, "I am intellectually rich and have gotten riches and have need of nothing," and Jesus replying, "Because thou sayest I am rich and have gotten riches, and have need of nothing; and knowest not that thou art the wretched one, and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked: I counsel thee to buy of me gold refined by fire, that thou mayest become rich; and white garments that thou mayest clothe thyself, and that the shame of thy nakedness be not made manifest; and eye-salve to anoint thine eyes that thou mayest see. As many as I love I rebuke and chasten: be zealous, therefore, and repent."

Are not our Professors leading the students, whom they are professedly preparing to preach Christ, on to exceedingly thin ice, when they teach them in this fashion:—

"The Son knoweth not the day and hour" of his own Second Coming. If Christ's knowledge was limited on a point so immediately connected with his own work, we need not hesitate to include the Philosophy of History and the Principles of Literary Criticism with other sciences as matters in regard to which Christ "for our sakes became poor." "Faith and Criticism." Essay on the Old Testament.

The often-quoted reference of Jesus to his ignorance of the day and hour of his glorious return, is only in accordance with many human traits in his thought, as when He asks for information about simple facts; and when He expresses surprise and amazement. Is not this limitation a proof of the mistake of appealing to our Lord as an authority on extraneous matters which He never undertakes to teach? We do not find Him sitting down to instruct his disciples in geology and literary history. Then is it not unreasonable to look to Him for a pronouncement on these matters? Is it not unfair to take his employment of the Bible as a Divine seal set to the scientific accuracy, say, of the account of the order of creation in Genesis, or his reference to the Pentateuch or to the Psalms, with the use of the popular titles of these works, as a solemn vindication of their Mosaic or Davidic authorship? We have no proof that his knowledge on earth extended to these and kindred topics.—Ibid. Essay on the New Testament.

Yet Isaiah had said of Him, "The Spirit of the Lord shall rest upon Him, the Spirit of wisdom and understanding, the Spirit of counsel and might, the Spirit of knowledge, and the fear of the Lord." While on earth He said of Himself, "Before Abraham was I AM." And we read of his "straightway perceiving in his spirit that they so reasoned within themselves." When a boy of twelve, the Rabbis were astonished at his understanding and answers. Yet we are asked to believe that twenty years later, in the zenith of his ministry, the Holy Spirit resting upon Him, He did not know "the order of creation," though all things were made by Him, and without Him was nothing made that was made.

Are not our learned professors forgetting that He was "God manifested in flesh"? "But if this is the case, the attempt to" undervalue "the authority of our Lord" beneath "its natural claims must," to use the words of one of the Essayists, "be most disastrous."

In profound sorrow and alarm we ask these Essayists and those who teach similarly, "Of which of you that is a father shall his son ask a loaf and he give him a stone? or a fish, and he for a fish give him a serpent?" Is not this kind of professorial teaching a veritable ministry of stones for bread and of poison for wholesome and nutritious food?

Professor Huxley as Prophet.

In his Romanes lecture at Oxford last week, Professor Huxley dealt with "Evolution and Ethics." The superiority of the Christian and Biblical standpoint to that of the Materialist is well illustrated by some of the learned lecturer's remarks. The hopelessness and uncertainty of unbelief stand out in marked contrast to the "sure and steadfast" hope of the believer who rests his expectation on the sure word of prophecy. The keynote of a brilliant peroration is found in these words:—

> The theory of Evolution encourages no millennial anticipations. If for millions of years our globe has taken the upward road, yet some time the summit will be reached, and the downward route will be commenced.

All that science and philosophic research can give us is the possibility that processes of investigation and organised effort may meanwhile "modify the conditions of existence"; nevertheless the end attained must be "the undefinable latency" from which all things arose.

"Impermanence" is a poor substitute for "everlasting life," and return to chaos and primeval ruin a terrible revulsion from the "new heavens and the new earth," which the believer in Divine revelation is taught to anticipate. The Professor urges men to be "strong in will," to have "stout hearts," and "to strive in one faith towards our hopes." But, alas! our only hope, according to his theory, is in the words:—

> It may be that the gulf will wash us down;
> It may be we shall touch the Happy Isles.

Uncertain even this! Surely they are wisest and most to be envied who, standing on the firm foundation that God has laid, can see a Divine purpose permeating and controlling all the forces and processes of the world. The true doctrine of evolution and the true system of ethics is found in the fact that "all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose."

On this theory even pain, which the Professor calls "the baneful product of evolution," becomes not an evil to be condemned, but a process full of promise and of fruitful result. The ethics of Christ, unlike those of speculative scientists, provide for all the contingencies and complications involved in the course of the world, and show that He, who "out of evil is still educing good," is leading all things on to a triumph which shall be to the praise and glory of his Name as the Creator and Redeemer of men. Courage and devotion born of faith, and inspired by a hope "that maketh not ashamed," are manifestly far superior to the stoical firmness which works in the dark, and which knows not God.

COASTGUARD LETTER MISSION, IRELAND.—In answer to former appeals, many servants of God volunteered to help by corresponding with the coastguardsmen round Ireland, and supplying Gospel literature to them month by month. As the need is ever increasing, the aid of any Christians who are willing to help is again asked. Addresses, and all further information will gladly be given by the Hon. Sec., Wm. A. Garratt, Glenvar, Blackrock, co. Dublin.

THE DARTFORD YOUNG MEN'S BIBLE CLASS now numbers over 200 members, who have their headquarters at the Martyrs' Memorial Hall, carried on by some of the young men in the Dartford Lads' Bible-class and the Dartford Protestant Mission. The work has so grown that extra accommodation is about to be provided, and funds are now being raised for the purpose. The work amongst young men is slowly and steadily increasing, and prayer is asked for a blessing at the forthcoming anniversary.

Rome's Widowhood.

In Rev. xviii., after the mighty voice, "Come out of her, my people," etc., Rome appears to have so far recovered her spiritual power (gradually lessened from the Gospel-preaching days of the Reformation and by the loss of her temporal power in 1870-1) that she "saith in her heart, I sit a queen and am no widow." But, figuratively, ecclesiastically, and de facto, the Church of Rome is "a widow" at this time, and has been so ever since the King of Italy, forced by his people, took possession of his nationally lawful capital, and the "temporal power" was taken from her. That power of the Papal European States had been at her sanguinary and destructive call for some 1200 years.

Dr. Döllinger, in his important book, "Declarations and Letters on the Vatican Decrees," shows the tremendous consequences of the dogma of Infallibility, in intensifying retrospectively the pitiless provisions of Rome's worse than Draconian Canon Law, and what is thereby in store for the nations. His opinions, as the Church of Rome's greatest modern theologian and historian, deserve the utmost consideration. Mr. Hislop (Presbyterian), in his "Two Babylons," from what (as he argues) remains of the parallelism between Pagan Babylon and Papal Babylon, comes to a similar ominous conclusion. Bishop Christopher Wordsworth (High Churchman), in his invaluable booklet "Is not the Church of Rome the Babylon of the Apocalypse?" says:

> Let none imagine that Rome is changed, that, although she was once proud and cruel, she is now humble and gentle, and that we have nothing to fear from her. This is not the doctrine of St. John. It is not the language of the Holy Ghost. It warns us that if she regains her sway, she will persecute with the same fury as before (p. 84).

Dr. Goodwin, who is as modest and fair as he is deeply learned and deeply spiritual, whilst alluding to various views and possibilities, gives his own opinion, in his "Exposition of the Revelation," not only of a future persecution by Rome and her allies, but thinks that its chief locality will be England, because so large a proportion of our Lord's true servants will be found here. Dr. Gill, in his commentary on Rev. xi., quotes Dr. Goodwin, and agrees with him. Archbishop Usher, in his latter years, strongly expressed similar views.

The anticipation of The Spectator (quoted in Christian, March 30), that many, being led by the "Higher Criticism" to believe, though erroneously, that the Scripture "foundation is destroyed," will probably "gravitate towards" Rome, which claims infallibility and "historic descent," is a most real peril to thousands. Then, would she not be ready to make short work of the minority or comparatively "little flock" of Christ's true followers?

Let me mention a remarkable point in connection with the present official and historical "widowhood" of the Church of Rome. When the notice of the forthcoming Vatican Council in 1870 was issued under the Pope's authority, M. Louis Veuillot, editor of the important Ultramontane journal L'Univers, expressed himself in a most startling way, chronicling an unprecedented fact in the long history of the Papacy. "What!" he remarked, "a council convened at the Vatican, and no crowned head in (R. C.) Europe invited to it. What does this mean? It is an anachronism in history. What is it but a divorce between the Church and the State?"

In effect, the Church of Rome, not feeling satisfied with the political sentiment of her ten husbands (Rev. xvii.) nor sure of their subserviency towards her, had negatively, yet practically, separated herself from them in a Vatican conciliary way for the first time in her history. The Franco-German war was ushered in with a view, on the part of the Jesuits, of paralysing Protestant Prussia. "Man proposes, but God disposes." France was conquered. The Empire of Germany was constituted; Italy, relieved from the presence of French soldiers, on whose bayonets (as a striking cartoon in Punch depicted) the Papacy was upheld, was free to take possession of her original and historically rightful capital. Then that husband (representing virtually the opinions politically of the other nine European Latin spouses), forced on by the Italian people, took his rightful temporal power. Thereupon, the imperial (and imperious) scarlet Papal woman diplomatically cried and sulked (comp. Ezek. xvi. 30), and (in flat contradiction to our blessed Lord and Master's declaration that "his kingdom was not of this world") declared, and still declares, that her kingdom was so essentially material and mundane that, without the "temporal" power which she had for twelve centuries or so usurped and used as her sanguinary executioner, she could not satisfactorily get on with her spiritualities. She took up with the sentimental and false part of a pseudo-prisoner, and is still ostentatiously playing it out. Is this a shadow of that mighty world-affecting imprisonment, foretold in Rev. xx. 1—3? Compare John vi. 70, 71; xiii. 21—27; xvii. 12; 2 Thess. ii. 3—9; 2 Cor. xi. 3, 13, 14, 15; Rev. ii. 2—9.

Rome is the religious capital of the Church of Rome, whilst we find her officially claiming the same universal sway as Satan, "the Prince of this world," blasphemously dared to claim as at his command and in his gift—Matt. iv. 8-10, Rev. xvii. 1-4, 12-15; 2 Cor. xi. 1, 2, 3, 13-15; 2 Thess. ii. 3-9; Rev. xii. 9-12, xiii. 8.

We also find her ruling Pope, representing the chief Anti-Christ of the world, officially identified with that "woman" who has been historically exhibited as the chief murderess and despotic ecclesiastical Jezebel of the world's history. Canon Stowell, years ago, preached a splendid sermon on that resemblance from Rev. ii. 20—that most vivid illustration of Rev. xvii. 1—5. Jezebel in the O. T. used the King's signet ring, took the reins into her own hands, and, in effect, symbolised, not the true Christian Church, but essentially the paganised and apostate Roman Church, assuming the rights and the power of the State, and using those prerogatives and that power to persecute unto death, to lay hold on temporalities, and to promote her wicked idolatries. Hence, as I imagine, the bad prominence given to her in the Apocalypse by the Divine Head of his Church from Abel downwards. Heb. xi. 1 Cor. x. 1—4: 1 Peter i. 9—12, with Heb. xi. 39, 40; John x, 16, xvii. 20, 21; Acts xiii. 44—48.

If England persists in pandering to doomed Papal Babylon—(Rev. xviii.), then, according to His holy and righteous dealings, our nation will probably find that Rome herself will sooner or later be used by Almighty God as a scourge for its punishment.

ALTON, HANTS.—A quiet but very successful work for God is being carried on here and in the surrounding villages by Mr. W. Sanders, of the Christian Colportage Society. Our brother's faithful testimony of the truth is being much owned of God. One would be surprised how few have any knowledge of the Gospel of the grace of God. His ministry of the Word is used by God to open the blind eyes of many.

WHAT IS CHRIST TO ME?

HIS INTERCESSION.

In Rom. viii. 34, four facts concerning Jesus are stated as Paul's ground for believing that he could never be condemned. Three of these have been considered in our last three papers. In the death of Christ we saw our sins being judged and put away; in his resurrection we saw the evidence of God's satisfaction with the work done on our behalf; and in his ascension to God's right hand we saw him receiving and shedding forth upon us the Holy Spirit of promise. The fourth fact is his intercession, which we shall consider now.

Do you know what an intercessor is? He is one who speaks on behalf of another. Jesus, in the presence of God, speaks to the Father for us. Is there anything in that fact which we ought to value? God evidently thinks so, for in the Old Testament types the work of intercession appears as closely associated with the work of atonement. No sin was put away without the death of an innocent victim; but it was also necessary that the high priest should enter into the holy place as the representative of the people. He was arrayed in his garments of glory and beauty, with his breastplate of precious stones, on which were engraved the names of the twelve tribes. See Exod. xxviii. 29; and then look through the type to the Great Antetype. The holy place is not that of the tabernacle made with hands, but heaven itself. The priest is not Aaron, nor any of his descendants, but the Lord Jesus, who is made a Priest for ever. The names He bears on his heart are not those of the literal Israel, but yours and mine. Do you see any blessing in all this? To a dying Christian I once stated this, and said, "Can you not see that Jesus is talking to the Father about you?" The fact was full of comfort to her. Say it of yourself—"Jesus is mentioning my name to the Father."

For what does He intercede? See Luke xxii. 31, 32. Peter did not know the danger that was before him, nor his own utter weakness. He thought himself strong enough to endure (33, 34). What a sad thing it would have been if Jesus had been as ignorant of the danger of his servant as Peter himself was! The intercessory prayer of Jesus opposed and defeated the malicious purpose of Satan. Did it secure Peter from falling? No, but it saved him from being utterly cast down. The benefit of the intercession of Jesus appears in the fact that Peter afterwards repented, and returned to the Lord, and learned by his fall lessons that helped him to strengthen his brethen. How often has our Lord's intercession worked similarly for us? When we have deemed ourselves secure and strong, He has seen dangers we knew not, and has had a perfect knowledge of our weakness. His intercession has either prevented our fall, or has secured us from hopelessness when we have fallen. Think of this powerful Intercessor who is ever remembering you. It is through Him that the devices of your great enemy will be defeated.

There is another work described in 1 Jno. ii. 1, which is specially intended for those who have been overtaken by actual sin. Having sinned, how can we hope to be accepted before God again? Jesus becomes our Advocate, and pleads our cause. What can He say for us? Nothing in excuse for sin. He draws his arguments from what He is, as "the Righteous one." Not in us, but in Him, is the reason why God should forgive and accept us. Have you noticed the picture given in Zech. iii.? In Joshua standing before the Lord in filthy garments you may see yourself after sin has overcome you. Satan is at hand to accuse you, and what can you say against his accusations when the filthy garments of your sin cover you? You can say nothing; but your Advocate is there (see verse 2). It is He who rebukes Satan, and He who first unclothes and then re-clothes you with change of raiment. What could you do without Jesus as your Intercessor?

"Wherefore He is able also to save them to the uttermost that come unto God by Him, seeing He ever liveth to make intercession for them (Heb. vii. 25).

"HE ABIDETH FAITHFUL."

2 Tim. ii. 13.

TO THE TRIED AND SUFFERING CHILDREN OF GOD.

What a resting-place for the soul! What a hiding-place—as the dark floods of trouble surge and swell, and the darker floods of unbelief lift up their waves, and make a mighty noise amid the changes and upheavings and tossings to and fro of this mortal life. "He abideth faithful!" "In the Lord Jehovah is the Rock of Ages!" (Isa. xxvi. 4, mar.) "Jesus Christ the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever" (Heb. xiii. 8). We change, "He changeth not."

Have we been tempted to doubt this? For most gracious reasons and purposes the Lord is pleased oftentimes sorely to try the faith of his dear children. Like the disciples crossing the sea of Galilee at their Lord's command, doubtless expecting a peaceful passage. But the storm arose in its fury—ah! some of us know in a spiritual sense—and it is no shallow experience, the meaning of that word. "It was now dark, and Jesus was not come unto them" (John vi. 17). That was darkness indeed—a very valley of the shadow of death! Had He forgotten? Was He indifferent? Nay! "He saw them toiling in rowing, for the wind was contrary." He knew it all—the outward and the inward storm—and in due season he hushed both to rest.

Or we may have been like the disciples when they crossed the sea, and this time the Master was with them in the boat. "I will fear no evil, for Thou art with me."

Yet even then the storm arose, and even then they were "covered with waves, and were in jeopardy" (Luke viii. 23). And the Master seemed slow to act! A sleeping Saviour! Can it be? "Carest Thou not?" Winds and waves put peace and faith to flight! The Lord would teach his children one great lesson—that circumstances in no wise affect Him, and they ought not to affect our faith in Him! Through all these He means to give brighter displays of his power, and grace, and love—calming the storm, forgiving all our iniquity, comforting us in all our tribulation.

In the days of our spiritual infancy we were wont often to plead. "Show us a token for good," and our comfort rose and fell very much as these tokens were given or withheld—very precious must the Master's love token ever be—"handfuls of purpose" graciously let fall for us! but He does not mean us to rest in them, or depend on them, but on Himself, the unchanging One! Above the circumstances, beyond the gifts and the tokens, to the heart of the great Giver!

All else may vary. 'He abideth faithful!'

Let the worst come to the worst, it can but lay us on the bosom of everlasting love! Like a little child we saw the other day, whose feeble, tottering steps had given way, and the little one was injured by the fall. The loving mother was instantly at hand, and the babe was taken to her very heart, and caressed, and soothed, and comforted! There seemed to be such a sweet sadness in the sobs as they died away on her breast, and we remembered the words—

"As one whom his mother comforteth, so will I comfort you, and ye shall be comforted."—Isa. lxvi. 13.

O, Comforter of God's redeemed,
Whom the world does not see,
I wish not to avoid the flood
That casts my soul on Thee.
Who would not suffer pain like mine,
To be consoled like me?

When I am feeble as a child,
And flesh and heart give way,
Then, on thine everlasting strength
With passive trust I stay;
And the rough wind becomes a song
The darkness shines as day.

BIBLE TEMPERANCE ASSOCIATION.—The annual meeting of the London Auxiliary was lately held at Exeter Hall. The chairman (Mr. J. L. Aukland) referred in his opening speech to the advance which had been made in every department of temperance work, instancing especially the growing use of unfermented wine at the Lord's Supper. Rev. J. Pyper, of Belfast, and other friends also spoke.

UNITED CHRISTIAN MISSION.—Baron von Oertzen, of Hamburg, the president of the Y.M.C.A.'s of North Germany, has greatly encouraged the friends who are carrying on the work of the United Christian Mission, by promising to receive contributions, etc., on behalf of the mission, and to further in any way he can its great object of sending a Gospel message into every unevangelised home.

THE HOLY SPIRIT AT WORK.

While the writer was touring with a fellow missionary among the hills about fifty miles inland from this coast some weeks ago, an interesting and encouraging work being done by the Holy Ghost, without any human instrumentality, came under our notice. It will be gladly read by readers of The Christian:—

In the village of Jammadavapetta, separated from the nearest mission station by almost untraversable roads, hill torrents, and jungles, there has lived for some two or three years an old pensioned Sepoy named Malayya. Some years ago, when he was serving with his regiment in another part of India, an old native evangelist named Anthravedy, now gone home to be with the Lord, gave him and others copies of John's Gospel. This particular copy seems to have been stowed away in the knapsack, and thought little of at the time, but afterwards was read by Malayya, who became interested in its contents. Especially after retiring to Jammadavapetta the Gospel was read with increasing earnestness, and others were induced to listen to the wonderful words of eternal life which it contained, and four or five met frequently in the Sepoy's mud-house to read the Word together. The result was that these four or five discovered that the forgiveness of sins was not to be secured by doing meritorious works, making pilgrimages, and worshipping Rama or any other idol, and these they ceased, and began praying to the God found in John's Gospel.

When we visited the village there were fourteen persons who had openly declared the idols to be false, and were regularly reading the Word and praying together. This was last November. These fourteen have since received instruction, and been several times visited. They are still helping one another, and now have the whole Word of God to read, and will be regularly visited by native preachers, and when possible by the missionaries. Some of them give indubitable testimony that they have received life, and although they are as yet very weak, there is no room for doubt that the Spirit has begun a good work, which He will carry on and complete to the glory of God.

It is often thought and said that India requires highly educated missionaries to cope with Hindu philosophy. The above is one among many practical evidences that the great power to break down idolatry of any sort is the plain Word of God, backed by the power of the Holy Ghost, and not a human comparison between the Vedas and the Bible, or Christ and Krishnamurty. India sadly needs more missionaries who are willing to put their learning out of sight, and, appearing at times as "fools for Christ's sake," preach the Word. It is not "coping with Hinduism," but the simple presentation of the Living and written Truth, that tells for the glory of God, and the carrying out of his purposes. Hindus delight in a preacher's either publicly or privately reasoning with them on the relative merits of so-called Christianity and Hinduism, and their taste is too often gratified by workers who have not faith enough to believe that the Holy Ghost will use the words, which are declared to be "spirit and life" to the salvation of souls, even though those souls' minds are darkened and prejudiced by heathen superstitions.

The contrast between the Hindu so-called sacred writings and the Word of God, or the Hindu incarnation and our Lord Jesus Christ, are so palpable, that it seeems an insult to Him to place them side by side for comparison or argument. Christians at home should unceasingly pray that God will keep his servants out here from practically losing faith in the mighty Word, and from wasting time and energy in argument and reasoning. The former is a converting power; the latter never yet converted a single soul. I am thinking of the Lord's native servants as much as of Europeans, when I give this exhortation to prayer.

STRATHAVEN, LANARKSHIRE.—In connection with a branch here of the Lanarkshire Christian Union we have an open-air meeting every Saturday evening. There is a great influx of navvies engaged in the waterworks for supplying the whole centre of Lanarkshire, and the Gospel seems to engage their attention. These meetings are arousing opposition. A good many young women come out and sing with us. An old woman of seventy is a regular attender. Alex. Taylor.

THE LESSONS OF FIFTY YEARS.

BY REV. JOHN MACPHERSON, DUNDEE.

WE are looking back upon our own little bit of history of the Free Church, and I think it is not difficult to see the lessons which that history plainly teaches. It shows that when men stand for God and for his truth they are always sure in the long run to succeed, and when men sacrifice their own interests to the interests of Christ and his cause, they are sure to get fulfilled to them the promise—a hundredfold more—even in this life, of material good, but certainly, what is better, of spiritual power and spiritual blessing. If we sow great principles we shall reap great results, and when the seeds of vital truth are early sown in a nation's heart they will spring up again—it may be years or it may be centuries afterwards—in a glorious harvest.

The history of the Free Church shows that the movements of the Church are freer and more becoming when she walks without the crutches of State support. Another lesson is clear as a sunbeam—that there is only one thing that will really keep a Church alive. State support, State connection, may be very good in itself; a sound creed (I regard our Confession of Faith as a thoroughly sound creed: I am satisfied with it myself) but even a sound creed will not keep a Church alive; stirring traditions of a glorious history will not keep a Church alive; and even the Word of God itself alone will not keep a Church alive—nothing will keep a Church alive, but the presence and the power and the continuous working of God the Holy Ghost.

Look at the state of the Church in the last century and the beginning of this, and see how the Free Church came into existence, and to be what it at present is. We know that moderatism chilled the life-blood of the Church, and that in those days true religion was sick almost unto death. The Gospel was not preached. The Church's spiritual life was suppressed. If in those times a man had come forward and told the ministers and the elders of the church, that by the grace of God he was a saved man, and knew he was a saved man, they would have set him down as a fanatic and a fool. The question of personal salvation was in the background; there was no prayer meeting, family worship was dying out, and the Church was fast becoming an ecclesiastical fossil. What happened? There came from Heaven a breath of the quickening of the Spirit of God, and a young Moderate minister over there in Fife was converted—Thomas Chalmers of Kilmeny. There came another breath of the Holy Spirit, and young men, students—candidates for the ministry—sprang to their feet with new life. There followed another breath of the Spirit of God, and there arose a band of men in the Church of Scotland that went forth in the spirit and power of the Gospel of Jesus to preach the Gospel of the grace of God throughout the land. They preached it in churches and chapels, and in schools, and in barns, on the hillsides, and by the seashore, in the quiet Highland glen and in the noisy city. They held up Christ and Him crucified before the people; they spoke plainly of sin, but they pointed to the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world.

What a change came then. The people wakened up, they began to take an interest in the spiritual welfare of the young, in home and foreign missions, and in all that concerns the glory of God. When the Disruption came the people were ready as well as the ministers, and the foundations of the Free Church were laid in the prayers and tears and glad songs and consecrated gifts of tens of thousands of men and women in Scotland who had recently in their happy experience come to know that the Kingdom of God was righteousness, peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost.

There is no doubt that through the birth of the Free Church there was born a glorious revival. The men who founded the Church and put their stamp on it, and gave that evangelical teaching which followed the noble sacrifice, gave to the Church form and force and affection which we feel to this very hour. I may venture to say that those evangelical men who went out to preach the Gospel in those days, were in a very high sense a Scottish Salvation Army, with Thomas Chalmers at their head. But what has the Church been doing in endeavouring to carry the Gospel to those people in the city slums, in the mining districts, and elsewhere? In all the larger towns and cities in Scotland, you will find churches planted in the midst of moral waste in the slums of the city; and not only so, but whole congregations that have been gathered out of the lowest depths of ignorance and irreligion, and of the squalor and misery of which we know a little even in this good town of ours. I trust that the Free Church will not slacken her hand in regard to this great work. I believe if those noble men who have gone to their rest and their reward were to reappear amongst us, amidst the solemn hush of their presence, I think their voices would be heard saying on this occasion, "Give the glory to God and not to man." At the same time I also believe that the day will never come when the people of this country will cease to hold in honour the memory of the men that made the Free Church of Scotland and made the Church of Scotland free.

THE OUTLOOK IN SHANSI.

LAST September you were good enough to insert a letter of mine addressed to Pastor Frank H. White, appealing for funds to meet an impending famine. You published later tidings that the rain came in time to avert this fearful calamity. There has been a good deal of distress this winter, caused largely through the district mandarin unmercifully pressing the people to pay their taxes. One poor fellow, a leading persecutor of some of our Christians, died recently from the effects of a severe beating. In answer to the appeal a good round sum was contributed, which is being used principally in the north of this province, where real famine exists with all its accompanying horrors. In a letter received a few days ago from Ta Túng, Mr. McKee says they hear that twenty or thirty people are dying daily, and that they scarcely ever go on the street without seeing corpses, sometimes as many as three or four in one street. If such a state of things exists in Ta Túng, they must be worse west and north-west of Ta Túng. There are no baptized Christians in that district, and this distress may be the means of leading many to thirst for the "Bread of Life."

The people in the distressed districts are friendly, but they have no desire for spiritual things. When the last great famine occurred in this district things were fairly prosperous there. There seems to be quite a wave of blessing going over this district, both here and all the stations south great numbers are meeting for worship, the like of which we have not experienced during the past three years. During the last month or two several families have put away their idols, which, although that does not necessarily mean they have become Christians, yet is a very important step towards it.

We have had an opium refuge this year, and although not very many have availed themselves of the opportunity of breaking off the habit, yet those who have passed through the refuge give us the hope that they found the Lord there. We find that almost without a single exception those who do not become Christians, sooner or later generally within a few months, take to the habit again. It seems the common opinion among friends at home that the Chinese hate us because of the opium. I must say I do not think so. Shansi is an opium-besotted province, and yet I think it is the most friendly disposed towards foreigners.

We are all agreed that in the districts where opium is largely cultivated, there the results of our work are very small. Take Yunnan and Shantung. In the former, as is well known, opium is very largely cultivated, and nothwithstanding the number of missionaries working there, there are not (unless it is quite recently) a score of Christians. In Shantung, where opium growing is strictly prohibited, the converts are numbered by thousands, in fact I think I am right in saying there are more Christians in Shantung, and the yearly increase larger, than any other province. That there are opium smokers I have no doubt, but they are few compared with, say, this province.

The church in this place last autumn decided to support a native evangelist. He started out to-day on his second tour. We have had a fall or two of snow this winter, and if we only get rain in a week or two there is every prospect of a good harvest.—Yours very truly, T. H. KING.

AFRICAN MISSIONS VISITED.—1.

BY D. A. HUNTER.

DURING the last twelve months the Comforter has been bringing to my mind over and over again the Master's great cummission left to all his followers—"Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature." One recognised the great need abroad, as compared with that at home, when one realised that in Britain there is one pastor to every 1080 of the population, not to speak of paid lay agents, both men and women, and the great host of voluntary workers, while in heathen lands there is only one missionary to every 350,000 of the population, and the percentage of Christian workers much smaller than at home. Yet one could not say to others, "Go and meet this need," without a good reason for oneself remaining at home. What is a good and sufficient reason for staying at home, when Christ says "Go?" For my part, on facing the question fairly, I found business and social position, work among appreciative audiences and many friends, were the real powers keeping me at home, and that were only the constraining power of Christ's love allowed free scope, I must go to the regions beyond.

Business has been given up, farewells said, and I have been led to undertake a tour through part of Africa, especially with a view to visiting mission stations of all denominations, examining their methods, and seeking to find out how men like myself can best help on the coming of God's kingdom throughout the whole world.

God has so circumstanced me that I am able to go out at my own charge, but there are those who have expressed the desire to return with me to Africa, after I have completed this preliminary tour, who are not so circumstanced, yet who desire, like Paul, to make their life's work the spreading of the "good news," while again like him they "sew tents" to pay expenses, or in other words, earn their own living. Were all Christians content with a "living," rather than a fortune, there need be no lack of funds to extend missionary enterprise right over the whole earth. It has been estimated that one-tenth of the income of Protestant Christians would amount to over £400,000,000 per annum, of which only a mere fraction at present goes to foreign missions.

Hence it is that I find myself on board a fast mail steamer, bound for the Cape of Good Hope. With pleasant weather and congenial company a voyage is a source of real enjoyment and rest. There are several missionaries on board, who were escorted as far as Southampton by many kind friends. Farewells were said on deck, and as the tender steamed to shore and we to sea, the strains of "Crown Him Lord of all" floated across the waters as a message of hope, and inspiration to work for, and expect, the time soon to come when He shall be crowned Lord of all men.

The captain and chief officer are earnest Christian men, and this seems to give the whole ship a good tone, compared with what one has been accustomed to on some previous voyages.

I have much enjoyed the fellowship of the missionaries on board. We have met together from time to time for prayer and reading of the Word. Especially did we pray that God would make the way clear for us to have a service with the steerage passengers and crew during Sunday afternoon, without any direct planning on our part. About three o'clock we heard strains of hymn singing coming aft, and God had wonderfully answered our prayer, for some of the steerage passengers had found a number of mission hymn books, evidently put on board by some good Christian in London, and they were singing to pass the time. We joined in, and soon quite a crowd had gathered on the deck. After many hymns had been sung, the way opened for an address, which was listened to with marked attention. More hymns followed, and another address by one of the lady missionaries, who told in simple language the story of her conversion, and our service closed with a direct appeal for decision for Christ there and then.

Friendly relations have thus been established on board, from which we look for opportunities of personal dealing, and so God is already using his servants to influence those who will probably spend their lives in close contact with many of Africa's sons, and who, in their turn, may become his messengers of salvation to those who come within their sphere.

At the World's Fair.—2.

Before leaving New York I felt impelled to pay a visit to the veteran Dr. Theodore Cuyler, who, like the noble statue at the entrance of the harbour, has stood forth all these years proclaiming liberty to all comers, the liberty that is in Christ Jesus. He received me at his modest residence in Brooklyn with his accustomed grace and cordiality; and, with an apology for the deafness which has, unhappily, overtaken him in his later years, he led me to a couch to talk. I did not "interview" him, he interviewed me, as he evinced his interest in the old country by a series of questions which followed each other in quick succession.

Having satisfied himself regarding some branches of work in which he was particularly interested, he expressed his warmest sympathy with the campaign to be instituted in Chicago, although it is not quite certain that he will himself be able to take part in it.

He had been asked by some to publish an address of welcome to foreign visitors attending the exhibition, but with characteristic faithfulness he had replied, "No, I cannot in good conscience welcome them to the World's Fair as such, but I will gladly point them to my Master as the exhibition of the redeeming love of God to all nations." And, suiting the action to the word, he wrote a powerful little eight-paged tract to be distributed broadcast, entitled,

"JESUS CHRIST FOR EVERYBODY,"

as "a brotherly greeting to the visitors from all nations at the Columbian Exposition"; from this one or two extracts will not, I think, be out of place here:—

The land of Washington and of Lincoln gives a hearty welcome to her thousands of guests from every country on the globe. Some of you will find your kindred here, who, we trust, are none the worse for having become American citizens. All of you will find a magnificent exhibition of the products which skilled labour has created in every clime. This international exhibition is only another proof that God "hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth." Each nationality that comes to visit us has some peculiar blessings—of climate or soil or production—for which to thank our heavenly Father. But there is one gift—infinitely more precious than all beside—which he has made to all mankind. "God so loved the world that He gave his only-begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish but have everlasting life."... If Jesus Christ should stand among the multitudes at the Columbian Exposition as He once stood among the multitudes in Judæa, he would sound aloud the sweet invitation, "Come unto Me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." He offers to be everybody's friend, everybody's guide, and everybody's Saviour.

Christianity is the religion for the whole world. It is equally suited to every country, every colour, and every condition in life—to the old and the young, the rich and the poor, the high and the lowly. The Bible is God's own book for all God's children. Jesus Christ is the Saviour of everybody that comes to Him. In coming to Him there are two steps. One is to quit your sins; that means repentance. The other is to join your soul to Christ; that means faith. Sin would drag you back; cut it off! Jesus draws you towards him; yield and come to Him and obey Him! If these two decisive steps make you a Christian, there will be one more step by-and-by, and that will bring you home to Heaven. . . .

All that is best in our national life has flowed from Christianity. The foundation of our public morals is God's Word; the keystone of the arch is the right observance of God's day. The true light of our purest and happiest homes is the Lord Jesus Christ. To possess Him will make you rich indeed; and "there is more of power to strengthen, elevate, and cheer in the word Jesus than in all the utterances of man since the world began."

The words I have italicised are important as expressing the feeling of the Christians generally throughout the country as to the admission to the Fair on the Lord's Day. Yesterday was the first Sabbath after the opening ceremony, and sundry rumours were afloat that the gates would not be closed to visitors. This thought, born, no doubt, of the wish, was, however, disappointed, for neither the commissioners nor directors had power to open them, in view of the contract under which the Government money was voted.

But the question will not be allowed to rest here. Certain stockholders are endeavouring to put the law in motion—with what show of reason it is difficult to see—to secure public admission seven days a week. Of course, the "working man" is made the stalking-horse, but it is obvious that vested interests form the real basis of the agitation. Be this as it may, the whole question is to be exhaustively threshed out before the directors next month, with what result will then be seen. Meanwhile, the present arrangement will remain in force.

The chief feature of the work at the Bible Institute itself of late has been a three weeks' visit of Mr. W. R. Lane, prior to his commencing evangelistic work in Canada. He gave Bible readings eight times a week, besides taking part in sundry other meetings. He is spoken of in glowing terms by the students (whose hearts he won) as having a wonderful power of stating God's truth in such an interesting way that all could lay hold of its teaching. His grasp of the Word of God, coupled with his spiritual power, combined to make his lectures eminently profitable.

MR. MOODY'S OPENING DAY.

Nothing could have excelled the brightness of the weather which ushered in the second Sunday in May, upon which Messrs. Moody and Sankey inaugurated the six months of work which they have planned at Chicago in view of the World's Fair.

While men are mustering in their thousands from all nations to pay homage to the magnificent results of man's perseverance, ingenuity, and skill, and, it is only too probable, to indulge, many of them, in sinfulness and moral riot, the Christians of the city are uniting in an organised endeavour to stem the torrent, and point to the Fountain of Life.

Not that there is anything particularly new in the way of methods to be adopted: they are the same as ever, only more of them. The old familiar hymns roll forth from two or three thousand voices in the Chicago Avenue Church; the old scene presents itself, of stairway and aisles, gallery and floor packed with a solid, hardly moving mass of earnest humanity; the burly form of the evangelist standing well to the front surveying the throng, while his not less stalwart co-partner leads the song; then the brief well-pointed prayer; and an address as full of life as is the building itself—these characteristics find recognition in every land where the feet of these evangelists have trod.

At this opening meeting there were present on the platform such well-known helpers as Major Whittle, Rev. R. A. Torrey (superintendent of the Bible Institute), Rev. T. B. Hyde (pastor of the church), and quite an array of singers, including, besides Mr. Sankey, Messrs. D. B. Towner, H. H. McGranahan, and Mrs. Pierson, a lady of exceptionally fine musical power; formerly employed upon the stage at a large salary, she is now devoted to the work of the Lord.

It was not, perhaps, obvious at first why Mr. Moody should have found his subject on such an occasion in "The Elder Brother" (Luke xv. 28—30), but he is not often found acting without a motive, and it soon became evident that his desire was to disarm and condemn the prejudices which often excite opposition to the work of reclaiming the lost.

"There are quite a number of such men," he said, "right here in this city to-day; they are very religious in outward observance, but they do not know how to sympathise with a prodigal, nor help those who try to lift him up." In his own inimitable way, the preacher went on to demonstrate that there is not one of the Beatitudes the elder brother has not violated, thus placing himself quite outside the sphere of the spirit of Christ. In short, he was

THE MEANEST MAN IN HISTORY

Externally he was all right, internally he was all wrong, and yet he resembles many Christians to-day, nearer than they suppose. His father sought that both his sons should be with him; and that is just what God the Father wants; He has room for us all. But many people want the benefit of religion themselves while they grudge it to their neighbours, and try to secure heaven without being identified with the Father "through our Lord Jesus Christ." If they cannot get it on their own terms, they "will not go in." "Arise and claim thy sonship, and hear thy heavenly Father say, 'All that I have is thine.'"

In the afternoon the church was again filled, when Mr. Moody gave another address. The hearts of many were, perhaps not unnaturally, turned in the direction of "Prayer," but the preacher went further than that, and spoke upon "Praise"—praise in anticipation of blessing to come during these next weeks. It was fitting that a fair portion of the meeting should be devoted to vocal harmony, which was rendered by the singers before mentioned, augmented by the Oberlin quartette, composed of members of Oberlin University. The subject which occupied another crowded gathering in the evening was the grand old pleading message in Isaiah lv. 7.

It is to be remarked that the attendance is not by any means composed of the well-to-do. It is a people's church, and the people throng it, support it, and enjoy it, for there they hear words they can understand, ideas they can easily grasp, and lessons which guide and support them in the daily battle of life.

In similar strains was the Gospel preached and sung in the evening by Major Whittle and Mr. Sankey in Dr. Goodwin's Congregational church; by Rev. R. A. Torrey, Professor Towner, and Mrs. Pierson in La Salle-avenue Baptist Church; as well as by numerous students from the Bible Institute in different districts. These were, of course, all in affiliation with Mr. Moody's campaign, but it was also very gratifying to learn from various reliable sources that the churches generally throughout the city were exceptionally well attended—an indication that among the foreign visitors there are many whose delight is in the things of God.

Mr. Moody has arranged to hold a convention for the promotion of the higher Christian life from May 18 to 24, when he expects to have as speakers Rev. Hubert Brooke, Rev. Chas. Inwood, and Rev. G. H. C. M'Gregor, of Aberdeen, who have just closed a series of similar meetings in Canada.

Fresh doors are opening in various directions, and no door is open to Mr. Moody long before he walks in.

CEYLON AND INDIAN GENERAL MISSION.

Many of our readers will be interested to hear of the Lord's leadings in connection with this new mission to the heathen of Ceylon and India. The director of the Mission is Mr. B. Davidson, a Christian worker who has been engaged in Ceylon in business for several years past, and is thoroughly conversant with the spiritual needs of that island, where truly "every prospect pleases, and only man is vile." Mr. Davidson was led to give up business in order to devote himself entirely to the Lord's work, and in October last, after a period of earnest waiting upon God, He opened up this sphere of service, and gave our brother very manifest tokens of his guidance. The day after the Lord called him to undertake this Mission, a gift of £5 and a packet of jewellery was sent to him marked "for mission work in Ceylon," and within a few weeks other unsolicited gifts came in, amounting to nearly £400. Funds have been coming in since, and the Lord is leading many of his people to take a practical interest in the Mission. Applications for missionary boxes have been received from many quarters, and one family in Scotland has undertaken the support of a native evangelist in Ceylon.

The Mission is unsectarian and evangelistic in its character, and only those are accepted as workers who are prepared to trust the Lord for the supply of all their needs. No solicitation for funds is made, the Mission being supported by the freewill offerings of the Lord's people, as He whose work it is may incline their hearts to give. Rev. George C. Grubb, whose special missions in Ceylon have been greatly blessed, Mr. Walter K. Campbell, a well-known Ceylon tea planter, who has sold his estate to spend and be spent in the Master's service, and Mr. H. Marshall, publisher, London, have become referees of the Mission, and are in full sympathy with it.

Several workers of experience have already been accepted, and the hearts of many are being drawn out towards this promising field of labour. The advantages of a Training Institute in London have been offered to the Mission for any applicants requiring further training. The first party of missionaries are expected to sail for Ceylon in August next. Meanwhile, efforts are being put forth at home by the director and other members of the Mission to arouse and deepen interest in the work of foreign missions. Much blessing has resulted, also from meetings held in London, and in various parts of Scotland and Ireland, for the promotion of practical holiness, as it is felt that the only hope of missions is God-sent and God-anointed messengers. Foreign Mission Bands have been formed in many parts of the country, the objects being to disseminate information of the needs of the unevangelised regions, to pray for all missions, and to stir up Christians at home to definite and united effort for the spread of the Gospel.

Mr. Davidson, who is now in the north of Ireland, giving addresses on holiness and on missionary subjects, hopes to be in England soon, and will be pleased to receive invitations for meetings from Christian friends in any part of the United Kingdom. Invitations to hold meetings, etc., should, meanwhile, be sent to Mr. David Gardiner 20, Henderson-row, Edinburgh.

VILLAGE EVANGELISATION.

Since the conference on village work held in London, April 19th, we have received many letters telling of the deep need for the Gospel in our sadly neglected English villages, also cheering accounts of efforts being put forth by many of the Lord's servants to enlighten the spiritual darkness with the light of life. As far as possible, we have endeavoured to answer these letters, but others are still unattended to; for since the conference we have been much engaged in special work every day, in going from village to village with a Gospel caravan, in which we live, sleep, cook, etc., and do all that is needful, so that we are free from all care as to lodgings. We thus have the whole day to visit from house to house, dealing with anxious souls as we meet them, and preaching the Gospel at night to the large numbers who readily gather round, their interest having been awakened during the day. Several striking cases have been met with, and the seed sown by Gospel books as well as by the preaching is being much blessed of God.

The two villages in Bucks, where we are now working, are in a most destitute condition, although thickly populated. The only place of worship is a small church where one short service is held on Sundays, none whatever during the week. The state of the hundreds of children is lamentable, for such a thing as a Sunday-school is unknown. There is no resident clergyman or minister, no one to visit or help in any way. None of the villagers dare give ground for a tent, or open their cottages for meetings. Our horse and caravan had consequently to be sent miles away before field accommodation could be found. Scores of young men and married men spend hours on the Sunday in games, etc., as they have no service to go to.

For a whole week we have been at work in one of these places, and God's power has been with us in a remarkable way, often the whole village coming out to listen night after night; and although we speak for an hour and a-half or two hours, the people are reluctant to leave, longing to hear over again the "wonderful words of life," which are quite new to them, for they say, "We have never heard it like this before!" Such is the yearning to hear, that many of the old people from seventy to eighty years of age, walk great distances in order to listen to the glad news. The attention and eagerness exhibited by the crowds that gather is most encouraging, everyone being orderly and quiet, and one can often see the power of God working amongst them.

The people are broken-hearted at the thought of the meetings coming to an end, and beg us to continue. We have arranged to go on at least for another week, and are hoping for much blessing as the result. During thirty years' work it has not been our lot to meet with two villages in greater need of the Gospel, nor with people so ready to hear it.

Many workers write to us, offering to come and help, but to meet their expenses and needs is beyond our power, for the work of the Bucks Evangelistic Mission is a large and spreading one, and the difficulty of supporting what is already established is a matter of increasing anxiety, and prevents us from enlisting more workers at present. Undoubtedly there is no better way of evangelising our villages than by a caravan. In this way two good workers are essential. To send out inexperienced men (which is often done) is a great mistake, and a waste of time and money. It is a work which is worthy of the best of the Lord's servants, and needs very much grace and wisdom. It is also the most economical method of mission work, and facilitates work in villages and hamlets which otherwise would never have the Gospel taken to them. In a caravan with sleeping accommodation, all this is avoided, and one is free to stay as long, or as short a time in one place as the Lord may direct. The only great working expense is the horse, and this in the summer time, is not a very large item, seeing that the animal can generally be turned out in some field for a nominal sum. As regards the workers, their needs should not be very great. Many of the villagers are only too pleased to show their appreciation of the interest shown them, by sending gifts of eggs, butter, etc., to those in charge of the caravan. The worker who preceded us received several tokens of this practical gratitude.

The Gospel caravan we have been privileged to work for the last three weeks has been most kindly placed at our disposal by Rev. Horace Newton, who will himself take charge of it at the end of the week, and continue the work through the summer. We shall deeply regret bidding it good-bye. Who will send us another? Hundreds of villages are ripe for the Gospel. May the Lord thrust forth more of his workers, and the means to support them. J. E. Taylor, Hon. Manager.

ITINERATING IN IRELAND.

The following extracts from the journal of two lay helpers in the Irish Church Missions, who have recently returned to Dublin after a tour in the Irish provinces, will be of interest to our readers. During an absence of one month from the metropolis they visited four counties, attending twenty-one fairs and markets, in the majority of which they were allowed to preach freely in the open-air.

We arrived at a place where two-thirds of the people are Roman Catholics. We spread out our books at the Court House Gate, where all the people passed us, and at intervals, as we were able, we read and preached. The people were mostly attentive, but some questioned us, and made objections, which we answered. Some priests passed and heard us, and we fancy warned the people against us, and afterwards prevented others from buying. We remained at the spot for six hours, and we got a bill-poster who was passing to post up for us a copy of "St. Peter's Letter," which he did out of reach of the people, but where everyone could see it and read it. A Roman Catholic man and woman came to us and said they rejoiced some time ago when their son came home bringing a Douay Testament from a fair not far distant that we had visited; it was just what they had been wanting for a long time to obtain.

In a town where we were privileged to preach last year, we had the gladness of hearing from a Protestant bookseller of his having supplied a Roman Catholic priest with Douay Bibles. Many Roman Catholics had also come to buy them from him in preference to going to a bookseller of their own persuasion, who might question him, and perhaps get them into trouble. This good bookseller bought a stock from us of 125 of our books and booklets.

On our way back to the town which we had made our temporary head-quarters, we revisited a village where a very large fair was in progress. We sold our books and preached to the crowds of people for three hours. All were very attentive. One old man who had never read the Scriptures was very anxious to get a Douay Testament, but he had only twopence. However, we let him have it for that sum. We had several good talks with individuals, especially with a Roman Catholic man, on the remedy for sin.

We visited for the first time a very large fair, where the people were very rough, and came around us in immense crowds. We worked there for five hours, at times preaching, reading, and selling. Many showed a decidedly hostile spirit, the result, no doubt, of the presence of two priests, who went about warning the people against us. They influenced a police-constable, who pushed through the crowd and demanded to know what we were selling. We showed him both Testaments, the Protestant and the Roman Catholic, and explained the difference. He seemed perfectly satisfied, and bought a copy of the Douay version. This encouraged the people, and many purchased eagerly. We could have sold a much larger stock than we had with us.

We found ourselves in a large country town, into which the people had flocked from outlying districts to spend a holiday. It was a Roman Catholic Saint's Day, and the people thronged the chapel in large numbers. We displayed our books close by, and as the people returned from mass hundreds crowded around us. We sold a very large number of books, and kept up preaching in turn for a long time. At one time the people became so numerous they blocked the entire street, and the police asked us to stop. They afterwards gave us leave to resume, and apologised for having had to interrupt us.

Whilst preaching at a large fair some days afterwards, one clever Roman Catholic man opposed us on various points of controversy. This, of course, drew a large crowd round us, who heard the simple Gospel as we answered the man's objections from the Douay Testament. The people appeared rather suspicious of us, as though they had been warned against us by the priests, and our sale in that town was not extensive. One day we asked an old man who kept a bookstall in a market if he had ever sold the Douay Testament. He said he had, but the priests would not allow the people to buy, as the books taught them too much. He bought eight copies of us and six booklets to sell again.

We attended a large fair some miles from our headquarters. We had a very successful time, both in preaching and selling. Many heard and bought the Word, and there were only a few objectors. A gentleman who had heard us at another fair some weeks previously, told us that the Roman Catholic priest at the place had ordered all who had purchased Testaments from us to burn them, but the gentleman does not believe the people complied. We had a good conversation with a man for some time on the mass, confession, and Mariolatry. He was a most attentive and interested listener as we read various passages of Scripture which were strange and new to him, and he thanked us. He is now reading the Bible for himself.

We have heard a most interesting account of another man who some time ago bought one of our books, who lent it a friend employed on a railway. This man passed on the book to another Roman Catholic acquaintance, who eagerly read the book, and afterwards got a Douay Testament. He is now said to be "as good as out of Romanism," having given up the Mass and Confession.

PEOPLE'S MISSION, BOMBAY.

Soon after I came to Bombay in July, 1891, my attention was drawn to the disgraceful condition of a certain portion of the district of Cammateepoora known as Kursetjee Suklajee-street, a street thronging with the native population of Bombay, and occupied by houses of ill-fame filled with women of all nationalities. Having to pass that way daily I noticed that it was constantly frequented by Europeans of all classes, and that it was a popular resort of young boys from the age of twelve and upwards, who came there for the purpose of "sight seeing;" yet it was impossible to pass down the street at any time without being shouted after and enticed to vice, on every side. I felt that something should be done, so after taking a careful survey of the locality, I took the matter to the Lord, and after earnest prayer for guidance, I started the mission in a small room at the corner of Bapty-road and Suklajee-street, holding meetings every night, and giving some time to visiting also. A more suitable room has now been taken fronting on Suklajee-street. The Lord has sealed the work with his blessing, many souls have been saved, and I believe eternity alone will reveal the good that has been done. I have had persons in the Fort and other places step up to me and say, "You do not know me now," and remind me of the time when I spoke to them in Suklajee-street, at the same time thanking me for what I said to them, and praising God that from that time they had lived a different life.

Although I have had the responsibility of this work, I have had many willing helpers. Mr. Gladwin joined heartily in the work on its initiation, and only left when compelled to do so by other claims upon his time. Miss Miles and Mrs. Dyer visit the street every Saturday afternoon, talking to the women in their houses, and giving tracts and Scripture portions in various languages. Miss Sherman, Miss Douglas and Miss Bell, of the Pentecost Band, also visit on other occasions. An urgent need is a small Home where women can be taken and tested as to the sincerity of their desire for honest work.

Much has already been effected in the way of checking the public exhibition of vice. All who know the locality say that a decided improvement is visible, though there is still more than enough manifest to make a Christian sad at heart.

AMRITSAR, PUNJAUB.—In a letter written to Mr. R. Percy Cockin, Caistor, by Dr. H. Martyn Clark, Amritsar, Punjaub, India, he says:—"I have only been back three months, and I am busier than ever. We had about 62,000 patients last year, and this year we shall have about 80,000. I do operations every day. Your prayer is being heard; such lots of people are learning to love the Lord Jesus through the work of the medical mission. There have been six or seven baptisms already, and on next Sunday there are to be five more."

MAKE ROOM.

A sweet fair face, with glad soft eyes, crowned with a radiance of golden hair, belonged to Minnie Mowbray. Everyone loved her, for who was so gentle in manner, so kind in trouble, so sympathetic in sorrow, so happy in everyone's joy as Minnie? As her schoolfellows were starting for a picnic to the New Forest, there was a cry of welcome as Minnie appeared, and an instant closing-in of the girls in the brake.

"Plenty of room, plenty of room!" they all cried, and crushing one another in their eager attempts to give her space, they managed to squeeze their friend in amongst the party.

"I am sure I am one too many," said Minnie's gentle voice, but cries of "No! no!" silenced her, and one girl, speaking for the rest, said affectionately:—

"We could not be happy without you; everybody likes to make room for you." And in spite of the squeezing that resulted, all declared that they had enjoyed the day twice as much as if Minnie had been left behind for want of room.

. . . . . .

"That's right, girls; spread out your dresses. Marion, cover that chair with our cloaks and hats. Don't leave any room for her, nasty, spiteful creature!"

So spoke a party of girls as they caught sight of another coming up the lecture-room, looking from side to side for a vacant seat. As Ellen paused for a brief moment before their row, some averted their faces, while Marion West, catching her schoolfellow's eye, said coolly, "There is no room in this row; you had better try further on."

The girls laughed together, as Ellen took the hint, and angrily tossing her head, walked on. They cared little for her displeasure, and only congratulated themselves on having got rid of an unwelcome companion.

. . . . . .

Only two everyday scenes in a schoolgirl's life; yet they rise up before me as illustrations of two grand truths, and you who have looked with me at the word-pictures above, read with me the parables they teach.

"Make room," first, for the Saviour, your best, truest, most sympathising Friend. His companionship will sweeten life's pleasures and halve life's cares.

Make room, at any cost, for every good thought and feeling that seeks admission into your heart and life. Welcome with a glad smile each holy impression, bright opportunity, or sweet, pure desire.

But "give no place to the devil." When he comes, seeking a resting-place by your side for himself, his vile promptings, and his evil imaginations, cry out, "No room! no room!" Tell him to leave you. "Resist the devil, and he will flee from you."

Have "no room" for evil companions in your daily life; "no room" for bad books in your daily reading; "no room" for unkind words in your daily conversation; "no room" in heart, life, or love for anything that is not sweet, pure, and Christlike.

"Yet there is room!" Where? In the Saviour's heart of love, in the good Shepherd's safe, safe fold. For whom? For the wandering sheep of earth, or the lost lambs of the wilderness. Plenty of room? Why not enter in? See, the Saviour's arms are open wide, and his tender voice welcomes you, poor, tired child. You may come to-day and find room, and rest, and pardon for all sin in his blessed enfolding.

The door of the fold is not yet closed: thousands have passed through, and yet there is room.

Weary lamb! leave the wilderness and the long wandering, and find shelter in the fold.

Oh the joy of knowing that we are safe, safe for ever; for "My sheep shall never perish," says the Good Shepherd, "neither shall anyone pluck them out of my hand." Will you take heart to-day, and seek to enter in while yet there is room?

ON FAITH.

By the late Dr. Adolph Saphir.

The eleventh chapter of Hebrews is like a gallery of pictures of great men, from the time almost of the creation of the world down to the time of Christ—for 4000 years. Just as in the palace of a king we find a number of portraits of the great kings and princes who belonged to the families that have lived in the same palace, and have sat upon the same throne for centuries before, so it is that in this chapter we have the portraits of our fathers and grandfathers and great-grandfathers in the family of God. We have not a picture of their faces, we have not a description whether Abraham was a little man or a tall man, or what sort of face Isaac had, or Jacob, or Moses, but we have a description of their life and character.

And now after 4000 years these men of whom we read are most precious to God. Everything else is, as it were, forgotten, crumbled into the dust, but these men, who lived and loved God, are most beloved by God; and He has brought them unto Himself just like precious stones, leaving out everything else.

From this we must learn the great truth, that of all things in the world what God loves best is human beings. God thinks that the whole world is nothing compared with a single soul. When God looks back upon the 4000 years He says, "Well, now, what is the use of it? What have I got out of these 4000 years?" And what has He got out of them? Abel and Enoch and Noah, and Abraham and Isaac and Jacob, and Joseph and David and Solomon, and a great number of other human beings who loved Him.

What does God like best in the world? Men, women, children. What does He like best in men? It is not their strength, it is not their knowledge; but it is their heart. God likes men best in the whole world, and God likes the heart best in man. What is that He likes best in man's heart? This chapter tells us what it is He likes best. He likes faith best. God looks down from heaven upon the earth, and He likes men better than all trees, or beasts, or fields, or rivers, or gold, and everything that there is. He says, "I do not care about any of these things compared with the human being." Then, when He looks at the human being, He says, "I do not care for their strength, or size, or cleverness, or knowledge. What I care about is their heart." Then when God looks into the heart, He says, "The only thing I care about is this, that he should believe Me."

So when Christ comes again He will be looking out for faith. It says, "When the Son of Man shall come, shall He find faith on the earth?" Christ will come again, and He will look out where his people are. How will He know them? He will see whether they have faith, and all those that believe Him, and love Him, and think about Him, and depend upon Him, and pray to Him, He will gather and take to Himself.

If we believe in the Lord, our names also are known in the heavens, just as God remembered the name of Enoch, and Jacob, and Moses, and David. Are there any children or grown-up people here who have faith. Their names also are written in the Book of Life. And when Christ comes again we are told that we shall sit down with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, in the Kingdom. We shall see all those glorious men of whom we have read in the Bible, and we shall be with them, and with the angels, and the Lord Jesus, for evermore.

This will be a good exercise for the children and the young people—to read the eleventh chapter of Hebrews, and to consult from the Old Testament all that is said about the men who are mentioned here, and then see what the Apostle Paul thought of them. The apostle was generally thinking of these men, and particularly of their history, and the great lesson he had learnt from their history: that God looks at the heart, and that which God sees in the heart is simply this—whether we believe in Him or not. If we have faith God is pleased with us; if we have not faith God is not pleased.

LEISTON, SUFFOLK.

The Nonconformist schools of this town were recently favoured with a visit by Mr. Newton Jones, of the Sunday-school Union. The Congregational Church was placed at his disposal, and hearty, bright, healthy, and helpful addresses were given on Sunday morning and evening to the adults, and in the afternoon to the young people. On Monday a children's service was held. The visit of Mr. Newton Jones will long be remembered.

MISSION AT SUTTON, SURREY.

Under the auspices of the Sunday School Union, Mr. T. Lewis Sayer, C.S.S.M., conducted a Children's Mission, May 15 to 19, in the Benhill-street Chapel, Sutton, Surrey. The services were well attended by young people, with very cheering results. Many who passed from darkness to light at Mr. Sayer's Mission in the same place three years ago were present, and helped to make the meetings a success. The principal Nonconformist Sunday-schools in the town co-operated in the work.

"THE VOICE OF MY BELOVED."

At morning prime there is a Voice that calleth,
"Come unto Me."
Upon mine ear its accent brightly falleth,
Tender and free.

In golden noon's warm light the land is lying
With sweet refrain;
It cometh softly in the wind's low sighing,
Or gentle rain.

At the calm evening-time, with church bells ringing,
It falls, in love,
That I forget to hear the wood-bird singing,
Or cooing dove.

At midnight's solemn hour, while deep stars glisten
"Come unto Me."
What, calling still? I clasp my hands and listen:
Who can it be?

Those stirring tones that fill my soul with yearning,
So grave and deep,
Into my waking heart so strangely burning:
I cannot sleep.

Oh, that dear voice—the voice of Jesus blessed
Unceasingly;
It calleth weary soul, by sin oppressed,
To thee, to thee.

O royal Lord, that I have kept Thee calling
From dawn till eve,
In penitence low at thy dear feet falling,
I deeply grieve.

Yea, my Beloved, and henceforth nought shall sever
Thyself and me;
I now renounce all earthly love for ever,
And come to Thee.

WORKING LADS IN WANDSWORTH.

A deeply interesting and most useful work has been carried on for the last ten years in the neighbourhood of the Wandsworth-road, with continued and ever-increasing blessing amongst working lads and young men, by a lady who has devoted her life and means to the work. It was commenced in one small room, and as the number of lads increased, another room was added, then a house was taken, and still a larger one, and yet the numbers grow. Several lads who came to the Mission in its early days (some coming from homes where drink had been the curse) are to-day sober, respectable working men, and, what is better, Christian men.

In connection with this work there is a Mothers' Meeting for the mothers of the young men; also a Children's Service for their younger brothers and sisters, Bible Classes, Night Schools, Singing Classes, a very good Cricket Club, also a Football Club. Some of the needs of the work have been made known, and daily prayer is offered that God will provide all that is necessary to carry on this work. Hitherto this blessing has been abundantly vouchsafed.

The room in which the meetings are held is far too small, and is inconveniently crowded; and it has been decided to try and get sufficient money to build an Institute, particularly as there is a piece of ground to be sold for £900 in a most suitable position in the Wandsworth-road, where hundreds of these lads pass daily to and from their work. The Institute will comprise a hall, to seat about 250, for Bible classes, lectures, etc., reading-room and library, class rooms, gymnasium, etc., etc. £2,500 will purchase the land and complete the building. Friends disposed to help should write to Miss Mannering, Mission to Working Lads, 186, Larkhall-lane, Clapham, London, S.W.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, MAY 28.—EZRA I.

God will ever be mindful of his covenant. And there were also many remembrancers, as Daniel and other like-minded pious exiles, who gave him no rest, and were ever asking Him, for David's sake, to bring his people from captivity. The Lord stirred up the spirit of Cyrus (1), and the spirits of the people (5). How clearly the minds of men are subject to his promptings! May we never be disobedient to the heavenly visions that visit us, but always on the alert to work out with fear and trembling whatsoever He may work in.

The opening words of the royal proclamation recall our Lord's last spoken address to his followers: "All power is given unto Me in heaven and on earth, go ye therefore." How absolute should be our obedience to Him, and how certain our confidence in his all-sufficiency. He cannot fail those whom He stirs up. He will see to it that their hands shall be strengthened with silver, and gold, and goods, and precious things. "Where the word of the King is, there is power."

The vessels had been in safe keeping during those years of anarchy and confusion, like the precious MSS. of Scripture during the middle ages. God has strange ways, which are past finding out, but the end always justifies Him to the full. Trust thou in Him; he makes no mistakes.

MONDAY, MAY 29.—EZRA II.

Throughout their history the true Israelites were very eager to maintain their genealogy. All their reverses made them more tenacious of their national stock. And wherever they were scattered, they carefully guarded their national registers. We should not be less prepared to trace our sonship in the great family of God. Each should be able to establish his descent, and to vindicate his claim to be considered a child of God, a joint-heir with Christ, a partaker in the inheritance which God has promised to them that love Him. If you cannot establish your sonship, you may doubt your right to the spiritual blessings which are part of the family estates.

All this is clearly illustrated by the prohibition issued against the priests, whose names were not found in the register, eating of the most holy things. They must wait till the Urim and Thummim attested that they were Israelites indeed. And what that witness was in those olden days, the testimony of the Holy Spirit is within us. He witnesses with our spirit that we are born of God.

The first act of the restored Jews was to set up the House of God. For this they gave willingly, and after their ability. The cause of God must ever be our first concern. And if we seek first the Kingdom of God, all things else shall be added.

TUESDAY, MAY 30.—EZRA III.

First the altar. This was the centre of their religion. They could better dispense with all else but this. So the cross of Jesus, whether as reminding us of his work for us in justification, or of his claims in sanctification, is the centre of our worship and of our life. Put the altar in its right place, and all else will gather around it; so if we are right in consecration, we shall grow in grace, and symmetry of character, and in service to God and man.

Foundation laying is not always pleasant work. It means toil under ground, down in the trenches, unnoticed and unknown. And those who begin are often not permitted to finish. In the present case also the foundation-laying recalled the glories that had vanished for ever with the sack and burning of Solomon's Temple. But amid all, the minstrel Hope brought her harp, and sang her sweet strains of encouragement. In spite of the fewness and poverty of the builders the voice of Inspiration had assured them that the glory of the latter house should surpass that of the former. And so by the reckoning of faith, in sure anticipation that God would keep his word, in sublime trust, the builders encircled their foundations with their songs.

See that your apparel is white, clean, O priests of the Lord, and raise your notes on high to cheer God's children as they strive to rear the temple and city of God amid the rubbish and ruin around.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 31.—EZRA IV.

So long as you lead a languid and unaggressive life, the great enemy will leave you alone, but so soon as you begin to build God's temple, you may count on his strenuous opposition. When we are permitted to go on from day to day without much temptation, we may fear that we are doing little to destroy evil and construct good. But the virulent hate of the wicked one is a comfortable sign that his kingdom is suffering serious damage, and he is afraid of worse. Let us so live, that we may give the devil good reason to fear and hate us. But there is a stronger than he.

The first proposal of the enemy is a mutual alliance. He shrinks from declaring open war, and endeavours to attain his end by asking permission to co-operate. We must beware of the proposal to join in with the ungodly. Their arguments may sound very fair, and appeal to a false liberality of sentiment, but the golden cup contains poison, and beneath the kiss is the traitor's hand. This is why so many fair enterprises have miscarried. They have afforded common ground for co-operation between the false and counterfeit Israel, whilst God has been alienated.

Their first proposal being frustrated, they endeavoured to attain their end by going to headquarters, and securing an injunction to stay further operations. But the time was well spent in the further consolidation of the new settlers, and finally the embargo was removed. You cannot thwart God and prosper.

THURSDAY, JUNE 1.—EZRA V.

It does not seem that the Jews waited for any intimation that the royal edict was removed before they began to build the house of God. It was enough that the prophets gave the Divine command, and they were sure that God would make the execution of his decree possible. So in simple faith they stepped out. And it was as they expected, the eye of God was upon them, and the opposition did not make them cease. Whatever the difficulties that may lie in front of you, if you are once sure of God's will, go forward,—the crooked shall be made straight. The eyes of the Lord run to and fro to show Himself strong on behalf of those whose heart is perfect towards Him.

In the letter sent to Darius, we get a side glimpse of the energy with which God's work was prosecuted. "The work goeth on with diligence and prospereth in their hands." There are no such workers as those who have the will of God behind them, and the eye of God above them; and side by side with this there was great humility. They confessed that they had provoked God to wrath, although He had so greatly favoured them. Be as a rock to men, and as a reed to God. Strong to do his work or suffer his will, but ever ready to confess that you are an unprofitable servant, that you are utterly dependent on the grace of God, and that it is only of his mercy that you are employed in his service.

FRIDAY, JUNE 2.—EZRA VI.

How much depended on the finding of that roll! But God knew where it was, and led them to discover it, and inclined Darius to ratify it. When we are anxious and troubled about our relations to our fellow-men, we do little by worrying, we do much by trusting. Missing documents, alien hearts, tangled skeins, all yield before the hand of our Father working for us.

The difficulty raised by their foes really reacted for the benefit of the Jews, for the king decreed that their expenses should be met, and their needs supplied. Day by day sacrifices of sweet savour were to be provided. Thus God makes the wrath of man to praise Him; and thus when we are living upon God's plan and need material resources for his work, He will see that they are forthcoming from the most unlikely sources, and the revenues of heathen monarchs shall be laid under contribution. The earth is the Lord's. Rich men and great men should act as his stewards, ministering his property for the maintenance of his glorious Name.

When the house was finished it was dedicated with joy, and the priesthood was rightly ordered. And from a renovated and restored priesthood, influences spread towards all Israel that led them to separation and purity and joy. We do more by life than by lip. Paint your own cottage, and all your neighbours will paint theirs. And as you see God working on your behalf in turning the hearts of men, be strong to work for Him.

SATURDAY, JUNE 3.—EZRA VII.

The hand of God rests upon those who love his Word, and where it lights, there the hearts of men are inclined to help. The king granted all Ezra's requests. Beneath the covert of that hand we can journey safely.

It is good to set our heart to seek God's law, but searching must always be combined with doing, and when we do we have a right to teach. Oh God, give us the steadfast heart, set on knowing and performing thy will. May the rudder of our soul be held by thy strong hand, that it may vacillate beneath the touch of no cross current.

See how Ezra's love for God's law impressed Artaxerxes with the conviction that it was perfect. He commanded also that the will of God should be the supreme court of reference to Ezra and his brethren in the disposal of the freewill offerings. He further enjoined that they should do exactly the commands of the God of heaven. He ordained that all who refused to do the will of God should be punished. So great was his respect for the law, that he left Ezra to do very much as he thought best. This reverence on the part of a heathen monarch for God's law shames us. Oh, to make more of it ourselves! To be people of the Book, and to exalt it as we are exalted by it, in the judgment even of those who do not revere it!

INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSONS.

JUNE 4.

Reverence and Fidelity.—Ecc. v. 1-12.

Golden Text: Rom. xii. 11.

The author of this book calls himself Koheleth (i. 1), a Hebrew word, of which Ecclesiastes is the Greek translation. It is variously interpreted as "preacher" (one who addresses an assembly), "debater" (a member of an assembly), and "collector" (one who calls an assembly together). The preacher represents himself as Solomon, the son of David (i. 1 and 12), and there is the strongest reason for believing that he was the author of the book. His Divinely-given wisdom, and the painful experiences of his later years, eminently fitted him for such a task. Others who have abandoned this view are hopelessly at variance among themselves as to authorship and as to date.

As to the plan of the book there is also much disagreement; but the simplest and perhaps most practical is that which regards it as "a confession, written in prose, devoid of plan, except so far as it is a continuous unburdening of self. Its theme is the vanity of life. Its contents are miscellaneous illustrations of the theme, derived from experience, and told with great sadness." The close of the book (xii. 13, 14) gives the conviction to which the author's experience leads.

Apply the lesson:—Nothing "under the sun" can fully satisfy the longing and needs of the heart. "Thou hast made us for thyself, and our hearts can find no rest except in Thee."—Augustine. In one of his "Morning Exercises," Wm. Jay contrasts two men, Voltaire, honoured, rich, a companion of kings, a prince in literature, doing some noble deeds, a favourite of the multitude, writes in review of a life of the world without religion, "I wish I had never been born." The holy Halyburton on his deathbed said, "I long for God's salvation: I bless his name. I have found Him, and die rejoicing in Him. Oh, blessed be God that ever I was born."

This lesson is suggested by the preacher's dis, appointment when he found in religion formality, insincerity, hypocrisy, indolence. He does not therefore, condemn religion as some have done, but seeks to correct its abuses.

Counsels for Worshippers (1-7.)—These may be briefly stated thus:—1. Come to the Sanctuary with reverence (1). In Solomon's day, the house of God was the Temple; now it is wherever "two or three are gathered in the name of Jesus" (Matt. xviii. 20), Preparation is as needful for the individual worshippers as for the minister who leads the worship. The fatherly relationship which God sustains to his children must not lead to irreverence. Be "ready to hear," not for amusement or for criticism, but for profit and obedience. Thoughtlessness and irreverence make our worship into a sacrifice of fools.

2. In all the engagements of the Sanctuary be sincere (2, 3). Thoughtless words, however orthodox in sentiment, however musically expressed, are not worship. It is terrible to reflect how many confessions of sin and expressions of devotion to God are mere utterances of the lip. A few sincere words spoken from the heart are better than fluent prayers which the heart does not mean. Remember to whom you pray, and what a distance there is between Him and you. "Dreams" are a result of the mind's occupation during the day; our worship may be as empty and vain as our dreams. Our faculties must be awake in order to offer acceptable worship.

3. To the vows made in the Sanctuary be true (4—7). Vows are not forbidden, but in proportion as a man knows himself he will be careful as to making them. They are to be regarded as promises made to God, and therefore not to be violated without grievous sin. Scripture does not forbid their being made in sickness (Psa. lxvi. 13, 14). But having made them, it is needful to "defer not" as to paying them. Delay does not lessen the obligation, while it weakens the determination. "The angel" (6) may be either literally an angel (1 Cor. xi. 10); or the priest or minister of the Sanctuary (Rev. i. 20).

Cautions for this Life (8 12).—There is the closest connection between a man's relation to God and his relation to men. The worship of the Sanctuary is to fit us for the work of the world.

There are two cautions here:—1. Against oppression (8, 9). An unjust king can be a cruel oppressor of his people, yet on his part it is folly, since he is himself dependent on those who till the soil. The One "higher than they" is the Lord Himself, who will in another world right what is wrong here. In the light of the reckoning of the great day, it is better to be the oppressed than the oppressor.

2. Against inordinate love of wealth (10—12). The unsatisfied condition of one who has much, and is obtaining more, is contrasted with the contentment that the labouring man may enjoy. The best blessings of life are not to be purchased by money.

Ministering Women

AT THE HOME OF INDUSTRY.—II.

AMONG THE WORKING GIRLS.

The life of a working girl in the East of London is beset with many a difficulty and peril. At an early age, in most cases, she has to become a bread-winner, and to take an active part in the great struggle for existence which goes on among the masses of our city poor. Unfortified by the steadying influences of a matured education, with few home encouragements or helps to a life of high and holy resolve; pent up in a factory during the long working day, with very mixed companions, there is every temptation to her to spend the evening leisure hours in so-called pleasures of an unregulated and doubtful sort. Unless she can be induced to come within the circle of some good influence during these seasons of freedom, the chances are great that the lower side of her nature will gain the mastery, and her life will become full soon a moral wreck.

How vastly important that these high-spirited volatile young sisters should, through the loving agency of Christian women, be taught the virtues of self-help, self-respect, and, best of all, self-renunciation, so that the power of the Mighty Saviour may possess and preserve them along the slippery pathway they have to tread. For a number of years now this work of seeking out and saving the working girls in East London factories has been an integral and invaluable branch of Miss Macpherson's work at the Home of Industry. It showed considerable development when the mission centre was moved from Commercial-street to the more commodious premises at 29, Bethnal Green-road. There a part of the upper floor of the building has been consecrated to this service; and not only consecrated in the sense of being set apart, but richly hallowed by many tokens of the Divine working in the hearts and lives of these toiling sisters.

Much that would be interesting to the reader might be written at second hand about this department of the work, and the outcome of it, but space is pressing and condensation imperative. I will therefore avail myself of a little account prepared by Miss Turner, who has had charge of this branch for years past, and who has greatly endeared herself to her young sisters by her helpful sympathy and unwearied devotion:—

We visit a large number of factories every week, and find the work very encouraging. A hearty welcome is always given to the visitor, and perfect quiet reigns while the message is being given. We value this opportunity of visiting the large factories, as it brings the Gospel to a number of young men and young women who never go to church, chapel, or mission-room. We come in contact with over a thousand of these busy workers in a week. Let us take a peep into a few work-rooms.

We enter a box-maker's establishment near us. It is four o'clock, and the young women are enjoying a quiet cup of tea. They are very hearty, and as soon as we appear they call out, "A stool for teacher." "Teacher" sits down in the middle of a crowd of girls. "Tell us a tale, teacher." Teacher, looking at the tired faces, and seeing how wearily some young form is resting against the table, finds it very easy to tell of the One who being weary, sat thus on the well.

The half-hour passes very quickly, but before we leave the workroom we get a chance for a little individual dealing. What sad stories we hear sometimes. There is a young girl coughing badly. "Have you been to the hospital?" "Yes; the doctor says I need rest, but I can't take it, so there's an end of it."

The happy holiday time is coming, and many a young heart beats high with hope at the thought of bracing sea breezes and quiet evening strolls. Would it not make the young lady's holiday a happier one if, before the hot streets are left behind, she were to see to it that some hard-worked sister is enabled to take a five days' rest and change?

We pass into another factory, a large tailoring place. When we got an entrance into this workroom we asked God to save every girl in the place. Already He has given us an earnest of what He will yet do. It is gladdening to see girls who once frequented the music-hall quietly sitting in our upper room studying their Bibles and preparing themselves to take a share in God's work.

The scene in the workroom is an interesting one. Numbers of the girls are sitting on bales of goods. As we pass among them we, too, sit down, and tell "the old old story, of Jesus and his love." The sunshine is streaming through the large windows; how hot and close it is! But numbers of the girls are laughing merrily, and send us off with a chorus of "Good-byes." As we pass out we whisper to two or three, "Why do you treat the servant so well when you have no welcome for the Master?"

So day by day we sow the seed. In one very rough workroom we have now ten Christian girls; not long ago we had not one professed follower of the Lord Jesus. In this factory the Christian band now numbers nearly two hundred. Some of the members are far away, but they still keep in touch with their old "Home."

This realistic sketch is typical of the work that goes on all around the Home of Industry. Many girls work in cigar and other factories, in a physical atmosphere far from healthy, and where the moral atmosphere is still more deleterious. I may not enlarge on this; suffice to say that the conversation among male fellow-workers is too often of an unrestrained and corrupting kind. How different are the surroundings when these girls gather into their very own parlour up near the roof of the Home of Industry, and have a quiet, restful time; or when they form themselves into a working class and make their own garments, under the guidance of the lady workers, while they listen to good music or a stirring recitation mayhap, or a tenderly-worded Gospel appeal; or when they meet in their "Christian Band" for Bible study or for prayer, under the devoted tutelage of their long-standing friend, Mr. Wilson.

This Home of Industry is in truth to them a haven of rest and refuge from week to week, and from year to year; and they dearly prize its advantages. The early days of difficulty and of wilful disturbance have long gone by. The girls have learned to know, to trust, and to love those who plan and labour and pray for their true happiness; and the work is now as pleasant as it is blessed and fruitful. Habits of economy, industry, temperance, and all the social virtues are inculcated and learned line upon line; above all, the worth of the soul and the need of a Saviour are brought home by loving and winning methods. Who can count the number of those who are thus led to cast their burdens of sin and sorrow and want on the One who is strong to save and ever present to deliver? Who can reckon up the jewels that are being patiently polished for the Master's crown on the day of his appearing.

A great boon in connection with this part of the Home of Industry work would be some quiet, healthy suburban place where the girls could be drafted in small companies and at little expense, during these beautiful summer months, for rest and recreation and renewed health. Who will claim the honour and privilege of providing this House of Mercy? The deed would be thrice blessed. Observer.

FRUIT APPEARING.

About six years ago, my brother and I, aged sixteen and nineteen years respectively, were brought to a saving knowledge of the truth, and started working for Him—speaking on the Sunday in the villages. One village—Beazley End—about five miles from here, was laid especially on our hearts. Two years ago last October we started taking the prayer-meeting there, on the Friday evenings we drove over with other friends and have kept on the meetings nine months in the year ever since.

We saw no fruit of our labours, and often have been tempted to give the meetings up. About three months ago we altered the meeting from Friday to Tuesday—resulting in an increased number of attendants. A friend was preaching there on Sunday evening, May 7, and three lads about sixteen years old were deeply convicted of sin. The following Tuesday, after the usual service, we announced an inquirers' meeting, quite half the people staying, the Spirit of the Lord working mightily. Again, last evening there were numbers pleading for mercy and pardon. It would be vain to try and estimate results, but we know of six, at any rate, who have professed conversion, and are rejoicing in Christ.

I am now working at the Congregational Chapel at a village called Shalford, about three miles from Beazley End, and the Spirit is moving there. Last Thursday and Sunday evenings souls were gathered in. I trust that this record may be helpful to some of my brethren who, unnoticed, are working for Jesus. Frank Martin.

ST. PETER'S, CLERKENWELL.—Rev. W. Haslam hopes to begin, on May 27, a ten days' mission at the Martyrs' Memorial Church, St. John-street-road, E.C. Inviting his parishioners, 9000 in number, to the meetings, the vicar, Rev. W. H. Griffiths, says:—"In this mission an earnest, prayerful effort will be made to rouse the careless, to decide waverers, to restore backsliders, and to deepen the life of God's own children." The mission arrangements impose upon Mr. Griffiths a financial burden, which he looks to outside friends to share with him. The co-operation of singers and other workers will also be welcome. The vicarage is in Ashby-street, Clerkenwell, E.C.

A JUBILEE ASSEMBLY.

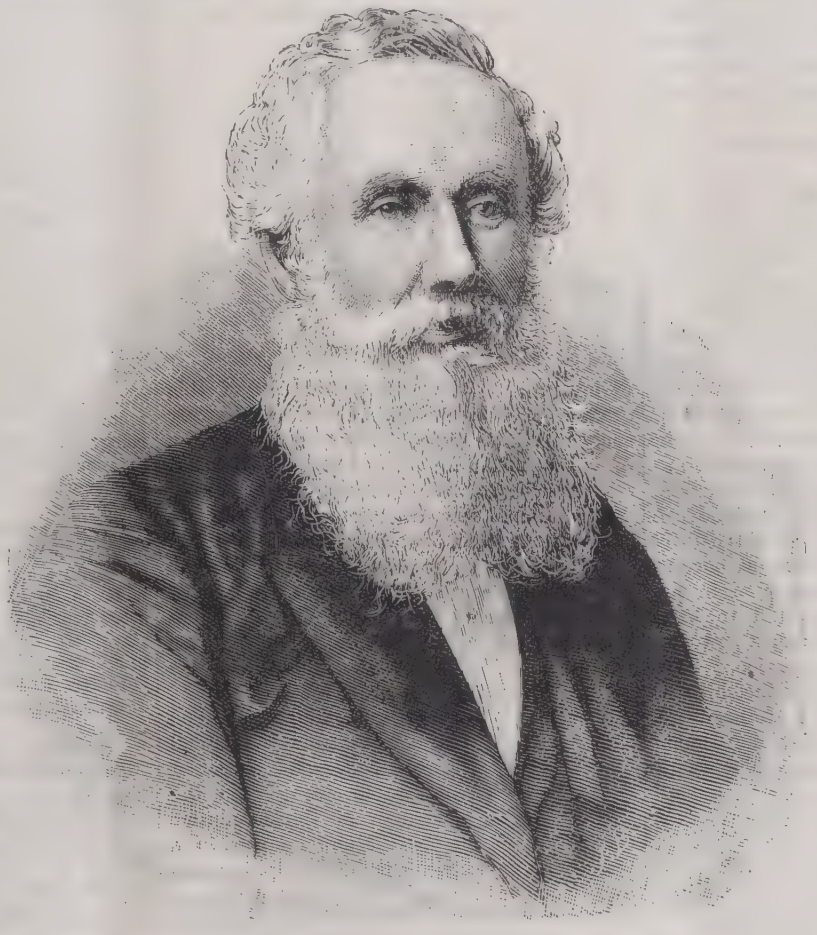
This year the Free Church of Scotland celebrates her jubilee; on May 18, 1843, she left the Establishment, headed by Dr. Chalmers and his brilliant lieutenants, Drs. Candlish, Cunningham, Buchanan, Begg, and Guthrie. Since then hers has been a remarkable history, for during that time she has built churches, manses, and schools in well-nigh every parish in Scotland, raised upwards of twenty-three millions sterling, and sent forth hundreds of labourers into the Foreign Mission field. It was not to be wondered at, then, that the Assembly which met in Edinburgh on Thursday of last week should have drawn to itself deep and widespread attention and interest.

The demand for tickets of admission was quite unprecedented, and when the opening day came round, as the hall was free to all, visitors began to arrive at it shortly after eight o'clock, though the services did not commence till noon. By that hour every inch of standing ground, not to speak of the seats, was occupied, whilst hundreds hung about the corridor and lobbies, and many more returned home, utterly unable to get near the doors.

Those, however, who did get inside were rewarded for the martyrdom they suffered because of the heat and crush. The new Moderator, Rev. Dr. Walter Smith, of the Free High Church, Edinburgh, delivered what may be fittingly called an epoch-making address. Throwing aside the trammels of precedent, he boldly faced the present-day duty of the Church of Christ, and put into the hands of his own Church a programme of work, which, if faithfully carried out for the next fifty years, will make a considerable change in Scotland and many other parts of the world. The trumpet at his lips gave no uncertain sound, for he summoned the Church to the work of the Lord against those mighty forces of evil which are creating that dark and tangled social problem which is becoming the terror of statesmen. According to him, it is only faith in the living, reigning Christ which can raise and equip an army fit to cope successfully with these forces; and if his burning words get hold of the heart of the Free Church she will do more in the next fifty-years of her history than she has done in the past, to entitle her to the thanks of Christian men every where. She has all along been characterised by home missionary activity; for the poor and the sunken masses of our large cities ever lay near the heart of her noble founder, Chalmers; but she must bestir herself and do more in this field if she is to answer to Dr. Smith's stirring appeal, which should be printed and circulated broadcast over the country.

That the enthusiasm manifested on the opening day would deepen and strengthen was evident from the character of the proceedings of the next three days. The galleries were generally well filled by the public, even when routine work was being got through, while the body of the house, which is reserved for members of Assembly, always presented a good appearance. The devotional exercises which precede business were engaged in with much fervour, and wherever aggressive Christian work was referred to the audience and house alike plainly testified that they were in deepest sympathy with it. A layman, for instance, fairly captivated the Assembly, when he told how in Glasgow a congregation had grown in two years from 200 to 1500 members by the simple preaching of the Gospel and the earnest work of volunteer labourers, chiefly working men. His own testimony as to how the truth got round his heart deeply moved the ministers present, and will likely induce many of them to be more simple, direct, and homely in their pulpit addresses. A young minister also touched the heart of the House when he said that they were erring by "running their services on stereotyped lines," and advocated solo-singing in the churches, thus utilising a gift which many of their people had in a high degree. He bore witness to the blessing which had accompanied Mr. Sankey's singing, and many in the crowded gathering bore out that testimony by their hearty applause.

Altogether, this bids fair to be a memorable Assembly in many ways; next week we shall furnish our readers with a short sketch of its more salient features



THE LATE

DR. BURNS THOMSON, F.R.C.S.E., F.R.S.E.,

FOUNDER OF THE EDINBURGH MEDICAL MISSION.

AT Bournemouth, on April 29, there passed to his rest the brother beloved whose countenance looks out upon us from this page, and who delighted on all suitable occasions to sign himself, "W. Burns Thomson, Medical Missionary."

His home-going closes a chapter in recent Christian movements which might be entitled "The Rise of Medical Missions," or, as a brother perhaps still more aptly puts it, "The Modern Revival of Medical Missions." When that chapter comes to be written in detail, it will be found that among the many worthy men whose names rise to memory in association with the earlier days of the movement, the central and most conspicuous figure is that of Burns Thomson. On him in particular God laid the burden and travail of lifting the cause of medical missions into the view, and commending it to the acceptance, of the Christian Church. His task was not an easy one. It needed a strong man—one in whom a clear conviction that medical missions form an important part of the Gospel method, and a resolute purpose that the Church should know it, should be blended with a simple and unswerving faith in the guidance and help of God. All who had the privilege of his closer acquaintance know that Burns Thomson was just such a man. And when, in 1859, the Master took him and his like-minded wife, and planted them in 39, Cowgate, Edinburgh, He was initiating that wave of medical missionary interest which has since touched every church and every missionary society in this country, and which is spreading itself, slowly, indeed, but surely, to the various missionary societies of the Continent. From that time medical missions had at least one living exemplification in our midst, and the eloquent pen and speech of our brother, as in all the great cities of the United Kingdom he advocated a cause which was to him, for Christ's sake, more precious than life, accomplished a complete change in Christian opinion. Noble men have risen up since, and by the blessing of God have done much to extend and deepen the interest in medical missions, but Burns Thomson was the man whom God chose for the labour, if also for the honour, of a brave and successful pioneer.

Born at Kirriemuir, in Forfarshire, of godly parents, who died while he was still a lad, and owing much to the care and affection of his elder brother, it was at Golspie, in Sutherlandshire, where, about the age of seventeen, the great decision was made. A vivid reminiscence of those days by the one who was his companion on the occasion, is of a scene behind a hedge at Golspie, when the two lads knelt and dedicated themselves to Christ and to any service to which He might call them. Tutorial work in a private family followed Golspie, and it was then that, in repeated sailings round Cape Wrath, and in other excursions, Burns Thomson developed that taste for natural science which, ere many years, brought him the honour of F.R.S.E., and supplied him through the rest of his career with those analogies which he could so deftly use in handling questions of the spiritual life.

He was well over twenty when he came to Edinburgh to enter on a University curriculum. Like many another Scotch lad, he knew something of the pathos of student poverty. I have heard him tell stories of times of utter pennilessness which became occasions of strong crying to God with tears, and of startling answers which awed him with the sense of the nearness of the Divine presence. Such experiences prepared him for an intense sympathy with all earnest student life. Poverty was a bar which he ignored when he met with real men who were struggling after fitness for service on the mission field. He could count on God to meet the needs of such cases. And, speaking here of prayer, there is one friend living, a friend of forty-five years' standing, between whom and Burns Thomson there was a covenant of prayer, a mutual agreement to ask the Lord concerning certain specified objects, the record of which was carefully kept and the Lord's answers noted, the list of subjects being extended as years went on, and the occasional opportunities of united supplication being ever gratefully welcomed. The last of these opportunities was given to the two friends just a few days before our brother passed away.

His purpose in coming to Edinburgh to study was to enter the ministry. But he looked further than that. His desire and hope were that he might have the privilege of preaching Christ in China. It was at the close of the Arts curriculum, and when he was about to enter on theological studies, that the incident took place which in the hand of God was to determine his career. We will tell it in his own words:—

"I was visiting in Ponton-street, Edinburgh, when an incident occurred that changed the whole current of my life. I went into one of the lowest houses about twelve o'clock in the forenoon to invite the inmates to a prayer-meeting that was to be held on the following Sabbath evening. I had scarcely got into the house when a sharp little Irishwoman came springing into the middle of the floor, and, approaching me, abruptly said, 'What do you want, sir?' I was not so experienced then in visiting as I am now, and the question disturbed me. Although it was only twelve o'clock her son was lying on a low settle at the side of the room the worse for drink. He looked up at me, and, evidently not liking my appearance, he cried to his mother, 'Pet 'im oot, mither.' As I lingered about the room, not knowing very well what to do, the youth got angry and cried, with an oath, 'Mither, canna ye pet 'im oot?' This disturbed me still more, and I remarked to the woman, 'I was just going round your district, and I thought I would look in and see you. You are not looking well.' The thought seemed to flash upon her that perhaps I was a medical man, and in an instant her manner changed, and she answered quite kindly, 'Sure and it's not well that I am, sir.' 'I think you would be the better of a little medicine,' said I. She was entirely of the same mind. Why I was led to make such a remark I cannot conceive, for I knew absolutely nothing of medicine, and the thought of becoming a doctor had never entered my wildest dreams. The efficacy of one drug, however, I had satisfactorily learned in my youth, and, getting a cup from her—it had no handle, I remember—away I went to the nearest druggist and got a dose of castor-oil. I brought it back and presented it to the poor woman, and she received it amidst many expressions of gratitude. On the Monday following, as in duty bound, I called back to see my patient. She received me with open arms, and actually came out with me to the end of the street with my hand in hers. She made the sign of the cross on her forehead, and struck a covenant of eternal friendship between us. I got access to that house ever after, and was freely permitted to tell of the great salvation offered by Christ."

It was a simple enough incident, but it was a revelation to the earnest student. He began to search his Bible on the subject of medical missions, and was surprised to find them everywhere in the New Testament, and the result was that, while still keeping the same ultimate life object in view, he became a student of medicine. While yet a student he wrote a prize essay on medical missions, which was published and had much acceptance. In 1859 he undertook the superintendentship of the work of the Edinburgh Medical Missionary Society.

The great service of his life to medical missions is bound up with the years 1859—1878. It was a threefold service. He showed to the Church at home what a living power a medical mission could be in the worst part of a great city; how it could attract the poor in crowds, Roman Catholics and Protestants alike; how it could open their doors, when all other agencies had failed, to the entrance of the Gospel message; and how it was an agency which the Lord did not fail to bless, both to the bodies and souls of men. And this experience was an ever-fresh plea in advocating the larger employment of such missions among the heathen.

Then, second, as the head of the first Medical Missionary Training Home, he was able to show, in due time, a band of labourers who, having completed their studies, were fulfilling, at home or abroad, the great calling of the medical missionary. Valentine of Agra and Vartan of Nazareth; Hutchison of Sialkot and Husband of Ajmere; the late Drs. Thomson of Swatow, and Elmslie of Kashmir; Crabbe of Birmingham and Elder of Bristol, etc., etc., men whose names are held in honour to-day, and who have done much to extend the work of the Gospel, were among Dr. Thomson's students. And the influence exerted by the Training Home did not by any means end there. It began at once to tell upon the circle of Christian men in the student ranks in Edinburgh, and to keep before them medical missions as a powerful claimant to their lives and service. This kind of influence has been of the highest value, and is one of the best fruits of the object-lesson set forth by the Training Home.

Once more, it is to Burns Thomson's eloquent advocacy in our great cities that we owe the spread of medical missionary effort in Great Britain. Aberdeen and Glasgow, London, Liverpool, Bristol, and Birmingham, all owed, under God, to his voice and pen the impulse which resulted in the medical missionary efforts, of which they have been or are now the centres. Possibly also Dr. Dowkontt, of New York, might have further witness to give of the influence emanating from Dr. Thomson, which has spurred and strengthened him in his noble work in New York. What our brother did for Madagascar, for Nazareth, for Bombay, and what he did by his little monthly pink sheet to encourage the hearts of his medical missionary brethren throughout the world, would require not a page but a volume to tell.

In 1870, Burns Thomson's connection with the Edinburgh Medical Missionary Society came to an end. His difference with the Society turned upon a point on which there will always be a difference, where a man of such strong individuality and power has to engage in the conduct of some of the most delicate and difficult forms of Christian work, under a body of directors. They, of necessity, are much less in touch with the work than the brother who is nominally their servant, but who is yet more the servant of Christ. A directorate or committee has its rights, and it would be a mistake to make light of them; but a man in his own house with students under him has his rights and his responsibilities also, and his position is such that interference ab extra speedily becomes intolerable. To Burns Thomson the question was vital, and he stood like a rock.

After eight years of fresh service in a new medical mission, which he planted in the Canongate of Edinburgh, Dr. Thomson's strength became unequal to the daily toils of such a sphere, and with great reluctance he gave it up. Two winters were spent abroad. In 1881, he came to London to find a congenial home as a voluntary worker at Mildmay. Here, though practically retired from public view, he developed more fully his rare power as an expositor of Scripture, and in his addresses to the Deaconesses, addresses which dealt in detail and systematically with not a few of the books, both of the Old Testament and the New, he became a helper to many of these noble women in their daily labours of love among the poor and needy of this great city. His spiritual counsel was eagerly sought for, and the confidence reposed in him by all at Mildmay was as remarkable as it was deserved. To Mrs. Pennefather, in her years of weakness, his presence at Mildmay was a great solace, and his personal visits to her, especially on Sunday afternoons, were to both of them occasions of refreshing.

Nor in coming to London did Dr. Thomson's interest in medical missions come to an end. The Medical Missionary Association of London had been already established, and after the death of Dr. Fairlie Clarke, he filled the gap in the editorial secretaryship, and he did not rest till he had secured a successor who could give his whole strength to the work. As the chairman of the Executive Committee of the Association, he was in a position to give the very best of help, his long experience enabling him to guide and counsel as perhaps no other could, and his last public act was to sign the Annual Report of the Association. It appears in this month's "Medical Missions."

Besides his early prize essay on medical missions, the Christian public are indebted to Dr. Thomson for one notable work, Seed-time in Kashmir: A Memoir of Dr. Elmslie. As a medical missionary biography, it is charming, and has undoubtedly drawn not a few men to a similar career. Messrs. Nisbet have recently issued a fourth edition of it at the price of one shilling, and we know of no work we could more gladly put into any young Christian's hand.

Burns Thomson was a warm-hearted, loyal friend. A double-minded man or a double-minded missionary student his soul hated, but his affection for friends and his affection for true-hearted medical missionary students was very striking. His whole heart went out to little children. The transparent simplicity of his own character made him at home with them at once, and those who knew his ways were never surprised to see him talking with the very little ones by the wayside. He seemed to have a pocket specially devoted to the bairns, and endless little gifts were ever coming out of it into the willing hands of the children, who could not mistrust the kindly eyes that looked down on them from above the snow-white beard. He suffered much in later years, though still able to move about, and often said "It would be nice to get home." He has now reached "home," and we thank God for the gracious memory which he has left behind, and for his good works which do follow him.

BACK TO CHINA.

A letter has been received from Dr. A. G. Parrott, who recently returned to China for medical mission work, after a course of study in England. He writes on board s.s. Sval, en route for Hankow. It appears that the city of Si'ngan, whither Dr. Parrott wished to go, is not yet deemed to be sufficiently open for settlement, and some other centre in the district will probably be chosen meantime. As to the general outlook, Dr. Parrott writes:—

"Matters in China, from a missionary point of view, are in a very interesting state. Large numbers of men and women are coming from Europe and America and scattering themselves over the eighteen provinces. The Chinese Government is, I am told, getting alarmed at the large influx of missionaries. Li Hung-Chang, the Prime Minister, has suddenly put a new interpretation upon a certain clause in the French treaty (upon the strength of which clause many missionaries have based their right to rent houses and to reside in the interior), by which he would make it appear that before a missionary can settle in a place he must obtain permission to do so, first from the mandarin and then from the people, failing either of which he must move on. The representatives of Western Powers have been, or are being, consulted in the matter. It is well for us to remember that the Lord reigns, and the whole question of opening and closing doors is in his hands.

"Please ask much prayer for us. We need to cast ourselves much on the Lord for wisdom and grace in moving amongst the people without a house or a home to go to, and crowded by inquisitive people every hour of the day we happen to be within their reach. It is a great pleasure to me to be back again in a district where I am understood."

Letters for Dr. Parrott should be addressed, care of China Inland Mission, Hankow.

CRUMBS OF COMFORT.

"When thou passest through the waters I will be with thee, and through the rivers they shall not overflow thee."

To some natures, perhaps to all in a greater or less degree, how terrible is the thought of loneliness! How the child shivers and trembles alone in the dark! not so much because it is dark, but because it is alone in the dark. How a mother's gentle touch soothes the little one into quiet! And to the children of larger growth is not this one of the spectres that haunt the midnight vigils? This terrible fear, that perchance some day we may have to ford life's river alone. Here is a message for thee: "Though troubles deep and overwhelming as a flood come upon thee, thy God shall be thy stay; and though all else be shifting sand, this is a rock that shall never give way under thee."

Does thy heart faint within thee at the thought of Death's dark river to be crossed at last? Be not afraid! it shall not overflow thee. The shadow of death, as one has beautifully put it, is but the shadow that falls as thou standest for a moment at the gate of the city of gold, and even as thou standest the gates shall roll back, and thou shalt hear the welcome of the Redeemed ones, as they conduct thee in triumph to Him who has brought thee safe through all.

OPEN-AIR MISSION.—A most interesting gathering assembled in Cross-street Baptist Chapel, Islington, on Tuesday in last week, to inaugurate an Islington auxiliary of the Open-air Mission. The audience was large and enthusiastic, and all felt that the new venture was launched auspiciously. Mr. W. Roston Bourke, M.L.S.B., presided sympathetically, and addresses were delivered by Rev. Andrew Miers, Rev. Frederick Jones, and Mr. F. Cockrem.

MR. LETHABY'S JOURNEY.

Dear Sir,—Please excuse my writing you a personal rather than an editorial letter, such as the value of your paper and the help it has been to us seems to demand. I hear from many how they have first heard of Kerak through The Christian.

My own steps this year have been, I believe, God-directed, at least they have led me to see much for which I am very thankful, and in a path which has been, I hope, helpful to more than one. Algiers, Malta, Alexandria, Cairo, Port Said, Bombay, Muscat, and now Bushire, have brought many scenes and a variety of thoughts, whilst everything, first and last, only helps to intensify the strain of your hymn, 446 S.S.S. (the only one of which I remember the number, because it so fully expresses my own thoughts).

Far, far away, in heathen darkness dwelling,
Millions of souls for ever may be lost;
Who, who will go, salvation's story telling,
Looking to Jesus, counting not the cost?

"All power is given unto Me; go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel, and, lo, I am with you alway."

I am greatly impressed by two thoughts: the ripeness of the harvest-field, and the ability and necessity for the many and not the few to be harvestmen. Of the places I have mentioned, I could write special claims for each, and then should not know which ought to be in the abstract first attended to. But my God can supply all their needs, if only his "men" will go in and earn their "penny"—earn it first and get it afterwards; not take it (or a good many pennies) first and then go to work.

Yet though these places are (or should be) so persuasive of their need, the silent ignorance of Ishmael's children appeals above all to my sentiment and my reason. You and I are in the breakfast-rooms in the consciousness of parental company and every comfort they can give; while down in the cellar are our brothers and sisters, and the darkness of their retreat is to them as blindness itself, so that they know nothing of the table upstairs and the places that are ready for them at that table. And yet we have been sent to tell them, "but are afraid of the dark," in which they have to live. And so we show our filial and fraternal love by gorging ourselves until we fall to squabbling, whilst poor Ishmael is still "ready to perish."

Last week the boat which brought me up landed thousands of packages of rice, sugar, and stuffs at Bahreyn, the great mass of which will go into central Arabia; and fortnightly this is repeated—yet so far, not a single package of portions or volumes of God's own message has been landed, nor has a single messenger set foot on the mainland to deliver that message. You will not call it folly at least to make the attempt: but it does call for prayer. I am neither young, nor learned in Arabic, as learning is understood; and watching every mile of the coast as the dog did the manger, is Britain's august ally, the sublime Porte, who will with rifles and bayonets of English manufacture send me and my Bibles into the deep sea, if he can. The Lord willing, I go next week back to Bahreyn, and as He may indicate take the next step. The land visible from the island, is but a continuation of that which, for years we have looked on from Kerak, eastward, a continuation eight hundred or a thousand miles in length, and not a word for "Our Father," or a copy of his book in all those miles, though probably, many a Koran, as there is an ideal fate, by name Allah.

Yet this people are a fine people. We must not call Mohammedanism heathenism, and we must be very careful not to judge all by what has come within our own ken. The Moslems I have travelled with up the Gulf, are totally unlike those we have to do with in Moab, and those of Persia are still different.

I cannot write of India and its peoples as I wish: I only saw it and a few of them; but I beg you, endeavour whilst you can to see it for yourself—its Parsees, so strange a mixture of good and bad—its stiff-necked and proud Moslems—and its supple, enigmatic Hindus, and the human mire which few missionaries seem to know much about. But it is immortal, and maybe golden mire. Yes, if you can only spend twenty four hours in India, pray do so, and you will not blame me for the advice, as I hope you will not for having written such a discursive letter. Before you get this, I hope to be in "the lion's den," with the God of Daniel, and my wife in Kerak. Please remember us specially at Aldersgate-street Prayer-meeting.

Yours most truly,
William Lethaby.

Bushire, Persian Gulf, March 15th, 1893.

P.S.—Bahreyn, March 30th.—God has brought us here, and I hope will lead us on. We are now indeed in the enemy's land, but in the Divine Hand.

THE EASTERN SOUDAN.

Dear Sir,—Will you allow me to appeal to the Church of Christ in this kingdom on behalf of the perishing tribes of the Eastern Soudan? Nothing whatever is being done for them, and it is almost literally true that no man cares for their souls.

When first we came in contact with them some ten years ago, at the time of the Nile campaign, some hearts were stirred with pity for them, and this feeling found expression to a certain extent in an appeal that was issued by the Church Missionary Society to found a mission at Khartoum in memory of Gordon. But the way has never yet been opened for a mission there. Khartoum is still the centre of the Mahdist power, which rules the tribes along the Nile, from the frontier of Egypt up almost to the great lakes. The interest once felt in these people has consequently long since died out, and it is apparently supposed that no door of access to them is yet open. This, however, is not the case, as I will now endeavour to explain.

These tribes extend over the whole country between the Nile and the Red Sea, north of Abyssinia. They are found in and around Suakin, and the recently re-annexed territory of Tokar. If a line be drawn from that point in a S.W. direction to Khartoum or Berber, on the Nile, the whole of the vast territory lying north of it, up to Assouan, is inhabited by the Bishareen, the Amarars, the Hadendoas, Halengas, and other tribes too numerous to mention. These tribes, or most of them, touch upon the Red Sea on their eastern border, and Suakin is the point where they are most readily accessible, that is to say where missionaries might reside, and from whence they might extend their operations inland. Two Roman Catholic missionaries have in fact been at work there for several years.

The tribes I have mentioned all speak one language, called Beidawiya, though with a few differences of dialect. I had opportunities of studying it during a residence of five months at Suakin two years ago. It is a comparatively easy language, very much more so than Arabic, and I have prepared an elementary grammar and vocabulary of it, which would be available for any missionary commencing work at Suakin, and would, I believe, be found a valuable help. No other work on the subject exists in English. Thus the way is so far prepared for a commencement. Work might be begun either at Suakin or at Assouan (the frontier town of Egypt, on the Nile). At the former are to be found representatives of the Hadendoas, Amarars, Halengas, and Suakinese; at the latter some of the Bishareen.

I give the preference to Suakin for reasons which I need not now specify. The climate of Suakin is pleasant enough from October to March, but there are times in the summer and early autumn when the heat is intense, but there is a way of escape from it; in the beautiful mountains of Yemen, on the opposite, or Arabian, coast, rising to a height of 8000 to 10,000 feet above the sea, quite a temperate climate may be found at all times. A number of English officers, however, live at Suakin all the year round, so I suppose there is no difficulty about missionaries doing the same if necessary. I would not recommend more than two or three being sent at first, as it will be necessary to begin very quietly.

The people are certainly an attractive race. Their splendid courage won the admiration of our soldiers in many a well-fought field around Suakin in the campaigns of 1883-1886. I saw a great deal of them while I was at Suakin, spending five and six hours a day among them in the relief camps during the terrible famine which swept off such immense numbers of them. They are manly and intelligent, the children simply delightful—finer, nobler, manlier boys I never saw. I was obliged once to have two little fellows flogged; they writhed under the infliction, but not the slightest sound escaped their lips.

These tribes are all Mohammedans. They are semi-nomadic, having certain fixed centres around which they cultivate, while the flocks move from pasturage to pasturage.

Now, will not some one take up this work? A highly qualified lady, who has had three years' experience in the North Africa Mission, is most anxious to devote her life to it, but she could not be sent out alone. A married man should accompany her. He should be well educated, capable of mastering both Arabic and Beidawiya, if possible with decided linguistic abilities, as he would have to reduce a new language into form. If any feel their hearts touched by this appeal, let them communicate with the Secretary to the Missionary Bureau, 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C.

The Bureau, I may say, has issued a special appeal of its own upon this subject.

I ought to add that Arabs who cannot be reached in their own country, on the opposite shore of the Red Sea, are met with in Suakin, and may there have the Gospel preached to them.

I send forth this cry for help, looking up to the Lord of the harvest to thrust forth the labourers. We English have slain these people by thousands. The plains around Suakin have been soaked with their blood. I do not say that this might have been avoided, but ought we not now, at least, to arise and take to them that message of love and peace which it is our own highest privilege as a nation to bear to all the ends of the earth?

Redhill, May 19. F. T. Haig, Major-Gen.

THE GOSPEL ON THE CONTINENT.

Several evangelical workers on the Continent have formed an organisation with the somewhat vague title, "The United Christian Mission," having for its object to send at least one clear Gospel message into every home. The work has been carried on for some time by two friends, who have travelled in various lands preaching the Gospel and distributing tracts. This has been done at the expense of the workers themselves, and in several languages. More than once the workers have been arrested for carrying on their propaganda.

A short time ago it was decided, among other means, to insert in secular newspapers, as advertisements, verses of Scripture and Gospel appeals. As a rule the advertisements have been accepted. The following announcement, which may be taken as a specimen, has been made in several countries:—

God Loves You.

"God so loved the world that He gave his only-begotten Son that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life."

If these words are true, then God loves the fallen and the sinful.

If these words are true, then God has made the greatest sacrifice He can make that sinners may be saved.

If these words are true, then all will be saved who, turning from sin, trust in Christ.

These Words are true. They are Christ's Words.—John iii. 16.

Wide doors are open everywhere. About three million homes were last year reached by these printed messages. The Romish priests are in some places most angry. In several cases the editors have inserted the message, both in larger type and more frequently than had been arranged for. In addition to inserting these advertisements, the mission is supplying tracts in various languages, free of charge, to scattered, lonely workers who are too poor to buy them. Upwards of 400,000 were thus given last year. Communications regarding the work may be addressed to Mr. A. J. Arnold, Evangelical Alliance, Adam-street, Adelphi, W.C.

AMONG JEWS IN PARIS.—Pastor S. H. Anderson, of the church in Rue Royale, describing work among the Jews of Paris, which are said to number over 40,000, says: "Thousands of families of Israelites remain untouched in the neighbourhood of Montmartre and round the Bastille, near the Hotel de Ville and in the Rue de la Roquette, where hundreds of their abodes are to be found, as well as between the Rue St. Antoine and the Seine. In the Rue des Rosiers there are six Jewish restaurants, and the "Rue des Juifs" justifies its appellation. At the beginning of last winter the Lord put into the heart of one of his servants, Mr. Mark Lev, one of the first converts of Rabinowitch, in Odessa, to come and work among his compatriots here. He has been greatly cheered, both in conversing with Jews, and in distributing Gospels and tracts received from the Mildmay Mission. The inquirers have become so numerous that he has organised meetings in his own house, and at 8, Rue Malher. He also holds a weekly gathering in one of the McAll mission halls." Communications may be addressed to the care of Pastor Anderson, 37, Avenue Grande Armée, Paris.

The May Meetings.

Irish Evangelical Society.

At the anniversary of the Irish Evangelical Society, held in Union Chapel, Islington, the good news that Ireland's heart seems opening to the Gospel was abundantly confirmed. Rev. W. McConnell, who labours in a large district of the North, told of the kind of work by which outlying populations are reached, by taking the Church into the farmhouses, schoolhouses and cottages, so that the aged and infirm, as well as the ill-clad and hard-worked, may hear Christ's call. He told of the people streaming towards such places of assembly, and spoke of rich fruit gathered by such methods and by Biblical instruction of youth and adults in a Sunday morning class.

The facts testified by Rev. James Ervine, of Kingstown, as to the interest shown by Roman Catholics in the Gospel during the last few months, were as welcome as they were wonderful. Hundreds of these inquirers in this place and all over the South and West of Ireland attend mission services and hear the Word gladly. Some who until lately were Roman Catholic priests now preach the Gospel freely to their fellow-countrymen. It seems clear we have seen the beginning of a new era for Ireland.

Excellent addresses were delivered by Rev. J. Lawson Forster, Rev. W. Hardy Harwood, and Rev. W. J. Dawson.

Aged Pilgrims' Friend Society.

Mr. Abel Smith, M.P., presided over the eighty-sixth annual meeting of friends and supporters of the Aged Pilgrims' Friend Society at Exeter Hall a few days ago. The report, read by Mr. J. E. Hazelton, showed that the Society has 663 pensioners living in the metropolis, and 603 in various parts of the United Kingdom. Many churches of Christ, especially in the rural districts, were quite unable to overtake the needs of their poor, and consequently the Society is an auxiliary to them. In the year of the birth of the Society there were three pensioners. Since then the roll has steadily increased, and the number has now reached 5760, of whom 1266 are still living. Upwards of £230,000 had been expended in pensions alone. In the four homes 180 of the pensioners are comfortably housed. A total yearly income of at least £10,000 is needed. Upwards of £7896 was expended in pensions during last year, being the highest total yet reported.

The Chairman spoke of the institution as doing a great, a good, and a real work. Rev. J. Stuart Fox begged young men and women particularly to assist the Society. There is no nation so wealthy as the English, and money ought not to be squandered when it is wanted for a work of that sort. Rev. J. Jull observed that many a heart has rejoiced at receiving the bounty of the Society. Mr. F. A. Bevan remarked that if the work was better known it would have more sympathy thrown out to it from the hearts of the Christian people. Mrs. Noel Thatcher delivered a powerful address, speaking of the many instances she had known of the joy caused to the poor and aged by the Society's gifts. Rev. F. A. C. Lillingston commended the Society and its Homes to the extended support of the Lord's people throughout the kingdom, and declared that the Scriptural foundation upon which the work rested, and its increasing magnitude, rendered it eminently worthy of support. Mr. W. H. Collingridge held that the Society was managed with great care and economy by Christian men for Christian men and women.

Lord's Day Observance Society.

At the annual meeting of this Society held last week in St. James' Hall, Sir Mark Stewart, M.P., who presided, said that all who knew the state of things as regards the keeping of the Lord's Day, knew the need that exists for vigilance and energy. He maintained that the report shows that it is not really the working-man who wishes to have Sunday opening. A small knot of determined men claiming to be their spokesmen are at the bottom of most of the agitation. He earnestly trusted that the example which had been given by England to the other nations of Europe would be continued. The influence of that example had been considerable, and he hoped that it would be extended. Without the rest afforded by the Sabbath, we should be unable to go on for long. After the French Revolution the experiment of substituting every tenth day instead of every seventh was made, and after some time had to be relinquished. This fact should be remembered by those who twit the supporters of the Society with narrow-mindedness.

Rev. F. Peake, LL.D., the new secretary, read a summary of the report, showing the steps taken during the past year for the preservation of the weekly day of rest.

Rev. J. F. Kitto, M.A., referred to the action he had taken in introducing this subject at the London Diocesan Conference. What they had to fear was the increasing desecration of the Lord's Day by the upper classes. Christian charity demanded that the upper classes, who had so much leisure, should refain from such selfish actions.

Rev. W. H. Langhorne defended the existence of the Society on four grounds: those of patriotism, philanthropy, piety, and prudence. He appealed on behalf of the toilers, many of whom had no leisure except on Lord's Day. The meeting of tram-men, addressed by Lord Rosebery at midnight, illustrated this well. In Holland the Lord's Day was sometimes termed the "Lord's Dyke," a term which possessed real significance in a country which lay below the level of the sea.

Addresses followed by Revs. F. A. C. Lillingston and Dr. Kinns, who deplored recent inroads on the rest and sanctity of the Lord's Day.

The National Refuges.

These noble Homes for the destitute children usually furnish one of the most attractive and interesting anniversaries of the springtime. There is an unfailing fascination about sprightly youth, especially when they have been taught to sing like larks; the music, vocal and instrumental, is always a "fetching" part of the programme, and this year there was no falling off. The bâton of Mr. Frank Proudman was kept busy throughout the evening, and the delightful performances of the choir of boys and girls was, as the secretary remarked, one of the most effective arguments for the work of the society. If their training in other departments is as good, they must certainly go out into the world well equipped.

Mr. Bristow Wallen, the secretary, recited in commendably brief outline the operations of the Society, which take the form of homes for the training of homeless and destitute boys and girls. These are placed in different parts of Greater London, with a Working Boys' Home in Shaftesbury-avenue and the two training ships off Greenhithe, the Chichester and Arethusa. There is accommodation altogether for about a thousand children, who are drilled not only in elementary education, but are taught useful trades and occupations, fitting them for honourably playing their part in the body politic. During the fifty years of the Society's existence no fewer than 12,000 young people have passed through its homes; and letters constantly received give gratifying assurance that they are reflecting credit on the institution which acted as foster parent to them, and launched them in life's duties. Mr. Wallen said the receipts for the year had met the current expenditure, but there is still a large outstanding deficit, amounting to £6480.

Some very hearty if blunt words came from the noble chairman, Lord Leigh. He congratulated the Society on its successful work, and on its efficient secretary; he congratulated the boys and girls on their singing; in short, he congratulated everybody all round, and wished long life and prosperity to the institution.

Archdeacon Sinclair is one of the most popular and large-hearted speakers of the day, and he seems willing to go here, there, everywhere, to advocate any good work. He was one of the speakers at this meeting, and if he did not show great oratorical qualities or exhibit any special acquaintance with the work of the Homes, he was as warm as could be in his advocacy of their operations. He pleaded that this society, as the oldest of its kind, should not be overlooked in the flow of sympathy towards later and, perhaps, more novel organisations. The accumulated deficit came in for mention, and the committee were applauded for not curtailing the work in consequence. From personal experience of the Ealing Home for Girls, Rev. W. E. Oliver seconded the Archdeacon's commendation, but seemed rather inclined to approve of the deficit as a leverage for extracting further help from the pockets of the public. He rejoiced in the religious education of the children, and took occasion on this point to have a fling at the educational policy of the London School Board. Our education, he exclaimed, will be a heathenish education unless the teachers are godly men. He said he hated the phrase "secular education," and repeated with emphasis the old saying that education without Christianising influences will only make children into "clever devils." The approving cheers of many in the audience punctuated the reverend speaker's remarks.

Dr. Allon's successor, Rev. W. Hardy Harwood, moved a resolution to the effect that "The rescuing of orphan and neglected children, and giving them a sound Christian education, combined with industrial training, are calculated to diminish vagrancy and make such children honourable members of society." Who could withstand such an appeal as the children have made to our eyes, ears, and hearts? Some of the letters from children, given in the report, were as tragic and pathetic as anything that could be found in any novel. While rejoicing to the full in the religious education of these children by God-fearing men and women, he entered a caveat against the remarks of Mr. Oliver as to the education of the London School Board. That was a contentious matter that ought to be excluded from such gatherings. Mr. Harwood had carefully conned and digested the report, and the inspiration received from it he gave out in eloquent advocacy of the homes and their work of lifting up the child-life of our great city. That child-life is one of the greatest scandals of the century, and such work as this proves the power of Christianity. For grip, and fire, and go, it was far and away the speech of the evening. He closed by a few earnest words of advice and encouragement to the children who filled up the back of the orchestra.

Not the least attractive part of the evening's work was the musical drill of a selection of the boys and girls, who went through their evolutions in good style and gained much applause. "A sound mind in a sound body" is evidently the motto of the institution, and we hope it will be liberally supported in its work of saving the helpless and friendless children.

London Female Guardian Society.

The annual meeting of this philanthropy was held at the Training Home, High-street, Stoke Newington, on Wednesday, May 17, the Earl of Stamford presiding. This mature institution has a record of 10,190 cases received within its doors, of which number 3326 young women were given a new start in life, and 2142 were reconciled with and restored to friends. The remainder were transferred to hospitals, other Homes, other parishes, etc. During the year just closed ninety-four fresh cases were received, and it is at once an eloquent but painful proof of the need of the institution that of this total of moral lapses two young girls were led astray at the tender age of thirteen, while nine others were under fifteen. Moreover, six of them were unable to read, and seven could not write. No wonder, therefore, that the executive committee testify that every year's experience in rescue work proves more fully the pressing need of such societies. So many calls upon the purses of the benevolent are made that the committee find it difficult to keep the income to its necessary total, but they are able to add that "each year, with its peculiar attendant mercies, ministers to them adequate inducement to thank God and to take courage."

It should be distinctly noted that every inmate of the two Homes is expected to work if able do so. Ladies are asked to assist the charity by entrusting their laundry work to the matron, who has an extensive laundry, fitted with every convenience for doing best work. By this means the inmates have earned £2188 12s., or an average of £12 2s. 6d. each in the year, which sum being deducted from the economical total expenditure of £31 19s. per head, leaves only £19 16s. 6d. per inmate to be provided by benevolence. Another great factor in the prosperity of good management of the Homes is the ladies' committee, to whom the warmest thanks are due for their services in patiently investigating the circumstances and merits of the cases of the applicants for admission, and deciding after due deliberation which should be accepted and which declined.

In administering the affairs of such an institution, the committee necessarily become conversant with much of human weakness and depravity, but in the face of this it is encouraging to note their emphatic declaration that their labours are not in vain or un-blessed. Year after year they have had to acknowledge the hand of God in transforming the unclean into penitent, useful, and orderly members of society, and striking letters to this effect have been received this year respecting the character and conduct of former inmates. Moreover, the premiums given to inmates for excellence of work was £71. As a remarkable feature of this work, it may be mentioned that while of the total ninety-four cases received last year, sixty-nine were domestic servants, only four were barmaids, whose calling might be supposed to submit them to special temptations.

The speakers on Wednesday included, besides the noble chairman, Rev. W. D. Walters, Rev. J. Stuart Fox, Rev. M. L. Le Pla, Rev. G. P. Mackay, and others.

Friendless and Fallen.

The annual meeting of the Institutions founded by and so long closely associated with the late Mr. E. W. Thomas was held on Wednesday in Morley Rooms, Regent-street. The report, presented by Mr. W. J. Taylor, who has been appointed secretary, gave detailed accounts of the eight homes maintained by the committee, much emphasis being laid on the increase in the preventive side of the work. During the year 324 of the cases admitted to the homes have been of a preventive character, while 204 of the admissions have been of the reformatory class. Similarly in the open-all-night refuge the number of girls saved from danger has exceeded the number of the fallen. Altogether 1226 new cases have passed through the homes during the past year.

As illustrating the way in which these homes have proved a shelter to the friendless, we may give one incident: One bitterly cold winter night the matron of the Holloway Home was aroused by a policeman, who had with him a girl of only fourteen years of age, whom he had been directed by the inspector of the district to bring to the home. Her story was very brief. She had been on a visit to some friends, and, remaining longer than she ought to have done, she lost the train by which she was to have returned home. Not knowing what to do, and feeling her lost condition, she stood crying by the roadside. She was very soon accosted by a woman, who said she knew where the poor child could find a lodging for the night, and artfully contrived to get her purse from her. On the approach of the policeman the woman absconded with the girl's money. She was at once taken into the home, and her parents were telegraphed to, and were very grateful to find their child in safety. This is the fourth case that the matron has had brought to her at midnight by police-officers during the past year.

Generally reviewing the work the report says:—"The efforts made to lessen and relieve that great sum of sin and suffering ever present in large cities, and to bring its victims under the influence of Christianity, have been attended with success. The efforts put forth by philanthropists and Christian workers are already telling, for, notwithstanding the increase of population, the statistics of crime show a marked decrease in juvenile criminality. Gospel missionary agencies watching over the young, Christian teaching in early years, industrial schools, education, and the restraining influence of abstinence societies, have each had their share in bringing about this desirable result. The books show that quite one-half of the applicants are what is termed the 'preventive,' and not, as formerly, of the 'fallen' class, and such being dealt with at once are more calculated to be successful. Instead of being rescued from the 'fallen,' they are prevented from dropping into the dreadful maelstrom of immorality and crime! The internal working of the homes afford much ground for thankfulness. Commercial and agricultural depression has affected the financial prosperity of the Institution to a large extent, and the loss of many liberal subscribers through death has deprived the committee of valuable pecuniary support, though the good work has in no wise been curtailed, and, it is hoped, will still continue to be maintained."

As might be expected under the circumstances, most of the speakers of the evening devoted their remarks largely to deploring the loss which had fallen on the Society, testifying to their own sense of the high character, sound judgment, and valuable service of the late Mr. Thomas. Sir John Kennaway, who presided, was followed by Rev. W. R. Mowll, Sir Charles E. Bernard, K.C.S.I., Messrs. Sydney Gedge, A. Pearce Gould, F.R.C.S., and F. A. Bevan, who, besides paying a tribute to the departed founder, dwelt on various features of the operations, showing that so long as impurity and sin claimed hecatombs of victims, the work of this and similar societies must go on in the name of Him who came to seek to save the lost, and who said to one poor trembling woman, "Neither do I condemn thee; go and sin no more."

Protestant Alliance.

This Society sits on its watch-tower and heralds abroad, with unsleeping vigilance, the many schemes and plots of the Popish propaganda. Its operations have largely a political aspect, but it does good service in keeping the public well acquainted with the insidious attempts that are constantly being made to undermine the stability of our Protestant Constitution and our Reformed faith. The annual gatherings held at Exeter Hall last week extended over two days. On Wednesday forenoon and afternoon conferences were held. At the first it was urged by the various speakers that Municipal and Parliamentary voters ought to show greater activity in returning to power and office men who will safeguard and conserve the freedom and the best interests of the nation. The afternoon conference on the work and position of women with respect to the Alliance was addressed by Mrs. Auffray and Miss Golding, the two ex-nuns, and Mrs. Arbuthnot. A resolution was adopted calling on the women of Great Britain to unite in defence of home and liberty, and in resistance to all sacerdotal assumptions, whether Roman or Anglican.

In the evening the chair was filled by Canon O'Connor, of Wexford, whose vigorous and witty utterances met with the approval of the enthused audience. Speeches full of strenuous protest as to Romish and Ritualistic pretensions were given by Dr. Hiles Hitchens, Rev. W. Muir, Rev. W. Sinden, and Rev. A. A. Isaacs.

The last and perhaps most interesting speaker was Rev. Thomas Connellan, of Dublin. He rather deprecated taking any exaggerated view as to the strength and power of the Church of Rome in this country. While it is quite right to take the measurement of the adversary, let us be strong and very courageous. To show that Romanism is not so flourishing as people sometimes suppose, Mr. Connellan referred to a recent visit of Dr. Vaughan to Tottenham, where there are two thousand nominal Roman Catholics, but only some four hundred of these go to the sacraments. Why should not the true Protestants of that neighbourhood try to reach these lapsing Romanists, and seek to save them from indifference or infidelity? Another fact is both instructive and encouraging. From the Registrar-General's report of marriages last year in England and Wales, only forty-two in the thousand were celebrated in a Romish chapel. If Cardinal Vaughan has any designs as to the conversion of England to the Papal faith he has his work cut out for him.

Mr. Connellan went on to show by a series of striking extracts from Romish authoritative documents what the true and unchanging spirit of Popery is in relation to the persecution and extinction, so far as possible, of those who oppose its claims. From teaching he passed to actual practice, and gave the details of some recent cases in which servant girls in Ireland who had been led to embrace the faith of the Gospel had been spirited away by Romish minions, and had never been heard of since. The meeting was greatly roused by these recitals, and expressed its detestation in cries of "Shame! shame!" It was comforting, on the other hand, to hear from Mr. Connellan that Rome is losing heavily in Ireland, and that the people are showing great willingness to hear the truth that will make them free at once from sin and from Romish bondage.

The secretary of the Alliance, Mr. Guinness, explained the steps that were being taken to counteract Romish tactics by the hiring of halls and the delivery of lectures in neighbourhoods where Dr. Vaughan has been making specially aggressive efforts at proselytism.

On Thursday evening the Hon. P. Carteret Hill presided over a meeting in the large hall. There was a goodly gathering, although the spacious building was by no means full. The Chairman deplored the advance of Romanism and the conspiracy against Reformation principles in the Church of England. He maintained that it is impossible to separate British liberties from the question of religion; and in proportion as Romish doctrines prevail, so Papal tyranny will assert itself.

Rev. H. Sharpe, of Hampstead, declared the Word of God to be the sole rule of faith, worship, and life, and called upon faithful Protestants to unite in asserting and defending this fundamental truth. Though confident that in the end Christ must reign, yet Christian citizens must not overlook their bounden duty at the present time. The Queen at her coronation, and ministers of the Church of England at their ordination, avow their intention to stand by the Word of God. He would like to circulate all over the country the text of these oaths and undertakings, so that the question may be asked of them all, "Do you mean what you say and say what you mean?" As showing the insinuating character of Ritualistic teaching, the speaker read some sentences from an Anglican picture book for children—"to use when they go to mass!" The mass is there described as "the service in which God Himself comes down from heaven to us." This book had the following statements:—"The Church is God's house; the altar is God's throne; the priest is God's servant; the mass is God's service." In conclusion, the speaker spoke of a clergyman who has given up speaking to the children from Holy Scripture, and taken to addressing them about his garments. Touching his chasuble, he inquired, "What is this?" The juvenile answer was: "A Jezebel, sir."

Mr. T. A. Denny spoke of the tyranny of Rome, dwelling upon questions which at present occupy the political mind.

Canon O'Connor followed, enlarging upon the place of the Word of God in the Protestant religion. Developing the argument from prophecy, he outlined the history of Israel, and the doom of the great empires of antiquity, the various predictions concerning which are all evidential of the inspiration of the Bible. In the Dark Ages the Bible was regarded as an insufficient rule of faith and practice. But whence the expression "Dark Ages"? It comes from the fact that the noontide of the Papal power was humanity's midnight! The Bible is the mortal and the immortal foe of the Church of Rome. In proportion as a people are Protestant and Bible-reading they are in the van of humanity; in proportion as they are Papal they are in the rear.

Mr. W. Johnston, M.P., spoke on Romanism in Ireland, with special reference to priestly interference in politics. Rev. Dr. Jeffrey, a minister of the Free Church of Scotland, held that the dominion of Rome leads to political ruin. The last speaker was the Dean of Achonry, whose eloquence and geniality have made him popular on many English platforms. The addresses were largely taken up with political questions on which Evangelical Protestants hold divergent opinions.

Christian Literature Society.

The annual meeting of this Society was held on Thursday afternoon in Lower Exeter Hall. The secretary, Rev. James Johnston, reported continued progress during the past year, especially in the work of the Society in India—the production and circulation of Christian literature in all its branches, which is the great want of India. The number of books and tracts issued last year was 1,460,212, an increase of 230,512 over those of the previous year. Four years ago the great proportion of books issued were school books, and these continued an important part of their work, and their circulation continued about the same, being a little under half a million yearly. It is in general literature to meet the wants of the educated classes that the increase has taken place. Of these they only issued 200,000 in 1889, last year the number was over a million, so that in four years they had increased five-fold. Amongst these books were some specially prepared for work in the Zenana, and for students at or issuing from colleges. The Training Institution at Ahmednagar was in full efficiency, with seventy-three students being trained for Christian village teachers, and the schools in Bengal were never in a better condition. There were 8319 children in 236 schools, in thirty-two circles, under careful superintendence. The income of the society was last year £10,482; the expenditure was £11,057.

The Earl of Northbrook, who presided, urged the claims of the Society. Rev. H. M. M. Hackett (C.M.S., Allahabad) spoke very strongly of the lack of Christian or even pure literature for the use of the fifteen millions of men now able to read in India. The speaker gave some startling illustrations of the gross impurity and indecency of much of the native literature, whether religious or secular. He testified that this Society has rendered noble service to the missionaries actually in the field, in bringing Christian literature to bear against the ancient Pagan writings of India. Canon Fleming dwelt on some of the serious features in the great problem of India. Rev. G. M. Bullock (L.M.S., Almora) told of the power of Christian literature on the slopes of the Himalayas, and specially in the northern town of Almora. According to the witness borne by a Hindu priest, "These Christian books are entering our homes and saturating our minds, and sapping our old faith and bringing in the new." This the speaker knew to be a fact, and therefore he supported the claims of the society. A few words followed by General Touch and others.

CONGO-BALOLO MISSION.

Another stage in the progress of the Congo-Balolo Mission was reached on Friday last, when, at Harley House, Bow, E., farewell was taken of missionaries about to proceed to Central Africa. Started in 1889 to carry the Gospel south of the horse-shoe bend of the Upper Congo, the Mission now numbers three transport stations, four missionary centres, and over twenty missionaries.

Captain F. Winn, R.E., who takes a warm interest in the Mission, presided over the meeting, which was attended by friends of several efforts for the evangelisation of Africa. Four years ago the Captain resolved to go to Africa himself; but as he had suffered from fever at Gibraltar, his medical adviser would not allow him to think of it, telling him, in fact, that if he went he would require continual nursing, and be a hindrance rather than a help to Mission work.

Dr. Harry Guinness, after referring to the sad loss sustained by Mr. F. S. Arnot's Garenganze Mission, through the death of Mr. Joseph Lynn, told the story of work in Bolololand. He rejoiced in the fruitfulness and the efforts that had been put forth, saying that of late there have been many confessions of Christ, far up the Congo at Bongandanga. The various stations of the Mission are undermanned; in view of the dangers arising from the climate, and the fact that workers have to evangelise over wide areas, there ought to be at least five persons on every station. Men and women willing to go can be got, but the money wherewith to send them out and maintain the work, is not, for the present, forthcoming. Whenever the question arises of sending more labourers to the Congo, brethren in the Institute promptly offer themselves. Recently four trained nurses from Glasgow wrote offering to go. The continent is not simply one to be exploited by traders, but one to be saved through the Gospel of Christ.

Dr. Guinness told with joy of the fidelity of a native boy, who, after awful massacres had been perpetrated in the region, refused to sell the lives of the missionaries into the hands of the enemy, although offered bribes of great value in the eyes of the natives. He went on to explain that Mr. Howell, who has spent three years on the Congo, is about to return, accompanied by Messrs. Domenjoz and Wooding, who will undertake transport responsibilities in the interest of the entire Mission. These latter will be missionaries and Christians first, men of business afterwards. Every man who goes out involves an expenditure of £150 in outfit and travelling, and in addition to the cost of carrying out the new party, about £600 is now required to meet the necessities of the Mission.

In the course of a brief address, Mr. Howell described his settlement on the Congo with the late Mr. McKittrick. Many of the natives who have come to believe in Christ put to shame more instructed Christians by the simplicity of their trust. While yet unable to speak the language, a Christian may by his actions be a living epistle. The people are ever scrutinising the movements of strangers. Mr. Nicholl, who is going to help in Mr. Arnot's Mission, related the story of his conversion, and how he had resolved upon a missionary career through the apostolic appeal in Rom. xii. 1, and the declaration of 1 Cor. vi. 19, 20.

Rev. Charles A. Fox, in a few words, impressed upon workers for God the truth that every Divine commandment is a covenanted possibility of power. If Christ commands us to do anything, He undertakes to enable us to do it. To the church at Philadelphia (Brotherly Love) Christ said, "Behold. I have set before thee an open door." Where there is "brotherhood" there is always an open door. For this generation, Africa is the open door. Moreover, the world is open; we have an open Bible; and the heavens are open in a strange sense, for at this closing part of the century there is a further Pentecost, or revealing of God to the soul in the power of the Holy Ghost. While there is this open door which cannot be closed, there is a shut door which God Himself cannot open. Hence to the church of Laodicea (or Popular Opinion) the message was sent, "Behold, I stand at the door and knock." That is a door closed against the fulness of Christ. We are not only to believe in Christ, but to receive Him in fulness, and be surrendered to Him, so that He may inhabit us—"come in and sup with us" (Rev. iii. 20). The Pentecostal army that is do Christ's great work is described in 1 Cor. i. 27, 28—the five-ranked army of weakness. In order to work for God we need the Holy Ghost, also the equipment of those who testified at the historical Pentecost; they had a vision of the Lord Jesus, ascended, exalted, and returning. These and other points, Mr. Fox emphasised in a helpful manner.

Dr. Newman Hall, in a few words, told the story of the conversion of the late Mr. Adam McCall. In the evening another meeting was held, when God's blessing upon the workers was earnestly besought by several friends of the Mission cause.

A MINISTRY OF MERCY

ST. GILES'S CHRISTIAN MISSION

A mother's letter, crude in composition and feeble in spelling, but tremulous with fond love and bitter sorrow over an erring son, came under the eye the other day of an officer in one of our Metropolitan gaols. Happily he was one of that increasing class of officials who, while strict and faithful in duty, have hearts to feel for those committed to their charge. Touched by the pitiful circumstances revealed, this officer called the attention of Mr. Wheatley to the case, with the shrewd remark, "It's just the sort that most needs your aid, and is most likely to reward your pains."

Promptly the superintendent of the St. Giles' Christian Mission responded to the call, and the next morning found him in the prison cell interviewing the man who was under remand awaiting trial. The sad story was soon told. He had been married two years, and for a time he had gone on comfortably. At length work failed him, and for the last three months he had only had three weeks' employment. One by one his things were pawned for bread, his wife was on the point of her confinement, and in despair he was tempted to break into a railway hut, where he knew money was locked up, and steal the contents of the cashbox. He was detected, arrested, and committed for trial. All this he frankly confessed to Mr. Wheatley with sorrow and shame. Say not it was merely vexation at being found out. Hitherto he had borne an honest name, but in the moment of the poor fellow had yielded; and now in the quietude of the prison cell he realised the wrong he had done, the sorrow of his poor wife, and the shame he had brought on his aged mother, whose loving letter had well-nigh broken his heart. Moreover, his mother not only deplored his sin, but in her letter besought him to seek pardon of God and find in the Lord Jesus a sure Keeper in the hour of trial. These words of pleading had cut him to the heart, and ere speaking of any practical steps to be taken in the matter, Mr. Wheatley took full care to press home the question of sin, and the urgency of personal salvation through the acceptance of the Saviour of sinners. It is yet too early to declare dogmatically the spiritual result, though it is believed the poor man has found pardon, but none the less is such a case worthy of record as illustrating how this mission to prisoners finds marvellous opportunities for individual dealing; for pressing the greatest of all questions on the hearts and consciences of men who otherwise might never have the Gospel brought thus closely home to them.

The Mission, however, goes further than this. It has proved that such fallen ones must be

HELPED TO RECOVER THEMSELVES.

When a man who has been convicted of theft leaves prison he finds that few will employ him. Men who have been in prison are shunned; employers fear to trust them. Hence they are in the gravest danger of lapsing into paths of crime. Pressed by want they are apt to yield to the suggestions ever made to them by evil-doers, and thus the "first offender" too frequently blossoms into the regular criminal.

To avert this, the Mission stretches forth a helping hand to all who seem penitent and sincerely desirous of living honestly. Thus have developed the varied operations of the St. Giles' Christian Mission in providing Boys' Homes, in finding employment for men and boys who have been convicted, in providing, in many cases, for the families of men in prison, and in doing many similar things likely to save repentant men and boys from the sorest temptation. It is and believes that only when a sinner has fled to Christ is he really safe; but it has learned that practical aid of the kind described is of great service in the reclamation of criminals.

So in the particular case just narrated the poor wife was helped in the time of nature's need. Comforts and necessaries of various kinds were provided. Already the aged mother was doing what she could, but though her will was large her means were small. These, however, have now been supplemented by the Mission, and thus the sorrow-stricken wife has been tided over her hour of need. Meanwhile the measures most likely to be of lasting benefit are being taken for the husband, and ere long it is fully hoped he will rejoin his wife and mother to lead a new and changed life.

This touching story is but one out of many such. Hundreds are to-day walking in the fear of God: trusted by employers and respected by their fellows, who but lately seemed doomed to a life of crime. Ask them and they will tell you, as they have told me, "Under God, we owe it all to the St. Giles' Christian Mission, which helped us when we were down, and told us of One who was willing to save."

This mission has been wonderfully blessed of God, both amongst men and boys, as can easily be learned by any who choose to make inquiries at the offices, 29, Brooke-street, Holborn, W.C. Because I know its genuine results, I venture to urge earnestly its present great need. No one who really understands what its issues have been in the conversion and reclamation of law-breakers can be willing to see its operations crippled for lack of funds.

THE LEITH CHRISTIAN FELLOWSHIP UNION began their open-air work at the dock gates on Sabbath week. There the Gospel is presented in speech and song to the many pleasure-seekers on their way to and from the steamers plying on the Firth of Forth. For two hours in the afternoon several hundreds listened with close attention. This work in former seasons has been greatly blessed, and especially to young men, a number of whom, once among the careless looking on, are now actively helping on the work. Thousands of tracts are given away at these gates, and on the forenoon of each Sabbath a staff of helpers hand out a Gospel message. This also has been owned of God, as the testimony of both old and young has shown. The prayers of your readers are asked, that great blessing may be given in the conversion of the unsaved. A Helper.

THE ABORIGINES' PROTECTION SOCIETY.—The annual meeting of this Society was held in the Wesleyan Centenary-hall, on Thursday. Mr. James Cropper, who presided, urged the need of more financial support, and said that no society had done so much with so little money. The annual report stated that there was increasing cause for alarm as to the prospects of African natives in general in the scramble for their continent. In spite of the good intentions of the great British companies and some others in regard to the slave trade, even the philanthropic provisions of the Brussels General Act appeared to have given opportunities for fresh injury to the people of Central Africa. As to the Kanaka labour traffic, the Queensland Act having been sanctioned, there was no advantage in further action till the new and stringent regulations had been tested. Mr. H. Gurney described his visits to Morocco prisons, which were something to open the eyes of any civilized country. Miss Colenso welcomed the growing desire of the Government to deal justly with native races, but calling for greatly increased energy to protect African aborigines from injury by the extension of European influence. Mr. C. H. Hopwood, M.P., and Mr. Sapara a native of Lagos, also spoke.

MR. HORTON ON PREACHING.*

The object which the lecturer has set before himself is to show that every true preacher has a message from God, and that no one, no matter what his fitness or abilities, is justified in preaching unless he is charged and burdened with such a message. The manner of introducing and unfolding his theme would lead one to suppose that he was setting forth something new, or something which, at least, had in these days been lost sight of; but surely it is now and always has been the custom of devout preachers "to inquire at the mouth of the Lord." Every book on the preacher's calling we ever remember to have read, every charge to young ministers we ever heard, every magazine article on the highest aspect of preaching we ever glanced at, made it a matter of supreme importance for the preacher to go to God first. The late Dr. Falding made it his business "to charge" young ministers to preach the preaching that God bade them (Jonah iii. 2).

We are thankful for the searching power with which Mr. Horton sets forth his theme. It can hardly, however, fail to bewilder the honest student when he continues his reading, and eagerly asks himself, "What is this 'Word of the Lord?'" "How shall I know that I have it?" For Mr. Horton takes special care to advance all his well-known views as to the large amount of mere human thought there is in the Bible, and at the same time to magnify what he calls "the Word of God outside the Bible." It is true that he is also careful to lavish glowing eulogies on the Bible, but he will not tolerate its being called "the Word of God." He is equally careful to say that the knowledge of science, of language, of history, etc., is not absolutely necessary, but he despises "the man of one book." Indeed, he is constantly shifting his position, as if he felt ill at ease anywhere either with the ambassador of Christ, who is intent only on receiving and conveying his Master's message, or with the man of learning, who finds God in all knowledge as much as in the Bible.

Mr. Horton might have found his path easier and safer if he had more frankly admitted that the point he seeks to enforce is constantly pressing home upon the hearts of faithful preachers; if he had followed older men in saying that a preacher will do well to make himself acquainted with the revelation God has made of Himself in creation and in the history of nations; and if he had vindicated the Bible as a revelation of God so far surpassing every other revelation that we call it "The Word of God." Even on Mr. Horton's own showing, "It would seem to be, as a general rule, a condition laid down by God Himself that, if we would hear Him speaking to us now, we should first study, understand, and assimilate this great historic word which He spoke to the fathers" (p. 108). May not that word, then, be called par excellence the Word of God? Again, "The Book will not be superseded—other truths will grow, but their germs will be found there. New knowledge will be gathered, but it will only interpret the old. He began with the Bible, and such is its quality, its Divine quality, that he will end with it" (p. 111). Mark the word "Divine." If the wonders wrought by means of that Word do not prove it to be the Word of God above every other word (while not denying that He has also spoken by other voices), they certainly prove that it is not the word of man. Then what shall we call it? Shall we distinguish it by the characteristic that marks it off from every book under heaven? Or shall we distinguish it by some of those qualities which, as having passed through human media, it possesses in common with other books? Shall we name it after its common, or after its unique, quality?

Curiously enough, Mr. Horton, who is so anxious to thrust into the forefront the human elements of the Bible, and thus to deter students and preachers from calling it the Word of God, is most studious to warn preachers against confounding reason, imagination, feeling, poetry, eloquence, with "the Word of the Lord." But if these are to be found in Isaiah, David, Moses (if he ever wrote or dictated a line!) Paul, why not also in the preacher? Indeed, we should like to know how any Word of the Lord can come except through the faculties whose products we are warned not to confound with the message itself. Yet in the lecture on "Methods and Modes" we see that Mr. Horton has as keen an eye to the advantages of a good voice, an impressive delivery, a pure rhetoric, a clear arrangement of thought, as he has to all human knowledge.

On the whole, we fear that these lectures, in spite of the fine qualities which they possess, will shake the confidence of many a student in the Bible in which he has been wont reverently and prayerfully to look for the message of God to men, and will drive him in on his own imaginations, reasonings, and feelings—the very things from which Mr. Horton professes to be so anxious to save him. The sainted McCheyne said to a seeker after Christ, who wished to know how he was to receive Him, "The only way in which you can receive Him is in his Word"; but now the preacher will be analysing his consciousness, and the hearer will be analysing the preacher. Are we to have, by this rationalistic process, a return to the morbid introspectiveness of a former generation, from which the Word of God has been saving us?

The lecturer is safest and most powerful where he keeps closest to the Bible. If he had a word of the Lord to deliver to his young American audience, it was when he said: "Your danger seems to lie in the engrossing power of material progress, and that ferment of growing lucre which forbids the entrance of the Spirit of God. Is not that mighty Spirit moving you to set your face like a flint against this benumbing influence, to cry aloud and spare not, in resisting 'the narrowing lust of gold'?" We may counsel young Americans to study the teaching of the New Testament on the subject of wealth, especially the Sermon on the Mount, and to ponder also the deep and burning utterances of their noble orator, Wendell Phillips, and at the same time brace their souls with the contemplation of the sacrifice of wealth and social position made by Lloyd Garrison and the whole of the anti-slavery party for the promotion of freedom. These men did not try to make "the best of both worlds." We have spoken out on this vital theme in these pages before, and we shall hail every worker in the great endeavour to save Christendom from the blighting influence of the love of money.

A VILLAGE MISSION.

Away in the heart of Derbyshire, nestling amongst its great hills, lies the little village of Cowley. Five years ago there was no place of worship at Cowley. Sundays came and went, but no praise ascended to God from its cottages; the children had no Sunday-school, the nearest church or chapel being two miles distant, and the Cowley folk, not being ardent church or chapel-goers, stayed at home.

Eight miles distant, down in the Derwent Dales beyond the moors, stands Cliff College, Curbar, the country branch of the East London Institute for Home and Foreign Missions, where through nine months of the year students are in training for the foreign mission field. Mr. Arnot, one of these Cliff brethren, now in Jamaica, hearing of the need at Cowley, started a cottage mission there. It meant a sixteen miles' tramp across country week by week—no light task with the snow knee-deep, as it often is in winter in Derbyshire; but men who have given their lives to foreign missions expect to meet greater hardships than cold, and drenchings to the skin, and preaching in wet footgear—and the out-station work at Cowley was, in spite of all difficulties, maintained.

Students from Cliff College have continued the work ever since; souls have been brought to Christ, and are brightly witnessing for Him to-day. The room that a kind friend has lent all these years no longer holds the audiences, and the congregation cannot be contained in any place in Cowley. The need of a suitable mission hall is felt. The villagers have raised £30 amongst them, a goodly sum for a very poor hamlet of 150 people. The sum of £50 is required to complete the building.

We trust that the hall will be opened shortly, free from debt. Dr. Grattan Guinness has promised to take the control of the work, and the students from Cliff College will carry on the ministry which their labour has, by the blessing of the Lord, begun. Communications should be addressed to Mr. Knapman, Cliff College, Curbar, viâ Sheffield.

SOUTHSEA CONFERENCE.—The twelfth annual gathering will be held next week (May 29, June 2). Amongst the speakers will be Dr. Elder Cumming, Revs. J. B. Figgis, J. Hudson Taylor, and John Wilkinson. The special object is the deepening of spiritual life, and that in view of the speedy return of the Lord Jesus Christ. Communications should be addressed, Rev. F. Baldey, St. Simon's Vicarage, Southsea.

THE HENERATGODA VILLAGE MISSION, started by Miss Fanny Gregson (now Mrs. Arthur Liesching), and in which she was able to enlist the services of several young ladies of the island, is in a flourishing condition. During Miss Gregson's absence (says The Ceylon Observer), the three Colombo young ladies carried on the work by themselves very happily. Now a new impetus is to be given to it by Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Liesching taking up their residence in the village and assuming the supervision of the mission. Miss Dufton, a young lady with a nurse's certificate, has also gone out from England to work as a medical missionary in connection with this very interesting Evangelical village mission.

MISS SHARMAN'S HOME

For the orphans' seaside outing last year a large house was engaged at Southend and a smaller one at Brighton. Some of the children went to Gravesend and Tunbridge Wells. The average time of holidays was a fortnight, the weather was propitious, and the whole affair was a great success. All came home established in health, refreshed in spirit, and full of thankfulness to God. The contributions sent for seaside expenses amounted to £346 10s. 7d. After the holidays were over there was enough money left to keep some of the most delicate children boarded out through the winter, and to give an occasional turn by the sea to a few whose state of health needed it.

Since last report I have received contributions for the Seaside Building Fund amounting to £593 6s. 6d., and now, having in hand the sum of £1003 11s. 6d., it seems as though the time had come for going forward. There is a freehold house for sale at Worthing which may be had for £1400. Worthing air is strongly recommended as suited for delicate and consumptive children; it is easy of access from London, and in many ways seems a desirable spot to fix upon. Charlotte Sharman.

POSTMEN AND TELEGRAPHISTS.

Our readers will doubtless be interested in hearing of the effort made in the West End to reach the Post Office employés. In 25A, Chapel-street there is a capital P.T.C.A. Institute. It contains, besides a large gymnasium, class rooms, coffee bar, etc., several cubical bedrooms, which have already proved a great boon to sorters and postmen.

On Wednesday, the 17th inst.. a special meeting was held, with Mr. G. Bradshaw in the chair. Prebendary Webb-Peploe gave a magnificent address, dwelling on the principle of all class effort, "bear ye one another's burdens and so fulfil the law of Christ." Miss Synge gave a sketch of the work among telegraph messengers; postman Derbridge, sorter Townsend, and messenger Hawe gave short testimonies as to the great benefits they and their brother officers had derived from the Institute.

The chairman told how this Institute aimed to reach the threefold need of these men: the spiritual and moral by meetings and personal talk, the intellectual by educational classes, the physical by the gymnasium, etc. Funds are needed for this work. The Hon. Sec. is Miss Atthill, 25A Norfolk-crescent, Hyde Park, W.

JEWS IN WHITECHAPEL.

The thirty-first annual report of Mr. H. Ehrlich's mission-work amongst the Jews at the Hebrew Conference Hall, Old Montague-street, Whitechapel, is a singularly modest record of untiring devotion. The hall is fully used, old as well as young being cared for; the sick and dying also are cheered, and pointed to the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of Jew and Gentile alike. The poor abound in the neighbourhood; accordingly, in addition to evangelistic services on Sundays, there is a free breakfast to denizens of the lodging-house. The mothers' meeting, conducted by Mrs. Ehrlich, has an attendance of from sixty to eighty, and there are over five hundred children on the roll of the Band of Hope. These operations are among Hebrew women and children, and they are not the only direct efforts made by Mr. and Mrs. Ehrlich among those sadly neglected classes. Every Saturday afternoon Jews assemble in the hall to discuss the Messiahship of Jesus Christ.

There is not, at the present time, that hostile spirit shown which was common twenty-five years ago; for there is a phenomenal stir in Judaism. Yet some of the more religious Jews were, a little while ago, so shocked at the success of the Mission, that a letter was addressed to the Chief Rabbi, with the result that a committee was appointed to inquire into the matter, and "to devise such plans as may counteract the evil influence of the missionaries in the East-end, more especially with regard to the children."

The work is fuller than ever of interest and promise, and deserves the cordial support of friends of Jewish evangelisation. Communications to Mr. Ehrlich should be addressed, 95, King Edward-road, South Hackney, London, N.E.

LAVENDER HILL UNITED MISSIONS BAND is composed of the mission bands of Wesleyans, Primitive Methodists, Congregationalists, and Baptists who are united for special aggressive evangelistic work. Much good has been done in the neighbourhood. The band would be glad to assist any mission or Y.M.C.A. in the country within fifteen miles of London, on August Bank Holiday. The hon. sec. is Mr. Frank Wm. Cannon, 16, Acanthus-road, Lavender Hill, London, S.W.

EZRA, NEHEMIAH, ESTHER.

"Power in weakness" through the inspiring Spirit and Providential hand of God is the lesson written all over the historical books dealt with in Professor Adeney's volume on Ezra, Nehemiah, and Esther.* The favoured nation, doomed though it be through the prolonged times of the Gentiles to a position of subordination and comparative helplessness, is not forsaken of her God. The heart of the nation is not dead. The pulse of national life still beats. Jerusalem may be out of sight; she can never fall out of mind. He that keepeth Israel neither slumbers nor sleeps.

Profoundly affecting is the history with which these sacred pages are charged. The whole narrative is set in sorrow; nor is it patriotism that is the main ground of the sorrow, but penitence, sorrow for sin, that godly sorrow which looks heavenward for relief, nor looks in vain. These books show the motive power there is in genuine religious concern. And what they reveal in this regard has a voice to us to-day. If we could but grieve more, if we could but enter more feelingly into the religious crisis of our own age, then should we, like Ezra and Nehemiah, pray more from a necessity that knows no law, and out of the depths would come power; for the Living God would look down upon us from heaven, and prompted and strengthened by his Spirit we should resemble the mighty men of old who "knew God and did exploits." It is a sad commentary on the signs of the times that such a theme of debate should arise as—"Is Christianity played out?" Oh! for the deep-hearted concern with which these ancient histories are vocal. The apostolic shout would soon follow, "Thanks be unto God who always causeth us to triumph."

We miss in Professor Adeney's exposition the spiritual incisiveness that the subject demands. The plane of observation is not high enough. His sympathy with the great promoters of the Divine purpose is often more than doubtful. Strictures are freely passed on their course of action, and representations given of their character and motive that savour much more of "modern thought" than insight. It is a feature, too, of this work that what is taken away with one hand—in our judgment without warrant—is restored or replaced, sometimes to a considerable extent, by the other. This has the air of a judicial procedure, but we cannot rank it as a merit. Thus the refusal on the part of Zerubbabel and his associates (Ezra iv.) of the proffered co-operation of their adversaries is regarded by Professor Adeney "with a sense of painful disappointment." He thinks (p. 63) that such an offer from the colonists afforded the Jews a grand missionary opportunity for carrying out the broad programme of the "second Isaiah," who had promised the spread of the light of God's grace among the Gentiles." He follows this up with the remark, "The less pleasing side of religious intensity here presents itself. Zeal seems to be passing into fanaticism," and so forth. This is painful reading, and we have but briefly sampled it; but the subject is not closed till an apology is given, which, under the heading of "the limits of comprehension" paints the evils of latitudinarianism which, under cover of widening the fold, makes the fold itself to disappear. Still, though Professor Adeney rebuts his own charge in part, he returns to it in measure afresh. The separateness of the Jews cannot be wholly condemned, neither can it be wholly condoned. In his view the absorption of the Jews "in sacrificial ritual and its adjuncts, shows that they were too much under the influence of religious externalism." We venture to think that all that bespoke their piety, and disposition to seek God after his own appointed order, and that instead of deserving censure for guarding the purity of their communion, they merit the commendation that is due to true spiritual instinct.

Much more might be written on the back and forth style of exposition that is a characteristic feature of this work, but we forbear. The critical faculty of many that handle the Word of God in these days is largely creative, giving rise to animadversions and apologies that cumber the ground, and tend to questionings rather than to godly edifying.

Another point that demands notice is Professor Adeney's mode of treating the inspired text. It is ever and anon in evidence all along the line, some times incidentally, sometimes in terms of the utmost precision, that the author has given place to the destructive conclusions of the Higher Criticism. Thus the decree of Artaxerxes, which is given in full in Ezra VII., is to be taken sub grano salis. "Here, as in other cases," says Professor Adeney (p. 119), "we must make some allowance either for the literary freedom of the chronicler, or for the Jewish sympathies of the translator, for it cannot be supposed that a heathen, such as Artaxerxes undoubtedly was, would have shown the knowledge of the Hebrew religion, or have owned the faith in it, which the edict, as we now have it, suggests." What allowance is to be made for Jewish unveracity is not stated; and, despite the above impeachment, we are told that "there is no reason to doubt the substantial accuracy of the document." Nor is it possible to gather from Mr. Adeney's exposition where the local colouring comes in.

The treatment of the Book of Esther is still more objectionable. We recoil from the conclusion that any book of the sacred canon is to be construed as a work of fiction founded on fact. But Professor Adeney is well content to adopt this hypothesis. According to him "the Book of Job has long been accepted as a sublime poem, founded on fact, perhaps, but owing its chief value to the Divinely inspired thoughts of its author." So "the Book of Jonah is regarded by many cautious and devout readers as an allegory replete with important lessons concerning a very ugly aspect of Jewish selfishness." Even so, by parity of reasoning, it is contended "the Book of Esther need not be dishonoured when some room is allowed for the play of the creative imagination of its author"—a view that is clinched by the astounding argument that "in these days of the theological novel we are scarcely in a position to object to what may be thought to partake of the character of a romance, even if it is found in the Bible."

We exceedingly regret that in dealing with this work we have had occasion to dwell on such serious blemishes. We would rather have descanted on the merits of the work, which from a literary point of view are considerable. Many of the reflections are timely and thought enriching. The comments are often suggestive. But the assumptions of rationalistic criticism spoil the work, giving to the exposition a dual character, and turning even sacred history into "such stuff as dreams are made of."

James Douglas.

Missionary Breakfast.

On Whit-Monday the annual missionary breakfast was given at the Talbot Tabernacle, Bayswater. Pastor Frank H. White presided. A large company of missionaries and others interested in the work of the Lord in foreign lands, sat down to breakfast in the lecture-hall behind the church. The provisions being kindly given by various friends, the proceeds of the sale of tickets were devoted to the cause which had drawn so many together. A public meeting was afterwards held in the Tabernacle, when brief but stirring addresses were delivered by Mr. James Monro (ex-Commissioner of Police), Miss Kate Johnson (North Africa), Dr. Pentecost, and Mdme. Lecoat, of Brittany.

THE EASTBOURNE Y.M.C.A. has had its united early breakfast. They hold it at the beginning of May every year at half-past six, and afterwards there are several short speeches of five minutes each. The present one was a very bright, stimulating, profitable, and encouraging occasion. Several ministers and laymen had a terse word in season to about ninety or one hundred members and friends. The meeting had to break up at a quarter past eight, when all departed refreshed and cheered onwards in their Christian life—life in the daily calling. A visitor present commends the custom to the consideration of Associations who have not yet adopted it.

MADRID, SPAIN.—In a letter dated Madrid, May 2, Mr. Fenn announces the arrival of himself and Mrs. Fenn in the city. The journey from England was, on the whole, pleasant, though during some parts of it the heat was unpleasantly great. There were several opportunities of testimony for Christ en route. It was very depressing, says Mr. Fenn, to find Vittoria, the capital of the important province of Alava, without the light of the Gospel, and wholly given over to Romish error. The work at Chamberi, Madrid, has been well sustained during the absence of these workers. They found full meetings, overflowing schools, and cases of blessing.

THE McALL MISSION.—The funeral of the lamented Dr. R. W. McAll is described at great length in Le Signal for May 20. Addresses full of warm appreciation were delivered on the occasion by Pastors Theodore Monod, G. Appia, S. Anderson, R. Hollard, and others. On the day following the funeral the committee of the Mission formally resolved to continue the work, in reliance upon the Divine aid, with redoubled activity and consecration. M. Louis Sautter was appointed honorary president of the Mission, Pastor Couve succeeding him as vice-president. Pastor C. Greig was nominated director, and confirmed in his position of chairman of committee. It was decided to take steps without delay to inform friends of the Mission that it will be procuted with unrelaxed energy.

PRAISE FROM SYDNEY.

God has honoured my congregation by taking from our midst one Sunday-school teacher for the China Inland Mission (one of the first band from Australia); one for the mission at Ceylon, under David, the Tamil evangelist: and on Saturday next one of our very best young men, filled with the Spirit, a young solicitor, leaves here to join Rev. G. C. Grubb, at Buenos Ayres, for his South American Mission. Has not God blessed us? We have several young people who are waiting for guidance and the call of the Holy Spirit.

We shall never forget the visit of Mr. Grubb some fifteen months back. The Master used him greatly for the deepening of the spiritual life in this parish, and thank God that to-day there are no signs of retrogression. It has never before been my privilege to witness such a craving for spiritual food, and such reading and study of the Word of God; or to see young Christians make such rapid strides in the knowledge of that Word. Our weekly Church prayer meeting seldom numbers less than 100; and there are several private meetings and two open-airs during each week. John Vaughan.

KITKATLA, NORTH PACIFIC.

Mrs. P. Bowen writes from Stoke Lodge, Ludlow:—"You were so good as to print a letter from me on Feb. 2 asking for funds to purchase a mission boat for Kitkatla, North Pacific. I would like now to give more particulars of the mission. In 1885 the heathen destroyed the church and tore up the Bibles. The little band of converts had to bear much persecution, and proved their sincerity by patient endurance.

"The church was rebuilt, but for more than a year no teacher was allowed to land among the Kitkatlas. In 1890, Rev. F. L. Stephenson went to reside amongst them, and now it can be seen that the affliction has not been without its fruits. The new church is so thronged that, although the Indians have erected a western gallery, many cannot find space to sit. On the island to which the Kitkatlas resort for some months every year for the seal-hunting, they have erected a church, felling the trees and shaping them during their leisure hours, while the women sewed sail-cloth for walls and roof, and carried white sand from the beach for the floor.

"Mr. Stephenson writes:—'The mission is at present the joy of the surrounding Christian villages. Long may it remain so.'

"I have little over £4 at present in hand towards the required £50, but I know there are amongst God's people those who will gladly show their sympathy with these Indians by helping to provide the mission boat."

Troubles in Armenia.

At a recent meeting held in connection with the Bible Lands Missions Aid Society, some interesting information was given by Dr. G. F. Herrick as to matters in Armenia. He referred to the case of Anatolia College, which has been settled by the action of the U.S. Government; an indemnity has been paid, and the College fully exonerated from the charges made.

Dr. Herrick acknowledged the existence of knots of seditious Armenians here and there. It is natural that the Ottoman Government should desire to eliminate sedition; the grave mistake of Government officials came in the course they adopted, viz., accusing and imprisoning innocent men, and alienating those who are loyal, as the great mass of Armenians have always been. The imprisoned teachers are innocent of the charge against them, and Dr. Herrick reported from an authentic source the grievous sufferings to which these educated men were subjected on the prolonged journey from Marsovan to Angora. Doubtless by the very means of these painful events, God is advancing the kingdom of Christ among this Eastern people.

The Central Soudan Mission.

This young organisation has a noble purpose and large aims. The director is Mr. Hermann G. Harris, B.A., who, with several others, has resided for some time in North Africa, studying the Arabic and Hansa languages. It is proposed in due course to penetrate the country, and settle on the shores of Lake Tchad, in order from that centre to influence some of the many millions of blacks, who remain utterly unevangelised. Letters for the director should be addressed to the care of Messrs. Bywater, Tanqueray, and Phayre, 79, Queen Victoria-street, E.C.

THE Y.M.C.A.

Open-air work has been commenced by the Walsall Y.M.C.A. in one of the poorest localities of the town with every token of success.

We hear that already arrangements are being made for the jubilee commemoration of Y.M.C.A., to be held in London, June 1 to 7, 1894.

The Y.M.C.A. at Pontypool is anxious to form a library—there being no library in the town. Gifts of books would be welcome. Address, W. J. Gould, care of Pitten, Pontypool.

A new Association has just been inaugurated at Forest Hall, near Newcastle-on-Tyne. Alderman W. D. Stephens presided at the opening meeting, and thirty-one young men have already joined.

Encouraging accounts are to hand of the progress of the work in Sweden. The number of Associations affiliated with the National Alliance has risen in two years from thirty-five to forty-one, and the number of members from 2007 to 3603.

The Association in Montreal is undertaking a new departure in supporting a secretary to organise and sustain a Y.M.C.A. amongst the native Chinese students, either in Pekin or Shanghai, as may be decided. This is another most welcome sign of the extension of Y.M.C.A. work throughout the world.

A social reception of members was held in the drawing-room of the Y.M.C.A., Manchester, when an address on "Life in Australia" was given by Rev. H. B. Macartney. A great deal of valuable information was given by him to the members present on different phases of religious work and commercial life in Australia.

The Spring Conference of the South-Eastern District of Y.M.C.A.'s was held on the 17th inst. at Folkestone, and was attended by much success. Mr. J. Murray, L.R.C.P., presided at the business meeting in the afternoon, and Mr. W. Hind Smith at the evening meeting, when an address was delivered by Mr. John MacInnes, M.A., upon the subject of "Y.M.C.A.'s in the Foreign Field."

At Aldersgate-street, the Sunday afternoon meeting continues to give much satisfaction. The growth in numbers is not so rapid as might be wished, but it is gratifying to know that a large majority of those who are attracted to the meetings become regular attendants. The Monday evening Gospel meeting has been maintained throughout the past month. Workers are much needed in connection with this meeting.

At a very successful gathering, arranged by Mr. W. A. Wilson, the secretary, and held at the West London Branch (Savile-row) on Thursday evening, Mr. R. W. Perks, M.P., had the pleasure of welcoming a large number of young people from the business houses around. Mr. Perks kindly secured the attendance of a very fine orchestra, composed of ladies, and himself delivered an excellent and stimulating address.

The open-air work in connection with the Dublin Y.M.C.A. has been very successful, and each Monday evening, in the Phœnix Park, a noble band of young men are "lifting up a crucified but now risen and glorified Saviour." Many hundreds listen to the good news of a Saviour's love, and his word shall not return void. We ask for the prayers and sympathy of the Lord's children. During the last six months over 200 men have joined the Association, and the general secretary, Mr. Wm. A. Boyd, is much encouraged in his work, and hopes soon to have the debt, £150, wiped off. "All things are possible to him that believeth."

The secretary of the Hackney Y.M.C.A. gives a hearty invitation to any Christian young men desirous of engaging in village evangelistic work this summer to join the members of the Hackney Association for a fortnight's missionary cruise on the Norfolk and Suffolk Broads, from July 22 to August 5. The object of the cruise is the two-fold one of spending a very enjoyable holiday and at the same time engage in active work for the Master by means of tract distribution, cottage visitation, and open-air meetings. Two large, comfortably-furnished wherry yachts have already been chartered for the cruise, together with smaller boats for sailing, rowing, and fishing. The total cost for return rail from London, boats, and provisions will be £5. Address the secretary, 275, Mare-street, Hackney, E.

The Association News states that the troubles in the Australian world have not been confined to commercial circles. We regret to hear that the Melbourne Y.M.C.A. has been passing through troubled waters, and that the committee have had to "shorten sail." The new and beautiful building is for the present to be closed throughout the day, and opened only in the evenings. There are signs of hopefulness about the position, for we understand that, at the same time, the committee are seeking, both in the old world and the new, for the most efficient secretary that can be found for the position. A great deal depends upon the selection of this officer. Above all things, he should be a man in sympathy with all the churches in the city, and able heartily to co-operate with all the ministers and Christian workers.

THE Y.W.C.A.

Under very auspicious circumstances a Holiday Home in connection with the Y.W.C.A. was recently opened by the Hon. L. E. Portman at the picturesque and beautiful little seaside town of Swanage. The chairman, Mr. G. Burt, spoke cordial words of welcome and good wishes. Miss Wingfield Digby gave a most warm and stirring address, speaking of the need of, and the blessing upon, Holiday Home work, and other friends joined in the flow of congratulation and goodwill.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR NOTES.

A society has been formed in connection with Golborne-street Church, Warrington.

A Christian Endeavour Society, with over forty members, has been formed in Blandford.

Two Bible classes, connected with the Central Hall, Newcastle, have resolved themselves into a branch of the Christian Endeavour Society, and this promises to be a large and helpful gathering of young men and women.

The Y.P.S.C.E. in connection with Rathgar Methodist Church, Dublin, has just concluded a week's Gospel mission. The Lord greatly blessed this effort, and manifested his love and power in the conversion of many souls. Revs. C. S. Laird, W. B. Lumley, and J. Kirkwood were amongst the speakers; the services being conducted by the young people, a number of whom formed themselves into a choir, others leading in prayer, reading the Scriptures, and testifying to the saving power of Jesus.

Those interested in the suppression of the opium traffic will be pleased to hear of an effort made by three little girls to send a contribution towards this good work. They met together and made various small articles for a little sale which was held the other day at Warrington. It consisted principally of dolls' clothes, bags of sweets, text cards, etc. Mrs. Reed opened the sale, expressing pleasure in seeing this result of bringing the subject before the young people of the Christian Endeavour Society. The result of the sale quite exceeded the expectation of the youthful promoters.

Royal Hospital for Incurables.

The annual festival in aid of the Royal Hospital for Incurables, West Hill, Putney Heath, was held on Wednesday week.

Mr. W. D. Freshfield, who presided, made a forceful plea on behalf of the Institution which really was a "home" where poor incurables spent the declining years of their life—he believed in comfort. On a recent visit he found amongst the 250 inmates women who had been there for years, and who were likely to be there for years yet to come, but they were afflicted with diseases which were incurable. What would have become of those poor women had they not had such an Institution as this to resort to? The answer was obvious, they would have had to go into the workhouse. Much care had to be exercised in the selection of outside pensioners, for science had shown us that diseases which fifty years ago were supposed to be incurable were in fact within the range of medical science. The management, therefore, were alive to the importance of being au fait with all new forms of medical treatment. Whilst he should like to see the number of their beneficiaires increased, he did not believe that was possible in their present buildings, and if they added another wing they would be compelled to shut out the charming view which was commanded from the windows, and which was undoubtedly a source of pleasure to the patients. Addresses, in support of the Institution, followed by Messrs. J. Rains, J. H. Ellis, and others.

STUDY OF PROPHETIC SCRIPTURE.—The conveners of the Clapham-road Conference (June 14, 15, and 16) dwell in their letter of invitation on the importance at the present time of the subject. The Lord is calling his church, by manifest signs, to observe his acts at this moment in fulfilment of the purposes declared in his Word. He is permitting the Jews to be driven out of the countries in which they have taken refuge; and they are, in ignorance and unbelief, gathering into the land promised to their forefathers. Their national restoration to Palestine is now evidently a question of time. It is one of the most remarkable signs of the nearness of the Lord's coming that so many of his people are being awakened to look for it. This Prophetic Convention is open to persons of all lines of prophetic study.

IRISH NOTES.

There are now 783 orphans under the care of the Tyrone Protestant Orphan Society, which closed the year with a deficit of £50.

Successful evangelistic services have just been held at Tinahely, co. Wicklow, by Rev. W. F. Gason, and at Ballina by Miss Smith and Miss Bax.

At a public meeting held in Dublin last week it was decided to establish a Methodist Central Mission in that city, and nearly £600 was contributed towards the cost of the enterprise.

Rev. J. A. Elliott, of Faizabad, India, who has been visiting Ireland, has made a deep impression in favour of Indian missions by his sermons and addresses. The story of his conversion has been listened to with great delight.

The Methodist Managing Committee met last week in Dublin, and sanctioned the building of several new chapels in various parts of Ireland, as well as arranged the business of the denomination for the annual conference, to be held in Cork in June.

On Saturday evening the foundation stone of a new church, in connection with the Belfast City Mission, to cost £3000, was laid by Mr. J. J. Shillington, J.P., in the presence of a large audience, at Duncairn Gardens, Belfast. Addresses were delivered by Rev. G. R. Wedgwood, of Dublin, and Jno. Waddell, of Belfast.

An excellent work is being done in the Victoria Homes and Shamrock Lodge Schools, Ballysillan, co. Antrim. There are now ninety-five girls under the care of the committee, against seventy-three last year, and these are being trained, both morally and physically, in such a way as to make them, when they grow up, a blessing to their country.

At the annual meeting of the Belfast Branch of the Evangelical Alliance, held last week, it was resolved that the branch should revert to its former practice of direct communication with the head office in London. A weekly prayer meeting has been held during the year, and much has been done to bring Christians of various denominations more closely together.

MISS WESTON'S SAILORS' REST.

H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh presided on Tuesday week at the annual meeting of the Sailors' Rest, Devonport. Miss Weston gave an outline of the whole work very much on the lines of her address in London, noticed in our issue for May 11th, various high officers in the Royal Navy having supported the work.

The Duke of Edinburgh spoke of his deep interest in the work which Miss Weston has done for so many years in the Navy. It is not only appreciated and acknowledged by those who, like ourselves, have come to this meeting to-day, but it has created a real and permanent feeling of affection among the men of the Navy for Miss Weston and those who are associated with her in this work. To meet the requirements of this institution more accommodation is necessary, and he was glad to hear that the premises will shortly be extended. Some two years ago he made a suggestion to Miss Weston, which she contemplates carrying out. It was to provide, if possible, some building or rooms in which the wives and mothers of absent seamen could employ part of their time by using the sewing-machine, and by that means supplement the pay which their husbands or sons sent home, and which, perhaps, might be inadequate to maintain them and their families as comfortably as could be desired. If those interested in the welfare of the British sailor would help Miss Weston in this matter, they would be doing a good work. If a crèche could be established for the children, it would also be a most excellent thing.

DR. BARNARDO'S HOMES.—The case of the boy Harry Gossage, which has been before the Courts for some time on a writ of habeas corpus, was reheard last week by Baron Pollock and Mr. Justice Hawkins. Dr. Barnardo's counsel stated the steps that had been taken without success with a view to complying with the order of the Court and producing the boy. The judges decided that in all the circumstances a true return to the writ had been made by Dr. Barnardo, and discharged the writ accordingly.

THE GUARDS' MISSION.—In his fifth annual report, Sergeant George Pullinger (late Grenadier Guards), says:—"With deep sorrow, through want of financial support, I have been compelled to close the Home; but I have continued to keep open the meeting-room. Shall the room also be closed, and the meetings cease?" The mission has borne a welcome testimony, and God has abundantly owned it in the past. There is, however, a need for more hearty support. The year terminated with a deficit of £49. Communications to Sergeant Pullinger should be addressed, 58, Hugh-street, Ebury Bridge, S.W.

Evangelistic Notes.

Redditch.—Mr. J. H. Mellar has just concluded a fourteen days' mission at Crabbs Cross. There were crowds each Sunday evening. Large numbers entered the inquiry-room and most of them profess to have found rest in Christ.

Brighton.—The Evangelistic Mission opened a tent mission in the populous neighbourhood of Trafalgar-street on Sabbath last, afternoon and evening. Mr. Edward Hurditch spoke with much power, and there were inquirers.

Mr. H. J. Knight, of the Evangelisation Society, has held a three weeks' mission at Somerley, Ringwood. The earnest and faithful preaching and clear explanation of God's Word has been greatly blessed to those within reach of the tent.

Bootle.—Mr. W. L. Broadbent has just concluded a ten days' mission at Anglesea-road, a mission church situated in a populous neighbourhood, and some of the lowest types of humanity have professed to find peace. There have been many evidences of blessing.

Ormskirk.—Special services have been held here by Mr. and Mrs. Evens. On the first night there were several inquirers, and more on every succeeding evening. Many professed to decide for Christ. The congregations, thin at first, increased till the chapel was quite full. The impression made will long be remembered.

Buxton.—Rev. R. Rew, pastor of the Congregational Church, commenced the eighth season of services in the open air on Sunday last, assisted by a band of young people. These services have been well sustained each summer. There was a very large gathering on the "Slopes," and the first service gave good promise of a successful season.

Deptford.—A sixteen days' special mission has been conducted here by Misses Ginger and Cook. Men, women, and young people have found Christ, besides a good number of children. There were large congregations every evening. There had been much preparation for these services by special prayer meetings and visitation, and now many hearts are full of praise.

Lancaster.—We opened the Central Hall in this town last October for evangelistic services on Sunday evenings, and have had some blessed times. The people have been gathered from the streets. We do not commence our meetings until the regular services are well commenced. Strange to relate, the hall was built by a Roman Catholic about two years ago. We should be glad of the assistance of fellow-Christians. G. H. Weekes.

Mr. Walter Notman, of the Evangelisation Society, has just concluded a three weeks' mission at Kirkintilloch, N.B. It has been a time of great spiritual refreshment. The meetings were brought to a close by a conference for the deepening of spiritual life, the subject being "Separation." Addresses of a helpful character were delivered by Rev. W. Smith, Coalsnaughton, Mr. W. Govan, Glasgow, Mrs. Webster, Rochdale, the chair being occupied by Mr. Notman.

Leicester.—A fortnight's mission in connection with the P.S.A. movement, conducted by Mr. Henry Thorne, was brought to a close on Monday, May 15. The meetings were held in Carley-street and Dover-street Chapels (Baptist), Bishop-street (Wesleyan), Clarence Hall, Evington Hall, and the Y.M.C.A. The afternoon Bible-readings were much enjoyed; the Sunday services were largely attended; deep impressions were made, and a considerable number professed conversion.

New Shildon (Durham).—A special mission has been conducted by Rev. E. Davidson. The first few days were not so successful as desired, but eventually a reaping-time was granted. The men's meeting on the second Sunday was most interesting, many being present who had never been in any place of worship for years. Tuesday night's meeting will live in many memories, a rush being made to the inquiry-room of deeply-convicted penitents. The services were continued after Mr. Davidson left, and souls have been saved each night.

Misses Bax and Smith.—These ladies have had a recently successful ten days' mission in Ballina. The meetings were held in the Methodist Church, and were well attended by all classes and creeds. The singing of the Gospel had a telling effect, as the evangelists sang the old, old story of the Cross with cultured and harmonious voices. Strong men might be seen weeping under deep conviction, and earnestly pleading for pardon; others rejoiced in realised forgiveness. Many Roman Catholics came, and were delighted to hear the Gospel. At the praise meeting scores of people connected with various Protestant Churches stood up and publicly confessed Christ.

Addlestone, Surrey.—Mr. Harmer, Metropolitan Tabernacle Evangelist, has conducted a successful nine days' mission here. For some weeks before, the Christians in the place united in organisation and prayer, and much blessing has resulted. From the first the meetings were well attended, and "the word was with power"; but at the closing service the Village Hall was crowded to excess. The address was on "Choosing Life," and in the after meeting many were led to decision for Christ. We invite our fellow Christians to join with us in praise to the great Head of the Church for "times of refreshing from the presence of the Lord"; also in prayer for the Divine blessing upon the anticipated visit of Mr. Meyer next month. H. B.

Personalia.

Rev. Dr. Chambers, of New York, President of the Presbyterian Alliance, was in London last week.

Rev. Dr. Mathews, secretary of the Presbyterian Alliance, is expected back from Syria about the end of the month.

Rev. Samuel Newth, D.D., for so many years principal of New College, London, celebrates on Thursday, with Mrs. Newth, his golden wedding day.

Mr. John Elliott, Evangelist (The Hill View, Warren-road, Torquay), while working a good deal in Devonshire, is prepared to evangelise in other counties as well.

Dr. Benjamin Gregory, for many years editor of the Wesleyan Magazine, has received permission to retire from active service at the ensuing Conference. He will be succeeded by Rev. W. L. Watkinson, superintendent of Hinde-street circuit.

Rev. Ossian Davies (Bournemouth), we regret to state, has been suddenly taken ill, the result, probably, of overwork. He was unable to take his usual services on Sunday. Rest is indispensable. With this it is hoped that recovery may be assured.

Mr. C. H. Soper, Victoria-road, Woolston, Southampton, lately returned from the Antipodes, will be pleased to speak on Brazil, or preach the Gospel in any part of Great Britain, during the next few months. The work in Brazil, he says, is very bright and encouraging; the great need is more workers.

Rev. Walter C. Smith, D.D., who was elected last week "Jubilee" Moderator of the Free Church Assembly, was at one time of Free Roxburgh Church, Edinburgh, a church with which such men as Rev. Dr. James Hamilton and Rev. John McNeill have been associated. Dr. Smith is well known as an able writer and popular preacher.

Rev. Duncan Ferguson, of the English Presbyterian Mission at Taiwanfoo, Formosa, was, according to intelligence received last week, nearly murdered by savages whilst returning from a visit to some of the outlying mission stations. He had got a short distance ahead of his party when he was shot at and slightly wounded. Fortunately he was able to regain the protection of his party before his assailants could overtake him.

Rev. G. F. Pentecost, D.D., having been formally admitted to the Presbyterian ministry, has now fully entered on the pastorate at Marylebone. A crowded and enthusiastic meeting was held in the church on Thursday evening to welcome the new minister. Amongst the speakers were Revs. R. M. Thornton, J. Monro Gibson, D.D., and D. MacEwen, D.D., as well as Dr. Pentecost, whom the ladies of the congregation surprised with the gift of a gown. Mr. Alexander Fraser having dwelt on the valuable service rendered by Rev. R. M. Thornton during the vacancy, presented him with a cheque for £100.

Dr. John G. Paton, in our last issue, was represented, on the authority of The Manchester Guardian, as "having given £5000 from the profits arising from the sale of his autobiography to the mission in the New Hebrides." We are requested to state that the sum above quoted has no reference to Dr. Paton's personal liberality, whatever that may be, but to the amount of the "John G. Paton Mission Fund," which readers of the Book in all quarters of the world have, by their spontaneous donations, placed at his disposal to assist in completing the evangelising of the New Hebrides.

RICHMOND-STREET MISSION has for thirty-five years done good work in Walworth, and the success is evidenced by a large number of conversions among those who have passed through the schools. There are now over 100 workers engaged in this Christlike service, who have about 1300 children each week under their instruction and influence, besides ninety mothers and a large number of regular attendants at the adult services. The present accommodation is totally inadequate for want of room. After years of patient waiting, the opportunity of acquiring the freehold of a site upon which to enlarge has been embraced, and an urgent appeal is made for funds to complete the purchase. The site and the probable cost of the building will amount to £2500, towards which about £400 has been already promised or subscribed. The secretary is Mr. Thomas W. How, 42, Saltoun-road, Brixton Rise, S.W.

Obituary.

MISS MINA CLARKE.

After years of faithful service under the auspices of the American Board of Foreign Missions, Miss Mina Clarke died on March 18, at Chisamba, West Central Africa.

REV. ROBERT ROBERTS, MADAGASCAR.

We hear with regret of the death, at the age of twenty-six, of Rev. Robert Roberts, a missionary stationed at Ambohihinamboarina, Madagascar. On March 20 he was rising from his bed after a severe attack of fever, when he fell down and became unconscious; he expired before the medical missionary, Rev. J. Pearse, of Fianarantsoa, could arrive. He was buried at Fianarantsoa on March 24, the officers of the native Government attending the funeral. He left a widow and one child.

REV. J. W. MURRAY, LL.D.

Deep regret is felt in the North of Ireland generally at the sudden death of Rev. J. W. Murray, LL.D., Rector of Ballymena for many years, and Dean of Connor. He was a good speaker and preacher, and took deep interest in the Orphan Society, and all that concerned the welfare of the community. He was the author of several well-known books. At the death of Dr. Reeves he was nominated as bishop of the diocese, and received the second highest vote. He was in the sixty-fifth year of his age, and forty-first of his ministry.

MR. W. COOTE, CONGO-BALOLO MISSION.

In our issue for April 27 we gave extracts from a letter received from Mr. Thos. Coote, the first missionary of the Hackney Y.M.C.A., and penned from Bongandanga. Since then news has been received that on Feb. 27 this brave young missionary has been called home, at his distant and isolated station in the very heart of the Congo-Balolo region. No details are to hand further than that Mr. Haupt, who was working with him, nursed him day and night to the close of his fortnight's illness, and then committed him tenderly to a grave which is alongside that of Mr. Scarnell.

MR. JOSEPH LYNN.

We regret to hear of the death of Mr. Joseph Lynn, who left England two or three years ago to engage in mission work in association with Mr. F. S. Arnot at Garenganze, West Central Africa. His movements were watched with much interest by those who knew him, as he combined many excellent natural qualities with true devotion to the cause of Christ. He settled at Kwanjulula, in the Bihé country, and his diary, as given from time to time in Echoes of Service, has afforded many a glimpse of his interesting work in Africa. In the first April issue of Echoes he related that on Jan. 16 a strange dog bit himself and Dr. Fisher. The wounds were promptly cauterised, and it was hoped that no serious consequences would result. In the middle of March, however, Mr. Lynn fell ill, and symptoms of the dreaded hydrophobia were soon recognised. He expired on March 18, aged twenty-seven, and his death will be mourned by many.

REV. R. D. ROBERTS, LLANELLY.

This well-known and honoured Baptist minister was called home on the 15th inst. at the age of seventy-three. A native of Llanberis, he was ordained in 1844 to the pastorate of Sardis Chapel. In 1863 he accepted a call to Zoar Chapel, Llwynhendy; on his retirement in 1887 the membership had increased from 109 to 650, and a place of worship had been built to accommodate 1000 worshippers. Mr. Roberts suffered from failing eyesight, and two years ago one of his eyes, which had been attacked with cancer, was removed. "His life work," says The South Wales Daily News, "is written in the hearts and lives of the religious community at Zoar, to which he faithfully ministered for years, and in the consciences of tens of thousands of the inhabitants of Wales, before whom in the field of the Cymanfa or in the stately edifices of the town he expounded the Word of God. As a preacher, he was one of the most eloquent and fervid who ever adorned the Nonconformist pulpit in Wales, and his death will be mourned throughout the length and breadth of the land of his birth and service."

C.M.S. IN INDIA.—Rev. E. T. Burrows writes:—"I have been transferred from Umballa to Peshawur. This is the most northern station we have; it is on the borders of Afghanistan. There are 8000 troops in the station, 3000 Europeans and 5000 natives. We require so many as the hill tribes are very unsettled. I shall be glad to receive tracts or illustrated papers to give to the soldiers. They are always glad of anything to read. We have about 30 Christians in the Rifle Brigade, but only a few in the Northumberland Fusiliers. The C.M.S. have a large and well-established mission here, but they find the Mohammedans very difficult to win for Christ."

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we purpose giving portrait and sketch of Mr. JOSIAH NIX, Organising Secretary of the West London Forward Movement.

Many of our readers may be glad to know that the remarkable address by Archdeacon Farrar on the advances of Ritualism, which we recently published, is issued as a penny pamphlet by Mr. Kensit, 18, Paternoster-row, E.C.

Rev. Gavin Carlyle's memoir of the late Dr. Adolph Saphir (Shaw & Co., 7s. 6d.) forms a finely-printed volume, and it will be eagerly read by the multitude of friends and admirers of the deceased preacher. The work is one of great freshness and interest; it gives a faithful portraiture of the man and his unique position as a Jewish Christian pastor, and expounder of the Sacred Oracles. In an early issue we purpose reviewing the book at some length. Meantime, we heartily commend it as a most welcome addition to the rich biographical literature of the day.

Some readers may think that in certain of our pages they have had to sup too full of horrors this week. But the horror is not in the telling of the facts narrated: it is rather in the existence of such foul and unnatural doings. We have thought it right to let our earnest coloured sister, Miss Ida B. Wells, tell her terrible story of "Lynch Law in the South," in this and one or two succeeding issues. She knows of what she writes, having lived and edited a paper, in Memphis, Tennessee, till the racial prejudices of the white community, roused by her spirited protests against the savagery shown to negroes suspected of crime, drove her to a safe northern retreat. She visited Great Britain in response to the requests of some Christian ladies in this country, and has been seeking to enlighten the minds and impress the consciences of our people in this matter.

We are hearing much in these days of the "Evolution of Man." Such nameless enormities as we record this week rather indicate "Degradation" and "Reversion to Type." Indeed, it is almost a libel on the aboriginal races to describe these deeds of white men as "savagery." No savage races that we have ever read of have been systematically guilty of such refinements of cruelty, long drawn out, as Miss Wells cites from the Southern States. We share her indignation and surprise that the Christian sentiment of America, North and South, should seem to lie dormant in the presence of such atrocities. Even if it were in every case proved that the negroes had been guilty of the crimes attributed to them (which cannot be admitted), such methods of revenge and reprisal would be utterly indefensible. A great wrong can never be redressed by the commission of a similar or greater wrong.

The infamous arrangements for legalising and regulating vice in India are equally to be condemned. We trust that, as a result of the disclosures procured at great personal sacrifice by Mrs. Andrew and Dr. Bushnell, our legislators will be compelled to bestir themselves, and will bring such moral pressure to bear on the Government as will cause the thorough cleansing of these pestiferous Augean stables.

The work of the Children's Special Service Mission continues to extend its beneficent influence to an extent little realised by many. Its foreign work entitles it to rank among our foremost missionary institutions. Its Gospel leaflets are published in fifty different languages, over thirteen millions of copies having been issued up to the present time. Its cards of membership are printed in thirty languages, and youthful believers in the Lord Jesus Christ are numbered by thousands among the different races represented by these figures. We commend to our readers the little pamphlet issued by the Mission, entitled "The Children of Foreign Lands." Copies can be had from the office, 13A, Warwick-lane. Its report of work done all over the globe furnishes a most cheering outlook.

The special prayers of Christians are asked for the work of this Mission carried on during the summer months in our home villages. A caravan has been started this month, and a tour through Suffolk has been made. The sad condition of many villages in our land, owing to Ritualistic influence, renders work of this kind peculiarly needful and important. The teaching given in numerous village schools is essentially Popish and anti-Gospel, a darkness deep and dismal to contemplate spreading over not a few of the loveliest spots to be found in our country districts. Last year forty different villages were visited, and meetings for children held in the open-air, in schoolrooms, and often in cottages, branches of the Scripture Union being formed in many of them. Work like this is assuredly in accord with the Master's command, "Feed my lambs."

It is gratifying to observe the growing prosperity of such an agency as the Royal National Lifeboat Institution. Its latest report records 1056 lives saved last year, three new stations established, and twenty-one new lifeboats placed on different parts of our coast, making a total in all of 304 surrounding our shores. No fewer than 37,000 lives have been saved by its efforts since the Institution began its noble career. All honour to the hardy, noble-hearted, and self-sacrificing crews who man its fleet, and brave the perils incident to its beneficent mission! We urge, however, upon the Institution the building of so-called self-righting boats, which means capsizable boats, and the use of boats as far as science can make them irreversible.

Spiritually as well as temporally our sailors deserve a larger place in the hearts of landsmen than they possess. Our indebtedness to them as a class is great, and their claim on our thoughtfulness for their welfare is undoubtedly strong. There ought to be no lack of helpers or of money in any of the institutions which exist for the spiritual and social well-being of seamen visiting our ports or belonging to our nation. Christians would do well to inquire more into the needs of societies and homes established in London and other ports for the purpose of caring for hardy toilers on the sea. Workers as well as funds are, we know, much needed in some of them

Among Jewish "signs of the times" is the news that the Sultan has issued an edict for the enrolment of Jews as soldiers in the Turkish Army. The fact, it seems, has been welcomed by his Majesty's Jewish subjects an expression of thanks having been accorded by them, coupled with a request that those of their race who enter the service may be allowed freedom in the observance of their religious rites and beliefs. The awakenment of a military spirit in the breasts of this long-despised and downtrodden people may have an important political bearing on their concentration as a nation in the land of their fathers. This new departure will tend to raise their status in Turkish dominions, whatever may be its actual issue.

Everywhere the seed of Jacob are coming more and more to the front; whether as objects of hate in some quarters, or of favour in others, they are now in evidence all the world over. Their widespread recognition by men proves that they are not forgotten before God. Amid all the varied phases of experience through which they are led, they are still "beloved for the fathers' sakes." "God has not cast away his people whom He foreknew." All the changes and turmoils of their course are under Divine control, and inevitably tend to their ere-long restoration to the land, and reconciliation to God. The Lord hasten it in his time, for "if the casting away of them be the reconciling of the world, what shall the receiving of them be but life from the dead?"

The Revival of 1859 led to the establishment of many religious missions and charitable institutions in London, notably in the East-end. The quickened Christian life of many wealthy men gave supporters to these good works, and a large number of not wealthy givers contributed to their maintenance. These donors are rapidly dying off, and the missions will die also unless fresh supporters come forward. These missions have contributed largely to the safety and well-being of London, and fortunes have been made which, without their influence, would never have been accumulated. London, fashionable, commercial, social, owes far more to the Christian element in its midst than its people are aware. We earnestly commend to all its inhabitants, especially those who are well-to-do, the necessity for increased support of these invaluable institutions, which are indeed committees of public safety. But especially Christians should support their brothers and sisters, bearing the burden and heat of the day, and doing the work which the Master has committed equally to us all. "Evil is wrought by want of thought As well as want of heart." This is eminently true of the evil of letting good societies dwindle and die for want of financial support.

We last week called attention to the outrageous charges made against the New Hebrides missionaries by a Government agent, in a recently-published Blue-book. While those charges are being disproved, and other statements in the Blue-book are being discredited, it is well that some notice should be taken of the larger question—whether Government publications should in any case be made the medium of attacks upon persons who deem it their duty to oppose particular lines of policy or methods of administration. It is hoped that, in due course the attention of Parliament will be called to the need for reports of Government agents being carefully scrutinised before publication.

It is not unusual to find in Roman Catholic publications protests against Rome being accused of antipathy to the circulation of and study of the Bible. The Catholic Times of last week, however, expresses its surprise that the British and Foreign Bible Society "still wastes its subscribers' money in printing and throwing away—there is no other word for it—copies of the Holy Scriptures." And in regard to the circulation of the Bible in China the editor goes on to say:—

> They might just as well send the Chinese copies of Beethoven's Sonatas, and imagine that, by so doing, they were teaching them music, as think that they were spreading Christianity in spreading Bibles.

It is usual to regard the Jewish working tailor in the East-end of London as a foreign interloper, who is simply taking the bread out of the native workers' mouths; but to judge from the statements at a recent meeting at St. Augustine's Hall, Commercial-road E., for the purpose of considering whether the 10,000 Jewish tailors in London should strike for a reduction of hours, it appears that their lot is even more unhappy than that of the workers whom they supplant. It was asserted that the arrangement which was the outcome of the strike of 1889, whereby the hours of labour were limited to ten and a-half, was broken through by the employers shortly after it was made, and that now only a more bitter struggle can mend matters, starvation being preferable to the existing condition of the toilers.

The signs are multiplying in number and significance of the approach of a new struggle over the Education question. On one side are those who say that our Board schools ought to give definite religious Christian teaching to children whose parents are willing they should receive it. On the other are those who say that it is not right to take public money, contributed by persons of every creed, to pay for the teaching of doctrines which many do not believe; that such teaching means the appointment only of teachers who pass a certain examination in religious faith; that the method proposed really is an attempt of the Sacramentarian party to seize the schools and the funds of the people and use them for sectarian ends. Shall we find the ultimate path of safety in severing the religious education from the secular, and leaving the churches to use the schools, out of school hours, for such children as may present themselves for religious teaching? Some Churchmen and some Nonconformists think so.

The recurrence of the Miners' International Conference, held this year in Belgium, deepens the impression that the various peoples and nations have only to see how truly their interests are one and the same, and it will be impossible for kings and statesmen to hurl them against each other in battle. They come to see this much more clearly by frequent and friendly intercourse than by merely reading or speaking of intercourse and of common interests. Every miner was, by the very fact of his attendance at this Conference, and by his intercourse with fellow-workmen of other countries, made a pledge of peace and a missionary of goodwill. The highest motives might be wanting, but Christians may perhaps see a way of utilising these admirable international gatherings, and of diffusing the highest teaching on the greatest themes.

All eyes are now directed to Germany to see what will be the result of the appeal to the country on the Army Bill. Parties there are forming and dissolving, dissolving and forming, in a way that is confusing enough to outsiders. Perhaps two facts will come out hard and definite at the end of the struggle: the Catholics will be gainers by the Emperor having bought their adherence, and the Social Democrats will become stronger through the breaking up of other parties. Thus there will be once more the spectacle with which the Continent is only too familiar, of the party of superstition being opposed by the party of unbelief. Can kings and emperors and republics find out no way of dealing with questions of public safety and national development without inciting and strengthening such extremes? One would fain hope that some quiet party of good sense and patriotic feeling, animated by love of truth, may find its opportunity amid the social strife.

The present commercial distresses of Australia will prove an ultimate blessing if they help to abate its rage for money-making, to cripple its gambling, and to lead men to adopt honest work as a way of obtaining a livelihood preferable to speculation. The danger of all young countries is to set physical enjoyment before moral and spiritual character, and hence they soon become carnal and corrupt. Australia has been no exception. In Melbourne a newspaper was founded on the principle of keeping clear of the gambling plague, but it failed. Probably the same would happen to a great many English papers. The time of failure through which all are now passing may serve to open many eyes to a better way, to show that departure from the right will bring chastisement, and that chastisement is intended to lead to repentance.

When we spoke last week of the increase of suicides in France, we did not expect to see within a day of our publication the following pagan defence of suicides in an "editorial" in The Westminster Gazette:—

> Surely it is about time that the thing should be faced and reasoned out, for nothing in the history of thought is more inconclusive than the various attempts to find good reasons either for approving or condemning the suicide. No one, for instance, is convinced by the metaphor of Socrates, that man is in a prison, from which he is not at liberty to set himself free. "Oh that the Almighty had not set his canon 'gainst self-slaughter," says Hamlet. But where is the canon? The Roman Church, it is true, condemns it; the Anglican Church has been in the habit of denying Christian burial to all certain and declared suicides; but what has the Bible itself to say? Nothing explicit that we can remember, and we should imagine it to have been the general inference of the Christian world that the only sign of Christian grace which Judas Iscariot ever exhibited was when "he went and hanged himself." And all of us p[r]obably could quote instances in which suicide was [n]ot only venial but heroic, as in the case of those wom[e]n who have braved it lest a worse thing should bef[a]ll them. And would any of us be quick to blame the m[a]n who, having been led into some crime, went decent[l]y out of the world by his own hand rather than e[x]pose friends and family to some blasting disgrac[e]. It is a matter, then, of time and circumstances, as [w]e all either openly or tacitly admit. In one case [i]t may be a proof of courage and the highest sanit[y]; the only reasonable course among a choice of evil[s]; in another it may be folly, weakness, or madne[ss]. Clearly society cannot treat it as of no account, b[ut] equally clearly it ought to find some distinction b[e]tween case and case.

The ignorance and danger of such langua[ge] may very likely lead to a lively correspo[n]dence on the question, "When is suici[de] justifiable?" But we remark that Augustin[e] in his most famous book, "The City of God" dealt with it in his acute, searching wa[y]. Chapter xvi. treats "Of such as choose [a] voluntary death, to avoid the fear of pain a[n]d dishonour." He calls them homicides, a[n]d adds:—

> So much the more guilty doth that killing of hi[m]self make himself, by how much the more guiltless [he] was in that cause for which he killed himself. . . Judas, in hanging himself, added the wickedness [of] being his own death to that other wickedness of h[is] for which he died.

Augustine goes on for chapters, treating, [by] the way, of the case of Lucretia, who kille[d] herself because worse than death had befalle[n] her, showing "that there is no authorit[y] which allows Christians to be their own deatl[h] in any cause whatsoever," and "that voluntar[y] death can never be any sign of magnanimit[y] or greatness of spirit."

The American Advocate of Peace say[s] "It is a noteworthy fact that in those par[ts] of the country—i.e. the United States—whe[re] the dislike of England might be supposed [to] linger longest, and be most deeply rooted, [it] has most nearly disappeared. At Boston an[d] Philadelphia, and the other cities of the Eas[t] where the memorials of the revolution are th[e] most numerous, England is respected, an[d] trusted and honoured, as she is nowhe[re] else in the land." May this not be owin[g] in part to the close and continuous intercour[se] which they have had with English people o[n] religious and moral questions? It seems t[o] be the highest testimonial to the value of th[e] Gospel as a power to promote peace and unit[y]. We are thankful to be assured that "th[e] people of the States are, with increasin[g] seriousness, disposed to look upon the[ir] country and Great Britain as "two nation[s] but one people," whose great general interes[ts] are one and the same, whose destinies ar[e] interlocked, who are foremost in creating f[or] the world what in the future is to be the la[w] of the peaceful adjustment of internation[al] difficulties."

Much cause as our missionary societies hav[e] had to rejoice over the number of men an[d] women who have offered their services for th[e] foreign field, not one of them can equ[al] Captain Nansen's volunteer roll of a thousan[d] men to go with him to the North Pole. Tru[e] he drew from all the world, and he, no doub[t] had scores of offers of service which were us[e]less, and he has no such standard of spiritu[al] fitness as is required of a missionary; still, th[e] fact remains that a thousand men profe[ss] themselves ready to go forth on one of th[e] most cheerless and one of the most perilou[s] voyages that can be undertaken on the glob[e]. The spirit of adventure, the contempt [of] danger, the willingness to serve for small r[e]muneration, is yet alive among us; baptize[d] by the Spirit of God, it would carry the goo[d] news to every creature.

Tested Theology.

Some important points bearing on the new ıcology of to-day were dwelt on by Dr. Valter Smith in his address as Moderator of ıe Free Church of Scotland Assembly. Refer- ing to the changes which have taken place ı reference to the Gospel, he said, "More and ıore the tendency is to take the great for- ıative ideas of theology direct from Jesus, ıd to subordinate the words of the Apostles) those of the Master whom they served, ıd whom they, too, exalted as all and in l." It is "the concrete, historical Christ," ıerefore, that forms the burden of modern ıought. "Dogmatic Christianity," such as "discussed in the Epistles," is left out of ght, considered a clog and a hindrance ather than a development and helpful appli- ation of "the truth as it is in Jesus." omparing this modern view with that of the ast, Dr. Smith went on to say that, like ther practical questions, the relative advan- ges of the two systems of thought must be t to a practical test. Doctrine is worth no ore than its proved efficiency to produce ving and sanctifying results. The following xtract may be commended to careful con- deration:—

Now, we know what the old Evangelicalism could . We know what it did for England in the great uritan age, and for ourselves in the times of bitter rsecution. We know what it did through White- ld for the Kingswood colliers, and in the hands of esley for the miners of Cornwall. But we have t yet had any similar experience of what can be hieved by this faith in the personal, historical rist. That it meets the felt wants of some ltured, thoughtful people may be granted. It s helped their spiritual life, and enlarged their iritual vision; and so far that is good. But we ve yet to learn what it can do in the broad field of mmon sin and temptation; whether it can deal fectually with the rough, coarse, elementary forces human nature, as the earlier Evangelicalism did. it is not thus broadly human, it will not last long. it only reaches a particular class, it will be only passing phase. Logic, criticism, lucid and coherent ought, are all valuable in their way; but the proof our Gospel is that it can do the work of the Lord, t for some only, but for all; not merely in feeding e flock, but also in gathering in the erring and the st.

Undoubtedly the Apostles embodied in their eaching the doctrinal truths contained in eir Epistles. Their preaching "turned the orld upside down," and proved itself "the wer of God unto salvation" to tens of ousands in every land. We know what the l Evangelicalism did for their times, as well as r the times of Whitefield and Wesley. With ch a testimony it is hard to discredit its im to be regarded as efficient in the highest gree. The results of the newer departure us far give no promise of equal power in e same direction, to say nothing of improve- ent on the past such as is claimed by its herents. Evangelistic results to-day are t following in its wake. Deadness and rmality are springing up in its path, while ll, as of old, wherever the thrilling story of e Cross is told, and its correlative truths e insisted on, signs follow as of yore.

At least we may resolve on maintaining e "old paths" intact, and on the wisdom standing in them, until the new have oved themselves superior. The proba- n period of the new will otherwise a wasted and a barren epoch, alike ndering what is good, and failing to supply ything better. It is to be feared that while ny are holding truth in solution, and wait- g for the fuller development of a new spel, multitudes are being allowed to ri h for lack of the old. The Apostles of e first century are at least as trustworthy, d as safe examples to follow, as those of e nineteenth. A Gospel which saved mul- titudes in the days of Peter and Paul, and which, until this hour, continues to save on every hand, may well command the faith and the loyalty of all who yearn over the perishing souls of men.

It will be long before those who are as- sured from experience of the worth of the old will desire the new, for on every ground they are compelled to say "the old is better." G.

"Christ in Modern Theology."

In a notebook dating from our student days we find this entry, "A useful and suggestive treatise might be written on the influence of current philosophies on the form of Christian doctrine." To write such a book was an early dream, and it has returned more than once since then, but it has never found fulfilment. The needful material, collected during many years, crowds our shelves, but other duties more near and urgent have claimed all our time. It is, therefore, with no little satis- faction we light on a volume by a master hand, in which the task we dreamt of has been boldly and skilfully essayed.* Not so minute in detail as we could have desired, it nevertheless gives in broad outline a fair and faithful sketch of the whole field. The object of the writer is to determine the character of our present theology, and before this can be done with any success, he wisely says "we must understand the factors and forces that have moved and shaped the theologies of the past." Carrying out his design, Dr. Fairbairn traces the development of doctrine in the two great Churches, Eastern and Western, follow- ing it through the Scholastic period to the Renaissance and Reformation; and from thence onward to the present day.

Though this historical study is of intense interest to all who can appreciate the subtle insight of a keen mind, endowed with a wealth of knowledge, without which it would have searched in vain, our readers are more concerned to know the conclusions reached. What is wise and worthy thought, here and now, concerning Jesus Christ? An answer to this question is eagerly awaited. No one questions the attention specially given to the person and work of the Son during the last half-century. Nor can anyone seriously im- pugn the importance of this study. But it may be fairly doubted whether the thought of the nineteenth century is more clear and Scriptural than that of the seventeenth. Then, it is argued, men emphasised the Sovereignty, now most stress is laid on the Fatherhood, of God!

Unless we greatly misunderstand Dr. Fair- bairn, his contention is that the Sonship of Christ is designed to reveal the sonship of man. God, he maintains, is not only the Father of such as believe and obey the Gospel, but of all men without distinction of state or character. Therefore, all that a Father possessed of infinite attributes can do for them, He will never cease to do. One thing alone is reserved. He will never compel their love, or force their freedom. There remains, therefore, the eternal possibility of their refusal to be reconciled. No doubt this possibility is no less awful than absolute. But with the infinite means at the Divine disposal can there be any doubt of ultimate success? The unmistakable ten- dency of this theory is in the direction of final universal restoration. It is at least, as the following sentences indicate, an encour- agement, if not a vindication, of what is known as "the larger hope." "Quantitatively there is no more of the love of God in heaven than in hell, but qualitatively the love differs as much as hell and heaven. The love of the good is complacency, but the love of the evil is pity or compassion. Complacency is twice blessed, gives the mutual joy that is beatitude, happy being in a happy world; but compassion feels double pain—pain for him who needs help, and pain for the evil that causes the help to be needed. Complacency is the double beatitude of God in the universe, and of the universe in God. Pity, too, is double; it is the shadow which evil casts on the Good, and the promise the Good is ever bound to make to himself—never to surrender to evil those who are held by evil."

Thus the judicial element is held to be always and everywhere overborne by the paternal. Sin is to be purged rather than punished. It is a disease to be cured rather than a crime to be condemned. Not so do we read the Scriptures. Guilt is a dread reality no less than corruption. If penitence invites purification, impenitence invites punishment.

Besides, there is an argument against this modern doctrine of the universal Fatherhood of God, to which, so far as we know, due attention has never yet been given. Jesus said: "Except a man be born again he can- not see the Kingdom of God." Surely it is a poor sonship that needs re-birth if it is ever to become real.

While taking decided objection to the drift of such teaching, we must frankly admit there is much in this volume both admirable and timely. The condensed analysis of the books of the New Testament is fresh, vigorous, and eminently suggestive. Of Dr. Fairbairn's ability and earnestness generally there is no need to speak. Scarcely was the first edition in the hands of the booksellers than there was an urgent demand for a second.

Education and Missions.—1.

Dear Sir,—I send you a copy of the paper which I wrote for the Decennial Missionary Conference, Bombay, 1892-3, at the request of the committee appointed to arrange for the conference.

When the paper was in the press, I was informed that my subject, "How can our Missionary Educa- tional Work be made more effective as an Evangelis- tic Agency?" had been changed into "Education as a Missionary Agency," and that my name had been removed from the list of writers on the subject of Missionary Education to that on the subject of "Work among the Educated Classes in India."

I wrote to the secretary of the committee, stating that as my paper was in the press, I hoped the com- mittee would accept it, but if not, that he would frankly inform me—(1) Why was the wording of my subject changed? and (2) Why was my name removed from the list of writers on Missionary Education? I received a vague answer, from which I could only con- clude that pressure had been put on the committee to change the wording of the subject and the writer!

Missionary education is a very important subject, and ought to be considered from all points of view. No good can result from any efforts to prevent its free and full discussion. It is well known that there is much dissatisfaction at home and abroad with the results of our educational work as carried on at present. The Conference, therefore, should consider it in a calm, earnest, judicial spirit, and place it before the public in all its lights and shades.

As my paper is printed, and suggests a new educa- tional policy, which may in some small degree help to place our educational work on such a basis as may command confidence at home and abroad, and en- hance its usefulness as an Evangelistic Agency, I feel it my duty to distribute it, though no longer a Conference paper.—Yours truly,

Maurice Phillips.

L.M.S., Egmore, Madras, Dec. 1, 1892

This topic suggests three things: "(1) That the work of missionaries in India is to evangelise the people; (2) That education is an agency used for that purpose; (3) That there is room for making it more effective.

I. There can be no two opinions among

Christian people that the sole work of missionaries in India is to evangelise the Hindus. They are the Messengers of the Churches of Europe and America sent out for this express purpose. They are "ambassadors for Christ, beseeching the heathen to be reconciled to God." They are therefore bound to do all in their power to commend the Gospel to the people. Their chief and only aim should be to convert souls; to found churches and place native pastors over them; and so to build up a strong Christian community that they may both sustain the Gospel among themselves and propagate it among their countrymen. The motto of every missionary should be "India for Christ," and every Mission Agency should be directed and made subservient to the accomplishment of this great end.

II. Among the mission agencies used to bring the Hindus to a living knowledge of Christ, education occupies a high and honourable position. Missionary education includes schools of all grades from A. B. to B. A., and also industrial schools. I suppose, however, that the latter do not necessarily come within the scope of this paper, and therefore I shall pass them by.

It must not be supposed for a moment that it is the function of missionary societies to educate the Hindus as a nation. This gigantic work can only be done by the Government and the people themselves; and it is gratifying to note that both the Government and the people are waking up to a sense of their duty, and are putting forth increasing efforts every year to cover the land with schools. The question, therefore, that I have to consider is not, "How can Missionary Societies extend their educational agency so as to overtake the education of the masses?" or, "Whether they should compete with the Government and the people so as to counteract the influence of the non-religious education of the former and the anti-Christian education of the latter?" but simply, "How can they use the limited means at their disposal for education so as to make it more effective as an Evangelistic agency?"

This can be done only by using their educational means for the sole purpose of building up and extending the influence of the Indian* Church. Thank God, we have now a Church in India, gathered principally by the preaching of the Gospel to the people in their own tongue. It is small when compared with the millions who are still in heathenism, but large enough for missionaries to make it the base of their operations against Hinduism. No one can doubt that India must be converted by means of her own sons and daughters. Foreign missionaries have now arrived at such a stage in their work as to make it their paramount duty to direct their energies towards the consolidation and extension of the Indian Church. Hence all their educational work should be carried on for the promotion of this object.

But it may be contended, "Just so; that is the principle on which we carry on our educational work at present." That is true to a certain extent, for all Missionary education is intended to evangelise the people, and so to increase the number of the Indian Church. The difference between what is advocated here and the principle on which Missionary education is carried on at present is this. Most, if not all, of our schools and colleges have been established and are being carried on, irrespective of the needs of the Indian Christians, with the view of giving Christian education to non-Christian Hindus. The chief object is the education of the heathen as the means of evangelising them, and not of the Christians as the means of elevating them. What is maintained here is that the process should be reversed, and our educational work be carried on, chiefly with the view of benefiting the Christians, and to make the Indian Church learned, strong, and capable of influencing the heathen far more extensively and powerfully than at present.

* "Indian" is used in this paper for "Native," as being more appropriate.

Letters to Dorothy.—5.

Dear Dorothy,—Do you remember my precious washerwoman in the little story I sent you, "Rich Folks and Poor Folks?" She and I continue to be the best of friends. That dear woman's soul reminds me more and more of an opal—almost lustreless until it is held in a sympathetic human hand and then flashing out into all surprising beauties. One of the happiest parts of our service here is looking after our Christians and watching them grow—"watering my plants," I call it.

But the other day I was terribly disappointed to find my most flourishing one frost-bitten and withering. It was all because of that ugly thing, hatred, that somehow entered in. As I went in for my weekly reading with my washerwoman, I saw her eyes were dulled. She had no smile for her "star," for she foolishly says, "You're the only star that ever shines round this place." She was soon pouring into my ears an excited tale of a friend who had wronged her, and whom she could not forgive. If I was disappointed, how much more the Heavenly Father, to see that ugly weed taking root in a heart which had bidden fair to be "like a watered garden."

In a dark moment I thought: After all, shall evil crowd out good? Then I remembered: So has the eternal Father watched over your wayward soul all these years. Thank Him now that He never gave you up, and ask for patience. This is one of your people. She is one of his people, too. She was in no mood to listen to me then. With her words, "I can't forgive," ringing in my ears, I went home to search my Bible, as I had never searched it before, for something to show her that she must. The dear Book never fails me. Before I went again I thought I had learned all God tells us about forgiveness, glad He had made it so plain. How a few days of hate-harbouring had hurt her life! She did not seem the same woman, she had only grown more hard. "I can't forgive, and I don't want to, and I don't want to want to."

I sat down by her ironing table and read the story of the servant who would not forgive his debtor, though the king had so kindly forgiven him (Matt. xviii. 23—35).

I pleaded with her: My dear, how can you pray? Psalm lxvi. 18, says: "If I regard iniquity in my heart, the Lord will not hear me." How can you pray our own Lord's prayer, "Forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors"? for right here in sixth chapter of Matthew it says, "If ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Heavenly Father forgive your trespasses."

Think of Christ upon the cross! And I read the wondrous story of the passion (Luke xxiii.). He asks you to do nothing He has not done Himself. Listen to his patient voice, "Father, forgive them." "If thine enemy hunger, feed him." Who said that?

You can forgive! Paul, did he have no cruel enemies to forgive? He says, "I can do all things through Christ, which strengtheneth me." And yet she was unmoved, and with dry eyes entreated me not to ask her, that she couldn't, and that was the end of it.

I closed the Book, discouraged. Suddenly there shot into my mind a word entirely overlooked in my elaborate preparation for convincing her.

"Seventy times seven," He says, you know, I said almost to myself. "Seventy times seven, did you say?" I know that verse well. Let me look at it in my Norwegian Bible. Somehow that gets to my heart. God knows why, I don't! Where is it?" Now came the puzzle. In what spot of that vast field lay the hidden treasure this soul desired? What did I do? Do I believe in small miracles wrought for God's children in moments of emergency? Yes! I sent up a little flying prayer. "Oh, Holy Spirit, who wrote this Book, show me." I opened it and my eyes fell on the very lines! "Seventy times seven." had stirred up some memory of childhood's teaching in the old Norwegian home. "Yes, I will forgive for Christ's sa who has forgiven me more times than that." went on my way rejoicing.

God knew best. It has done my precious pl good to be frost-bitten and cut back. I find a more vigorous growth there than before. T experience of victory over self has done great thi for her. It was well for her soul to learn the joy forgiving. No trouble about the shine in her e now. Her interest was intense in Tolstoi's li story we read together, "Where love is there G is also," because there was so much in it of Gospel spirit of forgiveness. "I can enjoy it no she said. She was planning to show some kindn to the one who had injured her.

The next time I saw her we talked, as we of do, about the hard conditions of her life, which present prevent her going to God's house. She h before been tempted to abandon efforts to get fr dom for this, but now she was more than usua earnest. She is a reserved woman, like many her race, averse to audible prayer. Faith and Criticism.

[First Notice.]

Such is the title given to a series of nine Essays by ngregationalists*, most of them ministers, three them professors in theological colleges. Each s chosen his own theme, but all have endeavoured restate the essential truths of Christianity in the t of modern criticism and research.

The object is a laudable one. The spirit of tructive criticism is abroad, tearing down ancient dmarks, plunging the treasures of the past into crucible, and examining with keen analysis the ndations of our faith. Ancient formularies do mean all they did in the days when they were t compiled. Expressions which were once ade- te fail to convey the fuller conceptions of truth t have come to men with the growing years. d there is a danger lest young hearts should fail distinguish between the essential and the circum- ntial, between truth and its formularies, between eternal jewel and the casket of expression in ich it is presented to human thought. The mer are amongst the things that cannot be ken, whilst the latter may alter with the inevit- e changes that come over human methods of ught and speech.

The great facts of substitution, justification by h, regeneration by the Holy Ghost, and the ine Sonship, for instance, are stable and certain the Throne of God, but if they are stated in ms which Anselm or Origen would have em- yed, their full lustre is obscured from the gaze of ny inquirers after Christian truth. There can no harm, therefore, but good, in restating the rnal facts of God's Word, in phraseology which ll strike the attention and inform the mind of contemporaries in the hope that they may eive it and be saved.

In this direction some of these essays point, and , on the whole, much to be commended. To se we will return in a subsequent paper. But do not hesitate to say that their effect is largely tralised by association in this volume with timents and conclusions which we read with the vest concern.

The essayists, in the preface, distinctly disavow ponsibility for each others' opinions. "Each hor is solely responsible for his own essay." t surely a clause like this is not sufficient to nerate any one of them from the blame of giving name and influence to obtain currency for a k, which, if it contains good seed, carries with histledown enough to counteract any harvest ich might accrue. In our judgment, there is son enough in the first essay, to say nothing ut any others, to undo the good of all the rest. the feather innocent that helps to wing the soned dart?

We hold that the same principle which keeps us n entering certain places, where we might be njured, but where younger and weaker lives uld be smitten by moral blight, but from which abstain, lest our going might make it easy for m to follow, should withhold Christian writers n association, in reunions, or books like this, h others whose opinions they do not themselves lorse. Such association, like a current, may g unsuspecting minds, accustomed to follow sted leaders with unquestioning faith, under the st baneful influences.

The first essay is devoted to the Old Testament, is written by a Professor of Hackney and New ges. He appears to accept almost without rve the conclusions of the most extravagant at criticism. He says that "as regards the es of the authors of the Pentateuch, Joshua, icles, Ecclesiastes, Job, Daniel, and many of Psalms, our certain information is limited to knowledge that the traditional statements and gestions [as to their authorship] cannot be rect."

He assigns the composition of the first six books the Bible to the age of the Monarchy, the Exile, the Restoration. Canticles and Ecclesiastes are Solomonic, but post-Exilic. Daniel belongs to Maccabean period. He thinks it is grotesque unnatural to realise a Moses who could have ten the four different documents of the Pen- uch; and affirms that it is not possible t estab a pre-Monarchic date for any of the more exten- sive documents which give the history of the Judges, the Conquest, the Exodus, and the Patriarchs. He does not seem sure that we may not have to surrender our belief in Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob as historical persons.

Such are some of the sentiments to which currency is given in this essay. And we confess that we are filled with dismay as we consider what the reception of such teaching must mean for the next generation of Congregational ministers. What can unformed minds do when brought, at their most formative time, in contact with assertions so destructive of the authority of the Old Testament?

There are several considerations to be advanced on the other side:—

(1) The positive immorality of those imaginary scribes who palmed off under the great names of Moses and Isaiah and David their own compositions and compilations. What right had they to use the solemn formulary, "And the Lord spake unto Moses," when they were really promulgating their own words, and formulating a directory to increase or buttress up their class, in the days of the return from exile? It is the greatest fraud of history.

(2) The impossibility of obscure, unknown men, in the days that followed the Exile, being able to compose books which have moulded the religious history of mankind, and yet able to preserve their anonymity. Men who could write a Bible out of their own brains must have left some other trace. But in those dreary days there is absolutely no great name to relieve the dull monotony of commonplace.

(3) Modern criticism does not sufficiently allow for the high state of learning and record-keeping which was enjoyed by the Egyptians and Canaanites, and of which Moses and other Hebrew writers may have availed themselves.

(4) The variations in the old MSS. may be fully accounted for by the careful editing to which the sacred documents were subjected at the hands of Ezra and his coadjutors.

(5) It would be contrary to the trend of all we know of religious thought among the Hebrews to find the minute ritual enactments of Leviticus emanating from the same age as produced Isaiah or Daniel.

(6) The authority of Christ and his Apostles in their quotation of Scripture is directly in the teeth of these modern assumptions. The essayist says, however, that they merely refer to passages in Isaiah or Moses, as a modern writer quotes Chaucer or Shakespeare on the authority of current editions, without intending to express an independent opinion as to the authenticity of their contents; and alleges that thus Old Testament criticism brings into relief the reality of our Lord's human nature. But what can be said in face of such statements as this?—"If ye believed Moses, ye would believe Me, for he wrote of Me, and 'The Holy Ghost said.'"

(7) The testimony of the Samaritan Version of the Pentateuch, which was undoubtedly in existence in days anterior to those in which the critics allege some parts of that work to have been written. Moreover, the tendency to qualify the traditional antiquity of the Septuagint (in the Daniel controversy) raises questions which cannot be settled by mere assumption.

But the second essay suggests an answer to the first. The essayist tells us that the wildest theories, which were in vogue half a generation ago, have proved themselves gaseous by exploding. The authenticity and genuineness of our Four Gospels is established. In addition to the first four Epistles, "the great quadrilateral of Christianity," modern criticism permits us to attribute the other Epistles to the pen of the Apostle Paul, though it is still a little doubtful about the Pastoral ones. Even the Epistles to the Hebrews and of James are admitted to be of first-rate rank and worth.

A few years ago such admissions would have been deemed unscholarly and unreliable, but "the rash sharpshooters of the first half of our century have been beaten back by the march of the trained army of criticism in the second half." We may, therefore, possess our souls in patience. Goliath will again be beheaded by his own sword. The very extravagance of Old Testament criticism is the best guarantee of its ultimate harmlessness. It is like summer lightning—too much diffused to be dangerous. A few more years may pass, and the effervescence of the new school will have subsided, leaving us a similar vindication of the Old Testament that shall make it the unquestioned and authoritative Word of God.

One of the most valuable essays in the book, and the one which contains the strongest, clearest thinking, is the third, on Revelation and the Person of Christ. The comprehensiveness of its conception of Christ, and the emphatic testimony to his Godhead, leave nothing to be desired. As an answer to the Socinian view, it is admirable. And it will admirably counteract some of the loose views as to the nature of our Lord which are circulated as current coin. Take these sentences as an illustration, and there are many like them:—"He does not appear to rise to a sense of his unity with the Father in proportion as He overcame the world, but He overcame the world in the progressive strength and exercise of that unity." "In the death of Jesus it was God that died."

Our only criticism on this essay is that it reserves the term Revelation so entirely for the person of Christ, and apparently treats the Bible as simply a record of that Revelation; whereas we believe that God revealed Himself in the words of Scripture as well as in the Word of God. And we hesitate to admit that our belief in Christ depends wholly on his redeeming, saving grace, as exercised on our hearts. Surely the faith of the Church must ever rest on the fact of Christ's resurrection, attested as it was by many infallible proofs, and accredited by witnesses specially selected and qualified for their work.

We reserve Mr. Horton's essay on the Atonement and other points for a subsequent paper. Meanwhile, we ask our readers to study again the quotations of the Epistle to the Hebrews, with the view of paying special attention to the words by which they are introduced. These are the phrases of which the writer makes use:—"He saith," "The Holy Ghost saith," "The Holy Ghost beareth witness." Throughout it is one voice that speaks through many lips the thoughts of one Being—the great Spirit of Truth. How much more consistent with the history and effects of the Bible is such a phrase than the allusion of one of the essayists to "Paul's attempt to connect the work of Christ in a loose parallelism with the story of Adam's fall."

THE PEACE SOCIETY.

The annual meeting of the Peace Society was held on Tuesday last week at the Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, E.C., Mr. Arthur Pease presiding.

A visible growth of peace sentiment was recognised in the report, which was presented by the secretary, Dr. Evans Darby. The recent defeat of the German Army Bill was instanced as a sign that militarism is fast approaching its ultimate limit of development. A struggle is portended between the oppressed people and their rulers, unless wiser counsels interpose. How to maintain the peace of Christendom in such a way as will admit of the relaxation of national burdens is fast becoming the problem of the hour. The most encouraging incident of the year was the constitution of the Behring Sea Arbitration tribunal. Several minor cases submitted to arbitration were referred to, including the disputes of Venezuela with Spain and France. The growth of commercial and industrial arbitration, in place of lawsuits and strikes, was also noticed with satisfaction. The Society claimed a prominent share in the growth of international arbitration, which was largely due to the arbitration protocol in the Treaty of Paris; that protocol having been inserted by Lord Clarendon at the suggestion of a deputation from the Society. References were made to the proposal for the inculcation of so-called patriotism in Board Schools, to the very unsatisfactory replies of the Government regarding the telegraph messengers' drill, and to the anti-Christian military training of boys' brigades in Sunday-schools. These disclose an intention to provide subtle substitutes for the compulsory military service of the Continent.

Mr. W. Hazell submitted a statement showing that the Society's income had been £2390, and that the year closed with a debt of £800. Mr. W. Saunders, M.P., in an address, expressed a hope that much good would result from the commingling of nationalities at the Chicago Exhibition. He described the democracy as conquering the army. Other speakers were Miss Florence Balgarnie and Mrs. J. Wynford Philipps, and Messrs. T. Snape, M.P., T. P. Whittaker, M.P., Fyfe Stewart, and Frank Smith.

AFRICAN MISSIONS VISITED.—2.

BY D. A. HUNTER.

We steamed into Funchal Harbour, Madeira, about 2.30 a.m., and there was but little sleep for anyone after that, for coaling commenced, and the natives were soon swarming round the steamer in their boats, and scrambling on deck, ready to sell basket-chairs, photographs, fruit, and embroidery; dive for coins, or paddle us ashore. They usually ask about twice what they are willing to accept when selling wares or ferrying passengers; but the officers on the steamer tell us they are no more dishonest than some of the European passengers, who get goods from them just as the steamer is being cleared for sailing, and, continuing to haggle about the price, they frequently carry off the goods without paying at all, leaving the poor wronged men in their boats, angry at heart, and perhaps planning how they can best make up their loss when the next mail-steamer comes in. If only Europeans who travel would be fair and square in all their dealings with the natives they meet at such places as Suez, Aden, Colombo, Madeira, etc., how much easier would be the work of the missionaries!

Very early in the morning a boatman came off with a letter from Mr. Smart for the missionaries, inviting them to his house. I was asked to be one of the party, and soon after 6 o'clock we found ourselves being rowed ashore by two stalwart Madeirese. The camera was kept busy with all the delightful "bits" one was constantly coming across; but I have not been able to develop in time to send you any results.

We soon reached Mr. Smart's house, and received a kindly welcome. It called to mind passages in the Acts of the Apostles where Paul and his travelling companions visited, and were welcomed by the brethren in the places they touched at; so we all knelt down and thanked God for his good hand upon us, in going before us, and making friends for us where we thought we had none.

From Mr. Smart I learned that the island of Madeira is about thirty-five miles long by twenty-seven miles wide, with a population of some 106,000. Porto Santo, a contiguous island, has about 6000 inhabitants. Mr. Smart is connected with Miss Weston's work for sailors, and during the recent visit of the Channel Fleet to Madeira he had about 1150 bluejackets and marines ashore to tea and at the services, which latter were attended with considerable blessing. It is hard for anyone who has not been on a long cruise to realise the pleasure to be derived from a run on shore and a kindly welcome; and one cannot but rejoice that the men had such an opportunity, and so fully took advantage of it.

Mr. Smart also acts as agent for the British and Foreign Bible Society, and this gives him another door of entrance, both in Madeira itself and on vessels coming into Funchal Harbour.

The late Dr. Kalley's work in Madeira, now a matter of history, of forty years ago, still bears fruit. Not only in Jacksonville, Ill., U.S.A., Trinidad, and Rio de Janeiro are there Protestant churches started by the converts scattered abroad by the persecution in Madeira, but a small body of Protestants remain on the island, descendants, I believe, chiefly of those who managed to remain in spite of the persecution

The great hope of winning Madeira for Christ seems to be through the children. Mrs. Smart has a school for native children near to the Sailors' Home, and her two sisters carry on one in another part of the town. The Madeirese are very keen on having their children taught English; hence their desire to send them to school. One condition of their being taught is that they remain for the Bible lesson, and thus the good seed is sown in young hearts.

The priests are of a very degraded type, and the people ignorant and superstitious, so there is great need for Christian preaching and teaching. Mr. Smart says there are many openings for more schools on the islands, and gives the average cost of living as rather under £2 per week. Are there not some ladies or gentlemen of independent means who desire to advance Christ's kingdom in neglected parts, and who perhaps require a mild climate on account of health?

Should such read this letter, and feel drawn to the work, I am sure Mr. Smart will be delighted to correspond with them, and give them more particulars, if they will only write to him at the Sailors' Home, Funchal, Madeira.

After delicious fruit and coffee, we all started under Mr. Smart's guidance for a short tour of inspection, and returned to the jetty by nine o'clock, for our steamer sailed at 9.30. It was a delightful break in the voyage, and as we were rowed off and Mr. Smart waved his adieux, our hearts were grateful to our Father for the kindness He had sent us through his servants; and we sang together "God be with you till we meet again."

PARIAHS OF INDIA.

Much interest has been taken of late in the people who are designated as above. Much was said about them in the late Decennial Conference in Bombay; but, naturally, most of what was said on that occasion was in relation to Christianity. While we believe that nothing but Christianity can elevate these people, we believe that there is much of a secular nature which the Indian Government, instructed by the British public, can do to assist this elevation. None but the voice of the Lord Jesus can call the dead Lazarus from the tomb, but the sympathising bystanders can loose the symbols of death from his limbs.

Rev. T. B. Pandian, a native of Southern India, and a Christian minister of good standing, is enabled by the munificence of a South India Rajah to go to Britain to plead the cause of this degraded and downtrodden people. Nobody knows better than Mr. Pandian, and nobody will acknowledge more freely, the inestimable blessings conferred upon India by British rule. Nobody knows better than the missionaries who support this movement the difficulties which will beset the Government which will undertake to set this people free—difficulties arising from the ignorance and indifference of the people to be benefited, from the hostility of the higher classes, who benefit by their degradation, and from the rigidity of the customs which bind this land as with bands of steel. Still, we know it can be done, and it ought to be done speedily.

Among the many difficulties to be adjusted, and disabilities to be removed, we will refer very specially to the following:—

THE WATER QUESTION.

Water for drinking and household purposes is a vital question, especially in India. Those people seldom have any land of their own, and so cannot dig wells. They are generally too poor to dig them if they had land. On the village site of one or more acres, their miserable huts are huddled so closely together that there is no room for either well or tank. Public wells and tanks, dug and maintained at public expense, there are in plenty; but from their use the Pariah is rigorously excluded by the people and village officials, who are almost exclusively drawn from the higher classes.

Cattle, hogs, and dogs may drink of these, or bathe in them with impunity, but one of these people, even though he has become a Christian, may not touch the water. The larger number of them depend upon the filthy roadside pools, covered with green slime and full of all kinds of abomination, for drinking and cooking purposes during the most of the year. Is it any wonder that fever, cholera, and dysentery are scarcely ever absent from their hamlets?

THE LAND QUESTION.

It is next to impossible for a Pariah to get land. All the native officials and landlords are against him. They know that if he obtained land he might cease to be the pliant tool he is now. It is not because there is no land available. In the Madras Presidency alone there are hundreds of thousands of acres of waste land. The great difficulty is what is called the Mirasi system. By that system, the man whose land adjoins waste land has the first claim. So that should a Pariah pluck up courage to apply for a piece of land, the Mirasadar, as he is called, almost invariably applies for and gets it, though he seldom uses it. By this system much revenue is lost to the Government, and an injustice done to the poor Pariah. This Mirasi system should be done away with.

THE SCHOOL QUESTION.

There is a good school system in Southern India. The schools are maintained and directed by the Government. They are supposed to be free to anybody who will pay the fees, but practically they are for caste people only—for two reasons; few of the Pariahs can pay the fees; but even if they did, they would be boycotted to the death. The teachers, inspectors, boards, etc., are all caste people, and woe to the Pariah who would dare to send his child t school. He would get no work, his house would b burned, he would be beaten, and, if he persiste worse might come. Why not sue his persecutors Yes, before a caste judge, and with every official s court against him, from the man who takes th evidence to the peon who ushers him into the pre sence of the Brahman judge. The school inspecto of a certain division in Southern India told th writer that out of 10,000 pupils in the commo schools of his division, there had been but one Paria the previous year, and none the then current year.

There must be separate schools for these peopl with either Christian teachers and inspectors, c men raised up from among themselves. Industri schools should also be established to assist them t maintain themselves independent of their oppre sors.

UNEQUAL JUSTICE.

Another matter which should secure prom attention is the manner in which these people a treated in the courts. If one of these has courag enough to become plaintiff in a suit, he is unable t secure counsel, and so has to conduct his own cas and then his utter ignorance of forms of procedur etc., leaves him an easy prey to bullying, browbea ing, loud-mouthed opposing counsel, or the enem who sits on the bench; if he is the defendant, he in a worse case, for the case is sure to go again him. False evidence, fraud, and bribery are r sorted to freely.

But Mr. Pandian will tell his own story. W hope the Christian people of Great Britain will re ceive him as a brother beloved, give him all th assistance he needs to be heard, give him a patie hearing themselves, and return him again to Ind in the fulness of the blessing of the Gospel peace.

THE McALL MISSION.

By a Correspondent.

I have seen a friend who, passing through Par three weeks ago, attended a workers' meeting the McAll Mission. She was exceedingly touch by the tone of the meeting. All seemed to be und the shadow of the impending stroke. A pressu lay on every spirit. Financial difficulties also ha to be faced. The apparent necessity of shuttin up some halls was spoken of, and the desire was arrange in some way so as to spare Dr. McAll th poignant distress which always resulted from a curtailing of the work. There was much earne prayer, and an evident casting of a very hea burden on the Lord.

This was, I believe, the first weekly (Frida prayer-meeting at which Dr. McAll himself had n been present since his return to Paris. His joy w to be among his people, as usual, though with dea written on his face. Six days after this meetin he was gone. "He worked till he was too weak speak," says one who was there, "and then he died

The note at the grave was more than regre more than admiration; it was deep, intense than fulness for what God had permitted his servant do. His widow remains in the house and roo where he died, and continues the work in which sh was never for a day dissociated from him. Sh is found at her place, playing the hymns at t weekly prayer meeting, and at other meetings.

Rev. Charles Greig is appointed director. M Greig is a Scotsman, son of a Free Church ministe and was induced to join the work chiefly throu the instrumentality of Mr. Dodds (his person friend) and of Dr. Horatius Bonar. He has ha some fourteen years' experience, is familiar wi every department of the work, and has the cont dence of his fellow-workers and of the pasto Yet the responsibility resting upon him may we seem crushing.

May I conclude by asking earnest prayer, and t help which prayer will surely suggest, for this gre work, so sorely bereaved? Surely a cause so de to the hearts of those who are now in the presen of God must be very dear to God's heart, and shou be dear to us.

HOW TO GUIDE THE BOYS.

I should like to reply to the "Anxious Mother," who wrote in your issue of January 26. God knows every parent must be anxious, if he has a heart for God's work, and a heart for his boys. The mother asks answers from experience. I admire her prudence. We can have no faith in "wise saws," written by non-fathers, nor wonderful "advice to mothers" from a dear, good lady who never had any children about her.

My dear wife and myself are not now young. I am in my seventy-fourth year; we have brought up thirteen children; three of them are in glory, and departed in perfect confidence; ten are alive, and are all, we are convinced, born again, although the boys are the most decided perhaps. Our eldest son is about twenty-seven, another is twenty-five, another twenty-three, and the youngest nineteen. They are all in good health, and I may say three of them are vigorous and strong.

We have trusted more to prayer and prudence than to any mere scheme. The Lord has every day been asked to guide the family, and truly we required the Lord, as our children are very active and vigorous by nature. We never sent a son to Oxford, Cambridge, or any very large centre out of our own reach altogether. They have always, as a rule, lived at home, and although they frequently attended public seminaries, still, in the evening, home was their home. A dear cousin of my own sent his son to Cambridge, and the lad came back seriously injured, and longing to be a great worldling, if possible. Another Christian friend sent his son to colleges out of his own reach, and the lad became by degrees a scapegrace, and my friend mourns over that young man now.

Let your home be your boys' home. "God has made that impossible," you say. Look around you; a way may appear. We were once in a country district, no capable teacher was nigh to us; but suddenly we applied to a country parson. Would he take them? "Yes, gladly," and the work went on well.

We desired that our boys should be strong, vigorous, and manly; yet manly for Christ. We encouraged riding and manly games, asking any young man we could trust to be with them at times. They did become strong and healthy, the eldest is strong and manly, another was one of the best riders in the district, another won the silver cup in a collegiate half-mile run, and the youngest is quite equal to any of his age; the three eldest can speak in public. A very decided bold young Christian asked us not long ago if we would send the youngest to a large sheep-run with him, to live with him, although many others are on the station. God gives such opportunities if we shut ourselves and ours out of the world's ways. Abraham must "command his household after him," and Isaac must not leave home to go "hunting about for the world" when he is young, and not established in the faith.

As children get older, also, they must gradually fall into the place of friends. The elder boys must be treated as friends (not necessarily in private affairs) in all that concerns themselves, and they must be encouraged to be frank, and their errors and mistakes gently touched. Principles must be always exalted, and no ridicule ever encouraged. No poor persons, no unfortunate or weak ones, must ever be ridiculed, and no doubtful persons ever encouraged in the home. The mother must not receive in her house any uncle or near relative who will ridicule truth or ridicule nobility of character, or sneer at good things. Such persons are poisoners. It may be a heavy cross to exclude such, but the Lord will bless the cross.

Do not only take your boys or girls to any sober-minded church, chapel, or meeting place that you love. The old believer is often a bad guide as regards youthful religion. The boy only half understands what is said and he cannot eat the dry food you like. Find out good evangelists; take him there. Ask young evangelists to your house—men sound and prudent, but cheerful and bold in preaching:—lively, earnest, and hearty in style. Young hearts love such evangelists; watch the conversation in your own house; season it with salt gently and meekly.

Use your power seldom. A parent's power is a moral power generally, and a moral power is not maintained by force or assertion—it is best maintained when seldom exhibited. Above all make the Lord your hourly friend and adviser: be much in secret prayer and be very prudent. Never say "No" or "Yes" in a hurry when a boy says, "May I go there?" or "May I ask that young fellow to the house?" Answer, "I will think about it and let you know as soon as I can." Be prayerful, be prudent, and the Lord will carry your cares and anxieties as you travel day by day.

A TOUR IN KABYLIA.

I should like to tell you of a fortnight's tour I have recently made in Upper Kabylia. The country is very densely populated; villages seem to crown every eminence, and creep down the mountain sides. The Kabyles are intelligent and industrious. It is not rare to find those who have seen Paris, London, or North America. The children often speak French pretty well; certainly better than the Arabs. They are Mohammedans, and very superstitious—so superstitious that they fear incurring a malediction by introducing any change into their customs.

They are very fond of potatoes, and a rich French settler told me that, to induce a Kabyle to plant them, he promised to give him the seed, and buy all the potatoes he would not need for himself. He could not make up his mind to accept the offer, "Because," he said, "no Mohammedan ever planted potatoes." This feeling renders them very inaccessible to European influence. "Nothing from the Roumi," is their device. Why "nothing from the Roumi"? Why nothing from the Romance peoples of Europe? Because for the Mussulman the Roumi is a worshipper of images, and he must not adopt the habits or have anything to do with idolaters. The transformation of their religious ideas is therefore the only civilising power which will conquer them, and France will only succeed in assimilating this population, and bringing them into the way of progress, when she shows them a pure Christianity, the Christianity of the Gospel, which is the basis of all real civilisation.

Education is not sufficient. Many Kabyles have passed brilliant examinations in the Lycées, and yet remain what their fathers were. And many Kabyles approve French ideas and methods when they are with the French, without dreaming of making use of them. Whence this strange contradiction? Because they remain Mussulmans, and, as such, must repudiate all that comes from the Roumi! There are in the country a few scattered missionaries who are seeking this religious transformation of the Kabyles. They number fourteen, of whom ten are ladies. Their chief means for attaining this end are open-air preaching, children's meetings, sewing classes, visiting, distributing medicines, and, during the present famine, distributions of barley. The people listen well to the preaching, and sometimes ask questions betraying the grossest materialism; at other times questions which testify to religious needs not yet satisfied.

In the children's meetings they are taught Scripture, learn verses by heart, and sing hymns. The Kabyle children have a wonderful memory. According to Kabyle custom, the women bear the burdens and the men sew and knit. It may need some time before the duties change hands. In the meantime, while learning to sew, the women rise visibly in their own estimation. The sick come to the mission station on fixed days, and sometimes from great distances. In serious cases they send a mule for the lady to visit them, and sometimes it is only when death is coming on. Still she has the opportunity of speaking of the great Healer, the Prince of Life, to the living and the dying. The news of her arrival has spread rapidly, and other sick ones are brought. In the little basket stored with the necessary remedies, I noticed a piece of ——— bread! It was fast-time, and at that season, many ills are cured simply by a little bread. The distribution of barley is made twice a week, and those days attract a number of feeble and emaciated old men and women, and poor ragged children. Each receives a litre of barley accompanied by a kind word. By their bright faces, one sees that a great need has been supplied.

The missionaries are the providence of the places they live in, and the Kabyles acknowledge it. A Kabyle one day asked a missionary whether she was not afraid of living alone among them, without anyone to protect her. "You know," he said, "that we could harm you." "You can harm me," she replied; "but God watches over me." "And we also," added the Kabyle. In another village a native said to a lady missionary, "If anyone causes you pain, be sure and tell us; we are all ready to punish him!" Not long ago, as a missionary was crossing the forest of Afridon, he was stopped by three brigands, who, threatening him with their guns, demanded his life or his purse. "I am the English missionary from T.," he replied, "and have no money." "Since you are a missionary," said the three brigands, "we will not harm you, and never will hurt any of you"; and the missionary passed on.

The missionaries have certainly gained the confidence of the Kabyles. They never doubt their word, and often ask their advice. They bring their money and their jewels to be taken care of. They have no trust in each other. This superiority of the missionaries impresses them, and a Kaid said, one day, to a missionary, "You are the Mussulman, and we are the heathen!" An earnest Mohammedan woman said to a missionary, "You are all that is necessary to go to heaven: you only do good; you say your prayers, and God is with you. You only need one thing more: testify to Mahomet." "If I did that," the missionary said, "I should be no better than you. Is it not better for me to testify to Jesus and be better than you?" "You are right," she replied, "you will go to heaven all the same, perhaps even before us!"

Many of the people have a real affection for the missionaries. I visited a village accompanied by two ladies of the mission, and many of the women came out of their houses to meet us, showing real joy at the sight. Each wished us to go into her house. "I will give you some coffee," said one, "I will give you some figs," said another. "Come," said a third, taking the missionary by the hand, "I will make you some cakes." On entering the house all sat on the ground while the missionaries spoke to them of Jesus. When we left we were invited to return next day and have the largest share of their supper at the hour when the sun goes to sleep. One bright intelligent young woman explained that the Kabyles do not usually allow strangers under their roof, but they let us in because they loved us!

There are some converts in all the stations. They are few, and far from being invulnerable. But there are converts, and I deem that the feeblest have a claim on the sympathy of all Christians. We have little idea of the crushing disdain they meet with from the Mussulmans, and the miserable persecutions to which they are subjected. The Koran commands all Mohammedans to cut the throat of any co-religionist who becomes a Christian, and if this crime is not more often committed it is that it cannot now be done with impunity. A young man not long converted, and appointed Kaid of his village, confided to the missionary that he feared lest his mother, who is very angry with him, should steal something, and hiding it in their gourbi, should accuse her own son of the theft. "And then," he added sadly "I, Kaid, and Christian, should be judged as a robber." To escape their enemies, the converts usually leave their village. These refugees are unfortunately not well received, and often succumb. What surprises me is not that there should be defections, but that all do not lose courage.

There should be missionaries in all the villages of Kabylia. Such was the expressed feeling of one of the highest authorities of the country, after having visited one of the six stations in Upper Kabylia. Christians of independent means will find there a great and very important work to do for the Lord. L. Borel.

JEWS IN ROME.—Miss Burtchell, of 5, Via Gregorium, Rome, who is still needing fresh slides for the magic lantern, writes.—"My work continues to be encouraging in the steady growth of the Jews and Jewesses in the knowledge and love of Christ, whose coming they begin to desire; but, though several at the hour of death have declared that their hope was in Christ, none have yet had the courage to be baptized."

SEVEN DIALS.—The seventeenth annual report of the Tower-street Mission School, Seven Dials, states that Mr. Paul Keed has succeeded to the position of hon. secretary and superintendent of the girls' school. Much blessing has of late attended the labours of the teachers, both in the Sunday-school and the other agencies. These latter include a Band of Hope, a sewing class, and a lending library. The work is very varied, though only carried out on a small scale. The financial account shows an adverse balance, which is specially to be regretted, seeing that the labour is all voluntary. For the Young.

THE LOVE THAT IS GREATEST OF ALL.

A little boy of eight years old lay on a window-seat looking at a book in the gathering twilight. It was a large illustrated copy of "Pilgrim's Progress" that had been sent to his father the day before, and he had given Kenneth leave to look at it while he and Kenneth's mother were at Meeting, for it was Sunday evening. Kenneth had never seen the book before, and he was interested now in following the life of the pilgrim as it was shown in the pictures. He quickly noticed that at the beginning of the book the man was always represented with a heavy load on his back, firmly bound to his shoulders. Later on this was no longer there. He found the picture where it was last seen. It was a very solemn one. It showed the Cross with the Lord Jesus upon it, and the pilgrim standing beside Him with a look both of awe and joy upon his face. But the part that impressed Kenneth was that where the heavy load was slipping away. The cords were loosed, and it was evidently falling down into a deep pit behind. He looked carefully through to the end of the book, and though he saw some terrible pictures of danger and fear, he did not find any trace of that heavy load again.

The last picture was beautiful. It showed heaven, and the radiant angels receiving the pilgrims at the gates. This pleased him greatly, but after a few minutes he turned back to the picture of the Cross, for here was something he wanted to understand.

Steps on the drive without caused him to look up, and he was glad to see his mother coming into the house. Almost his first words were:

"Mother, I like this picture very much, but I do not understand it. Why does the pilgrim's load fall off here, and why does he never get it again?"

"You know what the load is," said his mother, as she sat down beside him and took the book on her knee.

"No," said Kenneth, "that is one of the things I want to find out."

"You know what the whole book is about?" said mother.

"Yes," said Kenneth, "father told me it was a story of a man who became a Christian, and all that happened to him before he got to heaven. The story of his soul, told in a plain way, so that everyone could make out what it means."

"Yes," said mother, turning back the pages to the earlier chapter. "Here we have the picture of the man at the very beginning. You see he is very unhappy. Try and think why he should be. Do you not know what it is to be unhappy when you think of some naughty thing you have done in the day?"

"Yes," said Kenneth, "I remember feeling like that sometimes."

"It is quite right you should be unhappy," said mother, "because it is a dreadful thing to disobey God. And the more we understand it the more terrible it seems, till at last, sometimes, we feel just like this poor man, with a load we cannot bear. We cannot get away from the load; it is always there, and the more we try to please our heavenly Father, the more difficult and impossible it seems. But if we ask the Lord to show us, He does show us how that dreadful load can be taken away, and how we may really please Him, and lead just the life He wants us to live."

Kenneth's mother had now turned back to the picture, and they both looked at it a little while silently. He was trying to read the words underneath. They were these: "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends."

"The Lord Jesus loved us so much," said mother, "that when He saw we could not bear that load, and did not know how to get rid of it, He came down and bore it Himself. He bore it Himself, as you know, but it cost Him his life, darling."

Kenneth was silent for some minutes, and then he said:

"Why does the man look so happy? He ought to be grieved that the Lord has had to bear so much."

"He was grieved," said mother, "but he was glad too. When you were ill last spring do you remember those long nights when you could not sleep?"

"Oh, yes, mother, and once you sat up bathing my head all night, and father wanted you to go and let nurse come because you were so tired. But you would stay with me."

"Yes, darling; and you said some sweet words I shall not forget. You said, 'I am sorry, mother, dear, you won't go and get rested. But I am glad you won't. I'm glad you love me so much.' And after that you nestled your cheek down on my hand and went fast to sleep. You were sorry and glad both at the same time. Now do you understand why the man looks happy? He is glad because the Lord Jesus loves him so much. It is a beautiful thing to find out how much He loves us. It is almost too wonderful to understand; it makes us very happy and very very grateful to Him, though all the time we are grieved, too, that we helped to give Him all this to bear."

Kenneth's thoughts had gone back to the load again.

"And then," he said, "of course the man was glad when the terrible load slipped away."

"Yes, darling, and you found out it never came back again all through the book. The pilgrim often made mistakes—he did several wrong things, some very wrong indeed. He had to suffer very much for this, and it grieved him sorely, and sometimes he was so discouraged he thought he should never reach the heavenly city. But the load never came back as at first. This is because he saw that the Lord Jesus had died for all his sin, and this is the truth that is so dear to us. In spite of his love to us and ours to Him, there are moments when we forget and grieve Him. But if we tell Him and ask Him to take the sin away, and turn away from it with all our hearts, we find that He does take it away from us, and we are once more free from the burden of the sin."

"Yes," said Kenneth, whose eyes were now fixed on the man's face, and the joy on his upraised countenance, "I see now why he looks so happy. It is always nice to be loved. It is beautiful to be loved like that."

"It is a great joy," said mother, "but it is just the beginning. There are other joys just as beautiful that spring out of it. I will try and tell you another. When God made you and sent you here, He did not make you only just to be a happy little boy and get to heaven, though He wants you to be that, and will show you how if you will let Him teach you. But besides that, He has got something for you to do for Him and for the other people in the world. Nobody knows yet what all of it is. But He knows, and it is very important that you should begin at once to learn the way to please Him, so that He may guide you, and teach you all the way. The first thing to do is to find out every day just how to please Him for that one day.

"The great trouble is that often you don't want to listen to Him, and sometimes you don't want to do as He tells you, even when you do listen. But it is different after we have found out how the Lord Jesus has loved us, and when we have begun to love Him back again. Then we really want to do what He tells us. It is not hard to please those we love: we want to do it; and we really want to please the Lord when we see what He has done for us. Before we did not want to, and now we do want to. Do you see the difference?"

Kenneth nodded and his mother went on: "It is hard work to do right when we have no one to help us. When the Lord's love comes into our hearts, some of the things may look hard beforehand, but we find we can do them all, because He is helping us. As a little girl once said when she found this out: 'Lord Jesus, I thank thee I've nothing to do all day but just to mind Thee.'"

Dusk had fallen over the room, and the picture looked dim. It was bedtime now. Mother closed the book, and Kenneth took it from her to put it away. Then he kissed her, and went thoughtfully upstairs.

He had looked at the picture so long that he could see plainly in his mind the Cross with the light behind it, and the words underneath. "Greater love hath no man than this." And his little heart swelled with joy as he thought that some of that love must have been given, too, to him, and in his prayer that night he gave thanks for that great Love.

YOUNG PEOPLE OF FRANCE.

An eminent Roman Catholic critic, M. Ferdinand Brunitère, not long since, in the Revue des Deux Mondes, made the astonishing avowal that the Huguenots, for more than a century, were the moral substance of the French nation. All who know France will agree that that is equally true to-day, in spite of the many internal weaknesses of French Protestantism. In order to evangelise France, it is indispensable to strengthen and extend the Protestant Church, numbering only 690,000 members all told after twenty years of religious liberty.

If the Roman Catholic Church is not to-day what it was in the seventeenth century, the improvement is more apparent than real, and the nation is in just as great a need of the pure Gospel. Official statistics show that drink, vice, and immorality are on the increase at an alarming ratio, in spite of gratuitous and compulsory public education. In 1888 there were 1790 more youthful criminals than in 1880. During the last half-century, with scarcely any increase in the population, the number of crimes has more than doubled. Much is being done to meet the great want of the day. But, a most important and practical means for grappling with the evil, and for building up Protestantism, has been singularly neglected, i.e., the Y.M.C.A. and the Y.W.C.A. If to-day Protestants remain such a feeble minority, it is in a very great measure for the want of the Y.M.C.A. and Y.W.C.A. Each year the Church loses nine-tenths of its catechumens as soon as they have been confirmed.

Not only would the Y.M.C.A. and the Y.W.C.A. meet this want, but, better still, they would form so many training schools for voluntary evangelists, enabling the young men and women to use their surplus leisure and energy for the Master amidst their young Roman Catholic friends. It is when the convictions are young and friendships strong, that young men and women may most be easily won for Christ. Paris has now its Y.M.C.A. building with 600 members; Lyons, Bordeaux, and other cities have also rising associations.

The French National Council of the Association greatly desires to spread this work all over France, and has made an earnest appeal to English Christians for help. Communications may be sent to Mr. J. Hughes, 6, Quai de Retz, Lyons.

SOLDIERS AND SAILORS AT GOSPORT.

Miss Ridout's Soldiers' Home, Avenue-road, Gosport, has been carried on since 1888. It is conveniently situated for the barracks and forts, and is open daily to all soldiers and sailors. Miss Ridout and her sister constantly visit men in the hospital and barracks and on the ships. She writes:—"The time-expired soldiers from India and elsewhere are visited the evening they arrive. Our Sunday afternoon meetings at Fort Brockhurst have been continued; the numbers attending have amounted on some occasions to fifty or sixty, and we have been thankful to know that some have not heard God's message in vain. One man writes to say he shall never forget the few words spoken to him on the Sunday after his return to England, and tells us that a few days after reaching his own home, to the great joy of his praying mother, he decided to serve Christ.

"Every troopship this season has brought home a little band of earnest Christian men, who tell us of the good work going on in the prayer-rooms in India, in connection with the Soldiers' Christian Association, and in homes at other places. It has been our privilege to have the help, for a few weeks at the time, of some of the soldiers who had taken an active part in the work in India, and God has used them to be a blessing to several of our young lads here. Marines as well as soldiers bring us most interesting accounts of Christian work at foreign stations, and we are thankful to see an increasing missionary spirit among the men, and to know that some who have served their Queen are now preparing for foreign missionary work. It is gratifying to find that the Home is valued not only by the soldiers, but by their friends."

LORD'S DAY TRAVELLING.—A meeting of the Southwark and Camberwell Anti-Sunday Travelling Society was held at St. Winifred's Mission Hall, Rotherhithe, on Saturday week. Mr. B. Reeve was elected as secretary. It was resolved that a letter should be addressed to the clergy and ministers of Southwark and Camberwell, inviting an expression of opinion on the Sunday question, with a view of publishing a selection of the replies in leaflet form for distribution.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, JUNE 4.—EZRA VIII.

THERE is always special interest in this chapter for those who are venturing forth on the untried and unknown. The camp at Ahava; the sending for the priests; the waiting for their coming; the recognition of God's good hand in sending a man of discretion; and then the fast and prayer for protection. We can almost see the little band on the point of plunging into the inhospitable and dangerous desert, spending hours in prayer, and restrained from requesting an escort, lest they might invalidate their leader's trustful boast. How careful we should be to do nothing inconsistent with the proud position that faith gives us in the keeping power of God. Seek Him, oh soul of mine, and He will be found, and his hand shall be upon thee for good.

Ezra entrusted the sacred vessels to faithful men, to bear them across the desert, and similarly God entrusts to us the deposit of his sacred truth, and of the interests of his Kingdom, weighing them out to us as holy, and bidding us watch and keep them until we return our trust at the judgment seat of Christ. Take heed to thyself, and to the doctrine.

The good hand of God delivered his people from those that lay in wait. He hath delivered; He doth deliver; He will deliver. God is faithful to keep what we commit to Him.

MONDAY, JUNE 5.—EZRA IX.

The mingling of the holy seed with heathen peoples was always the curse of Israel, and it has been the temptation of God's people in every age. Would that it elicited as much grief from us as it did from Ezra! Do we sufficiently tremble at the words of the God of Israel because of our sins or those of others? The humiliation and anguish of soul experienced by this holy man and his associates are a great rebuke to us. The majority of Christians feel too little for their own sins, and have very little conscience for the iniquities under which our country groans. We are indignant, but we do not view sin from God's standpoint.

Ezra's prayer is very beautiful. Notice its humility—"I blush to lift up my face"; its vicarious confession of sin; its acknowledgment of God's grace in giving a little reviving; its recital of the aggravation which had dyed their sin of a deeper hue. Israel was intended to live in Canaan as a separated people. Its strength and stability depended on its separateness. The land itself could only yield its good, or remain their permanent inheritance on condition of their fidelity to God, and yet the people threatened to plunge themselves from the height of their God-given position to the level of the surrounding nations, for the gratification of desires that overleapt the limit of the Divine restraint. When the confession has been made, let us stand before God in our guiltiness, claiming forgiveness, acceptance, and cleansing, through the precious blood of Christ.

TUESDAY, JUNE 6.—EZRA X.

Ezra's anguish became contagious, and attracted to him a great concourse of those who were like-minded. The emotion of a good man spreads until the rill becomes a torrent, fed in its progress from its source. Before this uprising of the national conscience this evil thing was swept away swiftly and inexorably. It was no small test of the results of the captivity to find the people so willing to put away the accursed thing from their midst. There is a sense in which we have to cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit. Part of this process can be wrought by God alone, but there is a part which we alone can accomplish. It is for us to come out and be separate, and not touch the unclean thing.

In the eleventh verse, Ezra makes a good distinction between confession to God and separation from sin. Neither is complete without the other. At the same time it was perfectly legitimate to insist that due care should be taken to examine into each several case, so that proper provision should be made for the women and children who were to be put away, and who were doomed to suffer keenly. When we have sinned we entail upon ourselves consequences which we have no right to treat lightly. We have made and we must bear.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 7.—NEH. I.

Nehemiah occupied a comfortable and happy position in Shushan, the lily-palace. His circumstances were all that could be desired, but his heart was away in Jerusalem, the city of his fathers, which was in ruins. How little do we understand the sorrow that gnaws at the heart of those who appear to have all that heart can wish. He eagerly inquired of his brother and the rest for tidings, which, when he heard them, overwhelmed him in grief. Oh that our soul were set as eagerly upon the condition of the Church of God!

But what could one man do? Nothing by himself, but everything in fellowship with God. The one question for him to solve was whether he could by prayer, confession, and action become the channel through which redemption and help might come to his people. One human life, when truly devoted to God, may be the channel of untold help and blessing to a nation.

Nehemiah's prayer is a good example of vicarious confession. He confessed sins not his own, and pleaded the promise of God to the outcasts, even to the uttermost, and sought the special and almighty co-operation of Jehovah, in the purpose that had already begun to form itself in his mind. Test the impulses of your heart by prayer. If they stand that test they are of God, and if they are of God He will further them.

THURSDAY, JUNE 8.—NEH. II.

The Persian kings were never permitted to see aught that reminded them of the pain or sorrow of the world; therefore it was high treason to be sad. How different our King, who welcomes mourners that He may comfort them, and remove all trace of sorrow! It was very wise to give the plain and sufficient reason that Nehemiah alleged. We always do best by frankness and sincerity.

Between the king's second question and Nehemiah's answer the simple-minded cup-bearer found time to pray to the God of Heaven. A beautiful example of ejaculatory prayer! Then with the assurance that God was with him, he did not scruple to ask great things; that he might be sent to the city of his fathers, to build it, and that he might receive all the materials necessary for its construction. But he is careful to notice that his requests were granted, not by the clemency of the king, but according to the good hand of God. Do we recognise that good hand enough?

We get glimpses into the inner working of this good man's heart. He felt that God had put his holy purpose there. He did not hesitate to confess this to the Jews, and amid the opposition and scorn of their foes, he strengthened himself in his God, sure that the God of Heaven would not have brought him so far to put him to shame, certain that He would prosper them. Be sure you are on God's lines, and nothing will be impossible to you.

FRIDAY, JUNE 9.—NEH. III.

In this description of the rebuilding of Jericho, each family did its own share, teaching us the desirableness of sharing the work of God, each doing what he can do best. Let us beware of resembling the nobles of Tekoa, who stooped not to the lowly work, which, had they done it, would have made them really noble. Let us notice how the women were permitted to share in the work of rebuilding, though they were daughters of the ruler of half Jerusalem. Let us imitate the work of Baruch, who did his work earnestly. Let us remark the work of the priests, who wrought each one against his own house.

Put all these together, and let us add the conception of the Apostle, that we are fellow-labourers with God, that God and we are co-operating in the building of the walls of the spiritual New Jerusalem. God cannot do without us, nor we without Him. He supplies the design and materials; He prompts us to holy and devoted toil; He works by our side, therefore let us work with fear and trembling, lest we should hinder Him, or miss some piece of blessed workmanship.

It is not wise to go far afield in Christian work, unless we have done our best against our own house. Let each man sweep the snow from his own doorstep. Let each make beautiful his own patch in the vineyard. Let each begin at the Jerusalem of his own neighbourhood.

SATURDAY, JUNE 10.—NEH. IV.

Spiteful speeches are difficult to bear, but how wise it is to divert them to the hearing of our God, leaving Him to vindicate us and our work, though we have no right to ask that those who oppose us should suffer.

When spite has exhausted its words, it will come to actions, our answer to which is the double one of prayer and watchfulness. Difficulties are aggravated indeed when to outward opposition is joined the counsel of faint-hearted friends. It will appear as if the Jews in the country districts urged their friends who had gone into Jerusalem to return. But nothing availed to quench the courage of Nehemiah, and his words may well repeat themselves in our experience. "Be not afraid, remember the Lord." The enemy drew off, but the little band took to itself none of the credit, but acknowledged that God had brought the counsel of their foes to nought.

It is a suggestive attitude, the girded sword, the spear in one hand, and the trowel in the other. And so they wrought, with ear intent for the trumpet sound, ready for any emergency, and yet sure that God would fight for them. Trust in God should never take the place of wise and strenuous activity. "Trust in God and keep your powder dry," said Cromwell. The former without the latter would be presumption; the latter without the former would be practical atheism.

INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSONS.

JUNE 11.

THE CREATOR REMEMBERED. Eccl. xii. 1-7, 13, 14. GOLDEN TEXT, verse 1.

THE value of this counsel is increased by the extensive and varying experience of the preacher. He has tried both sides. He knows all the pleasure and all the pain that the world can give. He knows, also, all that can be enjoyed in the service of God. The counsel is given to the young. Life is before them to be made or marred. How much they can escape if they are willing to learn lessons by the experiences of others.

EARLY PIETY ENJOINED (1). Is it not strange that any should have to be urged to "remember their Creator"? In a world which is made by Him, and in which everything speaks of Him, can He be forgotten? So it seems. Our natural tendency is to "depart from the living God" (Heb. iii. 12). Is it very important to remember Him? How many disastrous things have resulted from forgetfulness. If a signalman forgets to alter his signals many lives may be imperilled. See how God speaks of the consequences of forgetting Him (Deut. viii. 14; Psa. ix. 17; l. 22). Eternal issues depend on our not forgetting Him. In what way are we to remember Him? Will it suffice if occasionally we recall the fact that He made us? Not so. Psa. xxii. 27 teaches that truly to remember Him is to turn from sin to Him; and Psa. xx. 7 makes remembering Him to be the same as trusting Him. It is for this he reveals Himself to us in Jesus Christ. When must we remember Him? "Now—in the days of thy youth." This is the easiest time. If conversion does not take place in youth, the fear is that it may never take place at all. It is the wisest time, for it ensures safety in the temptations that beset later life. It is the most profitable time, for it fits for usefulness in the service of Jesus Christ.

OLD AGE DESCRIBED (2—7). This is not simply godless old age; for the physical decay here described is true of all. Yet there is a difference. When this life is all a man has or hopes for, it must be distressing beyond measure to feel that it is passing away. To the Christian the prospect of "the house not made with hands" enables him to think without alarm of the decay of the body. (See 2 Cor. v. 1, 2.) Death is here described under the image of a house falling into ruins. 2. The obscuring of the light that brings cheer to the home sets forth the gradual loss of the mental faculties. These infirmities follow one another as "clouds that come after rain." 3. "The keepers" are the arms and hands which begin to tremble with palsy. "The strong men" are the legs which become too feeble to support the body. The stones which daily ground the corn represent the teeth which do the same work for the body, but which fail in old age. "The windows" are the eyes, which become dim and incapable of perceiving the beauty of surrounding objects. 4. "The door" may mean all the senses which communicate with the outer world, or the sense of hearing. With difficulty even the loudest sounds are apprehended. In the decaying house the grinding women are not heard singing at their work, so in old age the most familiar sounds are missed. Sleepless nights succeed weary days, so that the old man rises when the bird wakes. Music and song have lost their attraction for him (Comp. Barzillai 2 Sam xix. 35). 5. He is full of fear; every step is exposed to danger. The white blossom of the almond tree refers to the white hair that covers the head. The most trifling thing—even a "grasshopper"—becomes a burden; and all the appetites and passions lose their force The R.V. reads for "desire," caper-berry, which was used to sharpen the appetite. Even this fails to give relish to the choicest food. All these are signs of man's departure from this life. Significantly death is described as going to "his long home." It is that for the ungodly (Acts i. 25) and for the saint (Phil. i. 23), but how vastly different! 6. This is not only old age, but death itself. The cord suspending the lamp from the ceiling snaps, and the lamp is broken. So is the lamp of our life held by a slender thread. When that thread breaks our life ceases, and all the bodily activities are no more. 7. Yet does life cease? For the body, yes; it returns to dust. But the spirit goes to God, either for life, or for judgment.

Such is the picture of old age, which is introduced in order to enforce the counsel to the young. How much better to give God our lives in their early vigour than to waste life in sin, and hope for repentance at the last.

The conclusion (13, 14).—This closes the whole book, and is the wise conclusion to which all leads. For the present and for the future there is nothing better than to fear and to obey God. There is no manhood so true as that to which the fear of God leads. The judgment of the future enforces this lesson. It will deal with everything, however secret. Live in the present with that in prospect.

LYNCH LAW IN THE SOUTH.—1.

If it were known that during the past year four human beings had been tortured and burned alive by the savages of Africa, by Asiatic nations, or by South Sea cannibals, the whole of Christendom would consider it a bounden duty to bring all moral forces to bear in an effort to stop this barbarism. On four occasions during the past fifteen months human beings have been burned alive in the United States of America, but these acts have received neither the condemnation nor the protest which their barbarism and atrocity merit. They were committed by white people, have received the tacit approval of American civilisation, and Christendom is silent! Christianity in America is busy trying to convert the heathen in foreign lands, in considering the cruel treatment of the Russian Jews and Siberian exiles, in exposing the vice and wickedness prevailing in India, and in protesting against "English injustice" in the case of Mrs. Maybrick, and sending petitions to the Queen and Mr. Gladstone urging the release of an "innocent" woman from prison. Christianity elsewhere is earnestly absorbed in the good work of sending missionaries to the heathen, in exposing the wickedness and uselessness of vivisection by medical men in the interest of science, and in saving life in the aggregate by urging nations to lay down their arms and be at peace with each other. There seems to be little time, and strong disinclination, to consider the question of the cremation of living human beings in the glare of the nineteenth-century civilisation by Anglo-Saxon people.

The measure of success attending the great moral reforms of temperance, war-abolition, anti-vivisection, and the like, has been the result of prayer and agitation, of vigorous denunciation of wrong and advocacy of right. But there seems a doubt among some reformers that moral suasion will prove as efficacious with those professing Christianity as among the heathen. Then, too, they fear being considered impertinent, or that they will give offence by so doing. It is to the writer an entirely new phase of Christianity that Christians should fail to denounce wrong-doing out of consideration to the wrongdoer. That Christians should be silent from fear of offending those who excuse murder and outrage, amounts to complicity. That anyone should at any time become apologists for lynchers and attempt to justify "lynch law" as it is practised in the Southern States of America, practically means that they believe mobs more fitted to discover the guilt or innocence of an accused person, than are the courts of justice which are maintained for that purpose. To concede this also concedes the right of mobs to punish those they find guilty — in any manner the fancy dictates. These white mobs have lately chosen to burn seven negroes.

In February, 1892, in the town of Texarkana, Arkansas, Edward Coy was accused of outrage by Mrs. Jewell, a white woman. He was bound to a tree, the flesh chipped off his body by anyone who desired, coal oil poured over him, and Mrs. Jewell set fire to him. He died protesting his innocence. Ten thousand persons, so the reports read, were present. Private investigations since then have revealed that Mrs. Jewell was known to be of bad character; that Ed. Coy had supported her and her drunken husband for a year previously to the burning, and that she was forced by the mob to apply the torch to Coy's body. No one has been punished or arrested for this cremation, but the usual verdict was rendered: "Death at the hands of parties unknown to the jury." Mrs. Jewell has since become the inmate of an insane asylum.

In October, 1892, in Monroe county, Alabama, the house of Richard L. Johnson was burnt to the ground. In the débris were found the charred remains of the owner, a white man, and his daughter Jeannette. There was no proof that the fire was not accidental, or that it was not the crime of a white man. Melted piles of gold and silver were found which led to the conclusion that the awful crime (?) was not prompted by motives of robbery. The newspapers reported that the whites immediately decided that "brutal lust was the incentive, and as there were nearly two hundred negroes living within a radius of five miles of the place, the conclusion was inevitable that some of them were the perpetrators." The same report stated that Mr. Johnson was on the best of terms with his negro tenants; but the above conclusion made, perhaps, by the real criminals, was acted upon by the mob. Ten negroes were arrested (?), four of whom, according to the mob, confessed that they outraged the daughter and murdered her and her father! These four men, all under twenty-five years of age, were hanged, shot, then burned while yet alive on the night of Oct. 12. The country and the world accepted the finding, and endorsed the horrible punishment inflicted by an irresponsible mob.

The Paris (Texas) holocaust on the day of Feb. 1, 1893, is still fresh. The world knows how a little white child, Myrtle Vance, was found shockingly murdered; how Henry Smith, a negro, was accused of the murder, and was found, five days after the body of the child, in an adjoining state. A deputation of citizens, headed by the district attorney and the sheriff, was sent for Smith, at every railway station he was compelled by these officers to show himself to the crowd in waiting. The railway companies gave free transportation to those journeying to Paris to witness the burning which had been decided upon five days previous. When the prisoner's train reached Paris, a rope was thrown around his neck, and he was dragged out, placed on a four-horse float, and driven through the principal streets of the city. The mayor of the city had given the school children a holiday, and when Smith had been exhibited, he was bound on a scaffold which was built ten feet high. Here the relatives of the murdered child, with red-hot irons branded Smith's body from the sole of his feet to the crown of his head. They rolled the irons across his abdomen and down his back, cooking his flesh. They cooked his tongue, and ran the red-hot poker down his throat to stop his cries. They burned his eyes out. Fifteen thousand persons looked on, and cheered this hour's torture of a human being. Then oil was poured over the almost lifeless body, shavings were placed under him and lighted. The flames, which burned the ropes from his body, brought him back to consciousness for a moment, and burned, maimed, and sightless as he was, Smith rolled off the platform and away from the fire. Then this mob seized his half-cooked body and thrust it back into the flames, and fought over the ashes for bones and buttons as relics.

The State of Georgia was the scene of the next cremation, which took place April 14 last. A white man was found murdered in his store. A strange negro furnished the necessary scapegoat. He too "confessed," and the same report—to more surely justify the deed—adds that negroes also took part in the burning! The Buffalo New York Express, commenting on this latest burning, says the mob had so little proof of the man's guilt, that no one knew his name. Yet he, too, was bound, pine and brush piled up around him, kerosene poured over all, and the fire kindled. As he crawled out several times he, too, was thrown back in the flames. "Finally his efforts to escape became so strong that several shots were fired (into the body), which was the signal for a general fusillade. The quivering body did not much longer give any signs of life, but became rigid, while the fire was kept punched up until there was not a vestige left except a pile of ashes." This is from a correspondent to the Cincinnati Enquirer of April 15. Can true Christianity — nay, common humanity — remain longer silent, and thus condone such practices?

HOLINESS CONVENTION AT DUBLIN.

The fifth annual convention in Dublin for the deepening of spiritual life opened in the Antient Concert Rooms, Great Brunswick-street, on May 21. Following the arrangement of former years, there were four meetings daily, the one at 8 a.m. being for prayer. At nearly every meeting the hall was well filled, and the large number of friends present from all parts of Ireland showed how wide-spread the interest has become in these annual gatherings. Mr. Robert Wilson presided, and the following speakers gave addresses daily: Revs. Gelson Gregson, F. S. Webster, J. J. Luce, G. Wilson, S. A. Selwyn, and H. B. Macartney (Melbourne). Rev. Evan H. Hopkins, through illness, was able to speak only at the opening meeting on the first day.

On two consecutive days Mr. Macartney dealt with the truth that God hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in Christ Jesus. A list of the blessings is given in Deut. xxxiii. 3. Rev. Geo. Wilson, speaking from 2 Cor. xii. 9, referred to the means by which St. Paul had obtained the fulness of blessing. Mr. Luce spoke on two typical prayers in Ephesians. Mr. Macartney followed on a third, wherein Paul besought the Ephesians to walk worthily of the calling wherewith they were called. He urged his hearers to search the Epistles for the passages where the Holy Spirit "beseeches."

On Wednesday afternoon a very helpful Bible reading was given by Mr. Wilson, on "Life at the Feet of Jesus." Mr. Webster, speaking on Ephesians i. 13, showed the need for being sealed or baptized after we believe, so that individually we may experience a Pentecost. We may get to heaven without a Pentecost, but heaven will never come to us without a Pentecost. In a second address the same speaker pointed out that there are three baptisms referred to in the New Testament: the baptism of repentance; the baptism into death of the new religious self (Rom. vi. 4); and third, the baptism of the Holy Ghost. Baptism is a vision of God. It was this which brought Job down. "I have heard of Thee by the hearing of the ear, but now mine eye seeth Thee; wherefore I abhor myself, and repent in dust and ashes."

Mr. Luce, speaking at one of the early morning prayer-meetings, developed thoughts from Psalm cxliii. 8-10, "Cause me to hear," "Cause me to know," and "Teach me to do." Two searching addresses were given during the week by Mr. Gregson, one on the difference between the carnal Christian and the spiritual believer, and the other, on the last night, on the baptism of the Holy Ghost. At the conclusion of this meeting many were led to seek and to find the fulness of the blessing set forth. The praise meeting on Saturday morning bore full testimony to these, the number of those who stood up to testify being very large.

At the missionary meeting, which was held on Saturday at eleven, Messrs. Selwyn, Macartney, and Wilson spoke. Urging the importance of Christians being missionaries at home if not called to labour in the foreign field, Mr. Selwyn said that he had preached in the open air to heathens in Africa, and had less difficulty and opposition than when preaching in the open air from the Custom House steps in Dublin. So much for the need of missionary work in Ireland!

Speaking to parents as to the responsibility they incur in keeping at home beloved sons or daughters who desire to proceed to the foreign mission field, Mr. Wilson said he once called upon a lady and found her in tears pleading with arms round the neck of a beloved son, who was also weeping, that he would not leave her for the far distant land where he sought to go for Christ. Those who have not got a gift for preaching, or even teaching, may go to Africa and live Christ, and thereby win souls. This had been the actual story of a member of Mr. Wilson's congregation, who had last year passed away to his rest, God having abundantly used his life and testimony in the salvation of the heathen.

At the conclusion of the missionary gathering, a large number amongst the audience stood up, signifying their willingness to go anywhere Jesus would call them.

MRS. ANDREW AND DR. KATE BUSHNELL

OF THE WORLD'S WOMEN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.

THE name of Mrs. Andrew is perhaps less known in England than that of Dr. Kate C. Bushnell. In a few months both will be known wherever the English language is spoken, as two women whom God has wonderfully prepared for and led into one of the strangest pieces of work which had to be done in our time. Both are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church of America.

Mrs. Andrew is a daughter of one of its ministers, and the widow of one of its College Professors. Along with her husband, she took part in the educational work of Willamette College, on the Pacific Coast. She also had charge of the Mount Vernon Seminary, an educational institute at Washington, where daughters of governors, of members of Congress, and of other men in high positions are trained. Thus she has been brought into responsible contact with the young life of her country. Besides educational work, she has had considerable experience as a journalist, having been eight years on the editorial staff of The Union Signal, the organ of the World's Women's Christian Temperance Union, a paper which has a large circulation, and goes into every country. As a result of the excitement caused by Mr. Stead's action on Social Purity, a Social Purity Department was formed in the Union, and Mrs. Andrew, as editor of the literary work, brought out books and pamphlets bearing on the question. Her thoughts were always being brought to bear on this terrible problem, and her sympathies were roused for positive aggressive effort.

In 1890 she was asked to accompany Dr. Kate Bushnell on a journey round the world for missionary purposes in connection with the Union, and consented to go. They were the successors in this work of Mrs. Leavitt, who went round the world in 1884, and of Miss Ackermann, who did the same work in 1888. The main purpose of this journey was to strengthen the hands of temperance and purity workers all the world over. In England they caught the influence of Mrs. Butler and others who were specially interested in India, and made up their minds to go and deliver the poor women there who are held in bondage by British power for the gratification of British soldiers. In July 1891 they left England, and visited Cape Colony, Natal, the Orange Free State, and the Transvaal, and then quietly passed into India at Christmas, and began their work on January 1, 1892. Thus they bring as late tidings of the state of affairs as to regulated vice as we could well have from voluntary and unaided workers who had to find their way from place to place. In this endeavour they proved the value of prayer. Baffled and helpless, they set apart a day for prayer, asking the natives not to disturb them on any account whatever; then doors opened to them of their own accord; persons were interviewed, facts were gathered; documents were secured; things were seen; all was obtained that was needed for safe action on the part of the opponents of legalised sin. God himself lifted the covering from the hidden abomination, and their eyes saw what they are now present to tell us.

Their work in India finished, they went to Australia, Ceylon, Egypt, and Syria, still keeping the object of their mission before them. They have already appeared before a Departmental Committee appointed by the Government to inquire into the alleged violation of the Resolution of Parliament in 1888, by which State regulation of vice was abolished.

Dr. Kate C. Bushnell has had a remarkable career. Her education was gained at Evanston University, a Methodist Episcopalian institution, with 1000 students; Miss Willard being Dean of the Women's Department at that time. Miss Bushnell graduated in medicine at the Women's Medical College in Chicago as a preparation for missionary work, and was sent in 1879 to Central China by the Women's Foreign Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, a Church which anticipated the Salvation Army in demanding of its members abstinence from tobacco and drink. In 1882 the young missionary doctor returned from China broken in health. For the next three years she practised medicine in the United States, chiefly at Denver, where she had her attention drawn to fallen women, for whom she gradually began to work. In this new sphere she acquired some fame, and her old friend Miss Willard hearing of it and of her weak state of health, asked her if she would go wholly into purity work. Hence she left Denver for Chicago, to work for women in the Anchorage Mission, which provides a temporary home and lodging for women, where they are classified and aided according to their condition and need. Dr. Bushnell next took up travelling and organising local missions for purity work.

MRS. ANDREW.

DR. KATE BUSHNELL.

In 1888, terrible stories were afloat as to the condition of girls in Wisconsin: it was said that numbers were decoyed away by promises of work, and were held in bondage for the lumbermen who work in the forests. The word of the Lord came to her at night; she woke up to hear the question as if an audible voice had put it, "What will you do for those Wisconsin girls?" Though her father lay dying, she felt she must leave him in other hands, while she obeyed the heavenly vision. She uncovered a state of things almost incredible for fraud, lying, cruelty, and impurity. The whole horrid system was carried on by business men of large means, in a business way; just as they would have procured so many head of cattle for the meat market, they made merchandise of the souls and bodies of girls. And some of these scoundrels, to keep up appearances, had a name and a place in Christian churches. To find the facts out was an enterprise full of peril, but Dr. Bushnell committed her way to the Lord, and He both directed and guarded her steps. Of her plans nothing more need be said than that she seemed to stumble into these terrible settlements, make her observations, and then as strangely stumble out and disappear. The houses themselves where the girls were immured were stockaded around, and guarded by dogs; they stood in little villages a mile or more away from the small towns which mark the fringe of civilisation; they were kept by men whose fierce and pitiless brutality would inflict any violence even up to death.

Of course there had been an official investigation before Dr. Bushnell essayed her perilous adventure, and it had found nothing very bad. They never do, these officials; they seem to be blind and deaf. But Dr. Bushnell found in the far north-west just what Mr. Dyer found in Brussels—that those who ought to have administered the law aided in breaking the law; that the gold gained at the cost of women's tears and blood and virtue was tempting enough to bribe sheriffs, police, judges, representatives, and electors. She succeeded in throwing daylight into the darkest recesses of this inferno on earth, and reported to the W.W.C.T.U. all the facts she had found, with the result that a bill against procuration, commonly called the Kate Bushnell Bill, was passed into law, and is of such a nature that it severely punishes men for the offence, but does not touch women.

How this came about were a long story to tell, but if wicked men had not been blinded by rage and hatred it had never happened. And now, along with her friend, Dr. Bushnell has wandered through our British inferno in India, and returns to tell us our abominations. May God shield her, for there probably are other sisters in other lands who have long been wishing and waiting for her coming.

LEGALISED VICE IN INDIA.

The Ladies' National Association, of which Mrs. Josephine Butler is president and hon. secretary, and which did so much towards the repeal of the C.D. Acts in England, met last week at St. Martin's Hall, in annual meeting. There was a business meeting in the afternoon, and a public meeting in the evening, which was well attended by the general public. Mrs. Butler presided on both occasions.

In the earlier part of the public meeting it was shown that whereas in 1886 the House of Commons yielded to nearly twenty years of agitation by repealing the C.D. Acts of 1866-69, it was soon afterwards found that the same system of recognising, regulating, and legalising vice was practised with great elaboration by the Indian Government in the military stations or cantonments. The repeal party in England asked for repeal in India as in England, and in consequence the House of Commons in 1888 passed a resolution condemning the whole system in India, and ordering its cessation. Not till 1890 was any alteration made, and then repealers found that the Indian Government had nominally abolished the regulation system, but continued the practice under other names. Representations of this were made to the India Office, which, however, refused to act without specific evidence. By what Professor Stuart, M.P., called a providential interposition, just at this time Mrs. Butler met with Dr. Kate Bushnell and Mrs. Elizabeth Andrew, who were in England for the W.W.C. Temperance Union. These ladies agreed, for the time being, to forego their temperance work, and undertake the mission of inquiry for Mrs. Butler in India. In consequence of these ladies' representations, the English Government appointed this year a Departmental Committee of Inquiry, and these ladies have given their detailed evidence.

Last Wednesday's meeting was made especially important, because Lord Roberts, the Commander-in-Chief of the Indian Army, having just landed in England, has stated to an interviewer that all the evidence about the regulation of vice in India is wrong, that no such system exists, and that every attention and respect has been paid in India to the resolution of the House of Commons.

Mrs. Elizabeth Andrew, one of the lady commissioners to India, met Lord Roberts's denial by a simple narrative of what she and Dr. Bushnell did and saw in India. Indicating the difficulties of the situation, she said that (1) they were unacquainted with the customs of India; (2) they were ignorant of the language; (3) as Americans they were ignorant of all military systems, for in America soldiers are never seen except on the frontiers or at the special academies; (4) they had to make a secret inquiry, hostile to the Indian Government and the military authorities; (5) they were liable at any moment to be arrested and expelled from the cantonments on the simple will of the commander-in-chief or other responsible officer. In these circumstances they first devoted days to prayer and fasting, and waited for God to make their way quite plain. So clearly did Mrs. Andrew recognise the hand of Providence that she said they often visited the Lock hospital or other places only just after the departure of persons who would have opposed their mission had they known of it.

Coming to close quarters with the facts, Mrs. Andrew said, although it had been said that in India there were no Lock hospitals, and no official countenance of vice, she and Dr. Bushnell visited many Lock hospitals, talked with the inmates, and also visited nearly all the chaklas, or official quarters, where the legalised fallen women are housed. In all they visited and inspected ten cantonments, situated many miles apart, and in various parts of the great Indian territory. These officially-registered women were housed by the Indian military authorities under three distinct methods:—

(1) There were in certain cantonments women housed altogether under one roof, or official chakla, viz., at Lucknow, Orissa, Bareilly, Sitapore, and Benares.

(2) In other cantonments the women were housed in different parts of the cantonment, regimentally placed, viz., at Meerut, Meeanmeer, Rawal Pindi, and Umballa.

(3) Where the official women were housed in one street, but under different roofs, or chaklas, as at Peshawar.

(a) Mrs. Andrew proceeded to give details of each of these places, and mention her facts. For example, at Lucknow the Government brothel, or chakla, was a great building, not tall, but expansive. In some places the walls were 200 feet long and 12 feet high. Where it reached the railway the wall was low, but further along it was 12 feet or 15 feet high. All round this wall were single rooms—she counted thirty-three on one side. There were two courtyards. On their first visit as many as thirty-seven registered women came in a group to talk to them, round a seat attached to a tree, and the women dragged charpoys, or native beds to sit on while they talked. Mrs. Andrew and her companion asked for the mahaldarnee, or superintendent of the chakla, and this woman declared herself. She said the house was built by the Indian Government, but had recently been sold to a Mohammedan native, whose name she mentioned. This mahaldarnee said she received ten rupees a month wages, paid by the Cantonal magistrate. There was also an official watchman in the chakla, in uniform, with a tin badge bearing the legend "chokidar cantonment," viz., "cantonment servant." He was an official guard, and was relieved by other watchmen every few hours. There were about 100 women in this official house, but the capacity of it was equal to 150 or 200 women, when other regiments arrived, bringing their contingents of official women with them.

At Orissa, the chakla was a wretched place with mud walls and only a few rooms. There were five women and a mahaldarnee in it. Even the price payable by the soldiers was regulated, and of the pittance of four annas paid to the official women, the mahaldarnee was allowed to deduct one-eighth as her own salary! The soldiers therefore paid about 4d., and the women had to pay out of this one halfpenny to the mahaldarnee.

At Bareilly was a huge chakla, surrounded by a courtyard and mud walls. A cantonment watchman was on duty inside. All the rooms abutted on the walls. Each room had two numbers—one large, one small; one indicating the cantonment number of the room, the other the registered number of the inmate.

At Sitapore the chakla resembled an ordinary Indian barrack. It had two suites of rooms, ten rooms on each side, and the doors facing each other.

At Benares the official women were gathered in a good building in a prominent street. The women said the chakla was hired by the Government, and they paid no rent. Three of the inmates had been registered for this life at fourteen years of age.

(b) Then the places where women were put in different parts of the cantonment. Meerut was the grand centre, and had four separate chaklas, three of which those lady commissioners visited, viz., at the Sudda Bazaar, at the Lancers' chakla, and at the Infantry chakla.

From Meerut the ladies went to the Rest Camp of the West Kent Regiment, where there were fourteen tents for registered women for the men of this regiment, which had been in India less than a month. Thirteen women were there, and a mahaldarnee.

At Meeanmeer the ladies visited three separate chaklas, and it was here that they purchased from one of the women her registration ticket, which specified the set days for medical examination, etc., and bore the name of the cantonment magistrate and the initials of the European examining doctor. The chakla in the Sudda Bazaar was a good building, rent free to the women. In the regimental chakla the women paid rent from one rupee to one rupee four annas per month. The Artillery chakla was a room in a native street.

At Rawal Pindi seven chaklas were visited. The official women seemed innumerable. In the Sudda Bazaar chakla (viz., in the chief commercial street or market), the rooms were over the shops. There was also a native chakla, where the women congratulated themselves that they were not so strictly regulated as to medical examination as were the registered women set apart for the soldiers. At the Infantry chakla the rooms all faced a large courtyard. At the Artillery chakla the women were afraid for the most part to stay in the house, for the soldiers were so drunken and so brutal that the women's persons were not safe from violent assault. Only five women were in this house—a place with a mud floor, and the most wretched surroundings, with no furniture except a bed. At Umballa the lady commissioners inspected two chaklas used by the men of the Argyle and Sutherland Highlanders and the Gordon Highlanders. From these chaklas the ladies went to the Sudda Bazaar Lock hospital, but of the compulsory medical examination there Mrs. Andrew said she dared not speak. It was too revolting. Oh, human degradation! Oh, womanhood that can be so crushed down under the heel of shame! The signatures of the surgeon and the cantonment magistrate, calling the women to the "voluntary" examination, were also displayed, albeit every testimony from the women themselves, and all the horrible paraphernalia, showed that the examinations were not "voluntary," but compulsory. Here, too, was a child of twelve years, dressed as and practising with the harlot of older years.

(c) From Umballa they proceeded to Peshawar, "the Gateway of India," where the chaklas were all congregated in one street, and solely formed that street. Every door bore two numbers: the tin plates, six inches square, indicated the ordinary cantonment number, and the tin plates of fifteen inches diameter showed the registered number of the women.

In response to numerous questions of "What can we do for you?" these poor women never once asked for money, although Mrs. Andrew knew in some cases that they were in debt and wanted bread; they always condemned the regulation system, and asked to be placed in homes of rescue.

Dr. KATE BUSHNELL, the other lady commissioner, also spoke, but much more briefly. Herself and her friend were called "fanatics," "sentimental," "unscientific," but they were not afraid for anyone to follow in their track and investigate the statements they had made. In America it was the custom to conclude that a woman who would break the Seventh Commandment would lie. Why, then, should men who broke that commandment be believed? If the keeper of a brothel declared he did not know what went on in his house, he would be written down as false. Why, then, should the keepers of the Government and military brothels of India be believed, when they coolly declared that they did not know of the existence of these houses, and did not believe in their existence? For her own part she had been trained to believe that a woman who would sell her virtue would lie; but a man or government who would trade on women's virtue had no virtue to lose, and would not hesitate to lie.

Other speakers at the meeting were Mrs. Josephine Butler, Mrs. Henry J. Wilson, Prof. Stuart, M.P., Mr. D. Naoroji, M.P., Mr. W. T. Stead, Lady Henry Somerset, and Miss Frances Willard. A strong resolution against the Indian official chakla system was approved, and ordered to be sent to the Secretaries of State and the Premier.

THE NEW ZEALAND W.C.T.U. CONVENTION, which met at Napier in March, showed indications of considerable encouragement.

"KESWICK" IN CANADA.

MONTREAL has been enjoying a very unusual privilege in the visit of the delegation from Keswick, consisting of Revs. Hubert Brooke, Charles Inwood, and G. H. Macgregor. As a nearly constant attendant at their meetings I would gladly state a few impressions while the thoughts are still fresh in mind. It was novel and refreshing to see representatives of the three British nationalities, and also of the three largest divisions of our Protestant population, the Episcopal, the Methodist, and the Presbyterian, side by side on one platform, and with nothing in appearance, language, or teaching by which an onlooker could distinguish the one from the other.

There was an emphatic condemnation of the extravagance of perfectionism. Nothing new was taught, but there was a plain and happy emphasising of certain central truths, which are too often overlooked in practical Christian experience. The meetings were eagerly attended each evening, the large church being crowded to overflowing. At the after-meetings the pledges of personal consecration were responded to by large numbers. At the close of the four days' convention, April 16-20, a feeling of sadness supervened that the end must come, and a sympathy with Peter when he said, "Master, it is good for us to be here; let us make three tabernacles."

The mind of the writer reverted to a similar convention, which it was his privilege to attend in South Africa eighteen years ago. The one I refer to was a varied gathering of missionaries of the Rhenish, Paris, and London Missionary Societies, ministers and theological students of the D. R. and of other Protestant churches, and a few others. The object in view was the same as that of the late convention in Montreal, but it differed in so far as free discussion was allowed and invited. On the second day of the meeting, the chairman, Rev. Andrew Murray, of Wellington, requested one or other present to draw up a short statement of the general mind in regard to the matters under discussion. A paper was accordingly handed in by Rev. Mr. Kolbe, Missionary of the London Society. I do not think it has ever been printed, but a copy has lain in my desk ever since. With your leave I insert it, as it goes to show how wide over the world is the hunger after spiritual growth; also as I think it would indicate very correctly what was the mind of those who enjoyed those meetings at Montreal, had anyone taken the trouble to formulate it:—

Points agreed upon at Conference at Wellington, Cape Colony, May 26 and 27, 1875, handed in by Rev. Mr. Kolbe, of Paarl, L.M.S.

1. It cannot be denied that most believing professors of the Gospel, however correct as to the doctrine of justification by faith, are extremely defective with regard to sanctification.
2. Such an unhealthy condition brings no honour to God, no joy to the heart, and no blessing to the world.
3. The word of God promises us more than most Christians possess; it speaks of being "filled with the Holy Ghost," and of an uninterrupted fellowship with the Lord Jesus Christ—a blessed state, which is doubtless attainable by every believer.
4. This full spiritual life is not a state of absolute perfection, in which a believer shall no more need to pray "Forgive us our Trespasses," but through the continuous indwelling of Christ, and the Holy Spirit, the believer obtains always a victory over sin, so that the flesh is kept under by the spirit, and sin is slain when and whenever it appears.
5. This treasure of sanctification by faith God will give to all who sincerely pray to Him for the fulness of the Spirit, are obedient to his word, and offer themselves for service at the foot of the Cross.
6. Just as little as justification by faith was a new doctrine in the sixteenth century is sanctification by faith a new doctrine in our day. But the Spirit of God is stirring up the Church to place it as a light on the candlestick, to treat it with new earnestness, and to experience the inexpressibly great blessing that flows from it.

I believe, Mr. Editor, I voice the mind of many in expressing the hope that what we have been enjoying may be the precursor of many similar conferences throughout our thirsty Dominion of Canada.

SOLDIERS IN INDIA.—A correspondent writes to us in the interest of British soldiers in India:—"How is it that a 'paternal Government' which, in defiance of public opinion even, makes provision for their 'fleshly lusts which war against the soul,' takes no care to provide even the most important stations with a decent water supply?" There is real point in the question, seeing that, while the native town of Agra has long been provided with a pure water supply, the cantonments, where the British soldiers are concentrated, are only supplied from wells, the water of which has first washed the surface of the land. Hence there have recently been deaths from enteric fever, and other soldiers have fallen ill from the same deplorable cause."

MISSION TO DEEP-SEA FISHERMEN.

Two meetings, enthusiastic and interesting, were held in Exeter Hall on Thursday in connection with the anniversary of this Mission, quite a number of trawlers from Hull, Grimsby, Yarmouth, and Lowestoft being present to aid in the singing and to bear testimony to the value of the work.

It appeared that the Mission has now eleven hospital and mission vessels engaged in active work all the year round on the high seas in the fishing fleets. The chief object of the Society is to carry the message of God's love, mercy, and salvation in our Lord Jesus Christ to the fishermen. During the past year upwards of 1200 services were held on board the Mission vessels by thirty-six Christian workers who visited the fleets for the purpose. Besides, three fully-qualified surgeons were constantly afloat on the three hospital vessels, and 8472 in and out-patients were surgically or medically treated, many of them being cases of severe fractures. The operations have extended from the North Sea to the West Coast, the Irish Coast, Newfoundland, and Labrador. On Monday the hospital ship Albert, with Dr. Grenfell and two other medical missionaries on board, sailed for another season's service among the cod fishers on the Labrador Coast.

General Sir R. PHAYRE, who presided at the afternoon meeting on Thursday, spoke of his interest in the M.D.S.F., which he regarded as one of the most remarkable and most interesting evangelistic enterprises of the day. He was thankful that the copers, or floating grogshops, are being banished by the power of the Gospel, and he thought the Mission-ship might fairly be termed "anti-copers."

Prebendary WEBB-PEPLOE eloquently urged the claims of the Mission in carrying the Gospel message to the twenty thousand men and boys engaged in the trawling fleets of the North Sea. Nor must the value of the medical and surgical work be overlooked. Without such aid as this Mission renders the condition of the sick and injured far away at sea is deplorable; and in lending skilful aid at such times a hearing is gained for the message of mercy. The speaker also made a strong plea for the woollen mufflers and cuffs worked by the ladies, and so comforting to the trawlers. At present, however, the great need was for larger funds in support of the Mission.

Rev. R. A. REDFORD spoke of the splendid results already achieved in the conversion of many smacksmen, and the alleviation of much misery. He urged the necessity for keeping the Mission's work well to the front in the public mind.

Mr. T. B. MILLER, chairmen of the M.D.S.F. council, frankly admitted that the financial need of the Mission is at present very great, but he held that God's hand was manifestly in the whole work, and that being so He would incline the hearts of his people to supply every need, even though, for a time, He was pleased to permit faith to be tried.

A number of smacksmen, representing various ports and fleets, bore simple yet strong testimony to the blessing the Mission has proved to the trawlers.

In the evening the large hall was again crowded, and much interest was aroused by the exhibition of dissolving views illustrating life and work in the North Sea trawling fleets and on the Labrador coast. Mr. T. B. MILLER presided, and briefly introduced the various speakers.

Col. WROUGHTON described, with the aid of the aforesaid views, the work of the Mission in the North Sea, while Dr. W. T. GRENFELL similarly illustrated and explained the condition of things in Newfoundland and along the coast of Labrador, to which, as we have said, he was on the eve of returning.

Quite a number of North Sea skippers followed with testimonies to the good the Mission is doing. One, "Fenian Jack," awakened special interest, having formerly been the vilest of characters, while now he is doing service for Christ, inasmuch as many, knowing what he was, and seeing what he is, have said, "If that's what religion can do for Fenian Jack, then here goes for it. If it could save him, can save me."

DR. PIERSON, when asked a few days ago if he had become an abstainer, replied, "No, I have never been anything else"; and he conclusively showed that his position was scripturally sound, whilst regarding the practice of abstinence as eminently conducive to good health or "wholeness."

A JUBILEE ASSEMBLY.—2.

BY A SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.

The Jubilee Assembly of the Free Church of Scotland was closed on Tuesday by a powerful address from the Moderator, Dr. Walter Smith, of the High Church, Edinburgh, who has, throughout the protracted sittings of the court, discharged the duties of the chair with singular tact and ability. He has had "words in season" on his lips from the very beginning of the proceedings, and these addresses of his, if collected, would form a fitting memorial volume of the Jubilee Assembly. His prayer, also, at the opening of each sederunt, was characterised by great point and fervour, fittingly expressing the thoughts and feelings of his brethren on such a solemn and interesting occasion. So valuable have been the services he has rendered to the Church at this time that, as Dr. Rainy said, the meeting now ended will be lovingly remembered as the Assembly of Dr. Walter Smith.

The leader of the House, as usual, has been Principal Rainy, Professor of Church History in the New College, Edinburgh. He recently met with an accident, but this did not prevent him from taking the chief burden of the business upon himself. Every day he was in his place, and almost every hour of the day he was on his feet, directing and stimulating the Assembly by wise counsel or eloquent appeal. His leadership is loyally accepted by all parties in the House; it is the reverse of dictatorial—genial and brotherly. He has no private ends of his own to serve, but ever seeks the good of the Church.

Whilst warmly attached to its distinctive principles, he has catholic sympathies which enable him to do justice to other Churches and rejoice in the good work they are carrying on. This was finely manifested in the speech with which he closed the proceedings connected with the Jubilee celebrations; though he showed greater intellectual power in the masterly way in which he explained and defended the amount of freedom the Church claimed under the Declaratory Act recently passed, and in his exposition of the reasons which led him to favour Disestablishment as the best means for bringing about a reunion of the scattered forces of Scottish Presbyterianism.

He has still around him a few of the veterans who came out at the Disruption, though the most of those who came prominently before the Assembly as conveners of different committees are men younger than himself. The oldest member of the house was the venerated Principal Brown, of Aberdeen, who generally occupied the chair on the left of the Moderator. He interested himself in all the proceedings, and spoke more than once with point and power. He is now eighty-four years of age, and was in the heyday of his strength when the Disruption happened. On the chair to the right of the Moderator, Dr Blaikie, the ex-Moderator, usually sat, and he, too, is a pre-Disruption minister, who has great influence in the counsels of the Church, because of his varied experience and ripe Christian character. Dr. Thomas Smith, another ex-Moderator, was also there, as active and energetic as ever, though at the time of the Disruption he was a missionary in India. Side by side with these, however, were much younger men, who, like Dr. Rainy himself, were but probationers or students, or boys at school when the memorable exodus from the Established Church took place—such as Dr. J. Hood Wilson, of the Barclay Church, Edinburgh, whose labours in the home mission field have been so signally blessed; Professor Bruce, of Glasgow, whose recent contributions to theological literature have drawn such widespread attention; and Dr. Ross Taylor, of Kelvinside Church, Glasgow, who has now charge of the Sustentation Fund, which is the financial sheet-anchor of the Free Church.

Among the rank and file were to be found many ministers and elders who have given a good account of themselves in Christian work, and to some of these the jubilee services brought up bright memories. They could recall the early days of the Free Church, when Chalmers was in the zenith of his fame, and was ably assisted by the massive strength of Cunningham, the intellectual keenness and daring chivalry of Candlish, the calm wisdom of Buchanan, and the fervent platform and pulpit power of Guthrie. These were the days when the Church was in her first love, and they were crowded with self-sacrificing deeds which even now are an inspiration to many.

Fifty years have passed away, but the spirit of these men still lives in the younger ministers of the Free Church, who are strongly attached to Evangelical truth and delight in aggressive work. That was made abundantly evident in the conferences and discussions on religion and morals, and the home and foreign mission reports. It was a touching sight when one evening in a crowded house six gifted young men, who had run a brilliant academic career, stepped forward to be ordained as missionaries to the heathen; and they were but the representatives of many more who are waiting to be sent out as soon as funds are found for their support and spheres of labour chosen for them. The missionary spirit is strong in the three Divinity Halls of the Free Church, and no fund shows such marvellous progress as that raised for carrying the Gospel to the heathen. This is one of the healthiest and most hopeful features of the life of the new Church, to which all the missionaries in the foreign field clung, including the celebrated Dr. Duff, when the Disruption happened. The past fifty years have seen the pre-Disruption £8000 increase to upwards of £108,000 a year from all sources, and the thirteen missionaries in India multiplied into 975 Christian agents, working in India, South Arabia, Syria, Cape Colony, Natal, British Central Africa, and the New Hebrides.

This activity abroad has been equalled by the work done by the Church at home, for in fifty years she has more than doubled the number of her congregations, increased her contributions to the Sustentation Fund for the support of the ministry from £61,513 a year to £174,000; to the Home Missions and Highlands from £5246 to £17,306; and to education and colleges from £4942 to £42,739. It is thus that her income has advanced, in the five decades since 1843, from £3,046,810 to £3,327,485, to £4,243,098, to £5,989,540, and now to £6,735,876. In all £23,342,809 have been raised for Christian work since the Disruption.

It was not surprising, therefore, when the representatives of sister Churches stepped upon the platform of the Free Assembly, to offer their congratulations to the Church on completing fifty years of her history, that they should speak with some enthusiasm. They came from many lands—from Scotland, England, Ireland, France, Holland, Switzerland, Bohemia, Italy, Australia, New Zealand, Canada, and the United States; and they represented many Churches—Presbyterian, Baptist, Wesleyan, and Congregational; but they were all equally sincere and cordial in their greetings. Some of these deputies had been connected in their early days with the Free Church, and these spoke evidently under deep feeling, remembering all the way by which God had led them, and the great things He had done for the Church of their boyhood. Others of them had never been face to face with the Free Church before, but they, too, testified that their hearts had been gladdened by the triumphs she had won in work for the Master, and that the heroic sacrifices her founders had made had nerved them to fight the good fight of faith in the lands where they lived and laboured.

Some of these speeches produced a deep impression, and will be long spoken about at many a manse fireside in Scotland. There was, for instance, the noble address of the venerable Dr. Maclaren, of Manchester, in which that eminent servant of God counselled the hushed and crowded house to preach Christ simply and lovingly, and thus revealed the secret of his own marvellous pulpit power. He held his audience spellbound; as did also Dr. Dykes, of London, when he dwelt upon the responsibilities cheerfully undertaken by the Disruption fathers, and called upon the children of these noble men to throw themselves with all their heart into the work that lies to their hands. No speech moved the house more deeply than that given by Rev. J. Guinness Rogers, one of the representatives of the Congregational Union of England and Wales. His brother deputy, Principal Fairbairn, of Mansfield College, Oxford, also spoke well; but Mr. Rogers got a firm hold of the heart of the Assembly and awakened intense enthusiasm. He represented the Puritanism of England, and somehow he was able to understand, appreciate, and express the very spirit of the Disruption struggle as very few outsiders could. He was perfectly at home in that crowded house, and the applause with which his happy hits and stirring passages were greeted testified how warmly the Free Church reciprocated the kindly, generous feelings which had been expressed towards her throughout all these jubilee proceedings.

The Assembly is now over, but all who attended it have but one opinion regarding it, namely, that it will mark a new departure in the history of the Free Church, and will tell powerfully for good on the advancement of Christ's Kingdom in Scotland and throughout the world.

MISSIONS TO SEAMEN.

At the recent annual meeting, the Bishop of Bedford presided, and Commander Dawson gave an outline of the report, showing that the Society has fifty-six mission vessels and eighty-nine chaplains and readers who hold services with the crews day by day. There were at least 13,000 merchant ships, fishing vessels, and barges boarded last year, and some 2,300 religious services of various kinds were held on the water, in the roadsteads, etc. Foreigners speaking thirty-three languages participated in the ministrations of the chaplains, and in addition to missions afloat, use had been made of seventy-two seamen's churches, institutes, and mission-rooms in various parts of the world. No less than 76,000 seafaring men had bought Bibles or Prayer-books during the last thirteen years; 8000, besides members of their families, had signed the total abstinence pledge; and upwards of 17,000 outward-bound ships had small libraries placed on board.

The Chairman reviewed the work of the year, dwelt on the great importance and urgency of evangelising the sailors, and pressed the need for more liberal support.

Prebendary Turner narrated how a missionary in India was told of a man who was living a life of solitude and who cared to see no one. He visited this ascetic in the cave in which he had shut himself up, and having obtained admission he set before him the religion of Christ, and spoke to him very earnestly indeed. To all this, however, his auditor made no word of reply, though he went on piling argument upon argument. After a while the man, who had been listening with his head bent upon his breast, raised his face, on which could be seen the marks of emotion. He said, "I know your Christianity; I have landed three times in Ratcliff-highway, and have seen your Christians there. I have seen more sin there than in any large port I have ever visited in other parts of the world." There is noble work, however, being done by this Society in all our ports, and Mr. Turner was thankful that the wants of seamen in London were now to be taken into account.

Rev. W. Bryant Salmon moved, and Admiral Sir Vesey Hamilton seconded, the following resolution:—"That the endeavours of the Missions to Seamen Society to supply the ministrations of true religion to seamen, fishermen, and emigrants afloat and ashore in all considerable seaports, at home and abroad, are deserving of increased support, with a view to sustaining and extending its operations."

On Whit-Monday the Bishop of Durham dedicated a new steam mission vessel at Shields, for the service of the Missions to Seamen amongst the shipping on the Tyne.

REST FOR CHRISTIAN WORKERS.—A friend writes to us to say that he is prepared to bear half the expense of a short holiday at a well-known health resort in North Wales for bonâ-fide Christian workers of limited means. The reduced inclusive terms are 25s. per week; the offer applies from now to the middle of July and after September 10. Letters, which should contain a recommendation from some minister of the Gospel, may be sent to our care.

"A HOME BY THE SEA."—With this title the Sunday School Union has issued a booklet, giving an account of the Home of Rest for Female Sunday-school teachers, now open at Hastings, and in which since May, 1890, more than 1000 such workers have found rest and change. To maintain this institution, which has proved to be so necessary and so beneficent, the interest of the Christian public, and especially the Sunday-school world, is earnestly sought.

SYSTEMATIC BIBLE-TEACHING MISSION.—The annual meeting of this society was held in Exeter Town Hall on Friday week. The hon. secretary, Mr. Stoneman, read a brief report, speaking of steady, encouraging progress during the year. Mr. Seagram, the chairman, dwelt on the value of religious instruction at an early age. Bishop Renny, D.D., described the work as non-sectarian and non-political. Revs. J. Matthews, W. Frith, and J. Cornwall, testified to the value they set on the system.

"THE WORD OF PROMISE."

UNDER this appropriate title, Mrs. Robertson, of Hampstead, sends forth another of her deeply interesting annual statements of the work of the Association for the Free Distribution of the Scriptures. Through good report and evil report she continues to throw all her energies, backed up by a quenchless and beautiful enthusiasm, into her life mission of scattering abroad by competent hands among all nations and peoples and tongues, "the words of this life." It is a marvel that anyone should be found to object to such blessed work; but the manifest blessing of God has rested and continues to rest so richly on the free-giving of copies of the Scriptures that Mrs. Robertson is encouraged to go on as far and as fast as her strength and the means at her disposal will allow. Time and labour and the expenses of superintendence are gladly and freely provided, so that every farthing contributed by sympathising friends is spent in the direct purchase of Scriptures, or portions, to be given to those who prize them and profit by them.

The motto chosen for the year's report, is "My word ... shall not return unto Me void," and the truth of that "word of promise" is abundantly verified in the extracts printed from a selection of the letters which Mrs. Robertson is continually receiving. The area from which these testimonies come embraces all parts of the European Continent, North and South Africa, Syria, Persia, India, and China. Here, for instance, is a note of sounding praise from Hungary:—

"The light which comes through the Bibles given by means of the Association becomes brighter day by day. Many have confessed Christ and become believers. Thirty to forty are coming twice a week to my house, and we are together searching the Scriptures. Some villagers also are regularly reading the Word of God and have become Christians. But the most remarkable instance of the good done by one Bible is that of a boy of seventeen, who studied his Bible at home and with me. He confessed Christ as his Saviour, and now witnesses faithfully for Him in the works where he is employed."

Another weighty testimony comes from Mrs. Wall, of Rome:—

"I bless God daily for what your Association has enabled you to do in connection with his own precious Word. I have had a large number of the Gospels marked for the contadini, who, working in the Campagna, come into Rome on Sunday to early Mass. We have a service for these men, when they receive the Gospels and take them into the country. They have in very many instances returned, asking to have their names written down, desirous, as they say, to belong to our Society. They also want to have a New Testament that they may read it to their companions. This winter, we are very anxious to send a copy of the New Testament to all the doctors and lawyers in the Roman Provinces. We should require about 2000. I trust you will do what you can to help us. We are confident this is the only way of reaching them, as many live in the country where the Gospel has never been taken."

Signor Capellini, who works among Italian soldiers, also writes:—"I have returned to Rome, and have before me an immense number of new soldiers, who all wish for the Bible or New Testament, and I am entirely without any. I now turn to you for help. My work has been great; though I only gave one copy among twenty, still I have none left. The work is most successful, with the blessing of God."

An example of fruitfulness in dark, down-trodden Russia is specially welcome:—"A German New Testament, which I gave to a man in Baku two years ago, who at the time was under the influence of drink, has brought good fruit; it has been the means of converting him and making him a witness for the Lord. I hope to-day to speak at an assembly in his house, where I am told many souls have been brought to the knowledge of the truth through this 'brand plucked from the burning.'"

Everywhere the workers have the same glad story to tell; we will only cite one more instance, this time from a worker at Ongole, India:—

"A few months ago I had a very encouraging experience. Two Sudras, of patriarchal appearance, came to us a distance of over seventy miles, professing their faith in our Saviour, and requesting us to baptize them into his death. They had tried various forms of Hindu theology, but had failed to obtain peace for their souls until they read the New Testament, which had been given to them. They read, and read, and in the precious Bible found the balm for their wounded souls. They implicitly believed and desired to follow Jesus, I shall gladly unite with you in praying for the blessed work of the Association."

Surely every reader will follow the example of the grateful Indian missionary; and let all who can add their gifts to their prayers, that they may have a share in this simplest, most economical, and most effective of all forms of evangelisation. Mrs. Robertson, owing to indifferent health, will not hold any anniversary of her Association this year. We trust that her old friends, reinforced by many new ones, will come to her help; that the work of the Society may be sustained and even enlarged in view of the vast and almost illimitable need. Mrs. Robertson's address is Chesils, Christchurch-road, Hampstead, London, N.W.

POST CARDS.

WELCOME HOME.

Miss Child and her co-workers had a busy time in Ratcliff Highway on Whit Tuesday, when about 200 sailors sat down. Gospel addresses were given by various friends in different languages.

OPEN-AIR WORK.

A special open-air band of the Aberdeen Y.M.C.A. are conducting services in the surrounding districts on Wednesday evenings, and are warmly received by the people. The "Ramblers'" pedestrian tours on Saturday afternoons are much appreciated.

CHRISTIAN EXCAVATORS' UNION.

On Whit Monday the usual annual gathering of the members of this Union (southern division) was held at the Pall Mall Mission Room, Lisle-street, S.W. About fifty attended. The proceedings opened with a service at St. Martin's-in-the-Fields, addressed by Rev. T. Mocran. Several helpful addresses were given during the day. G. M. KINNAIRD, Hon. Sec.

BISHOP'S STORTFORD.

We have recently had a time of refreshing from the Lord. Mr. Sampson (Cornish Evangelist) preached in the Wesleyan Chapel on Sunday, May 14, and three subsequent evenings, except Monday, when he lectured on his mission to the West Indies. Believers have been blessed, the Holy Spirit has been manifestly present, and seventeen souls have professed conversion. A. R. T.

A LINK WITH THE PAST.

Perchance some of our Christian friends who have been interested in Mrs. Fry's work amongst the prisoners in Germany and the Continent generally, may intend visiting Southend during the summer. If so it would afford me pleasure to introduce them to Mrs. Fry's interpreter and companion in her continental tours. She is on the verge of ninety, and is able to relate the tours most vividly.

AN IMPROMPTU MEETING, held on Wanstead Flats on Whit Monday, by a number of converted Jewish working men, was the means of attracting much attention. A large audience gathered around them, evidently much surprised to see a body of Jews singing and preaching the Gospel of Christ. The Lord's presence was manifested, and many Gentile Christians were deeply moved through the testimony for Christ, given by believing Jews. Two Jews present expressed their faith in Christ, and their readiness to confess Him publicly by baptism. P. E. L.

CHRISTIAN TERMINOLOGY.

My orthodoxy is, I hope, in harmony with the written Word; yet, as a Christian minister, I fail to see the frequent use of the word "Substitution" as setting forth the finished work of our blessed Lord. Daily experience shows me that it is both misleading and mischievous. I know full well what it is intended to show or what is implied in the use of it, but if it was as well known how it is misapplied, it would lead to the more frequent use of the words "Ransom" or "Redemption," much preferable to the mere Schoolman's phraseology of "Substitution"

The free use of this Schoolman's phrase has led thousands of easy-going so-called Christians to nestle quietly at ease in this Schoolman's doctrine of "Substitution" as a finished work that calls for no personal endeavour to honour the Master as our "Ransom," our "Redeemer." The early Christians lived without the use of it; indeed, knew nothing of it till men appeared believing the Scriptures better expounded by the Schoolman than the written Word. In my judgment the word "Substitution" adds nothing to the weight of the Scriptural use of "Ransom" or "Redemption," which meets every need to set forth the finished work of Christ.

BRIGHTON Y.M.C.A.

The following is an extract from a letter received by the secretary of the Brighton Y.M.C.A. from a young man now resident in Chicago, U.S., and formerly one of our members:—"I often sit here and think of you in Brighton, wonder how all are going on, and cannot help wishing I was amongst you again. I recall those times with thankfulness, for to the Y.M.C.A. of Brighton and its noble and true workers can be ascribed the happy turning point of my life. I am still working in the church here where I have found a good many friends; this is the only real pleasure, to work and strive for God, and the spread of his Kingdom. For sincerity in this work, without any attempt at flattery, I have found none yet to equal Steine House workers, thanks be to God for such a noble band." Comment upon such testimony is superfluous. SCRIPTURE DISTRIBUTION.

We are just returning to Wilna—four of us—from a New Testament distribution tour to three Jewish towns—Desna, Drissa, and Krislavka. The population of these towns respectively is 8000, 3000, 5000 odd, Jewish proportion in each, 6000, 2000, 3000. About 1000 Testaments in Russian and Hebrew were distributed in each town, including a number left for use of Jews in schools and prisons. The Jewish missionary of the National Orthodox Church being with us, we had every assistance in each place from local authorities, and much opportunity of preaching. The poverty of the population, especially of the Jews, is almost as pitiable as the terrible darkness of Talmudism, which rules and enslaves Jewish minds. Only in one place (this town) did I see Testaments torn, and then but five at most. Pray for the work and the workers.

BERLIN.

I send you some encouraging tidings about the progress of the Lord's work in our midst. The hall at Moabit, 58, Bremer-st., N.W., in the midst of a dense population, is like a beehive, full of active workers. Our meetings for prayer and Bible study are well attended, and the preaching of the Gospel is blessed to the conversion of sinners. Our commodious hall at 28, Krumme-st., Charlottenburg, is also a centre of widely-extending Gospel testimony. On Whit-Monday it was well filled with believers from Moabit, Berlin, Potsdam. Seven of our brethren, plain working-men, gave suitable addresses. On May 11 some fifty of our friends accompanied me to Potsdam, to have an open-air meeting in one of the woods and a Gospel service in the hall. The work is full of promise. The Lord is with us. Pray for us. If you can visit us, you are welcome.

NORTH AFRICA.

A Medical Mission has at last been started in Tunis. From four patients on the first day our numbers have risen to over thirty, and already the house taken on trial for six months is proving too small for us. The people begin to arrive as early as 5.15 a.m., though they know that the preliminary service commences at eight. To save the women's tears they have to be admitted! Dr. Leach has also many patients to visit, who are physically unable to come to him.

Mr. Mitchell, who usually gives the Arabic address, is now suffering from a severe attack of influenza. We who are trying to take his place feel the responsibility of speaking to so many argumentative, intellectual men, trained from their babyhood to dispute in favour of the Koran and all its fictions. Yet the attention and even pleasure with which some listen for the first time in their lives to the Gospel, much encourages us.

ALICE M. CASE (N.A. Mission).

4, Impasse Sidi el Bellagh, Halfouine, Tunis.

In spite of trial through lack of funds I have been much encouraged by the country work since Ramadan. Many encampments, markets, and villages have been visited, the Gospel proclaimed, the people listening with evident interest. Most of my mornings are taken up with Arab visitors, who come in groups of twos and threes; as many as ten coming in one morning. How we wish they were all earnest inquirers. A Bible has been asked for and placed in one large centre, several New Testaments and Gospels have been distributed. We have never had so many Arabs and children come to the house, or been so encouraged in the work. Pray for us.

A STORY OF TWENTY YEARS.

Twenty years will have passed away in June, since a work of God began in a remote part of the Isle of Wight, known as Blackgang; bold cliffs overlook the sea, and grassy slopes with undulating land, covered in springtime and summer with lovely wild flowers, add to the charms of this beautiful and health-giving spot. It was here, through a train of singular providences that, in June, 1873, the late Mr. C. W. Reade, of the Indian Civil Service, on his return from India, was led to reside, with his wife and her sister, Miss Hamilton, and his daughters.

The members of this family from the first week of their arrival in the island were privileged to begin and carry on for many years a truly blessed Christian work. Through their instrumentality it pleased the Lord to bring hundreds to Himself, who by grace were brought to see their need of salvation, and to accept Christ as their personal Saviour. Those thus converted were for the greater part not living in Blackgang, but—as their employment as farm labourers necessitated — in the outlying villages around, Chale, Niton, and some more distant parts of the island, where they were visited from time to time, and earnest solicitude was taken in their growth in grace. The remainder to the number of a hundred and more who lived near at hand, joined themselves to the little church, meeting for worship in the Mission Hall at Blackgang, which had been expressly built for Mr. Reade for that purpose in December, 1873.

A regular work was then organised and carried on most successfully, and with marked encouragement, by the several members of this family. A Sunday-school was opened at that time and weekday services held, in addition to the usual meetings on Sundays. Weekly Bible-classes for men and women were begun, and a band of hope and temperance work started, with Gospel services and other occasional religious meetings as necessity required.

In April, 1884, this truly blessed work received its first most sad and grievous loss in the death of Mr. Reade, who not only had the oversight of the mission, and laboured devotedly in its highest spiritual interests, but for ten years personally bore almost the entire expense of the mission. After Mr. Reade's call home, his widow continued to reside in Blackgang for several years, and in conjunction with her sister, Miss Hamilton, and Miss Edith Reade, carried on the work with much manifest blessing, whilst friends most kindly aided Mrs. Reade in meeting its pecuniary expenses. Revival services held yearly in the outlying villages of the neighbourhood were marked on each occasion with precious tokens of the Lord's presence and the power of his Holy Spirit by the conversion of many to Christ; also the Lord's people meeting for the regular services and Bible-classes held in the mission hall at Blackgang were established in the faith.

In February, 1890—immediately following a successful three weeks' mission in a village not far from Blackgang—Miss Hamilton, after only a few days' illness from influenza, was taken to be with her gracious Lord, whom she had, in her life and work for Him, both in the mission and otherwise, so devotedly and faithfully served unto death. Miss Hamilton's call home was felt by all to be a very deep affliction, and most sore trial to the mission; yet its sorrowing members, trusting in Him who hath said, "I will never leave thee nor forsake thee," sought in their grief to say, "Thy will be done!"

In June of the same year Miss Edith Reade was married to Mr. C. W. Smith, whose name is familiar to many as a member of the first committee and the originator of the title of the "Young Men's Christian Association," and as the author of several useful booklets. In November, 1890, Mrs. Reade withdrew from the work, believing that it would now serve the interests of the mission better if it were left in the sole charge of Mr. and Mrs. Smith, who consequently undertook the responsibility, and carried on the work with continued blessing up to the date of Mr. Smith's sudden call home in December, 1892; his removal was another sad shock to the little mission.

Mrs. Smith continues to carry on the work, and will be glad still to do so if suitable workers will help her, or friends send the means for the support of such as need remuneration. If this much-needed aid is not provided, Mrs. Smith would be very glad to hear of its being laid on the heart of some of the Lord's servants to take up the whole work and carry it on for the Lord as heretofore. It is quite unsectarian, and has been the happy meeting-ground of many of the Lord's faithful and well-known servants of many other Christian communities. Live with Christ and walk with Him are the only requisites to insure a welcome from the earnest members of this little church.

It was at first thought, on the removal of Mr. Smith, that this mission might be affiliated with one of the neighbouring branches of the Lord's work in that vicinity; but on further consideration this plan was judged impracticable, owing to the distance of the mission-hall from other places of the kind, and also from the fact that a rental of £30 has yearly to be met, and there being no fund connected with the mission to aid in defraying its current expenses.

If any of the Lord's servants feel led to offer their help for the carrying on of this work in the future, or if they would wish to take up this mission entirely and work it themselves, Mrs. C. W. Smith, of St. Catherine's Villa, Blackgang, Isle of Wight, will be happy to correspond with them on the subject, and will send them any further particulars of the mission they may require.

NEW TESTAMENT MINISTRY.

A correspondent, "A. M. R." (Oban), writes to us:—Having read with great interest the correspondence on "Sacerdotalism," carried on for some time in The Christian, I beg of you, in order to consolidate what of the truth has been brought forward on this subject, that you would allow one of your correspondents to favour us by stating:

1. How often the Greek word rendered "Deacon" in the A.V. occurs, and where.

2. The same regarding the Greek word rendered "Bishop" in the A.V., and where.

3. The same regarding the Greek work rendered "Elder," and where.

4. I might ask for the same regarding "Minister," which carries as much authority in Scotland as "Bishop" does on the south of the Tweed.

As nothing interprets the Scriptures so well as the Scriptures, a careful study of those passages might do much more to help an inquiring mind than a continuation of the correspondence, interesting as it is in showing what a place we give—perhaps unwittingly—to the opinions of men and how little we go by, "Thus it is written."

The following is a reply to our correspondent's questions:—

1. The Greek word Diakonos is, in the A.V., rendered: "Minister" in Matt. xx. 26; Mark x. 43; Rom. xiii. 4 (twice), xv. 8; 1 Cor. iii. 5; 2 Cor. iii. 6, vi. 4, xi. 15 (twice), 23; Gal. ii. 17; Eph. iii. 7, vi. 21; Col. i. 7, 23, 25, iv. 7; 1 Thess. iii. 2; 1 Tim. iv. 6. "Servant" in Matt. xxii. 13, xxiii. 11; Mark ix. 35; John ii. 5, 9, xii. 26; Rom. xvi. 1. "Deacon," Phil. i. 1; 1 Tim. iii. 8, 12. The verb Diakoneō is rendered with frequency "minister," "minister unto," "serve," and in one passage (1 Tim. iii. 10, 13), "use the office of a deacon." The noun descriptive of function, diakonia, is rendered "ministry," "ministration," "service," etc.

2. The word Episkopos is rendered "overseer," Acts xx. 28; "bishop," Phil. i. 1; 1 Tim. iii. 2; Tit. i. 7; 1 Pet. ii. 25. The verb Episkopeō is translated "take the oversight," 1 Pet. v. 2, and "look diligently," Heb. xii. 15. The descriptive substantive Episkopē is rendered "visitation," Luke xix. 44; 1 Pet. ii. 12; "office of a bishop," 1 Tim. iii. 1; "bishopric," Acts i. 20.

3. The word Presbuteros is rendered:—"elder" (adj.) Luke xv. 25; 1 Peter v. 5; "eldest," John viii. 9; "old man," Acts ii. 17; elder woman," 1 Tim. v. 2; "elder" (subst.) Matt. xv. 2, xvi. 21, xxi. 23, xxvi, 3, 47, 57, 59, xxvii 1, 3, 12, 20, 41, xxviii. 12; Mark vii. 3, 5, viii. 31, xi. 27, xiv. 43, 53, xv. 1; Luke vii. 3, ix. 22, xx. 1, xxii. 52; Acts iv. 5, 8, 23, vi. 12, xi. 30, xiv. 23, xv. 2, 4, 6, 22, 23, xvi. 4, xx. 17, xxi. 18, xxiii. 14, xxiv. 1, xxv. 15; 1 Tim. v. 1, 17, 19; Tit. i. 5; Heb. xi. 2; Jas. v. 14; 1 Peter v. 1; 2 John 1; 3 John 1; Rev. iv. 4, 10, v. 5, 6, 8, 11, 14; vii. 11, 13, xi. 16, xiv. 3, xix. 4.

4. Other nouns rendered "minister" in the A.V. are:—Leitourgos (a public servant) Rom. xiii. 6, xv. 16; Heb. 1, 7. viii. 2; and Hupēretēs (an underrower, an attendant) Luke i. 2, iv. 20; Acts xiii. 5, xxvi. 16; 1 Cor. iv. 1 (elsewhere "servant," as in Matt. xxvi 58, and "officer" as in Matt. v. 25).

BRITISH HOME FOR INCURABLES.—Mr. C. E. Tritton, M.P., presided last week at a festival dinner held in aid of the funds of this charity. He said the institution was started thirty-two years ago, and admittance to the home was only granted to those who were willing to consider themselves rightly designated by that word "incurable." It desired to provide a home for life to incurables, and to provide a pension for life to the extent of £20 per annum for the out-pensioners in connection with the Home. Only those who had been to the Home could have any idea of the homeliness to be found there. The lease of the premises at Clapham had now run out, and they had taken fresh premises at Norwood. The secretary announced subscriptions and donations amounting to £4900, including £1500 for a chapel for the new institution at Norwood from Miss Leicester and £500 from Mr. Pinder Simpson. The new annual subscriptions amounted to £236.

THE CHILDREN'S HOME, TANGIER.

It is now six months since I returned to Tangier, and a beginning has been made amongst Moorish children. Soon after Christmas a suitable house was found and taken for a year. It is in just the right situation, being near the Kasba (Moorish quarter). It consists of seven rooms, the children using those on the ground floor. The necessary alterations being completed, we moved in on March 1, and at once the children began to come. Two or three little ones, who had been coming to me at Hope House, found their way here the next morning; these quickly told others, and so the work has grown. During the first three weeks the attendance averaged five or six daily; during the last few weeks the numbers have been much higher, eleven or twelve each morning, and often sixteen or seventeen. The boys vary in age from three to thirteen; several little girls also commenced to come, but I find I cannot admit them now, as so many boys are coming. The children learn reading, writing, and counting; they also have a daily Bible lesson, singing, and prayer. The rent is £40 per annum, for which I am responsible, and the expenses for moving and alterations were heavy. I feel very thankful to the friends at home who have interested themselves in this effort to reach the children, and have enabled the work to be started. Further help may soon be needed for the teaching, as much of my time is taking up in visiting the homes of the children, attending them when sick, and helping with food and clothing the most needy ones. We feel that to be a success the school must be made really efficient. Besides the school we have a large number of visitors, Moors, Jews, and Spaniards, who listen to the truth. Miss Jennings is now with me, but may be needed, before long, for work elsewhere. One or two friends in England are anxious to come out and help in the work, but at present there are difficulties as to their support. I would ask earnest prayers for this attempt to gather the children into a Christian school.

Wee Hamed, the little boy in whom many are interested, has now grown into a bonnie boy over four years old, and has come to me regularly since I returned to Tangier in the autumn; whether here or at Hope House he scarcely ever misses a day except when ill. After the first week or two he brought with him a little friend, and has since brought another; they all three come from the Marsham village, some distance from here, yet they hardly ever fail to appear, in sun or shower, Sunday or week day, early in the morning. Hamed, always first, bounds into the house, his face all over smiles, and slowly following him comes Hamedo, his fat four-year-old friend. Hamed is making rapid progress in reading and writing, and is the first to answer questions at the Bible lesson; best of all, he is trying to do right, and lately if he has said what was not true he has come to me afterwards and said, "Oh, Sabeeba, it was a lie, and I do not want to lie." Another day he nestled up to me and whispered, "Sabeeba, I am going to belong to God." Will you pray it may indeed be so, and that he and many another Moorish child may early give their hearts to Jesus, and also that many friends may be raised up to help these long-neglected little ones of Morocco?

SAUVETERRE BASSES PYRENEES.

In 1878 a Protestant schoolhouse was established in connection with the church in this parish, for the children scattered among a Roman Catholic population. It has been the means of doing much good to those children, and even to some who, though members of the Church of Rome, have yet attended. But since the French Government have ceased to support religious schools, Romish and Protestant, the school has been discontinued, and the house has been transformed into a parsonage. Not only has the pastor a convenient residence close to the church, but also room for a parochial library and a school in which on Thursdays, as well as on Sundays, he gives religious instruction to the young. The sum of £140 is necessary to cover all the expenses incurred in providing this accommodation. Communications may be addressed to M. J. E. Cerisier, formerly pastor at Sauveterre, now at work in the McAll Mission, Paris, 44, Rue des Perchamps.

PARIS.—The Bérenger Society for the Suppression of Vice, acting upon the pledge given by the Minister of the Interior in the Senate, now serve notices upon all booksellers or holders of street kiosques who exhibit obscene prints. Some of these who trade near the lycées and public schools will be prosecuted. It is stated that similar steps will be taken to put a stop to the outrageous and increasing licence of Parisian dancing resorts, and to enforce the censorship over the songs in the repertory of certain cafés chantants.

MR. HORTON ON PREACHING.*

[SECOND NOTICE.]

IN a short and modest preface to his recently published Yale Lectures on Preaching, Mr. Horton says: "The general contempt into which preaching has fallen on this side of the Atlantic, where the Established Church promises before long to thrust the sermon into a corner, or even outside the precincts of its sacerdotal shrines, and where the other churches are strongly tempted to secularise the pulpit, is, it seems to me, due to the decay of that conception of preaching which is presented in these lectures." On the question whether this great contempt exists or is growing, we do not care to hazard an opinion; but that the pulpit is seriously threatened by sacerdotalism and secularism is only too apparent. Any honest endeavour, therefore, to recover for the sermon any power it has lost, or is losing, merits a fair and frank consideration. And we hasten to admit that in this book there is a warmth and heartiness in commending the maintenance of a personal loving communion with God as the prime element in all true preaching, which only and altogether commands our unfeigned consent and approval. Had the author confined himself to the enforcement of this, as essential to qualify the preacher to be a living and loving exponent of the sacred volume, we would not utter a single word of dissent.

There is, however, on the part of the lecturer, a manifest desire to claim for the best and highest preaching as real an inspiration as that of Isaiah or Paul! This gives us no surprise, for it has already been persistently urged from many quarters. Nor does it appear to be advanced for the purpose of "levelling up" the utterances of the modern pulpit so much as for the purpose of "levelling down" the inspiration of Sacred Scripture. To make this clear we give three illustrations which are introduced by Mr. Horton "to throw discredit on the faithless supposition that the days of the Word of the Lord are in the past, and on that incredible article of faith which is implied in much of our modern religion, that God, who was so near to prophets and patriarchs in Canaan that they could hear Him speak and receive directions from his lips, is, after all these ages of growing light, and after the consummation of his spiritual revelation, less near, less tangible, less audible, less real to us."

The first illustration is from the personal experience of Stephen Grellet. He tells us that, walking in the fields one day without any special religious concern, he was suddenly arrested by an awful voice proclaiming the words, "Eternity! Eternity! Eternity!" This incident, we are assured, became the turning point of his life. "The purpose for which I cite this illustration," says Mr. Horton, "is simply to show that the Word of the Lord comes to men to-day just as it came to the prophets of Israel."

The second is from the autobiography of Charles Finney. He had been asked to preach in a neighbourhood where there had never been any religious meetings. Under great depression he had consented, and being suddenly enlarged in prayer, he says, "As I rose from my knees the Lord gave me this: 'Up, get you out of this place, for the Lord will destroy this city.'" He adds, "I was struck with the fact that the people looked exceedingly angry about me." He learned afterwards that the place had been called Sodom on account of its wickedness, and that the man who had invited him was nicknamed Lot because he was the only professor of religion there. As his sermon proceeded he tells us there fell a great solemnity on the audience, and "the word seemed literally to cut like a sword."

The third instance is a page from missionary life among the Canadian Indians. The preacher had failed to touch the apathy of his hearers. Shrouded in their blankets they listened unmoved. Throwing himself on the help of God, springing up he shouted, "I know where all your children are, all your dead children! Yes, I know most certainly where all the children are whom death has taken, the children of the good and the bad, I know where they all are." At once we are told the Indians became interested, and when he added there was only one way to the happy resting-place, speedily one after another broke down with grief, and became anxious for instruction.

Now, be it far from us to insinuate that God may not guide us in a moment of perplexity when we humbly seek his aid; but to compare this with the inspiration claimed for the Bible, cannot even deceive a child in our Sunday schools. Whatever weight these suggestions may have had for their recipients, they are in no sense authoritative for others. Inspiration alone makes the Bible a rule of faith. In the last case the preacher had no divine warrant for his assertion, yet Mr. Horton is bold enough to write, "Was not that exclamation 'I know where all your dead children are,' a veritable word of God? Did ever any saint in Old Testament times receive a more direct or manifest message to deliver?" No well-instructed Christian is likely to be misled by the fallacy which permeates this book. Yet there is an evangelistic earnestness pervading it from beginning to end that cannot fail to stir and strengthen every preacher of the Word. In a well-known story Mr. Dick spoils every memorial he writes by allusions to the head of King Charles the First. If Mr. Horton would only leave the vexed question of inspiration alone for the present, he might do good work in stimulating the energies of both preachers and hearers.

THE PAPACY AND POLITICS.

A VALUABLE contribution to British history has been made by the publication of Rev. James Paton's work on Romanism.* It is a survey of events extending over a period of 800 years; and the author's anticipation, in the preface, that the work will take an authoritative place in its special branch of literature, will, we feel satisfied, assuredly be realised. In these two volumes we have no new or fanciful interpretation of events, no attractive historical romancing, but a careful and comprehensive digest of facts, as gathered from the Journals of Parliament and Imperial Statutes. It is a work to study now, and will be useful to all future writers and speakers on the subject of which it treats.

The first part exhibits King and Pope in conflict for supremacy, and after a series of concessions to Popery we scan events of Queen Elizabeth's time. During that reign every concession ever made to Popery was cancelled and withdrawn, with the result that England came to stand in the van of the world as the antagonist of Papal claims. During the reaction under the Stuarts the contest assumed the form of King and Pope v. Parliament, and the battle for civil liberty was rightly understood to involve religious freedom. Concessions to an absolute monarch of the Stuart type could not but pave the way for similar concessions to a sovereign pontiff. These were as a fact granted, and, of course, abused; and the Puritan Commonwealth was succeeded by an increase of Popery. At length the concessions were cancelled, the Test Act being concocted, not so much to touch conscience on matters of religion, as to "disable" Papists as the "public enemies" of the nation.

As there was a Protestant Reformation in the sixteenth century, so there was a Protestant Revolution in the seventeenth. Reviewing this grand event, Mr. Paton cannot overlook subsequent retrograde occurrences. He calls upon his readers to "mark how almost every question of these latter days has already been fought out, in principle at least, through blood and tears, through prison and fine, through revolution and civil war, by those who have gone before us. There is no claim now made by Popery in Great Britain that has not been substantially made before; there is no concession to Popery, now demanded or suggested, that has not been already made and granted, from the humblest civil and religious toleration, up through every step of equality and supremacy, in Church and State, till we reach a Popish Sovereign seated upon the throne." These are facts that need to be taken to heart at the present time. But Mr. Paton proceeds to enunciate another fact which is emphatically of cardinal importance in the controversy. He says: "The irrefragable testimony of all our history has been that Popery, not as a religion merely, but as making certain political claims, is that every concession made to it in the past has been utilised for the interests of the Papacy and against the interests of the nation; and that such concession had in every case to be cancelled and withdrawn, in order to the protection and preservation of constitutional freedom and religious liberty."

The Revolution cry, "A Free Parliament and the Protestant Religion," soon became "antiquated," and the modern reaction set in. This part of the story begins at the end of the first volume, and extends throughout the second. The conflict assumed the form of Pope v. Parliament, and the agitations of the past two generations have been carried on in the name of Emancipation and achieved success to the praise of Equal Rights. With the changing circumstances, the Papal tactics have changed; but there has been no modification of motive or purpose on the part of Rome. "The dream of capturing the throne direct, in favour of Popery, perished with the other dreams of Prince Charlie on Culloden Moor. . . . They set themselves to capture one by one all the avenues that lead to political power and influence in the State; to climb back and up the ladder from toleration to equality, and from equality to supremacy." Not a few avenues have already been captured, but the cry is still that of the horse-leech's daughters—"Give, give." Though Acts of Parliament have followed one another to "satisfy" Romish claims, there is ever a "grievance."

These volumes are the result of immense labour; and we trust that one reward of the author will be a renewed and increased interest in the subject upon which his labours throw such a strong light. Writing under a deep sense of the urgency of the controversy, Mr. Paton says in the concluding section: "We must affirm our own invincible assurance that, in the next 'Struggle for Supremacy' in Britain, whether brought on by the measures now looming on the horizon, or by some altogether different and perchance unexpected emergency in national or international affairs, the destiny of this Empire will depend on whether the people and their leaders read aright, and wisely apply, the lessons of the past, through British history in relation to Papal claims, or, on the other hand, ignore and even despise all such guidance, and imperil at once our liberty and our religion—at once our Protestant Freedom and our Imperial Unity."

THE GREAT REFINER.

TAKE my heart, O Great Refiner,
Plunge it in the cleansing flame:
Heat the furnace seven times hotter—
I shall still adore Thy Name,
I shall hail its hungry roaring,
'Twill be music in mine ear,
If, amid its fiery anger,
Thy sweet, gentle voice I hear.

Yea, I love Thee, Great Refiner;
Yea, I love the burning light;
Dearer than the costliest jewel,
Sparkling, beautiful, and bright!
Is it true that I am worthy
Thus to be made pure from dross?
If I was not wholly cleansèd
Would'st Thou count it as a loss?

Oh, how wonderful Thy goodness,
Far beyond my highest thought!
I can only take, rejoicing,
What thy tender care has brought:
Purged and tried as gold or silver,
This is what I long to be;
Perfected, and wanting nothing—
Work thine own sweet will in me.

Grand assurance! Thou art watching
Most intently all the while;
Welcome is the fining process
Carried on beneath Thy smile;
Or, if Thou in love withholdest
Thy felt presence, it is well;
Faith shall triumph over feeling,
Peace shall still within me dwell.

Welcome, welcome every dealing,
Pain or pleasure, joy or woe;
All is sent, O Great Refiner,
By a loving hand, I know.
Daily cares which fret and grieve me,
Small and trifling, yet so keen,
Are on purpose to refine me,
Though by human eyes unseen.

Do not let me miss one trial
Which would make me purer still;
When thine image shineth through me
Cease the fining—not until!
When the silver gleams and glitters,
From all earthly dross set free,
With no stain to mar its beauty,
Satisfied Thou then shalt be!

ICH DIEN is the title of a chaste booklet in which Miss Agnes Weston tells the story of her great temperance work in the Royal Navy, with the special object of raising funds for its consolidation and further promotion. She says: My opportunities are wonderful, ships open, commanding officers willing, the Admiralty most kind in aiding me in every way. I have our great sailors' rests, built at the cost of £100,000, as agents in the work of rescue, and active helpers in our seamen and marines on board Her Majesty's ships; also a great work in the Queen's training service, 2000 lads voluntarily enrolling themselves last year. I want the sum of £2000 for our naval work, to place in the coffers of our great London headquarters, the National Temperance League, that we may go on for years to come. Copies of the book may be had from the Sailors' Rest, Devonport.

Letters to the Editor.

"THE NEW THEOLOGY."

Sir,—Your Editorial comments on quotations from the writings of John Angell James are justly entitled to the prayerful attention of every Christian minister of to-day into whose hands they may fall. Evangelicalism of a generation ago was indeed, to say the least, "far more clear and pronounced in its character than much which passes for Gospel now." Surely such a declension in the case of many calls for self-examination, coupled with humble supplication on the part of every Christian minister, the visible outcome of such spiritual discipline in the case of true believers would, under the divine blessing, show itself (a) in a more firm and abiding belief that the sacred Scriptures form the only unerring standard of faith and practice; and (b) in an ever-increasing determination to preach and teach that Word to the glory of his grace, as the only appointed means, under the Spirit's influence, to save the souls of men; (c) a further result would be that of active and cordial co-operation in spiritual work on the part of ministers belonging to every scriptural branch of the professing Church. No man is so truly free as the believer in Christ, for to him has been given the wisdom to render willing and undivided allegiance to the supreme authority of the living God, as set forth in his written Word.

May our Divine Master increase the number of ministers willing to work on the old lines, proclaiming everywhere a full and free salvation to fallen humanity, solely through the merits of the once crucified but now risen and glorified Saviour.—Faithfully yours, W. J. Williams.

IRREVERENCE IN CHOIRS.

Dear Sir,—Referring to your note respecting the irreverence of choirs, I have in former days been familiar with choirs in churches and in chapels, and know that there is a great deal of disregard for the sacredness of religious services among many who are supposed to lead the praises of the congregation. I have known members of choirs who have habitually left their places during the sermon to go into the nearest public-house for a drink.

I am acquainted with a choir leader who gave up his position as leader in a church because he was compelled to go into a public-house in order to keep on good terms with his choir, and was conscious of drifting into drinking habits in consequence.

I was personally acquainted with three men, all eminent in their vocation, one of them an organist, the others singers, who all died within a few years of each other from drink, having contracted the habit by association with their musical friends. The organist went from the country to a position as organist in London. He was a brilliant musician, and he became a pot-house pianist before he died, a drunkard. Another went to a position as a tenor singer in a cathedral, and he, too, sank low down and died a miserable drunkard.

The great mistake is that individuals are placed in our choirs who are unconverted, and whilst God is thus dishonoured by ministers and others, who make such appointments, the spiritual tone of our services is destroyed.

It is the custom of our church and chapel services to open with an organ voluntary; how much more profitable it would be to have the congregation gather in quiet silent waiting upon God for the Holy Spirit's presence.—Yours truly, G. Shaw.

"A QUESTION FOR CHRISTIANS."

Dear Sir,—Under this heading I find a letter in your publication of May 18. May I say a few words upon smoking? I was once a smoker, not only as a matter of indulgence, but also as one to whom it was supposed to be almost a necessity. As a Christian, I became doubtful as to its rectitude, and its consistency with my teaching and profession. Moreover, when I saw any of my young men, who worked in my garden, approaching, I felt a disposition to hide the cigar or the pipe. Thus I became convinced that, even if lawful, it was not expedient.

My work for Christ has been assigned by God, principally amongst young men. I have never had cause to do otherwise than to be thankful that I invariably advised them to abstain from smoking; and that I could present myself as an example to them. May I mention one case? A young man questioned me as to the right or wrong in the matter. I asked him this question: "Supposing you are walking in a London street at night, and that you are smoking, and that you are walking with another young man who is not smoking, which of you would a passer-by of bad character be most likely to address?" He answered at once "Myself most probably." "Then," I said, "you are wrong." To the best of my knowledge he never smoked afterwards.

A Christian under grace should be assured that what he does is right. Negative religion is legal. Grace says, "Whether it be right in the sight of God."—Yours in Christ, John Hawker.

THE LATE DR. BURNS THOMSON.

Dear Sir,—You have inadvertently given a title to my paper on the late Dr. Burns Thomson, which is liable to misconstruction, and for which I must not be held responsible. Dr. Burns Thomson was not the founder of the Edinburgh Medical Mission. The Edinburgh Medical Missionary Society was founded by Drs. Abercombie, Coldstream, and others in 1841, and Dr. Thomson did not become connected with it till 1859. I have sufficiently indicated in my paper the supreme importance of Dr. Thomson's life and work to the cause of medical missions throughout the world, but it is not correct to say that he was the founder of the Edinburgh Medical Mission.—Yours faithfully,

James L. Maxwell, M.D.

A ROUGH RACING RHYME.

The following lines, written by Mr. Thos. E. Varley, though intended for "Cup Day" in Melbourne, Australia, are full of application in every English-speaking community. The curse of gambling can scarcely be exaggerated. The Epsom carnival is going on this week, and the incentive which horse-racing is constantly yielding to the increase of gambling, make the rough rhyme, as the author calls it, admirable as a warning against gambling:—

You need not wake to call me early, to call me early, mother dear,
For to-morrow is the merriest time of the Victorian year;
Of the whole Australian year, mother, the maddest, merriest day,
And I shall be off to the Cup, mother, yes, I shall be off and away.
I know a clever "prophet," mother, who is my friend and guide,
And I've given him all I've got, mother, and a little more beside;
He knows who will be the winner, mother, and has put me in the way
To make a big thing on the Cup, mother, on the glorious Cup day.
Do you ask me what I mean, mother, by "a little more beside"?
It's a pound or two of the office cash that has gone a "little wide."
I can make a thousand per cent. of it, by a little harmless play,
And return it after the Cup, mother, after the grand Cup Day.
So you think this not quite square, mother; that's because you do not know.
There's not the least harm in it; my professional friend says so.
Business is far too slow, mother, I'm tired of that humdrum way;
I can make my "pile" by the Cup, mother, and I mean to be off and away.
Yes, I went to the Melbourne Cup, mother, the greatest event of the year,
From Governor down to news-boy, every one seemed to be there;
The course was all thronged with the crowd, mother; the flags in the breeze fluttered gay;
And the stand was a sea of faces to witness the famed Cup day.
There were Members of Parliament too, mother, Victoria's men of renown,
And doctors, and lawyers, and merchants, ranking high in the "Marvellous" town;
There were ladies exquisitely dressed, mother, and few more eager than they,
For they make a little book, too, mother, once a year for the Melbourne Cup Day.
Now about the result of the race, mother. To tell you it's hard to begin;
For the horse that my guide recommended, I'm sorry to say, didn't win;
And I find he has just left the city, I hear 'tis the bookmakers' way,
To seek for a little retirement after the Melbourne Cup Day.
And my fortune has left me stranded, like a boat at the ebb of the tide.
I have lost all I had thro' the races, and also that "little beside;"
And black as a thunder-cloud o'er me is hanging the settling day—
How I wish I had stayed away, mother, how I wish I had stayed away!
Twelve months have slowly passed, mother, twelve months have come and gone,
And thro' my prison bars, mother, shines in the morning sun;
And my world is four stone walls, mother, so grim, and cold, and grey,
And I curse the Melbourne Cup, mother, that fatal grand Cup Day.
Last night as I lay on my bed, mother, barred window and bolted door,
I dreamed that I heard the horse hoofs ring hard on my prison floor;
And a great cavalcade rode past me, swept by me and vanished away,
As they do on the Melbourne Cup Day, mother, as they do on the Melbourne Cup Day.
And the horses were black as the grave, mother, and the riders were pale as the dead,
And the Tempter, dragging an iron chain, was riding hard at their head;
And a voice scared my troubled vision, as the trump of the Judgment Day,
Crying—"Hell is the goal who follows that train adown the gamblers' way."
I woke from my startled sleep, mother, as the clocks were striking four,
And the faint cold light of the early dawn fell across the stony floor;
I have rushed with the giddy crowd, mother, along the downward way,
And my home is the felon's cell, mother, because of the Melbourne Cup Day.

UNIVERSITY NOTES.

OXFORD.

One of the most welcome visitors to Mansfield College is Rev. J. Watson, of Liverpool, who preached last Sunday morning.

The Terminal Conversazione of the Inter-Collegiate Christian Union was held at Wycliffe Lodge on Wednesday week, when Dr. Grenfell gave an interesting account of the Deep Sea Mission.

The annual meeting of the Oxford House in Bethnal Green was held at New College last week, when the Archbishop of York and Rev. A. F. W. Ingram, the head of the house, gave addresses to a very large gathering.

A notable minister of the Methodist Free Church died at Oxford last week, Rev. T. Hacking. He was formerly principal of the Training Institute in Manchester, but has been living in retirement in Oxford for the last ten years. His presence will be much missed in the Free Church here.

The successor to Mr. Gore at the Pusey House is at length officially announced to be Rev. R. L. Ottley, of Magdalen. Mr. Ottley is, of course, a pronounced High Churchman, but as a lecturer he is one of the ablest and most attractive, while his personal influence over the men is very striking.

The removal of Rev. H. C. Squires, of St. Peter-le-Bailey, to Richmond, to succeed Mr. Evan Hopkins, causes a vacancy in an important church at a time when the question of an evangelical pastorate for University men is calling attention to the great need felt in the direction of increased work among undergraduates. Mr. Squires has been greatly instrumental in reorganising the Missionary Union on its present satisfactory basis.

IRISH NOTES.

The Belfast Midnight and Rescue Mission has had a successful year. During that period the Society has given protection to 405 women, fully two-thirds of whom can be accounted for as having changed for the better. Drink is the great curse of these women.

The agents of the Society for Nursing the Sick Poor in Belfast, who are doing a most Christ-like work, attended 746 patients during the year, paid 27,729 visits, lent 940 beds, air-cushions, and other medical comforts, and were the means of soothing the last days and hours of 240 persons who passed away.

Gospel services have been held in a tent at Enniskillen under the auspices of the local Christian Endeavour Society. Many anxious ones have decided for Christ, and a spirit of unity and love has been manifested, members of all denominations attending the meetings. Similar services have been held in Christ Church, Belfast, by Rev. F. W. Gason.

The case of Mary Breen, the girl abducted from the house of Rev. Mr. Nixon, in Dungannon, some time ago, and to whom reference was made recently in Parliament, continues to attract much attention. The facts seem to point to the conclusion that she and the girl that leaped overboard the steamer in the Irish Sea from the nuns who were conveying her to the South of France are one and the same person. It is well known that she disappeared about that time from her home in Cowenford, and besides, it is hardly likely nuns would trouble themselves to convey an insane woman to France. There are plenty of asylums in Ireland. Rev. Mr. Nixon's present servant has also become a Protestant, and has to get police protection going to and from the Methodist Chapel and her master's house.

AFRICA IN LONDON.—At 48, Pall-mall, a small but interesting and instructive exhibition, illustrative of Central Africa, has been arranged by Capt. Edward C. Hore, who spent about ten years on Lake Tanganyika, labouring in connection with the London Missionary Society. The exhibition consists mainly of models illustrative of life in Central Africa. On a central platform are types of native houses and occupations. At one side of the room is a large caravan of natives going down to the coast, laden with ivory and other produce of the interior; while another caravan is coming from the coast, carrying boxes, bales, and other articles, many of them of European origin. These caravans are backed by a landscape characteristically African. On the other side is a lake representing Tanganyika, with its picturesque and richly-clad mountains. In an inner room many lake exhibits are arranged, maps and pictures are abundant, and the whole air of the place is delightfully African. Captain Hore describes the exhibition, which is patronised by the Royal Geographical Society, the Anti-Slavery Society, the London Missionary Society, and several individuals well-known for their connection with or interest in Africa.

THE Y.M.C.A.

The Continental Secretaries' Conference was held last week in Paris. England was represented by Mr. W. H. Mills, national secretary.

The work of the Penge Association has experienced a revival, and the members are holding some particularly encouraging open-air services.

The delegates to the forthcoming British Conference of Young Men's Christian Associations will be publicly received by the Mayor of Sheffield in the Mappin Art Gallery on the evening of June 13.

Mr. Stanley Howard, of Thornbury Castle, Glos., presided over the inaugural meeting of the association recently formed at that place, and addresses were delivered by Mr. W. Hind-Smith and the district secretary, Mr. Ralph Morphett.

A Y.M.C.A. (Chinese) is in course of formation at Chefoo, N. China. The workers chiefly interested are Mr. J. A. Stooke and Mr. Tomalin, of the China Inland Mission, and a number of American missionaries, including Dr. Nevius.

The annual meeting of general secretaries of the Y.M.C.A. in America has just been held in Louisville. One of the most important addresses was that given by Mr. L. D. Wishard, who has travelled so widely, and whose report as to condition and progress of Y.M.C.A. work was most encouraging.

The Anglo-American Y.M.C.A., 160, Rue Montmartre, are having good times at their Sunday afternoon Bible class. Major-General McCausland, Mr. George Williams, and others have recently conducted it. All bear testimony to the great value of such an institution for English and American young men alone.

If there is one organisation more than any other in Madras which has brought together young men of different nationalities and religions, it is the Y.M.C.A. It is always a pleasure to drop in at the rooms to see young men of the city enjoying themselves in a most pleasant manner. Even the restaurant has served to break down vulgar caste prejudices. The attendance at the young men's meeting, on Saturdays, is small, but the Sunday meetings are very well attended,

The Oxford P.S.A. has been established about eighteen months, and the interest in the meetings is fully maintained. Every Sunday afternoon the large hall of the Y.M.C.A. is crowded with an audience of men. Members of the University and other gentlemen attend from time to time, and address the class. A large number of those attracted to the class are men who went to no place of worship, and it is believed that the P.S.A. in Oxford has proved to be a source of blessing to many homes.

At a meeting of the Totterdown Y.M.C.A. on Friday, the president, Mr. Wm. Hill, read a paper on "Open-air Preaching; what to say, and how to say it." Open-air services are held on Sunday evenings. A Rambling Club and Evangelistic Band has been formed, the objects of which are recreation, Christian fellowship, and Gospel services in the villages. It has a membership of forty. The first ramble and service took place on May 24th, and are (D.V.) to be continued alternate Wednesdays. Gifts of tracts would be gladly received by J. C. Marsh, hon. sec., Totterdown, Bristol.

The Kingstown Association issue a good report of the various operations. The evangelistic meetings have been worked vigorously, and with encouraging results, and many have been won for the Saviour. An interesting feature has been the frequent attendance of sailors, and even sometimes soldiers. The missionary branch has been accompanied by much interest, and three members of the Association have gone to Mr. Moody's College as missionary students. The employment agency and other branches have gone on well. The year has been rich in soul-saving results, but there is great need for more liberal help.

Bible Carriage Work

The eleventh report of the Ross Bible Carriages and Evangelistic Mission gives many details and incidents in the villages and towns of Hereford, Hants, Shrops, and other counties visited on the two Bible carriages under the care of Mr. Coates. God has been pleased to bless the sale of his own Word, the distribution of tracts, and the preaching of the Gospel. Lately No. 1 carriage has been in Hereford, and the workers have had real times of blessing at the Herefordshire May fairs. On three days alone they sold one hundredweight of Bibles, Testaments, and other Gospel books, and distributed thousands of books and tracts. Copies of the report may be had from Mr. John Coates, Landseer House, Ross, Hereford.

THE ANNUAL REPORT of the Chief Commissioner of Dublin Police states that during the year the number of persons arrested for drunkenness was 9229. Two-thirds of these were penniless, and the remainder had in their possession £6005.

THE Y.W.C.A.

The Cambridge Institute, Holloway, N., has issued its report, showing 235 members. The workers note many tokens of encouragement in their service among the young women employed in the houses of business, and also among the poor girls out of work and homeless. The various classes have been thoroughly appreciated.

The Y.W.C.A. at Clevedon has secured a permanent home at Speen House. The home, managed by an experienced matron, is for the special benefit of shop girls, nursery governesses, etc., who can enjoy, when overworked, rest and recreation on moderate terms, besides having many religious privileges. The secretary, Mrs. Fenton, will be happy to receive applications for admission at Rutland Lodge, Linden-road, Clevedon.

The Dundee Y.W.C.A. shows in its new report good work in three sections—evangelistic, social, and domestic economy, each of which appears to be in a flourishing condition. The domestic economy section has been specially active. The cookery class has been attended by about 250 pupils, the laundry class by about 155, while dressmaking and sewing were taught to 130. A course of lectures on sick nursing was attended by 250 young women, and one on health attracted an average attendance of 500.

The Y.W.C.A., Blackburn, has been holding monthly meetings for the deepening of spiritual life, and these have been greatly blessed of God in quickening of many. The meetings have increased steadily in numbers and interest, the later ones having been especially remarkable for the evident presence of the Holy Spirit. The series concluded with a missionary meeting on May 15, when the claims of the Lord upon his Church for the heathen were urged by Rev. C. G. Moore and Dr. Harry Grattan Guinness. Freewill offerings amounting to upwards of £33 were divided between the two missions represented.

Mrs. Bevan writes that the committee of the Y.W.C.A. in London are very desirous that their members should have the opportunity of obtaining fresh air, rest, and quiet recreation on Saturday afternoons. If friends in the suburbs are willing to receive small parties of twenty to twenty-five young women in their grounds and gardens for a few hours in the long summer days, it would afford them intense pleasure, while entailing comparatively small trouble and expense. Any lady or gentleman who is willing to assist in this good work is requested to communicate with the secretary, Mr. Henry Kidner, 16A, Old Cavendish-street, W.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR NOTES.

The Christian Endeavour Union of Cleveland, O., where the Convention of 1894 is to meet, now includes 109 societies.

Christian Endeavour is making considerable progress in Dublin. Branches have recently been started in Brighton-road and Sandy Mount Methodist Churches.

Special efforts are being made by members of the Houghton Regis Christian Endeavour Society by conducting an evangelistic service after the usual Sunday evening service. The results have been highly encouraging.

A society in connection with the Congregational Church, Darlington, has now been established. The weekly attendance has increased from four to thirty. It is being arranged to utilise Saturday afternoon excursions for evangelistic purposes.

The Bridgwater Baptist Society was started in 1888, and has at present 77 members. An exceedingly interesting meeting was lately arranged by the Social Section, when a capital model of the Tabernacle in the Wilderness, with its furniture, was exhibited by Miss Reynolds, who had made it herself, cutting it out in wood, scale one inch to a cubit, from the directions to be found in the Bible.

London Medical Mission.

The superintendent of the convalescent home belonging to this Mission writes:—Work has again commenced at our seaside home, and we hope that much blessing, both temporally and spiritually, may result to patients. Already some of our former patients have returned to seek, and, we believe, to find, "health and cure" for wearied and suffering bodies, as well as renewal and reviving for their souls. The fact that this double blessing is often granted by our God to those sent down to Netley Cottage, will, we believe, cause those of our readers who love Him, and desire the welfare of immortal souls, and not simply the tottering tenements thereof, to remember what things we have need of to carry on our work.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

Miss Smedley has been appointed organiser of the W.C.T.U. for France.

Wyoming has lost one of its very best workers in the temperance cause in Miss L. Annette Northup, who died at Saratoga on April 5, after an illness of only four days.

There is a great and growing interest in the temperance cause, not only in Kingston, but throughout the Island of Jamaica, since the W.C.T.U. started work there.

Gambling houses are reported as being closed in Louisville, Ky., and city officials are being examined by the grand jury, as a result of certain recent developments in wickedness.

The London Grand Division of the Sons of Temperance has just issued its twenty-fifth annual report, showing that the progress of the division has been steady and satisfactory.

Rev. Henry Duncan, convener of the Church of Scotland Temperance Committee, states that only one in every hundred of the membership is allied with any Church temperance organisation.

Mr. E. T. Smith, who has been on a temperance tour in the antipodes for three years, has had most interesting times in New Zealand. He has now left for Chicago, but intends returning shortly to Dunedin.

"The impression given of our white-ribboners in Australia is that they bid fair to lead the van, for they have the 'grit, grace, and gumption' of which dear Mary Allen West was wont to speak," says Miss Willard in a recent letter.

In the last British official report from Lorenzo Marques, Portuguese East Africa, it is said that alcohol is sold there in unlimited quantities. The natives spend the greater part of their wages in drink, and are, perhaps, of the lowest order of Africans.

The Earl of Meath is responsible for the statement that in London some thousands of women and girls belong to what are called drink clubs, a small sum being paid by each member weekly in order that several times yearly all may meet at some public-house and drink what has been contributed.

In the matter of the drink traffic, we suffer from limitations and burdens which past generations, through the channel of ancestral life, have imposed upon us. In a like manner the present generation is engaged in a hand-to-hand conflict, not merely for itself, but for a coming brotherhood.—Henry Wood.

A recent visitor to Eastbourne states that he saw in a glass merchant's shop in that fashionable watering-place a number of glasses with engraved mottoes, such as "Mother's Half-pint," "Father's Half-pint," and one for a full pint with the inscription, "By Doctor's Orders!" What do the doctors think of this?

A new form of evasion has come into operation at Cardiff. According to the Morning Advertiser, "Field clubs are rapidly taking the place of shebeens at Cardiff. As frequenters of these houses are liable to punishment, they are taking to the fields, clubs established in which have been declared by the Cardiff stipendiary to be genuine on certain conditions being complied with. The original club at Grangetown has been dignified by the title of 'The Hotel de Marl,' and has now nearly 400 members. On Sunday beer-drinking commenced at this club at seven o'clock in the morning, and continued with but little intermission till nearly nine in the evening, during which time close upon a hundred four-and-a-half gallon casks of beer were consumed."

A Hyde Park demonstration in support of the Local Veto Bill has been organised for Saturday afternoon, June 10th. Contingents of the procession which will start from the embankment, are being formed in every quarter of the Metropolis. Some seventy-five of the organisations have promised to come with their own bands. There will be a preliminary public meeting in Trafalgar-square of sections that cannot be accommodated on the embankment. Lady Henry Somerset will preside at a platform of the B.W.T.A. Sir Wilfrid Lawson, Mr. Caine, M.P., and a host of prominent Liberals, Radicals and labour representatives will address the crowds from about seventeen platforms. Mr. John Kempster, 98, Fleet-street, Ludgate Circus, E.C., is hon. organising secretary.

A LADY CORRESPONDENT writes:—"Close to my house some building was going on. Seeing the men collect together for their dinner-time (half-an-hour), I ventured to go and ask if I should read to them. The idea seemed to please, so for some weeks I went four times a week if possible, and I met with great encouragement. Among other things I read Lady Hope's 'Our Coffee-room' and several of Rev. P. B. Power's tracts. I found it was better to read something short than out of a book. I am now forbidden, owing to weakness, to speak or read for any length of time. Surely some ladies could devote a little time to such work."

Evangelistic Notes.

Holiday Evangelisation.—At the end of June several of the Harley House students will be free to undertake evangelising or other Christian work for a few weeks. Address, S. J. Robins, Harley House, Bow-road, E.

Brighton.—The Evangelistic Mission is holding a tent mission in Trafalgar-court, Brighton; and great interest appears to have been aroused. Mr. Henry Varley, who has been co-operating, spoke very solemnly one evening on the story of Dives and Lazarus, and its teaching as regards the future. The tent was crowded, and at the close many were found inquiring the way of life.

Rev. J. F. T. Hallowes conducted an eight days' mission at Westminster Chapel, Buckingham-gate, from 14 to 21. Mrs. Hallowes also took part. There were services for children. Open-air services were held in the streets and in front of the chapel every evening. Some cases of blessing followed this effort. Evangelistic services will ce continued on Sunday evenings in the chapel.

London-street, Dockhead, S.E.—A series of special services has been held here by the Onward Christian Band from Haddon Hall, London-street, and the Y.P.S.C.E. The power of the Spirit was manifest in every meeting. As many as 400 have been present at some of the open-air meetings, and the little room has been well filled. Many have professed to accept Christ. The poor, the lame, the paralysed, the sick, the adulterous, all have found spiritual healing in these meetings.

Minard-Lochfineside, N.B.—Mr. T. W. Canning, (Evangelisation Society) has been preaching the Gospel in this district for the last ten weeks. Night by night as the old Gospel was proclaimed, and its power was felt, the interest deepened and the attendance grew larger. There is cause for much thankfulness for the blessing bestowed. Mr. Clarke, the Free Church pastor, has for twenty-five years proclaimed the Gospel of the grace of God in this place, and is much encouraged by what he has seen in the mission.

Tinahely.—Rev. F. W. Gason has held a very encouraging eight days' mission in Kilcommon Church, Tinahely. The services were well attended, and much blessing has already resulted from them. The earnestness of the preacher found an echo in many hearts, and his faithful lifting up of Christ crucified has, with God's blessing, drawn many to the Saviour. The greatest attention was shown by those assembled, many of whom came long distances each night. At the concluding service the church was filled to overflowing. On Saturday he held a children's service which was largely attended. B.

Mr. W. Spencer Walton, of the Cape General Mission, has held a series of mission services at Dordrecht, a small English and Dutch town in the eastern province of Cape Colony. His labours were almost entirely among the English colonists, and they have been attended with very remarkable success. Large congregations assembled night after night to hear the word, the communion rail was nearly filled every evening with inquirers. Many have felt the Spirit's work in their hearts, and it is hoped they are quietly seeking the Saviour; and a spirit of solemnity pervades the whole neighbourhood. One of Mr. Walton's young men, Mr. C. Sampson, conducted a mission to the natives, and it has been made a great blessing to them. T. D. R.

Rev. F. E. Smiley has been evangelising in Western Pennsylvania. As to a mission just held in Kittanning, Rev. H. L. Mayer, writes:—"The Sunday meetings were successful beyond all description. Hundreds fairly hung with breathless interest upon the evangelist's words. When the address closed there came an appeal to the unconverted. By hundreds they rose to express their interest in divine things and to ask for the prayers of God's people. It was a glorious sight. This alone was worth all the effort and expense of these meetings. Hundreds have expressed a desire to live different lives; many have signed cards saying they wished to become Christians. Many more went nightly into the inquiry rooms and sought special instructions in the things of the kingdom."

Mr. Duncan Wright, evangelist, whose seventeen years' work in New Zealand is so well known, a year ago removed to Princess-street, Kew, Melbourne, and has been actively engaged in different parts of Australia. During the months of August, September, October, and November last he visited the chief towns on the main line of railway between Sydney and Melbourne, and also some of the back blocks far in the primeval forest of New South Wales, and afterwards many of the city churches of Sydney and suburbs. This year, Mr. Wright has conducted missions in Cooma, Bombala, Eden Bega, and Mornya, on the south east coast; and during March and April he was in 'New England," near the Queensland border. He was greatly encouraged by what he saw of God's work in Tenterfield, Armidale, Glen Innes, Tamworth, etc. Both in the large towns and far in the bush, men and women love the "old, old story of Jesus and his love."

Rev. B. Fay Mills has concluded a three weeks' campaign in Milwaukee, and from the opening day the city was stirred, hundreds of people were interested, and many church members were anxious to know more of Christian service. Mr. Mills' custom, in his great meetings at Omaha and Minneapolis, was to hold a convention and spend two or three days in discussing the affairs of the Kingdom, and to teach and train Christian workers for the duties of the hour. A similar convention was called in Milwaukee, and proved a time of great blessing. The Convention was only held during the day, and in the evening all came together in the Exposition building, accommodating five thousand people. Here Mr. Mills preached each evening, and Mr. J. P. Hillis sang. Already several thousand people have declared their purpose to be Christians. Churches and pastors are united in the work, and people of all classes are thronging to hear the Word of Life. People not only hear the truth, but accept the offer of salvation, and every night there are scores who decide the great matter.

Personalia.

Rev. Thomas Spurgeon is expected in London in the first week in July.

Rev. George Piercy is removing from Burdett-road to 50, Leyspring-road, Leytonstone, E.

Rev. S. Chadwick, who did such a good work in the Leeds Central Mission, has gone on a visit to America.

Mr. George W. Chipman, of Boston, has made over his residence and grounds to the Baptists of that city as "a home for the aged poor."

Miss Jennie Smith, who goes as the first graduated nurse sent out by the Church Mission Board of Canada to Japan, has just started from Kingston, Ontario.

Governor Northern, of Georgia, U.S.A., has determined to give himself to the preaching of the Gospel during the rest of his life, after his term of office expires.

Dr. F. E. Clark will be welcomed next Monday, at a special meeting to be held in the City Temple, at 7.30 p.m. Doubtless many friends will rally round on that evening.

Rev. R. H. Roberts, B.A., has resigned his pastorate, which extended over twenty-four years, at Ladbroke Grove Baptist Church, being about to succeed Dr. Angus as Principal of Regent's Park College.

Rev. C. Spurgeon Medhurst, who has done good work in China, has been compelled, in consequence of his wife's ill-health, to resign his connection with the Baptist Missionary Society, in whose service he has laboured during the last nine years. He has accepted a charge in Colorado, residence in that country being recommended for Mrs. Medhurst.

Rev. B. Senior.—A general desire having been expressed by many friends and neighbours to present a suitable testimonial of their esteem to the Rev. B. Senior on his leaving New Surrey Chapel in June for a new sphere of labour in Bath, a committee has been formed for this purpose. Dr. J. Stonely Hill, 33, Great Charlotte-street, London, S.E., is Hon. Treasurer.

Mr. John J. Meek, who has lived for about forty years on the borders of Zululand, and who in recent years has done a remarkable work among the Zulus, is now in London, and willing to tell his deeply interesting story as opportunities arise. He may be addressed, care of Miss Cutbush, 56, Norroy-road, Putney, S.W. We hope in a few weeks to give a portrait and sketch of this evangelist of the Zulu kraals.

Rev. J. B. Murphy and his wife have, according to a postcard received from Stanley Pool, safely reached that point en route to their mission station, Equatorville (Upper Congo). They had to wait a fortnight at Stanley Pool for a boat. Mr. Murphy had had a severe attack of fever, but was recovering at date of writing. Mrs. Murphy asks prayer for the missionaries and converts in view of the disturbed and dangerous state of affairs in the region.

Mr. Joseph Rabinowich.—A suggestion has been made that Mr. Rabinowich should visit Chicago this summer, and endeavour to reach the Jews in that city with the offer of the Gospel of Jesus Christ. Mr. Moody has agreed to make arrangements to facilitate Mr. Rabinowich's endeavours to meet his brethren of the flesh gathering at the World's Fair. His London council seek the earnest prayers of all helpers of the Jewish Mission that special blessing may accompany the testimony.

IN LYNN AND SALEM, MASS., every saloon was, on Saturday evening, April 29, declared closed for at least one year.

Obituary.

REV. T. S. COLES.

At Chobham, near Woking, there has just passed away by death Rev. T. S. Coles, an old and valued clergyman. Thoroughly Evangelical, he was ever faithful and sound, both in doctrine and word, preaching Jesus Christ and Him crucified. At the funeral Rev. W. Lee gave a short address, in which he said:—"For long years Mr. Coles has passed in and out amongst you in this place, and has been a true friend and a beloved and faithful shepherd of souls. We, as we mourn the loss of such a one, realise that the loss is on our part, the joy and gain are on his. The seal of a man's ministry is the good that he, by God's grace, can do. The record of all true work is in heaven. It is not so much what we can register, but what God registers of our work. One soweth and another reapeth. The day will come when sower and reaper will rejoice together."

REV. CHARLES HOLLAND.

This devoted man, formerly vicar of Scarrington-with-Aslockton, Notts, who has just passed away, was an Evangelical of a type somewhat uncommon. He was uncompromising and immovable. He studiously avoided all controversy, and thus was a marked instance of a class—too few in number—who hold their own most firmly and regard all most charitably. His parishes always contributed largely to the Church Missionary Society, Church Pastoral Aid Society, and Bible Society, &c., he himself being a liberal supporter according to his means. His sermons were always above the average, both in style and matter, and were delivered with great earnestness. Mr. Holland retired from parochial work in 1885. He has left behind him many friends, who mourn the loss of one whose modest demeanour, sterling character, and ministerial usefulness made his name deservedly honoured and esteemed.

MR. EDWARD WHITE, MISSIONARY TO THE SOUDAN.

News has been received of the death of Mr. Edward White, of the Central Soudan Mission. He left England in February last, after a short period of rest, with the intention of opening up a route into the interior by way of the Benué branch of the Niger river. All who have watched this young African mission and its members will deplore the death, the cause of which is unknown, the cablegram being dated, "Brass, West Africa, May 20." Mr. White was a son of Mr. Hugh White, solicitor, of Rochdale. Formerly a member of the Bible-class at the Young Men's Missionary Association in Bolton, a close personal friendship sprang up between him and his teacher, Mr. Hermann G. Harris, B.A., who afterwards became director of the mission. At the age of eighteen Mr. White commenced Gospel work among the poor in the slums, and rented a cottage for the purpose of mission and rescue work. He was a great favourite among the tramps and the waifs and strays, whom he entertained with the violin. He left England with Mr. Harris in February, 1891, and, having acquired a fair acquaintance with the Arabic language at Tripoli, he returned to England during the autumn of last year to make arrangements to ascend the Benué. He has died, doubtless, while proceeding up the Niger, leaving his companion, Mr. Thomas Holt, alone in a strange region.

DISSENTERS IN RUSSIA.—The police have now turned their attention to the Pashkovites, an energetic body of Russian Protestants, whose adherents are generally found among the upper classes of St. Petersburg and Moscow. Two ladies belonging to this sect are now under police surveillance here, and I learn from St. Petersburg that priests of the Orthodox Church are in the habit of attending Pashkovite meetings there, and engaging in theological polemics with those present, probably to trap them into expressions hostile to the Church.—Daily Chronicle.

THE NESTORIANS OF PERSIA.—The New York Independent publishes some particulars of the condition of the Nestorians of Persia, who were recently reported to have perverted to the Roman Catholic Church. It seems that last year, Mar Shimun, the patriarch, hoping to strengthen his position, especially in a pecuniary sense, entered into negotiations with Mgr. Stephen Issa, superior of the Romish missions. After a conference at Tiari, it became evident that the outcome would turn out to the political advantage of the Romanists, and strong opposition was promptly shown by the Nestorians of the mountain villages. He following of the patriarch, when most influential, was only small. Mar Khnan Eshoo, the Metropolitan of Nochia, whose prerogative it is to consecrate each new patriarch, was ready to excommunicate Mar Shimun in case he carried out his plan, which has also met with vigorous denunciation in other high quarters in the Nestorian community.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we purpose giving portrait and sketch of Rev. GEORGE C. KNAPP, American Missionary, Bitlis, Turkey.

We remind our readers that Sabbath next, June 11, is Hospital Sunday in London. No arguments, new or old, are needed to prove the invaluable character of the service which the public hospitals render to our great community. Never were they more needed than now; there ought, therefore, to be no slackening in the support accorded to them.

We learn that Mr. A. Webb, M.P., has obtained the first place on Friday, June 30, for the moving of a resolution in the House of Commons condemning the Indian opium traffic. Let Christian electors everywhere petition the House and memoralise their representatives on behalf of the motion. Forms of petition can be had from the secretary of the Society for the Suppression of the Opium Trade, Broadway Chambers, Westminster, S.W. Above all, let much prayer be made.

The Boys' Brigade, which has just had its second May meeting, is an institution which, on account of its methods, its associations, and its tendencies, is not accepted by many as a Christian agency; nay, they distinctly, though sorrowfully, declare it to be anti-Christian. They do not judge the spirit and aim of its founders; and they do not deny that the honest purpose of many who support it is to make good Christians of the boys. They maintain, however, and we think they are right in maintaining, that the necessity of such a quasi-military organisation has never been proved.

The peculiar methods of the Boys' Brigade are felt to be out of harmony with the spirit and way of our Lord. To drill boys as soldiers, to put them through a discipline which is skill in the art of killing men, to place deadly weapons in their hands, or something which represents deadly weapons, is surely not after the manner of Him who came not to destroy men's lives, but to save them. It might be a pretty spectacle to see the boys in Exeter Hall "present" and "fire"; but what were they supposed to be firing at, and what were they supposed to fire for? At men to kill them. Take that out of the programme, and all the sport would be gone. Is that, then, the kind of work our Saviour has given his disciples to do? Is that what He meant by saying, "Feed my lambs"? We can understand Sunday-schools quietly training up generations of boys who should have a repugnance to war, and thus, by ultimately delivering nations from the love and practice of war, bringing in the Kingdom of God; but that they should mix praying and fighting together as they are now doing is saddening to many hearts.

At the meeting of the Peace Society a resolution disapproving of the influence and tendency of the B. B. was passed. Now, this tendency to dispose boys to follow a soldier's life has always been denied, and up to a year or two ago, the question was triumphantly asked, "Can you point to one boy who has entered the army?" Last Friday night the argument was changed; the Chairman virtually admitted that some of the boys had entered the army, and added: "So long as they had an army, no one could object to its being recruited from the best material." Otherwise, let our Sunday-schools be made the recruiting ground of the army; we want the best material. This justifies all that "the peace party" have from the first affirmed would follow this strange departure from the ways of the fathers. Perhaps fathers and mothers may yet have something to say about it.

We are quietly being militarised by the departments. Sir J. Hibbert informed Sir J. Fergusson in the House of Commons last week, that the committee on the employment of discharged soldiers and sailors "recommended the appointment of such men to messengers' places in all public offices; very likely the suggestion would be acted on." Three working-men members objected to such preference being given, one on the ground that "the plan pointed to a military régime, and no one knew to what it would lead"; another simply because it was preference; another because civilians who paid the taxes would be handicapped. At the other end of the scale advantages are given to telegraph messengers who enter the army. Thus, by offering a bribe to the young to enter the army, and providing berths for those who are discharged from it, we shall make soldiering a tempting work—for awhile; then we shall want to know why every man should not serve his term? From favouritism to despotism is an easy step.

"God's man, in God's place, doing God's work, in God's way, and for God's glory." Such is the definition given in Miss Geraldine Guinness's "Story of the China Inland Mission" of the workers needed in the mission fields of to-day. Well is this said to be "the supreme necessity." It is so at home and abroad. It is sad to see in many spheres the wasted energy, and the inevitable failure incident to running before being sent, attempting to work on man-made lines, and in self-chosen directions. It is vain to try to force God's hand; He works according to the counsel of his own will. All such workers, as are really used of Him for his work, are called, qualified, and appointed by Himself. He shows where, when, and how to go or stay, and every prayerful aspirant for service will find in God's time the open door, if only his aspiration be self-renouncing, and wholly subject to the Divine will. Time is never lost by waiting on or for the Lord.

It is easier to work than to wait, to be zealous than to be patient. Passive graces are not so highly esteemed by men as active, showy deeds; but they are more regarded by God, and in their exercise often bring more glory to his Name. "They also serve who stand and wait," is an axiom worth keeping in mind. The restless will, the fevered brow, and bustling gait, alike bespeak a soul out of communion with its Lord. In every sphere "it is in vain for men to rise up early, to sit up late, to eat the bread of sorrows; for so He giveth his beloved sleep." It is ever sweet to walk with God, to lean upon his unseen might, and to follow as He leads. Power is never in us, it is all in Him, and must flow through us as coming directly from Himself. We are but channels to convey the blessing; ours it is to see that between us and the ever-flowing spring contact is close and unbroken.

Work, to be Christian work, must be done not only for Christ, but with Christ. To allow the energy expended in service to outstrip the spirit of fellowship with the Master is to fail in securing real spiritual results! We need more worship in these days, work and worship may not be dissociated; cannot be, if efficiency is to be attained. More even than teaching are prayer and praise as essentials for successful labour in the vineyard of Christ. A recent writer has said, "Sermon-worship instead of service-worship appears to control our congregations." So far as this is true, one great secret of powerlessness in Christian instrumentality is revealed. To wait upon man, even the best of men, is a poor substitute for waiting upon God. Saintly George Herbert hit the mark when he said:

> Resort to sermons, but to prayers most:
> Praying's the end of preaching.

Ought not more to be made in Christian experience of obedience to the promptings of the Spirit? He graciously dwells in the heart of the believer to direct and incite to acceptable service. He is no transient or fitful guest, but an ever-present, ever-active friend and guide. But his action may be hindered, the fire of his indwelling love may be quenched, and thus his sacred impulse be unheeded or resisted. We do well to be ever on the watch for his Divine monitions, for when we go on errands as those sent by Him, we are sure of success in the mission. Often blessing is lost, opportunities missed, and duties left undone, through hesitation to obey the inward voice. An American author has said, "The good action you are going to do, is like a good egg. It ought not to be too long in getting marketed." Only let us be sure that we are called of God, and whether it is to be, or to do, or to suffer, the sooner we obey the better.

What are known as "modern" views regarding the Bible and its teachings are turning up in what, to many, must seem to be unexpected quarters. They were, for instance, boldly introduced at the recent London Yearly Meeting of the Society of Friends; but we are glad to observe, from the report in The Friend, that the Evangelical position was not allowed to "go by default." Several Wesleyan professors and ministers are known to be in sympathy with "advanced" ideas, and against the influence of these we welcome the series of valuable articles which have appeared in The Wesleyan Methodist Magazine, from January to May inclusive, from the vigorous pen of Dr. Benjamin Gregory, with the title "'Theology in Transition,' and the Bible in 'Suspense.'" Our contemporary The British Weekly has of late been dealing in a very helpful manner with current misconceptions regarding the Atonement.

Two notes in the June issue of The Thinker should do much to discredit the vaunted critical theories. They simply state some of the conclusions of Professor König, of Rostock, and show how materially his views vary from those which other scholars hold and propagate. As to the Pentateuch and the Psalms, he is very definite in his contentions, the obvious independence of which will compel the attention of all investigators. If, however, a study of the subject in the light of the Professor's position proves anything, it is that the so-called "scientific" process is utterly untrustworthy, inasmuch as it leads those who follow it to various and mutually destructive results. We hold that scholarship and energy are ill-directed when spent upon speculations that neither satisfy the intellect nor benefit the soul of man.

Church discipline, in its relation to personal consistency of walk on the part of Christians in fellowship, becomes more and more difficult in these days of laxity and breadth as to the connection between the Church and the world. This was illustrated by a case of special appeal brought before the Free Church Assembly lately held. A lady in a country district had attended a local ball, and for this had been suspended by the Kirk Session—a course which the Presbytery, it seems, upheld. But, on appeal to the Assembly, the case was referred back to the Session, with the instruction that there are things which, while rightly made subjects of exhortation, and calling for circumspection, yet should not be made points of discipline. Attendance at balls may therefore, according to this decision, be regarded among things permissible, but not advisable in Christian practice. How far the higher Court of Apostolic Appeal is in harmony with this pronouncement may well be viewed as open to question.

The incident suggests the importance of enforcing the necessity for deeper spiritual life on the part of those who profess to be followers of the Lamb. Church rule can never cure worldly conformity, however right it may be to exercise it on occasion. One thing is certain, those who love and frequent the presence chamber of the Heavenly King are not likely to desire the gaieties and frivolities of the ballroom. The vanities of the world have no charm for the lovers of the Lord who dwell in his presence. The question what is lawful and permissible in reference to the world, will give place to the far higher consideration, how near can we approach to the example of Him who said of his disciples, "They are not of the world, even as I am not of the world"? The cure for the lamentable coquetting there is in these days between the Church and the world is only to be found in a revival of spiritual life and power in the hearts of believers. Only let the affection be set on things above, the privilege of being seated in the heavenly places with Christ be realised, and desire for carnal joys will die out, and the King's highway be pursued with alacrity and delight.

Dr. Maclaren's eloquent plea before the Free Church Assembly for a return to "Christ the Divine, the incarnate Christ, the risen, ascended, and royal Christ," deserves to be echoed and re-echoed throughout the entire Church of Christ. His assertion that "the hope of nineteenth-century Christendom" lies "in the firm grasp of the redemptive work and personality of Christ, and of all that flows from it" is worthy of all the fervour and force with which the speaker invested it. The self-life and the self-esteem which are so often coming between Christ and the soul received an effective rebuke when, in dwelling on the need for Holy Ghost influence as the only real power for service, the Doctor asked, "Why have we not got this power?" and then replied, "Because we are not willing to be made invisible by the investiture."

We would commend to preachers everywhere the counsel of one so justly regarded as "a prince of preachers" himself: "Burn all your manuscripts, and never write any more to be read in a pulpit. Whatever else you may do with your pen, I believe the worst thing you can do with it is to write sermons with it." Dr. Maclaren spoke of this venturing on a heresy. It may be so in the eyes of some who pose as essayists and moralists, but to all who realise the nature of the true herald's work and who desire above all else to reach the hearts of men, we are sure his advice will be viewed as wise and sound. It is when heart speaks to heart, and soul to soul, that the message, backed by the energy of the Divine Spirit, is calculated to reach its goal. As the winged arrow finds its mark when shot by skilful hand from the well-strung bow, so heartfelt testimony, uttered in "thoughts that breathe and words that burn," finds its lodging-place in the human heart and conscience.

Thirst for power and worldly status is as marked a feature of the Romish Church as ever. The announcement that President Cleveland intends to establish a United States representative in Rome, and to elevate the Legation into an Embassy, is a concession to Papal sovereignty much to be deplored. It must tend to strengthen the advancing tide in the direction of Popery, which is already strong enough to cause apprehension and regret. Anything that empowers representatives of one religious system to dominate another, by giving them State influence, is evil as a violation of the rights of conscience, and an imperilment of the liberty which is the birthright of man. So long as Rome is content with moral suasion, she has the right to exert its power, but beyond this her claim to rule among the civil powers of the earth is a delusion and a snare.

It is strange to see countries which, like our own, and like the States, owe so much to Reformation principles, showing so strong a disposition to dally with their old enemy. Romish and Ritualistic movements in our own British Isles go far to show how ready many are to put their necks in the old yoke. America was founded, as we all know, by men whose one object in crossing the sea and establishing themselves on the new soil was to obtain "freedom to worship God." Strange that the descendants of men like the Puritans, the Covenanters, and the Reformers of a heroic past, should, to any extent, welcome to the counsels of the State those whose avowed aim and end is to regain a political ascendency, which, to the blessing of the world at large, they have long lost.

The Sunday Magazine is the authority for saying, in a sketch of "Miss Hesba Stretton at Home," that the Emperor of Russia, Alexander II., published a ukase that copies of "Jessica's First Prayer" should be placed in all the schools of Russia. His successor has thought fit to revoke this order, and, with peculiar severity for such an unoffending member, has condemned all remaining copies found in his dominions to be burnt "by the hangman," if there is such an official in Russia. Comparing this statement with the testimony which comes from all sides, that the reigning Emperor is an eminently home-loving man, one is puzzled to know how such a touching domestic story fell under his displeasure. Is this the explanation, that he is too much engrossed in his home to attend thoroughly to the affairs of his huge empire? He cares nothing for military display, or for political conversation, or for public life; he is only "a simple moujik," says M. de Blowitz; meanwhile, the harshest persecution rages against some of the best of his subjects. Men, even fathers, cannot wisely live always in the nursery.

The condition of the blind always appeals powerfully to the sympathy of men, and it is a joy to know that so much is being done, and done successfully, to elevate and brighten it. No less than 80 per cent. of the pupils who pass through the Royal Normal College or the Blind at Upper Norwood become self-supporting; that is, if they take the whole course of training. Last year the aggregate earnings of former pupils exceeded £18,000. The chief power to help themselves seems to lie in their musical ability, hearing making up for sight. One of the wisest and most hopeful features of modern philanthropy is the principle on which so much of it is based, of helping people to help themselves. The pecuniary saving to the nation must be something considerable of the use now made of waste orphans, waste waifs and strays, waste criminals, waste blind persons, and other forms of waste life among us. The most precious saving of all is the moral and spiritual.

The yearly meeting of the Friends has this year gone beyond all former meetings in the urgency of its utterances on the drink question. It has adopted an address urging all members of the Society to abstain from the use of intoxicating liquors as a beverage, and against investing any money in the liquor trade, or taking shares in brewing companies. The Friends, moved by the Spirit which forbids any fellowship with the things by which souls are destroyed, may some day advance even beyond this position, and come up to the position of the Methodist Episcopal Church in America, and the Salvation Army at home. Their increased stringency reminds one of the action of the Friends in America 140 years ago; first they "cautioned" any members against buying imported slaves; next they censured the custom; next they prohibited members from doing it; next they freed their slaves; and finally they compensated them for the wrong they had done them. One of the finest examples on record of the growing power of the Spirit of God, when men honestly follow his teaching.

Under the simple yet expressive title, A Colony of Mercy (Hodder & Stoughton), Julie Sutter has penned a delightful book on the famous Westphalian settlements associated with the name of Pastor Bodelschwingh, and described as "Social Christianity at Work." Later on we hope to review this book more fully; now we desire merely to bid it welcome and commend it heartily to our readers.

Education and Missions.—2.

By Rev. MAURICE PHILLIPS, Madras.

The adoption of this principle—that educational work should be carried on chiefly with the view of benefiting the Christians—is what is suggested in this paper as the best method of making it more effective as an evangelistic agency. What does this principle imply?

(1) That no school should be established by missionaries except as an auxiliary to the efficiency and immediate extension of the Indian Church. I know that this will be regarded by not a few as a short-sighted policy, as "walking by sight and not by faith," but I am content to be in the company of the Apostle Paul, who in all his efforts among the Gentiles expected "some fruit." To establish schools among the heathen with the hope that they may be the means of bringing them some day to the Church is of little value, as experience has abundantly proved. But when a village, or some families in a village, embrace Christianity, or express a sincere desire to embrace it, a day school should be established to teach the children, and a night school to teach as many of the illiterate adults as can be induced to attend. The school-room should be made the centre of evangelistic work in the village. The people should be invited to assemble there on week days and Sundays for prayer, Bible-teaching, and public worship. Hindu children may be admitted to be taught with the Christian children, should there be sufficient room and teaching power.

In such a village, under such circumstances, an elementary school only would be necessary. But should the Christian children of a town or village be such as to require a middle-class school, it should be provided. And in a district worked by a society, where there are a large number of Christian youths requiring a higher education than afforded in a middle school, a high school should be established. It is a waste of time and resources, however, to place a foreign missionary in such a school. Every high school should be put in charge of a competent Christian graduate, and as many heathen boys should be admitted as can be accommodated without extra expense.

COLLEGES FOR CHRISTIANS.

Mission Colleges should be established and conducted on precisely the same principle. One fully developed Christian College in each of the three Presidencies would probably meet all the higher educational wants of the Indian Christians at present. These colleges need not belong to one missionary society, but may be the joint property of all missionary societies. Every society labouring in India should contribute its share towards their support. They should be Christian Colleges in the sense that they are expressly for Christians, non-Christians being allowed to attend as far as space and teaching power will admit. As the Scotch missionaries have a peculiar aptitude for this kind of work, and as they have a fully developed college in each of the three Presidency towns, would it not be well for all Protestant societies to entrust the higher education of Indian Christians to them? For the accommodation of pupils from a distance, hostels could be provided in connection with every college, and placed under the direct supervision of missionaries. Every college should also have a chapel where the students can meet for prayer and worship. Missionaries of the different societies which support the college may be asked to help the Professors to conduct worship in the college chapel on Sundays.

If this plan were adopted, the large sums of money now expended by different societies in carrying on their colleges could, after deducting the amounts allotted to the joint colleges, be expended on scholarships to enable the children of poor Christians to pursue the higher education. A large number of missionaries could be set at liberty to preach the Gospel, who are now chiefly engaged in secular education work. Our colleges would be placed on a permanent footing in the estimation of the people, for they would know that their continuance does not depend on their patronage; and educational missionaries would feel that conversions need not endanger the existence of institutions in which they feel deep interest. The people themselves would estimate Christian education far more highly than they do at present, when under the impression that our schools are only nets to catch their children. Lastly, the adoption of this plan would be the means of raising the Indian Christian community intellectually and socially—a consummation to be most earnestly sought after, as being far-reaching in its influence on the ultimate evangelisation of India.

NO CONVERTS. WASTE OF MONEY.

To carry on the higher education as at present for the sake of the higher classes with the hope of converting them to Christianity is almost a waste of money; for, as a matter of fact, our colleges are the means of producing scarcely any converts now! It is true that the first missionaries, who gave such an undue impetus to this method of mission work, had a few converts from the higher castes. But notwithstanding their zeal and earnestness, we cannot view the history of Indian missions for the last fifty years without having the conviction forced upon us that they greatly erred in judgment by departing from Apostolic methods, and were the unconscious instruments of inflicting a severe blow on the work dearest to their heart, which has greatly retarded the progress of the Gospel in India.

For their plan, having been largely adopted by all missionary societies, has been the means of diverting very considerably the stream of missionary energy from the work of vernacular preaching to the masses. It is very much as if the Apostle Paul had settled down in Jerusalem and gathered around him a few of the Scribes, Pharisees, and Sadducees, to teach them Hebrew literature and philosophy, with the hope of indirectly convincing them of the truth of Christianity. Or, as if the eloquent Apollos had opened a school in Corinth to teach the Epicureans and Stoics rhetoric, with the hope of saturating their minds with the sayings and doings of Jesus by selecting passages from the Gospel for reading and reciting. How much poorer the world would have been to-day had the Apostles adopted this plan! Ay! and is not India much poorer spiritually to-day than it would have been had the Christian Church not deviated from Apostolic methods? For the past fifty years the direct work of missions has been crippled by the diversion of its energy to a wrong channel. And even now the stream is only beginning to turn backwards. In the Presidency towns educational missionaries predominate out of all proportion. In Madras there are about fifteen, as against two who preach in Tamil, the language of the people. Had the men and money expended on schools and colleges been thrown into the Apostolic method of preaching the Gospel everywhere, the number of Indian Christians would probably be much larger than it is at present.

The history of the triumphs of Christianity in the past ought to teach us that the Divine method of converting the world is from the lower to the higher, and not vice versâ. In India this is a pre-eminently wise Providence, for had the caste-keeping Hindus embraced Christianity first, there is every probability that they would retain their caste distinctions in the Church. But as the lower classes have no caste properly so called, in proportion as they rise in the intellectual and social scale to an equality with the caste-keeping classes, they will be able to receive the latter to the Church on equal footing with themselves, and

CASTE WILL QUIETLY DISAPPEAR.

A contrast is often drawn between the success of the first educational missionaries in gaining converts and the failure of those who are now engaged in the same work. This is both unfair and misleading. It is a reflection upon a number of hardworking brethren whose devotion and earnestness are beyond suspicion. How is it then that they do not gain converts like their predecessors? Partly because preparation for university examinations, which the students now consider the "be all and end all," so absorbs their time and thought that they are unable to give the same attention to religious instruction as was given in former days; and partly because missionaries now are not so ready to support converts as they were then. Many high-caste youths come to me every year and offer to receive baptism on condition that I keep them in college till they take their degree. Educational missionaries could easily lay their hands on such, and many more, if they felt justified in baptizing them on this condition.

But it is maintained that the education given in missionary colleges facilitates the work of conversion. All English education, which is permeated with Bible truths, does this more or less. It clears away superstitious weeds from the mind and prepares it for something higher and purer. But there is no reason to believe that mission college education does this much more effectually than any other college education. Certainly the serious commotion, amounting to a mutiny, which shook the Madras Christian College to its foundation (the best institution of its kind in India) four years ago, because one of its students expressed a wish to be baptized, does not bear out the contention that missionary education facilitates conversion. The students, numbering about 400, held public meetings to express their "horror and dread" at the idea of one of their number embracing Christianity. They visited the would-be convert in the house of the missionary who sheltered him, and used every means at their disposal to dissuade him from being baptized, and with the aid of his relatives they succeeded. Had that student belonged either to a Government or Hindu college, there is no probability whatever that any such commotion or mutiny would have taken place. Indeed, there was no commotion among the students of the Maharajah of Vizianagram's College when one of its students was lately baptized.

Let us, then, give up the fallacy that these institutions are agencies for converting in any but a very vague sense of the term; and let our colleges be kept up for the sake of the Indian Christians. Let them be used primarily for educating our pastors, evangelists, and teachers of the higher grades, and for qualifying Christian youths for the learned professions. I know few things more conducive to the welfare and enlargement of the Indian Church than the occupying of responsible positions in the Government service, ir the medical profession, at the Bar, and in banks and mercantile houses, by Indian Christians. If we spend as much money on them as we spend on Brahmins, there is no reason why, in a short time, they should not occupy the same positions of influence and emolument which are now almost exclusively held by Brahmins. At any rate, it is the first duty of missionaries to do all in their power, by means of the higher education, to bring them forward to that goal.

And we have every encouragement to set about the task, for there is no lack of ability in the lower classes from which the majority of our Christians are drawn. Ethnologically they are the same people as the middle classes, who rank next to Brahmins. There are only two distinct races among the Hindus, viz., the Aryans and the Aborigines. The former are represented by the Brahmins of to-day, who form but a small percentage of the inhabitants of India, and the latter by the middle and lower classes. The difference between the lower and the middle classes is of the same nature as that between the peasants of England and the great middle class population. When Christianised and educated, therefore, they are quite capable of holding their own, not only against the middle classes but against the Brahmins also.

"Behold the Lamb of God!"

John the Baptist.

"Behold the Man!"

Pilate.

Perhaps the first experience which the preaching of the Kingdom of God brings to the soul is the apprehension of personal peril, causing the cry, "What must I do to be saved?" Then comes consciousness of transgression against God. Repeated trespass, and repeated failure in the endeavour to avoid it, lead to the knowledge of sin deeply rooted in the heart, which is the source of all the bitter fruit of transgression. Then follows the discovery of the heart's alienation from God, and even of enmity to God, as the chief characteristic of the carnal mind. As more light enters, the defect, the inequality, the inconsistency of character becomes painfully evident to the exercised soul; and as transgression was traced to inbred sin, so this inconsistency of character is found to spring from a fallen nature which cannot please God.

Probably the later of these experiences are only known after regeneration; but they all need atonement, for they are all the evidence and manifestation of sin. Not only does the precious blood of Christ, which makes atonement for the soul, expiate these and every other form of sin and sinfulness, but the winner of souls must understand how to apply the word of truth, the Gospel of our salvation, to the anxious inquirer, as God's antidote to every such experience.

But the evangelist is sometimes authoritatively told that he cannot expect to understand in what way or on what principle the death of Christ procures forgiveness of sins, cleanses the conscience, and enables us to maintain fellowship with God. If he believes this, the soul-physician is shut up to the fact that the blood does indeed atone for sin, but why or how he cannot tell; and, therefore, he is like a physician who does not understand the properties of the medicine he professes to administer. But if he listens to the messenger sent before the face of the King to prepare his way before Him, when, looking upon Jesus as He walked, he said, "Behold the Lamb of God!" the evangelist will not only sing—

Paschal Lamb by God appointed,
All our sins on Thee were laid,
By almighty love anointed,
Thou hast full atonement made;
All thy people are forgiven
Through the virtue of thy blood;
Opened is the gate of heaven,
Peace is made 'twixt man and God—

but he will also seek in the comprehensive and detailed typology of the Old Testament the explanation of the manifold operation of the precious blood of Christ, as of a lamb without blemish and without spot, by which we are redeemed from our vain manner of life handed down from our fathers.

Israel in Egypt was warned of the judgment angel who should go through the land at night, smiting every firstborn son where the lamb had not been slain and his blood sprinkled on the door, and where the lamb was not fed upon. But God assured them, "When I see the blood I will pass over you." From the Passover we learn how to speak words of counsel and encouragement to a soul in dread of judgment because of sin.

The Passover contained the germ of the five offerings prescribed in the opening chapters of Leviticus. They were divided into two classes, those which ascended for a sweet savour, and those which were consumed with devouring fire outside the camp, or otherwise treated as Sin and Trespass offerings. The Sweet Savour offerings represented Christ as He is in Himself, a sweet savour unto God; the Sin and Trespass offerings represented Him as made a curse for us, bearing our iniquity and our transgressions. "The lamb of the Burnt-offering" and "the goat of the Sin-offering" were respectively characteristic of these two classes of offering. And in the provision that the Passover sacrifice might be taken from the sheep or from the goats, the distinction was anticipated which was afterwards more fully set forth in the offerings in Leviticus i.—vii.

The order in which these offerings are described, beginning with the Burnt-offering and ending with the Trespass-offering, is according to God's appreciation of Christ; the order in which we apprehend them, first the Sin-offering, and then the Burnt-offering (Lev. viii. 14-18; xiv. 12, 19; xv. 15, 30; xvi. 5, 15-24), is according to our need as sinners.

We usually come first to Christ as the Trespass-offering. For our sense of danger arises first from the consciousness that we have transgressed against God. The Spirit in convicting us of sin brings some overt act to our remembrance, as "This Jesus whom ye have crucified," "Ye killed the Prince of life." This conviction of transgression is met and the conscience appeased by the Trespass-offering.

But transgression is the outcome of sin as a principle which has usurped possession of the heart, and the knowledge of Christ as a Trespass-offering will not satisfy the conscience which has been awaked to its deeper need. Christ as the Sin-offering must be known as the antidote to this sense of indwelling sin.

As experience deepens, and we become aware of our innate enmity to God, we feel the need of a further knowledge of Christ as our Peace-offering. "God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto Himself," "He is our Peace." Then we are at ease in God's presence, and though, like Mephibosheth, we are consciously lame of both our feet, we sit and eat at the King's table.

Soon we become aware how halting our service is, how inconsistent is our character, for "the feet of the lame are not equal," and we see in the Meat-offering (R.V. Meal-offering) of fine flour, how perfect the character of Jesus is. There is no husk or grit in fine flour, no particle is more prominent than another. Every quality is in perfect proportion and in perfect harmony in the Lord Jesus. He is the perfect revelation of the perfect God.

But this does not of itself make atonement. The Meal-offering is only an adjunct of the Burnt-offering. The righteous acts of Christ do not atone for our defects; the blood, and the blood alone, the poured-out life of God manifested in flesh ("for the life of all flesh is in the blood thereof") makes atonement for sin.

Learning that our defect and inconsistency of character proceed from our fallen nature, we find the antithesis and the antidote in what Jesus is. And laying our hand on Him as our Burnt-offering, which goes up with acceptance on God's altar, we are assured that He is accepted for us to make atonement for us, and we know ourselves accepted in the Beloved Son, in whom his God and Father is well pleased.

The living bird dipped in the blood of the bird (Lev. xiv.) that was killed over the living water, and let loose into the open field, is a beautiful and significant, if faint and far-away, foreshadowing of the death and resurrection of Christ, who, through the Eternal Spirit, offered Himself without spot to God, and by whose blood we leprous sinners are cleansed and sanctified. The Septuagint translates "two little birds," and thus reminds us of Arnion, the "Little Lamb" in the midst of the throne; "a lamb as it had been slain."

The dear tokens of his passion,
See, his glorious body bears,
Theme of endless exultation
To his ransomed worshippers;
With what rapture
Gaze we on those glorious scars.

And since "as He is so are we in this world," we are reminded of the Apostle's experience, "Always bearing about in our body the dying of the Lord Jesus, that the life also of Jesus may be made manifest in our mortal flesh."

The two goats of the Sin-offering on the great Day of Atonement show, on the one hand, how the claim of God's righteous law is met, and how, on the other hand, peace of conscience is assured to the confessed sinner; while the fact that remembrance of sins was made every year, showed the ineffectiveness of the type, and necessitated the perfect and effectual Antitype, to which it pointed onward.

The ordinance of the Red Heifer reminds us how easily and unconsciously we may become defiled by unclean sight or sound, or by contact with uncleanness; how he that restores the unclean, himself partakes of the uncleanness; and how the water of the Word is the vehicle for the perpetually-atoning virtue of the Sin-offering.

If we regard the Old Testament only as past history, no wonder that we cannot understand the Atonement. If we reject prophetic type, we must, to be consistent, reject the prophetic Word; for Divinely-ordained prophetic acts are no less inspired and instructive than the words spoken by holy men of God as they were moved by the Holy Ghost.

Before the risen Lord gave his disciples their great commission to evangelise the world, He expounded unto them in all the Scriptures the things concerning himself. O Master and Lord, may we, thy disciples, sit at thy feet and hear thy Word! M.

Repeal in India.

BY MRS. JOSEPHINE BUTLER.*

We have been considering the past and the present. Now the question arises more or less in all our minds as to the future. What is to be done? What hope have we that a repetition of this ignoring of the will of Parliament, the deceptions, the cruelties and oppressions which have been carried on since 1888, will not again, after a brief suspension, be attempted, and the whole system in a short time found to be again in full activity? A more serious or difficult question in regard to our cause we have scarcely ever had to encounter. But I wish firmly to declare that I see nothing to sigh over in the matter; nothing to discourage us. Just let us reflect that the same Divine power which has guided us so far, so wonderfully, so minutely, even in every detail, is not about to forsake us now. We must take care not to imitate the faithless questioning of the Israelites of old, in saying, "He smote the stony rock, indeed, so that the water gushed out, and the streams flowed withal; but can He give bread also?" Be assured that He can do all that is necessary for us, remembering that his name is "Wonderful, Counsellor, the Mighty God, the Everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace." To those who ask He gives wisdom, and gives it liberally, upbraiding not.

We have become deeply convinced in our long warfare that we need not only the mighty impulse of love in the heart, but also light in the brain; we need to rally all the forces of our understanding and intellect, and to bring to a focus all the inventive power with which God may have endowed us; and there is nothing which quickens the inventive faculty as to ways and means, so much as a horror of some deep injustice done, and the desire to defeat that injustice and to save its victims. We need not, therefore, look much into the future. I would only suggest that light seems to me already to break somewhat on this problem.

We have all mourned over the inaction of the Decennial Missionary Congress in Bombay. Much has revealed, almost terribly, the fact of the deadening influence, even on spiritual minds, of association with the materialistic portion of Anglo-Indian official society in India, and the lessening of vital power for progressive Christian action which such association produces. From the first, however, I saw a gleam of hope in this whole unhappy business. A great number of the missionaries were betrayed, one may say, into the unfortunate attitude which the Congress assumed. Mr. Alfred Dyer has recently written to me several times from Bombay of the uprising of a multitude of individual missionaries in protest against the inaction of the Congress. He sends me from time to time a long and increasing list of the names of missionaries who are signing protests or declarations against the regulation of vice in India, and other abominations allowed by the State. Mr. Dyer himself is hopeful.

I have also read letters from individual missionaries, who thank God that their eyes have been more fully opened, and express wonder and gladness that they should feel themselves so unexpectedly called to take an active part against this great iniquity, stimulated by the serious error itself into which the Decennial Congress fell. I feel convinced that when the evidence laid before the Departmental Committee by our Lady Commissioners is published, and reaches the hands of these earnest men in India, they will be aroused as they have never yet been. The reaction in favour of our cause will, I think, be strong. Surely many of them will beat on their breasts and say, "Woe is me that I have been so blind to the awful gravity of this matter"; and the spirit of repentance will urge them on to greater zeal than they had ever imagined themselves capable of. I am expressing my own personal hope and belief. This movement will itself help to solve the great problem of how we are to secure the bonâ fide abolition of the wicked system in India. When this quickening of hearts and consciences has been brought about by the Divine influence, light will be given in the intellect, and many good brains will be set working in the matter. Man is a very inventive being, and I think that means will be devised even for an effective vigilance work in that vast country of India. At first sight, this does not seem easy. These cantonments are situated at hundreds of miles' distance from each other, some in very remote parts of the country, free from any observation, or expression of public opinion near at hand, and in fact unapproached by any of the influences which exist in the cities of the western world for the correction of a great public wrong.

But even if we should be defeated in some instances, in spite of the vigilance and ingenuity which, I believe, will be aroused, God will find another way; and the sooner the whole question forces the public mind back to the subject of our standing army in India, and its administration, the better will it be for the future. The impression of disgust and contempt is continually growing in our minds at the reasons reiterated ad nauseam by military authorities in their public documents, for the continuance of this shameful system of oppression carried out on the helpless and unresisting daughters of a conquered people. The reason they continually give is that presented by Lord Roberts, viz., the physical efficiency of the British soldier. If this reason is to have weight, then our argument must go further back than the official regulation of prostitution; it must be carried back to the whole system of our army administration in India. Any institution, however apparently needful it may be, which involves such professed necessities as this cruel and indecent system represents, stands self-condemned, and the plea which is made for its continuance, itself deals a death-blow to the whole fabric of our military occupation of India.

* The closing paragraphs of a pamphlet which Mrs. Butler has prepared, giving a startling and impressive statement of the facts relating to the recent exposures of military encouragement and regulation of vice in India. We strongly counsel all Christian reformers, especially the mothers of our Indian soldiers, to get this pamphlet, and to prayerfully peruse it. Copies may be had at the World's Women's Christian Temperance Union Headquarters, Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, London, E.C.—Ed.

RICHMOND-STREET MISSION, WALWORTH.—The annual meeting of this useful institution was held at the Metropolitan Tabernacle on Monday, May 29, Dr. J. A. Spurgeon presiding. The report read by Mr. Barr showed ever-increasing activity by a staff of 100 workers amongst the children and adults of the neighbourhood. Mr. John T. Dunn and Mr. John Kirk made earnest appeals on behalf of the work, and laid special stress on the great need of a larger building, which the committee are striving to raise at a cost of £2500.

HAZELWOOD, RYDE, I.W.—The twentieth annual meeting of this Home of Rest and Recreation for young men was held last week at Exeter Hall, when Mr. Geo. Williams presided. The report stated that nearly 20,000 visitors have enjoyed the advantages of the Home; the average number annually admitted for the past ten years has been 1880. The usefulness of the institution and its appreciation by the young men were clearly set forth. A large number have had bodily health restored, whilst others have been led to a personal knowledge of Christ. The young men have contributed four hundred guineas towards the recent enlargement of the building.

SOUTHSEA CONFERENCE.

The meetings of this Conference were held in the schoolroom of St. Simon's Church, from Tuesday to Friday—May 30 to June 2. The attendance was good, and included representatives of many sections of the Church of Christ. The early morning prayer-meetings were times of quiet but very real blessing, the address of Rev. John Wilkinson on Wednesday morning being especially practical and helpful. What could be more true, as a description of some prayers heard at prayer-meetings, than the illustration of a lady going into the stores, reading out a long list of articles such as the stores supply, but never waiting to carry away any single thing? Ludicrous though it appears, who has not heard prayers which exactly answer to the description?

The afternoon and evening addresses of Mr. Wilkinson, on Tuesday, were equally valuable and interesting. "Who is this?" the question so often recurring in the Scripture concerning Jesus, is still the question of the day, and will be to the end. The Bible-reading in which Mr. Wilkinson began to answer the question took us only a little way through the Scripture, and was valuable chiefly because it created an appetite for much more. Mr. Wilkinson urged the importance of studying the Bible geographically, taking a view of the whole range of Scripture; and geologically, digging down into a verse, and discovering its hidden meaning. As an illustration of the latter method, his exposition of Jer. xxx. 21 revealed Jesus as Prince, as Priest, and as Surety (see R.V. mar.). In the address upon the Second Advent in relation to the Jew, Mr. Wilkinson was, of course, at home. What a remarkable statement was that with which he commenced! In the Church, he said, there were many who were on the "down grade"; and many others who were looking for the Lord's second appearing. But he knew none who cherished this blessed hope who yet were on the "down grade," nor any on the "down grade" who looked for the Lord's personal pre-millennial advent. The fact is full of significance.

The address of Mr. Arnold, of the Evangelical Alliance, was an important testimony against the evils of disunion among Christians, especially on the Continent, and the blessings resulting from every attempt to manifest before others the oneness of the whole body of believers in Christ.

Dr. Elder Cumming's address upon 1 Cor. i. 26—31, showed the kind of persons whom God took up and used, and enforced the lesson that many might be too strong, but none too weak, for Him to use. In his illustration of this truth he made certain references to Moses, to Stephen, and to the Apostle Paul, which are not fully warranted by Scripture. Where, for example, do we get a hint that Moses was a feeble old man when God chose him? or that Stephen was removed by martyrdom because he was too strong a man for God to use?

The address of Rev. J. B. Figgis, of Brighton, on 1 Jno. ii. 28, was a careful and graceful exposition of abiding in Christ; and this was followed by practical exposition and application of 1 Jno. i. 3-8 by Pastor Geo. Wainwright. The aim of the speaker was to show that while unbroken fellowship with the Father and his Son Jesus Christ is the ideal life of the believer, it can become actual and experimental only as we "walk in the light." Yet our walk is never the basis of our fellowship, but only the condition on which we enjoy it. The blood—that is the shed blood—the atonement of Christ, is the only foundation, and no one will be so continually conscious of his need of cleansing by the blood as he who continually walks in the light. Among the other speakers were Rev. R. Graves Walker, Capt. Baring, Lord Radstock, and Rev. Lindsay Young; and at the Missionary Meeting on Thursday afternoon, Mr. Eugene Stock and Rev. J. Hudson Taylor.

The talks about Christian work after dinner, and the brief Bible expositions after tea, were interesting features of the Conference.

RATCLIFF STRANGERS' REST.—The monthly workers' meeting was held on Friday evening. Mr. Theodore Howard, who presided, spoke of the "Rest" as a place where workers had received training for the foreign mission field. Mr. J. T. Isaac, hon. sec., told of wonderful blessing on Whit-Monday, and pleaded for additional workers for the daily meetings. It was absolutely necessary, he added, to "spring clean" the "Rest," and for this purpose £30 is required. Mr. Eugene Stock gave a stirring account of his tour through Australia and India.

At the World's Fair.—3.

Since my last letter, Mr. Moody has been able more fully to mature his plans for the widespread evangelisation of Chicago. That there is ample need for such effort becomes day by day more apparent—not only to the stranger, but also to those residents who are concerned as to its spiritual welfare. There is a general slackness as to moral and religious matters with which even London cannot compare. The outward observance of the Lord's Day is reduced to a minimum; unless a special notice in the window announces otherwise, every shop is open then as on other days. The theatres have performances on Sunday afternoons and evenings; and the seven thousand "saloons" with which this city is cursed are practically open, the "Sunday closing" being confined to the drawing down of a window blind, while the unfastened doors invite all comers. In short, the "Continental" Sunday prevails in all its worst features.

For many years Mr. Moody has had a particular section of the city laid upon his heart, and to this his energies are being especially directed. Having first secured a three-storeyed shop, he has opened the ground floor as a mission hall, the upper rooms being devoted to sleeping and living accommodation for thirty of his students, whom he has for the time-being quartered there. Situate on a busy main thoroughfare, it cannot help attracting passers-by. At two p.m. the hall is opened for singing and conversation, while the neighbourhood is visited from house to house by the rest of the workers in view of the evening's work. A Gospel meeting, preceded by half-an-hour's singing, is held from seven to eight, followed by an hour for private conversation with inquirers. At 10 p.m. a second meeting of an hour's duration is held by another relay of workers, who also occupy an hour till midnight in dealing with the anxious and unsaved. By this means it is hoped to reach those whose only evening resort is the saloon bar, and already fruit is beginning to spring forth and bud.

THEATRE SERVICES.

In the same neighbourhood, indeed in the same street, the use has been acquired, on Sunday mornings, of a large theatre, with a seating capacity for about 3000 persons. Unfortunately the "business" of the house precludes its hire for Gospel work in the afternoon or evening, but the opening service yesterday morning was full of encouragement. "You needn't think we are going to get an audience down there for the asking," Mr. Moody assured his workers when the engagement was first made. "I know the district well, and I know that the working-men don't get to bed till one or two a.m., and they are not coming to an eleven o'clock meeting without some pressure. If we want an audience, we'll have to go out and get it, and that means work. We'll have admission by ticket only, and you'll have to besiege the sidewalk and the back streets, and get the people out."

Then began the work, and the helpers set to it with a will. Not that it was an easy task. One lady, with a heart full of love for the outcast, was met at one house after another with nothing but curses. At last, after a long climb upstairs, she reached the top of a rickety tenement, only to receive more vehement oaths than had been cast at her heretofore. Physically spent, and somewhat discouraged, she boldly tackled her assailant thus: "Now look here, I've had nothing but curses all this afternoon, so don't you begin. Please get me a drink of water instead, for I'm done up!" That "touch of nature" that "makes the whole world kin" had the desired effect, and resulted in a hospitable reception, that was as refreshing as it was unexpected.

Each night last week the hall was filled, and the workers had a busy time with inquirers at every meeting. When Sunday morning came all were rejoiced to see the great theatre packed from floor to ceiling, while the aisles and stage were thronged with those unable to obtain seats. And what of the audience? It was just such a one as was desired. That there was a good sprinkling of the "respectably dressed" element was at once apparent, but in the main it was composed of the class it was intended to reach. The one feature that struck the observer first of all was and a careful computation of row after row in all parts of the house showed that they formed from 75 to 80 per cent. of the audience,—and this in a city where the male element in the churches is represented by a lamentably small proportion. It was a gratifying indication that Mr. Moody, so dearly loved by thousands in the British Isles, is no less appreciated in his own country, and by the men as much as the women.

With great power he pictured the brief association of Herod and John the Baptist, showing that although the king had "heard John, and did many things because of him," he yet clung to one sin which shut heaven against him and filled his hands with the preacher's blood. At the close of an earnest address Mr. Moody invited any who were anxious, to meet him in the mission hall a hundred yards away; and there over two hundred men and women thronged in to leave their names and addresses as anxious to receive a book on Regeneration which he had promised. It was a really affecting sight. Side by side stood rough men and fashionably dressed ladies, negroes and working women and gentlemen, all anxiously pressing forward to have their names taken down. Quite a large number were visitors from other States who, passing through the city in pursuit of pleasure or business, were thus arrested by the Gospel message, delivered in such terms that the most illiterate could not fail to understand.

In the evening the First Congregational Church (which the pastor, Rev. Dr. Goodwin, has courteously placed at the disposal of Mr. Moody and his helpers for the entire summer) was crowded, and the evangelist had the joy of pointing many anxious ones to the Cross during the after-meeting which followed.

Rev. John McNeill and Mr. Merton Smith are daily expected to arrive in the city, and for them fresh fields of labour will be immediately opened up.

THE KESWICK MISSIONERS.

In addition to the work described above, the past week has been a busy one at Mr. Moody's own Church and Bible Institute, for besides the usual curriculum, meetings for the deepening of spiritual life have been held thrice daily by three missioners from the Keswick Convention, namely Revs. Hubert Brooke, Chas. Inwood, and G. H. Macgregor. The first is an English Episcopal clergyman, the second a Wesleyan Methodist from Ireland, the third a Scotch Presbyterian; and, since the spirit of worldliness, of pride, of half-heartedness, and general shortcomings, are, alas, prevalent in churches of every name, so that none can cast a stone at another, it is fitting that the various churches should be represented in those who, like these missioners, are seeking to stir up the Lord's people to a holy life.

Mr. Moody's great desire is to organise some really effective work among the masses in Chicago all through this summer, for which he is calling into requisition churches, theatres, tents, and halls for Gospel preaching by foreign visitors, as well as his own staff of helpers and students. But he believes in beginning at the right end. "We cannot lead others nearer to Christ than we are living ourselves," he says, "and it's no use working unless we are filled with the Spirit of God. We want to get down on our faces before Him, and humble ourselves at his feet. Let Him search us and try our thoughts, and see if there be any wicked way in us. This is why I have asked these brethren to come amongst us. They have been greatly used of God in many towns in Canada, and a wave of blessing has come to the churches they have visited. That's just what we want right here in Chicago; and if we get that, then our preaching will be with power, and our work will bear a precious harvest of souls."

Meetings have been held mornings, afternoons, and evenings, some in the Institute Lecture Hall, and some in the church. The discourses have all been on the line of urging a personal whole-hearted surrender to the will of God.

"LET GOD HAVE HIS WAY WITH YOU,"

is a sentence that often falls from one or other of the speakers, and this is practically the gist of the whole. It will involve the removal, the abandonment, the surrender of many a habit in daily life, many a custom in society, many a thought fostered in the heart, and many a sin cherished in the soul. But in the place of these comes the glorious calm, the peaceful rest, which characterises the presence of the Holy Spirit; and the child of God, set free from the bondage of a half-hearted service, goes forth in a new strength to do his Saviour's will. Some of the addresses dealt more especially with the side of surrender, others with that of receiving. But all have dovetailed in with an unbroken harmony, line upon line and precept upon precept, as from the Old Testament and the New the one lesson has been enforced, that no success can be achieved where devotion is incomplete. RANGOON LEPERS.

BY HENRY CHARLES MOORE,

Late of Rangoon.

Forty years of beneficent English rule have changed Rangoon from a collection of bamboo and mat huts, built over a malarial swamp, into a large and wealthy city. Pilgrims, as of yore, flock from all parts of the country to kneel on the platform of the Golden Pagoda, and repeat the Pali sentences which they committed to memory while children in the Buddhist schools. They gaze in admiration at the wonders of the famous building—the tall, gilded and jewelled spire glittering in the fierce sun with a brilliancy that is perfectly dazzling, the huge images of Gautama Buddha, the hideous dragons, the horrible frescoes, and enormous bells.

Truly the place is magnificent in its barbaric splendour; but there is one sight which fills every visitor, be he pilgrim, tourist, or European exile, with pity. On the steps of the main staircase which leads to the Pagoda platform sit, from morning till night, a number of poor Burmese lepers, who hold up their maimed hands and beg with husky voices from the passers-by. The condition of the lepers there and in other parts of Rangoon is something terrible. Most of them have their faces disfigured by the fearful disease; many are blind, and some that I saw were so mutilated about the hands and feet that they were compelled to crawl about on their elbows and knees. Unfortunately the number of lepers in Rangoon increases yearly, and will continue to do so, for as the railways open up the country, the lepers will quit their native villages, where they are burdens to their friends, and go down to Rangoon to beg at the Golden Pagoda. The pilgrims as they hurry by respond generously to their afflicted countrymen's appeals; but nevertheless leprosy is a subject which a Burman will not readily discuss with anyone, for he dislikes the very mention of it, preferring to forget, if possible, that the fearful disease exists. If by chance he should talk about it, he declares that lepers are being punished for their sins in a previous existence, and that if they lead meritorious lives they will be born again and live free from the terrible taint. It is quite certain, therefore, that while the Burmese remain Buddhists there is little probability of their ever establishing Leper Homes.

But cannot we at home do something for the poor Rangoon lepers? The Mission to Lepers in India would gladly start a home in Rangoon; but their rapidly extending work, and the increasing demands made upon them, render it impossible for them to do so, unless they receive the necessary funds. If they do open a home, I am confident that it will do incalculable good, and that once started it will receive liberal support from the wealthy merchants, European and Asiatic, who reside in Rangoon. A proof of this has been already received, an English resident hearing of the proposed home having generously offered to give twenty acres of ground as a site for it. This offer, coming from a gentleman who resides in Rangoon, proves unmistakably that the great need which exists for such an institution is recognised in that city, and it will be a very great pity indeed if through want of funds no advantage can be taken of it.

The home would be conducted on the same lines as the one which the Mission to Lepers in India support in Mandalay. That excellent home was started by the energy of Rev. W. R. Winston, of the Wesleyan Missionary Society, who, being struck by the pitiable condition of the lepers in that city, collected funds, and had the place built previous to his departure from the country on furlough. Upon his successor, Rev. A. H. Bestall, fell the duty of gathering in the first inmates, and this he did by going himself to their haunts and persuading them to enter the home. Knowing and thoroughly appreciating its advantages, they come in willingly, and at the present time there are over fifty inmates. A home at Rangoon would undoubtedly be as successful as the one at Mandalay, and I trust sincerely that all who can help will speedily communicate with Mr. Wellesley C. Bailey, the Mission to Lepers in India, 17, Glengyle Terrace, Edinburgh.

THE CHINA INLAND MISSION.

THE annual meetings of this Mission, held at the Conference Hall, Mildmay Park, on Tuesday week, were largely attended, and marked by much spiritual power.

Mr. B. BROOMHALL made a brief statement as to the progress of the work and the number of missionaries. Last year seventeen new missionaries had been sent out to China from this country, seven from North America, and six from Australia, besides twenty-five Scandinavians, and three Germans. This year already fifteen new labourers have gone forth. Thus there are at present on the staff of the China Inland Mission 365 from this land, forty-two from North America, and thirty-four from Australia, while there are 111 associates and others working under the direction of the Mission. Thus the total is shown of 552 C.I.M. missionaries. The income raised at home was £24,632, and in China and elsewhere £9860, showing a certain growth, but not in proportion to the increase in workers. The present stations and out-stations are 207, the communicants number 3637, the hospitals and dispensaries forty-four, and the opium refuges twenty. Notwithstanding the prospering hand of God on the service, the need in China is still unspeakably great, and many more witnesses for Christ are sadly wanted amongst the millions of China.

Mr. GEORGE WILLIAMS, who presided, spoke very warmly of his deep interest in the Mission which, he believed, God is wonderfully using in the accomplishment of his purposes.

Rev. J. HUDSON TAYLOR introduced quite a large number of missionaries present on the platform, explaining parenthetically, in reply to some who might ask why so many are at home instead of at their posts of duty, that it must be remembered there are now over 550 missionaries, and if these have a furlough only once in ten years, there would be fifty missionaries at home at a time. Mr. Taylor reminded his friends that it was four years since he was present at the annual meeting; hence it seemed but natural he should glance at some of the events which had taken place since 1889. Reviewing these very rapidly, Mr. Taylor recalled the Shanghai Conference and its issue in the preparation of three new versions of the Bible by a united committee; his own missionary tour in Australia; and the riots in China—anxious and trying times in which every member of the C.I.M. has been graciously preserved. Passing on to spiritual results, Mr. Taylor gave no figures, but showed that in spite of hostility and riots the blessing has been greater and more definite than ever. There have been more converts and more baptisms than in any previous year, while at this moment there are about a thousand more candidates for baptism than there were at this time last year. For all these things those interested in God's work in China ought surely to render praise and thanksgiving.

Mr. CECIL POLHILL-TURNER, who came next, passed but lightly over the peril and sufferings which he and his wife encountered in their attempt to reach the Tibetans; nor, indeed, are they discouraged from the enterprise, for ere long they hope to return to the same frontier post. Of this, however, he said but little, dwelling rather on the condition of things in Tibet, on the openings God had given among the Lamas, and on the entrance gained from Si-ning on the north and Sung-pan further to the south. He asked much prayer for the people of Tibet, Mongolia, and Turkestan—all within the Chinese empire.

Miss M. MURRAY told of eight years' service in China, of work at Yang-chau and among the children, and in connection with the Training Home. She thanked God for permitting her to go to China, whither she hoped ere long to return.

Mrs. HUDSON BROOMHALL gave a delightful account of work in Ta-ning, a small city in Shan-si, where God had given great blessing. The sneer at Bible work, quoted in our last issue from The Catholic Times, received an effective rejoinder in the testimony borne by this sister, that the most useful native pastor in the place, and formerly a Buddhist priest, was converted simply through reading the Gospel of Mark, a copy of which had found its way to him.

Miss GERALDINE GUINNESS, in the course of a glowing address, told of her own longing to get back to China and to the river women, among whom she has already laboured much. Referring to a startling diagram issued by the C.I.M., showing the heathen population of China as 250 black squares, while the Christian converts are represented by a tiny white dot in the corner of one of these squares, Miss Guinness dwelt tellingly on China's unutterable need, notwithstanding all that has been done. God's people need to be awakened on the matter, for, after all that has been said, they do not seem to realise the condition of things in China. Illustrating what can be done when the heart is really touched, the speaker told of a poor East-ender, who the other day gave, out of a weekly income of 5s., a gift of 10s. for mission work; and of a board school teacher who devoted to the Lord's work £40 out of her small savings. There are many conventions, consecration meetings, and so on, but the voice of the Lord still seems to sound, saying:

"BE REAL, BE REAL."

Miss WILLIAMSON described the Lord's dealings in the Mission House at Shanghai, where in making a home for brethren and sisters coming to and fro, or studying, and sometimes sick and dying, she believed she was doing genuine service for God.

Miss BROOMHALL followed briefly on the needs of the women of China, and possibilities of work among them.

Mr. GRAHAM BROWN spoke of work at Lan-chau in far Kan-suh. With regard to what friends at home could do, the speaker cited in a very effective way, the following facts. A class of mill girls in Belfast, becoming interested in China, raised some money and sent it out to support a Bible woman at Lan-chau. Just then, however, no Bible woman could be had, and so the missionaries secured a colporteur and set him to work. One day when selling his books in a temple, this colporteur was blessed to an old Chinese general—a famous man—who, it seemed, had been seeking peace for twenty-six years. Thus the humble offering of a few Irish mill girls was used by God to the conversion of a fine old general.

THE EVENING MEETING.

Mr. R. C. MORGAN, who presided in the evening, said that the touching and graphic story of the C.I.M., written by Miss Guinness, shows that all through its history the director and the missionaries have been consciously dealing with God. One great tendency of modern theological thought is to remove the centre of Christian doctrine from the Atonement to the Incarnation. We owe the preservation of Gospel truth not so much to thinkers as to workers, and missionaries dealing with heathen sinners feel the necessity of the old Gospel to do effective service. A cheering feature at present is that the churches are becoming alive in regard to missions. One living soul in a Laodicean Church, who opens the door to Jesus Christ, may be the means of arousing all its members to the great command of their ascending Lord.

Rev. J. HUDSON TAYLOR added a few points to his afternoon's address. Some had asked how these 550 missionaries are sustained without a guarantee; the answer is that the living God still lives and still cares for his servants. "Those who trust Him wholly, find Him wholly true."

Among the succeeding speakers of the evening, were Mr. WALTER SLOAN, who made an appeal to young men; Miss BLACK, who told of work among women in Hupeh, and of first fruits at Lao-ko-keo; Miss S. E. JONES, who had to tell of journeyings oft, and of witness for Christ amongst boatmen and many outlying classes; Mr. HERBERT TAYLOR, who as a child of five formed one of the famous Lammermuir party in 1866, and who has for ten years been labouring as a missionary in China; and Mr. DUNCAN KAY, who told of God's power in South Shan-si, and of the deliverance of even opium smokers from the bondage and fetters of sin.

TESTIMONY AND JUDGMENT.

Dr. PIERSON, in his closing address, took the words of our Lord in Matt. xxiv. 14 as indicating a great principle of Divine action rather than a definite point in the future, or a prophetical sign. The principle here is—first testimony, then judgment; and this is a universal law illustrated in a thousand ways in revelation and in history. Following this line of thought, the speaker went back to the earliest times, and showed how Noah's rejected testimony ended in the flood; how the testimony and warnings of the prophets ended in the seventy years' captivity; how Israel's rejection of Christ ended in the destruction of Jerusalem, and the long exile of the Jews from their own land. Coming down to later times he showed how Spain smothered the light of the Gospel in blood and fire, and how she has reaped judgment in falling from the front rank amongst nations to the lowest place. There are present and solemn lessons from these considerations. The nations of Great Britain and America have, in these days, marvellous opportunities, never has the Gospel been more fully and faithfully preached than it is now in these lands; yet how many reject it? Moreover, nationally, what an amount of harm they are doing by the drink traffic, the opium trade, and the licensing of vice in India. Inasmuch as nations and churches in their corporate capacity have no future, judgment must come in this life, therefore have we cause to fear it may be inflicted speedily on these highly privileged but unheeding peoples.

Turning from such public matters to the question of missions, the speaker showed similarly how great the opportunities, how wide the open doors, how pressing the needs, how urgent the command; and yet the churches are, to a large extent, supine and unresponsive. Never was there such abundant wealth at the command of the members of the Christian churches, and yet missions at home and abroad are suffering for lack of funds to such an extent that retrenchment has to be considered and the abandonment of strategetic positions contemplated. What must be the inevitable consequence? The paralysis of the churches themselves. Already formalism, rationalism, and worldliness are creeping in and threatening to eat the vitals out of our churches. One of the most potent remedies is activity in service. As Lord Shaftesbury said, the best refuge against scepticism is to be fully engaged in redeeming and uplifting men. In saving others, we do much to save ourselves. Saints must be separate from the world, divorced from the earthly and carnal, and charged with the subtil magnetism of love and spiritual life. To be so we must abide in Him, and abiding in Him we will do his commandments, and his command is, "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature."

The annual meetings of the North American Auxiliary of the Mission were held lately in Toronto, Mr. H. W. Frost presiding. Addresses were given by Mr. E. M. McBrier, Miss E. Webb, Rev. John M'Carthy, Mrs. F. A. Steven, and other missionaries; also by Revs. Hubert Brooke, C. Inwood, and G. H. C. Macgregor, the "Keswick" deputation who were visiting Canada.

PRESBYTERIANS AND JEWS.

IN his customary report to the Free Church of Scotland Assembly, as convener of the Committee of Jewish Missions, Dr. Wells, of Glasgow, said:—

Our mission stations are the same as last year, with one exception. Dr. Torrance is now in his new house, and the second storey of our new hospital at Tiberias is a-building, though we have not yet got money enough for it. Better mission buildings than these you will not find between Dan and Beersheba, and they add vastly to the power of our mission. One ward at the hospital is to be called "The Milne Ward." We have £400 for a memorial to Mrs. Findlay. When we get another £400 for this object we shall build a house at Safed.

Mrs. Tomory, a most valuable missionary, has been taken home. Mr. Ewing is with us, but the bodies of his young wife and infant daughter rest in "a lone Syrian grave." Dr. and Mrs. Torrance have also had to resign their twin sons. We have thus such a hold on the Holy Land as the bones of Joseph in Shechem gave the children of Israel. Mr. Bisset has hopefully begun his work in Constantinople, and both Drs. Hannington and Torrance have, the other day, got assistants, one of whom is a convert from our own mission.

NEVERMORE.

NEVERMORE with his wife and his children,
Shall he sit by the old hearthstone;
Evermore with the saints and the angels
He shall dwell by the Father's Throne.

Nevermore shall we weep with his weeping,
By the Jordan's lonely tide;
Evermore we may sing with his singing,
Beyond, on the heavenward side.

Nevermore in the shadows of Horeb
Shall he quake at the sin-searching word;
Evermore in the glory of Hermon
He shall walk in the light of the Lord.

Nevermore in the valley of sorrow
The cross and its shame shall he bear;
Evermore in the empire of Jesus
The crown of a king he shall wear.

CHINAMEN IN CANADA.

Chinamen who come to Canada are nearly all from the province of Canton. Generally they come from the lower ranks of Chinese society. "Why did you leave China, Sam?" Sam replied with an expressive shrug, "Dis countree good,—nice; no workee, no cents, in China."

From 90 to 120 Chinamen are at present settled in Montreal, engaged, to a man, in the washee, washee business. The entrance fee of a Chinaman to this country is fifty dollars. One laundry will take, say, 600 dollars per year. Out of this a Chinaman will save about 300 dollars. In Montreal the Chinamen, as a rule, are thrifty to a degree, extremely temperate, and of few known bad habits. There is but one Chinawoman in Montreal, and no children. Conversation with the Chinese is carried on with extreme difficulty.

"Why didn't you bring your wife, John?" "Your woman, gell, nice gell; Chinawoman, where is she?" "Na, na, me no Chinawoman. I dunno."

In all his troubles, with the customs or the law—and they are many and irritating—the Chinaman seeks the help of lawyer Lighthall, and so in their spiritual troubles. Mr. Lighthall is the superintendent of the Chinese Sunday-school, held in a large upper room of the American Presbyterian Church. Miss Lighthall superintends the Emmanuel Church Chinese Sunday-school. The average Sunday attendance of Chinese scholars is about sixty.

A talk with Mr. Lighthall last Sunday revealed much that is interesting and new regarding the character of the Chinese located here. "A most striking characteristic of these men," said Mr. Lighthall, "is their sense of gratitude, and their practical way of showing it. They never miss an opportunity of making substantial presents to their teachers. That great chest is full of costly presents. There is one, a magnificent table cloth, imported from China, which must have cost some hundreds of dollars."

The schoolroom presented a novel appearance. Each Chinaman is taught by a young lady from the Sunday schools. The contrasts are striking. The pupil bends earnestly over his books, plodding assiduously from A to Z of the alphabet, or enunciating in pigeon-English, "De bird, ee sing in de tree," or "Mr. Ah Sing, ee hab new 'at."

"This," said Mr. Lighthall, "is the only method of reaching them to teach them the language, and they are very anxious to learn, very industrious, and the young ladies are very patient."

"Have you gentlemen teachers?"

Mr. Lighthall smiled. "Ladies are so patient, you see—they are very good. Of course, we are always glad of teachers, gentlemen or ladies. For instance, had we five more lady teachers, we should at once have six more Chinese scholars."

The Chinaman likes singing. Hymns, songs, and solos were sung in English, with an occasional chorus in Chinese. Throughout the entire Chinese colony, the beneficial influence of these Sunday-schools is felt.

On the counters of the laundries, one finds spelling books, from A B C to moral tales for the young. In many respects the mental capacity of the Chinaman is childlike. Outside expressions relating to washing, the Chinaman's knowledge of English is defective. Inquiries as to their social life, habits, etc., were pursued under difficulties.

"You're a big man, Mr. Ling." "Yeh, yeh; me belly (very) big man; me hab store—londree an' store—me big man. Me go Amelican Plesbyteleen school—Misser Lie-awe, ee good man—heap nice. Mees Lie-awe—she good le Chineeman; belly (very) heap nice gell," and Mr. Ling smiled voraciously.

"Now, Mr. Ling, how do you amuse yourself at night—play, game, lark; good time?" "What dat?" "What you do when no washee washee?" "Me play le God." "What sort of game is that?" "Play, play" (energetically). Mr. Ling turned up his eyes and pointed upwards; then it dawned upon the visitor that the prayer was Mr. Ling's recreation. (As previous expressions have shown, the Chinaman cannot pronounce the letter "r," so he employs "l" instead.)

As far as can be learned about the social life of the Chinamen here, sitting down seems to be the favourite amusement. He dwells in constant fear of custom and police officers. The Chinamen's houses are dingy, but cleanly as a rule. Soapsuds flavour the atmosphere, and the Chinaman likes warmth. He cuts his own hair and trains his pigtail with all the solicitude of a tender parent.

In many respects the conduct of our Chinese colony affords examples worthy to be followed by the more "civilised" westerner, notably in that of total abstinence from alcoholic liquors—on which follow thrift, health and happiness, even though it be in a laundry.—Montreal Weekly Witness.

HOW TO SHINE FOR JESUS.

Matthew v. 14-16.

There's a mighty lot of darkness in this wicked world of ours,
And it's sometimes hard a-fighting Principalities and Powers,
But, that don't prevent us lab'ring in the power of Grace Divine.—
If there wasn't any darkness, we wouldn't need to shine!

The Lord of Life and Glory hath died mankind to save,
But millions haven't heard it, as they hasten to the grave;
They are calling us to help them, while in bonds of sin they pine,—
Brothers! with these facts before us, don't you think we ought to shine?

There are many stumbling Christians, who profess the Lord to know,
But, their hearts are filled with sadness, and their faces tell you so;
That great joy they haven't tasted of abiding in the Vine,
Which is Jesus Christ, our Saviour, who enables us to shine.

Let us unto Jesus listen, with a loving, trustful heart,
And go where He may lead us, never from our Lord to part;
Let us give Him all we have, and our wills to Him resign,
If we don't do what He tells us, well, we can't expect to shine.

We need not be ascetic, and, like monks and nuns, retire;
But, the Gospel's glorious liberty to publish we'll aspire;
Not get beneath a bushel; nor on beds of ease, recline,
If we don't let people see us, how can they see us shine?

So, since long has He stood knocking, being wounded by our sin,
Our heart's door wide we'll open, and the Saviour welcome in;
With our might, the things we'll do, that His Spirit doth incline,
And, crowning thus King Jesus, the Lord will through us shine.

MAY CHILDREN HELP THE HOSPITALS?

It has been suggested that the children of the richer classes at home, and the thousands of children who attend Sunday-schools might be pleased with the opportunity of contributing their share to the church collections of the Hospital Sunday Fund. Those who have not specially thought of the subject are inclined to ask why the children's poor little minds should be worried about hospital collections, and why their small pence should be diverted from chocolates and toys into the channel of hospital support? Our experience of children is that their minds are by no means worried when they are appealed to on the subject of giving, but on the contrary, they are usually very proud to be invited to share the responsibilities of their elders.

There are, indeed, some persons who say that the hospitals are quite out of date, and show an extraordinary lack of modern enterprise in not having enlisted the sympathy and help of the children long ago. We are inclined to believe there is some truth in this. The enterprising total abstainer has been much wiser in his day, and has made an effort to include the whole rising generation in his Bands of Hope and Temperance Guilds. So, too, have the missionary societies seen their account in enlisting the sympathies of the young on behalf of the heathen children in distant lands. But are there no children's hospitals, and no children's cots in general hospitals, where suffering and helpless little ones lie; little ones whom their happier and more prosperous fellow-children would gladly smile or cry with, or still more gladly help to happiness and recovery by contributing out of a generous self-denial a few spare pence, or even spare shillings or half-crowns?

The children of to-day will be grown men and women before we elders know where we are, and they will be likely to be much more generous and sympathetic towards hospitals in middle and old age if they have been generous towards them when young. The object of the supporters of voluntary hospitals is to persuade the whole population to voluntarily tax itself according to its means for the help of the sick poor. In no other way can this desirable and statesmanlike object be so widely accomplished as by the systematic training of children in hospital support. —The Hospital.

GEORGE YARD MISSION.

As a quiet work for God, carried on with remarkable success, the George-yard Ragged Schools and Mission ranks among the most interesting in London. For forty years or so the devoted George Holland has laboured in Whitechapel, and never with more joy than now, never with more cordial co-operation on the part of other Christian workers.

The thirty-ninth annual meeting of the Mission was held on Wednesday evening last, in the large room of 87, High-street, Whitechapel. The chair was occupied by Lord Radstock, and several friends delivered addresses, but the proceedings did not so much derive character from the stimulating words that were spoken, as from the very entertaining report that was given of the many-sided efforts of which the Mission House is the home and centre.

The meeting opened with a few hearty words by Rev. Ernest A. B. Sanders, rector of Whitechapel, who referred with joy to the sincere bond of union and friendship subsisting between the workers of the Mission and those of the parish church on the opposite side of the road. The work is carried on in dependence upon God, and with one two-fold aim—the glory of God and the salvation of souls.

A more comprehensive report than Mr. Holland outlined, it would be difficult for an accomplished précis writer to draft. Exertions of various kinds, among children and adults, were in every case justified as to their need, described as to particular methods of operation, and reported upon as to the success achieved. The last point could not be dealt with so fully and definitely as the others, for it is not often the privilege of the sower to share in the pleasures of reaping the spiritual harvest. Who shall estimate the influence of the varied labours among the children, the young men and women, and the mothers who assemble week by week in the rooms of the Mission House, for social entertainment and instruction in Divine things? In the schools, as well as in the other gatherings, the Bible is the principal book, and the teaching imparted has led young and old to trust the Saviour and enter upon the life of faith. Many friends have shown a kindly interest in the various agencies, including the Duchess of Teck and the Princess May, whose generosity in inviting poor women to Kingston-on-Thames, and providing for their comfort while there, was acknowledged, as were also acts of liberality on the part of Lady Compton and others. Mr. Holland had to mourn the loss of friends who have long been warm supporters of the work, but he was nevertheless able to report that all needs had been satisfied without debt being incurred.

In the course of a brief address, Lord Radstock spoke of the source of power in work for God. The next speaker was Rev. W. Frith, who referred to his forty years' acquaintance with Mr. Holland, and called attention to the great results of Bible instruction in the schools and classes. Some hearty words were spoken by Rev. T. Hope Steen, who eulogised the work, in which his devoted wife (formerly Miss Brown) continues to take an active part. What with visitors from a distance and Whitechapel friends, there was a goodly muster. To those who may wish to know more of the Mission, we would repeat Mr. Holland's invitation for them to go to the Mission House, and inspect for themselves the thirty or forty agencies in full operation.

INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSONS.

JUNE 18.

MESSIAH'S KINGDOM. Mal. iii. 1-12.

GOLDEN TEXT, verse 17.

NOTHING is known of Malachi beyond his name. In i. 1 he does not mention either his family or his office. God's message is valuable, though nothing is known of the messenger.

The only means of judging as to the time when he appeared is by finding the period in the history of the Jews when such evils as the prophet rebukes existed. These evils have been described as "a niggardly slovenliness, amounting to profanity in the temple service—the people withholding tithes and suitable offerings, the priests and Levites passing animals for sacrifice they should have rejected—an unfaithfulness on the part of the priests to the responsibilities of their office, especially in the administration of the law; intermarriage with aliens; and a scepticism which was becoming bold and defiant." In Neh. xiii. it will be seen that these were just the evils which Nehemiah found when he returned to Jerusalem after his visit to Persia. We may consider the prophet as being contemporary with the later years of Nehemiah. If he "appeared slightly before Nehemiah's return, then the practical measures of the governor would seem to be a natural fulfilment and execution of the threats of the prophet. Nehemiah came suddenly to the temple, and cleansed it; he was a swift witness against all wrongdoers; he appeared in the spirit of Elijah, enforcing the law of Moses" (comp. Neh. xiii. 8, 25; Mal. iii. 5, iv. 5). This is, of course, only a limited fulfilment of the prophecy, which anticipated the first advent of the Messiah, and looks forward to the Second Advent as well.

THE FORERUNNER (1).—The people's question (ii. 17) was an implied charge against God for dealing unjustly. Nations that knew not God were more prosperous than his own people. How could that be just? Eastern kings used to send messengers before them to prepare the way for their chariots and armies. So would God send one before Him to do a very needful preparatory work. The prophecy finds its fulfilment in John the Baptist (Matt. xi. 10; Mark i. 2, 3; Luke i. 76). His message, like that of Malachi to his generation, was one of reproof, and a call to repentance. If they do not know and acknowledge their sin the coming of the Judge could only mean judgment to them. In every individual life the same is true, the work of conviction prepares the way for receiving the Saviour. They are not fit to receive Him, and can obtain no blessing from Him, who manifest the spirit of the people in Malachi's day, and of the Pharisees and Sadducees in the days of the Baptist.

MESSIAH'S COMING (1-5).—He came literally to the temple—"his temple." He was carried there as a babe (Luke ii. 22); appeared again as a boy (Luke ii. 46); and as a man He entered to cleanse it (Matt. xxi. 12). It was this event which made the second temple more glorious than the first (Hag. ii. 9). He claims as his temple every heart to which He comes. Suddenly, as the priest who superintended the temple arrangements, "who came," says Edersheim, "suddenly and unexpectedly." In this matter his first and his second comings are alike (Luke xxi. 35). His name denotes that that He came to fulfil the covenant made by God with Abraham (Luke ii. 72, 73). What this covenant is Heb. viii. 6-13 explains.

His coming will necessarily be for judgment. Refiner's fire and fuller's soap. "Two sorts of material for cleansing are mentioned — the one severe, where the baser metals are inworked with the rich ore; the other mild, where the defilement is easily separable?"—Pusey. Whether He comes to them or to us, his first work is the destruction of that which is evil. "Either He must by his grace consume the sin within us, or must consume us with it." The work of purification is a delicate one. The refiner "sits" (3) that he may watch more intently, and may remove the metal as soon as the process is completed. A silversmith when asked about this matter said, "The silver is sufficiently refined when I can see my own image reflected in it." That is what our Refiner desires. Note that this judgment needed to begin with the house of Levi, the priestly house: and until they were purified their offerings could not be accepted (4). The offerer always determines the value of his offering. The people (5) would then know where the God of judgment was (ii. 17). Their sins were just those against which God's judgments had been pronounced. The list closes with the main defect, which was the root of all the rest—"and fear not me." They who cast off the fear of God lay themselves open to manifold sins.

A REMONSTRANCE AND A CHALLENGE (6—12).—God sets his unchanging faithfulness to them over against their constant unfaithfulness to Him (6, 7). They were making the drought a reason for withholding some of their gifts due to the temple, defrauding God in order to meet their own need. Nothing but a curse can fall on those who rob God (8, 9). The challenge is, in effect: "Pay me my dues; see that my house lacks not, and the blessing will be greater than your capacity to receive." They sought by being niggardly towards God to keep what they possessed. A better method is that which God suggests. The principle applies to every life. To lose everything for Him is to gain in the largest measure.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, JUNE 11.—NEH. V.

THE prospects of the poor people among the returned exiles were deplorable. There had been deficient rains and poor harvests (Hag. i. 6-11), and they had mortgaged their lands to their richer brethren, and had even sold their children to pay the royal taxes and procure means of subsistence. The rich had taken advantage of their necessities, oppressing them with grievous exactions and heavy usury. When Nehemiah heard of it, he seems to have withstood the wrong with strenuous, though lonely, earnestness, depending on his God. And, in a great assembly, he carried the day against selfishness and greed.

What may not one earnest man do? He may be absolutely destitute of all human allies. But if God is with him, strengthening his heart and influencing the minds of men, no weapon formed against him shall prosper, and every tongue rising in judgment shall be condemned. But before that, your own hands must be clean. Nehemiah was able to point to those whom he had bought out of captivity; and taking his place among the rest, said, Let us (10).

There is nothing here to condemn mortgage or interest in themselves. Each is a perfectly legitimate method of trade, except when undue advantage is taken of a brother's necessities.

His income as cupbearer must have been considerable for him to be able to support the needful expenditure, but he gladly consecrated it to God's service. Faraday said, "I have no time to make money." "The Christian is withheld by the fear of bringing discredit on his God." What a restraining consideration. "So did not I, because of the fear of God!"

MONDAY, JUNE 12.—NEH. VI.

How often Satan tries to call us off from our work for God. He cannot endure to see us engaged so eagerly on our Master's business, and therefore raises up all sorts of hindrances and hostilities. Amid all these, we have but one duty to perform. We must lose ourselves in our work. Ours to reply, "I am doing a great work, I cannot come down; why should the work cease?" If we will see to God's business, He will see to our safety.

Slander is a favourite weapon in Satan's hands; and at first the soul is frightened to think of the consequences which will accrue, when all men speak evil, however falsely. At these times, the first instinct is to answer the slander, and defend ourselves. But we soon find that all we can do avails nothing. Do not leave your work to defend your character. Go on doing what God has given you to do, and leave Him to vindicate you. "Now, O God, strengthen Thou my hands." This book abounds in such blessed ejaculations.

False friends, who pretend to prophesy in God's name, are even more to be dreaded than open foes. We must learn to discern the spirits. The counsel which savours of self is always to be suspected. Note that Nehemiah accounted that to have feared would have been to sin. But God was with the little band. The work was wrought of God. And when God is with us, none can stand against us. Private whisperings and public opposition are alike in vain.

TUESDAY, JUNE 13.—NEH. VII.

Faithful men are they whom the Church and the world needs—men who will do what they are told to do, and will persevere in doing it, undeterred by frowns, unaffected by flattery. Could these words be written as the true epitaph of our lives, "He was a faithful man, and feared God among many."

There was shrewdness in the arrangement that each man should be appointed to the watch over against his own house. We will do most for our own. And those who do not care for the tender nurslings of the home, are not likely to be of much service to the commonwealth.

Again this enumeration of the restored exiles (Ezra ii.). How mindful God is of his own. There are slight variations in the numbers, showing the presence of the human element here and throughout this book. The Spirit of God is indifferent to these differences, so long as the essential truths of revelation are unimpaired.

Let us rejoice that the Priest, with the Urim and Thummim, has come and stands among us in his risen glory (see Rev. i.).

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 14.—NEH. VIII.

An interesting and solemn spectacle! Surely this was the first public Bible reading! When will the people be again as hungry for the Word of God, as these Jews, who stood in the open space, from early dawn till the scorching noon. What reverence for the Word! "When Ezra opened the Book, all the people stood up." What holy worship! When he blessed the great God, all the people answered, Amen, amen. What a model to us all! "They gave the sense, so that they understood." What searching of heart! "The people wept when they heard the words of the law."

There is nothing which weakens us so as unrestrained remorse. Contriteness of heart is wholesome and helpful, but excessive grief incapacitates us for our duties. It is well to cultivate holy joy: the joy of sin forgiven, of acceptance with God, of blessed fellowship with Christ, of hope that anchors us to the unseen, and cannot be ashamed. You may not be able to joy in yourself or your surroundings, but you may always rejoice in the Lord.

How wise it was in the people to translate the Divine commandments into instant obedience, as in this celebration of the feast of tabernacles. No wonder that there was very great gladness. Accuracy in obedience is one of the great provocatives of perennial joy.

THURSDAY, JUNE 15.—NEH. IX.

The best way is the old way of separation and confession. The people gave as much time to the Word of God as they did to worship and confession. The outgoing of the soul to God should be balanced by an equal incoming of God to us. Those who first have cried unto the Lord are they who can lead the prayers of the people.

Notice the constituent elements of true prayer. There should be ascription and adoration; a loving enumeration of the goodness and mercy which have marked the past; a lowly confession of sin; a thankful acknowledgment of the patience and pity of God's dealings; entreaty for Divine help; consecration in a covenant between God and the suppliant soul. All these elements appear in this prayer.

Several gems are here. "Foundest his heart faithful": God tries us before he employs us. "Thou forsookest them not": we may prove faithless, but God never forsakes, even in the wilderness, because of his manifold mercies. The good spirit to instruct; delight in his great goodness; many times delivered; the withdrawn shoulder; Thou are just in all; Thou hast dealt truly, and we wickedly. All these are notes which are struck in our own experience.

FRIDAY, JUNE 16.—NEH. X.

Here was consecration on a grand scale: a whole people entering into covenant with God. When separation from sin has been faithfully performed, there is always a yearning for the other side of separation to God.

The consecration-covenant involved—first, obedience; then the purity of the, holy seed from intermarriage with heathen peoples; next, the observance of the Sabbath, and of the Sabbatic year. In addition, there was the yearly charge for the maintenance of Divine worship. We may well go over these items prayerfully and earnestly, asking whether we know these things in our own experience or practice.

The great lack among Christian people is system in the apportioning of their income. They leave their giving to impulse, and thus often give the merest fraction of their possessions to the cause of God. We should give at least a tenth, and as much more as we can afford. If only all who read these words would resolve to imitate these impoverished exiles, and set aside the tithe of all they earn or receive, they would discover the luxury of giving, and a new zest in receiving. When the first fruits of wages and revenue is deemed to be holy, the whole lump is also holy.

SATURDAY, JUNE 17.—NEH. XI.

Jerusalem, the holy city! It seems difficult to understand how that title was deserved. But it shows that God's ideal cannot be wholly frustrated by the sins of men. It was better to dwell there willingly than because the lot had so decided. One volunteer is worth a dozen pressed men. Oh, that God would incline our hearts to choose and do his will, that we may not need to be compelled to it by the stern discipline of his providence!

There must be some to have the oversight of the outward business of God's house (16 v., R.V.), whilst others begin the thanksgiving in prayer, and others keep watch at the gates. Let us not forget to make a settled provision for those who attend to the service of God's house, as every day requires. To care for the proper ordering and maintenance of Divine worship is honouring to God.

As for the rest of Israel, each man dwelt in his inheritance. Let us not forget this lesson. All things are ours in Christ; let us appropriate and use the abundant provision of God's love. "Ye are enriched in Him."

THE LATE

MR. BENJAMIN THOMAS MARSHALL.

SUPERINTENDENT OF THE SOLDIERS' INSTITUTE, GIBRALTAR.

There are few dwellers in our seagirt country for whom a sailor does not possess a special attraction. The subject of this brief sketch added to the frank, hearty manliness that usually characterises the British sailor the trait of being an ardent follower of Jesus, and a faithful, outspoken witness for Him, both ashore and afloat. Born in North London in May, 1862, he had the great blessing of godly, praying parents; his father was a Baptist minister. The last two years of his school-life were spent at Frankfort-on-the-Maine, Germany, where he gained a conversational knowledge of German and French that afterwards proved most useful in his work for the Master.

About Easter, 1879, he started on his first voyage as an apprentice in the mercantile navy in the Argonaut, owned by Messrs. Anderson, Anderson, and Co. Early in 1881 he was transferred to the Holmesdale. When outward-bound on this vessel Benjamin Marshall experienced the great change which, in his case, very markedly made all things new. The captain of the ship, an earnest and well-instructed man of God, was the instrument used by the Divine Spirit in bringing him into the light and liberty of the Gospel. Immediately on his arrival in Melbourne he was baptized. During a fourth voyage to Australia he wrote of first efforts in speaking for Jesus to those around him, and of the joy and profit derived from fellowship with some of the Lord's people in Melbourne.

With the spring of 1883 came the successful passing of examinations in navigation and seamanship, and his appointment as one of the officers of the s.s. Maroon. Then followed a series of voyages to and from the West Indies, extending over nearly three years, and marked by an ever-growing activity in making known the Gospel on board his own ship. He began by distributing tracts every Sunday among his men. He wrote of feeling a lack of courage in standing up for his Master, but the letters soon told of growing boldness in testimony, until he was enabled, while in port at Jamaica, to hold meetings on board for the crew and for the negroes employed in discharging cargo. The negroes proved most attentive listeners, and begged him to continue the meetings regularly. They were not without blessed results.

In 1885, on a homeward voyage from Jamaica, he had a most remarkable and direct answer to prayer. The Maroon, of which he was now first officer, had had a long spell of such bad, thick weather that it had been impossible to take the bearings for some time, and the captain and officers were filled with anxiety, as it was thought she must be somewhere near the Azores. There seemed no prospect whatever of a change in the weather, and real danger of running on the rocks was imminent. Mr. Marshall left the bridge where he was on watch to go to breakfast, and afterwards went to his cabin, as was his daily wont, for a little reading and prayer. In his anxiety the portion for the morning hour in "Daily Light" (Feb. 24) came to him with Divine power. The head text was Ezekiel xxxvi. 37. He fell on his knees and asked that a sufficient glimpse of the sun might be granted to take the bearings. Rising in simple faith, he went, sextant in hand, on to the bridge. It was ten minutes to nine; the observation had to be taken at nine, and the weather seemed as thick as ever. Just at the hour, as he stood waiting, the clouds parted as though an unseen hand had drawn aside a curtain, the sun's rays shot through the narrow rift, and the correct longitude was got. The sun was then again veiled behind the clouds.

But this was not enough. At noon the latitude must also be found, and for this prayer again went up and again prevailed, the occurrence of 9 o'clock repeating itself at 12. The ship was found to be close on to the Azores, and twenty minutes' more steaming would have placed her in imminent peril. Her course was altered and the danger averted. Such an incident is the best commentary on the words, "The eyes of the Lord are upon the righteous, and his ears are open unto their cry." Against this portion in "Daily Light" for February 24 Mr. Marshall wrote these words: "Off Azores, 1885.—Proved and found true."

Early in 1886 he was transferred to the Orient, one of the royal mail steamers of the Orient Steam Navigation Company. Before joining the Orient he had successfully passed his last examination, taking a captain's certificate. His successes in these examinations were to him always a matter of direct answer to prayer. His progress throughout his sea life was rapid; where many young men were kept waiting for promotion and a ship, he gained time. He found it more difficult on these larger vessels to confess Christ, and stood very much alone, often being ridiculed; but he was enabled to bear witness for God with growing courage and clearness. When changed to a new ship he showed his colours by the Scripture texts and books that adorned his cabin walls and shelves, and which, like the open Bible on Captain Hedley Vicars' tent table, proclaimed on what terms his friendship was to be had. He always aimed at being an out-and-out Christian, and, to use his own words, "longed to adorn the Gospel he professed on his own ship." In spite of their occasional ridicule, his brother officers, won by his sunny, manly character, all respected and liked him, and turned to him for help and sympathy in trouble.

In 1888 Mr. Marshall joined his last ship, the Lusitania, and in October of the same year he was married to Miss Brown, a member of the church at Upper Holloway presided over by Pastor J. R. Wood, and one perfectly in sympathy with his highest aspirations. But his calling only allowed of nine short days of the new home-life, and he sailed again, leaving his young wife in England.

During the next two voyages Mr. Marshall had the helpful society of well-known godly clergymen and missionaries on board, and joined with them in holding services and Bible-readings in the second saloon, as well as Gospel meetings on deck for the third-class passengers and the crew, at which not only his subordinates, but also some of his fellow-officers, were always present. These latter would often walk the deck smoking and pretending indifference to what was going on, yet all the same careful to keep within hearing. To have one of their own number preaching on board seemed an almost unheard-of thing, and on more than one occasion Mr. Marshall was told that he had mistaken his calling and ought to have been a parson.

With all this, his sailor-like qualities were recognised, and his marked ability in discharging his duties as an officer of the company won for him the high regard and favour of the captains he sailed under. He was not permitted thus openly to live and speak for his Master without the joy of seeing blessed results. On several occasions souls were saved and backsliders restored. In the summer of 1889 Mr. Marshall gave up the sea and his prospects of certain advancement in his profession, and went to Gibraltar in order to devote himself with his wife to Christian work in connection with the Soldiers' Institute. After three years' work on the Rock, the Master called his servant home. Of his work in Gibraltar we shall give some details in a succeeding paper.

CAMBERWELL.—An energetic Gospel and temperance work is being carried on at the Albany Institute, Albany-road. The children's meetings are also very encouraging.

THE HOUSE OF REST.

Miss Mason's twenty-seventh anniversary was held on Friday afternoon, when friends mustered in large numbers, filling to the doors the Parish Room, adjoining the house, which had been kindly lent for the occasion.

Mr. T. A. Denny, who presided, spoke of the value of such a place of rest for poor tired workers, emphasising especially the large amount of work done at so small a cost. The annual income had been about £1,000, and 831 residents had been received in the course of the year, so that roughly speaking each one had cost but 24s. Next the chairman called special attention to the new development in the Home for Aged Workers, on behalf of which he warmly pleaded.

Miss Mason made a brief statement showing that abundant blessing had been granted. The aim had always been spiritual refreshment as well as bodily rest, and this had been realised largely, as many letters testified. The total number of inmates for the year had been 831—242 at St. John's Wood and 589 at Eastbourne—all of these being Christian workers in some form or another. A new wing has been added during the year to the Finchley-road premises, consisting of a sixteen-roomed house, to form the Aged Workers' Home, the object of which is to give a room, rent free, and firing, to Christian women over sixty years of age, for the remainder of their life, who have laboured in some branch of Christian mission work. Only four of these rooms are yet occupied—the others are closed and empty and must remain so until the means necessary are supplied. At present £800 are absolutely required in order to complete this new Home and fill the vacant chambers with aged ones worn out in the Master's service.

Rev. F. B. Meyer rejoiced in the love and tenderness manifested in this House of Rest towards those who are giving their strength and time to service in the fields of sin and sorrow. He believed that God had very peculiarly called Miss Mason to this great work, and inasmuch as the work is his He will see that its needs are supplied. At present, however, the speaker wished to enlist special interest in the Aged Workers' Home. Few perhaps fully understood how lonely and helpless might be someone who had given a long life, at a very small pay, to Christian work, and, becoming worn out, found she had not a friend to help nor a penny to live upon. On behalf of such he thanked God for this Home, and hoped that, the means being provided, it would be thrown fully open to those in need.

Miss Weston made a womanly, eloquent, and persuasive plea for liberal and prompt aid. Rev. J. Monro Gibson, D.D., followed in stirring and sympathetic fashion. A few words from Mr. W. H. Seagram and Rev. E. E. Gill, and the proceedings concluded. Many of the friends subsequently inspected with much interest the new Aged Workers' Home.

CORK CONVENTION.

The third of these gatherings was held in the Assembly-rooms from Monday, May 29, to Friday, June 2. A preliminary meeting for prayer was held in the Central Hall on Saturday, May 28. On Sunday five of the Convention speakers conducted services in the churches, and addressed evangelistic meetings in the Y.M.C.A., Soldiers' Home, and Assembly-rooms, etc. Mr. Robert Wilson presided at the main conference meetings.

A deep spiritual tone marked all the addresses. The teaching was simple, searching, practical, and powerful. It was evident that many Christians were convinced of failure and shortcoming in their past lives, and from the testimony given on Friday night there were tokens of the gentle dealing of the Spirit in healing the wounds He had in love inflicted. Many confessed to a simple, whole-hearted surrender to the Lord Jesus, believing that from henceforth He would be their Mighty Keeper.

The subject on Wednesday afternoon was Home and Foreign Missions.

FAMINE IN THE NEW HEBRIDES.—Following upon the recent hurricane, famine now confronts the population of several of the New Hebrides Islands. The district occupied by missionaries of the Otago Presbyterian Church has a population of about 7000. Some rice has been sent to them, but a more general effort is needed to prevent acute suffering and a high death rate in the Group.

MR. JOSIAH NIX,

ORGANISING SECRETARY OF THE WEST LONDON FORWARD MOVEMENT.

THESE weekly sketches are not intended to exalt the creature; but to glorify the God of all grace, and to exemplify his wonder-working power in fitting men and women for his service, and blessing them in that service. In most cases the narratives are necessarily from the pen of another, but, where possible, there is a decided advantage in hearing the story of a Christian's experience exactly as it is told by himself. One of our staff called the other day on Mr. JOSIAH NIX, the well-known helper in the work of the West London Mission, under Rev. H. Price Hughes. In compliance with the request of our representative, Mr. Nix gave the following details of his life and work:—

I was born in Oxford in 1847. My parents were earnest Christian people, very loyal and devoted Methodists. My mother was converted the first time she entered a Nonconformist place of worship, where Alfred Barrett, the father of Mrs. Price Hughes, was preaching. Up to the age of twenty-one I was more or less under deep conviction of sin. I wanted to do right but lacked the power. For some years I had seemed to feel that the religious teaching I heard from the pulpits was not quite adapted to my need—I longed for something more practical. It grieved me to see drunkenness, lust, and other evils rampant, while the Christian Church seemed helpless.

At the age of twenty-one, after hearing a sermon by some gentleman whose name I never knew, on the words, "My thoughts are not as your thoughts, neither are my ways as your ways," I was led to put my trust in Christ. I was conscious of a change of heart, and knew that my sins were forgiven, though I was far from satisfied; I really tried to be good for the sake of going to heaven. At the same time I wanted some sunshine down here, but I did not seem able to get what I longed for.

After living in different parts of the country, I married and settled in the city of Oxford, where I was in business for some years. I took a lively interest in local and imperial matters, and sought to further the interests of the working classes. As far as temporal advancement was concerned, I considered that my religion was somewhat in the way; the fact was, as I afterwards found out, that I had not religion enough.

Twelve years ago Rev. H. Price Hughes came to Oxford as superintendent of the circuit. I was captivated by his first address. He told us he considered it was as much the duty of a man to feed the hungry, clothe the naked, visit the sick, and try to put a stop to sin and selfishness in every form, as it was to attend a prayer-meeting or go to the Lord's table. That was exactly the practical sort of religion that I wanted to meet with. At once, at the request of Mr. Hughes, I began to work for God in earnest. Up to that time I had always felt very nervous and timid lest I should be called on to pray or speak in public.

A short time after that I did what I had declared I never would do—I signed the total abstinence pledge. I had told Mr. Hughes that I could not work with him because I knew he was a fanatical teetotaller, and I never meant to give up my glass of beer for anyone. He said we would come to an agreement that if I did not talk to him about beer he would not talk to me about water. With that understanding I went to work, but very soon afterwards I signed the pledge.

During the first six months of Mr. Hughes's residence in Oxford we held a circuit mission that lasted sixteen weeks, and made the city and county of Oxford ring with the news of salvation. Over fifteen hundred adults passed through the inquiry rooms. This opened my eyes to the glorious possibilities of a man who would give himself fully to God. On the Good Friday of that year, when sitting in my pew in Oxford, I heard Mr. Hughes speaking of the sacrifice that Christ had made for us. In one of his earnest appeals he said: "What sacrifice are you prepared to make for Him?" There and then I surrendered myself wholly to Christ, for Him to have and to hold from that day henceforth, and for ever. I was soon conscious that I had lost all nervousness and fear, and began to preach in the streets. I was put on the local preachers' plan, and entered on earnest, aggressive work for Christ with all my heart.*

The time came for Mr. Price Hughes to leave Oxford. Shortly after, I sold my business and followed him to London. I was employed as lay worker in the Brixton Hill Circuit, where I spent three happy and fruitful years. It was somewhat strange and new to me, after many years of business life; but almost at every service, Sunday and week-day, God gave me visible tokens of his presence and of the results of my labour.

When Mr. Hughes moved to the West-end of London I was appointed organising secretary of the West London Mission. The growth of this forward movement has been far beyond my brightest expectations. The openings for work are surprising; at every turn one finds splendid opportunities for rendering help to humanity and bringing glory to God. During the time of my service in this mission my faith in God has grown amazingly. Time after time I have been staggered as I have realised the deep and tender interest God takes in the things that relate to the well-being of men and women. On several occasions, when we have been rather hampered and perplexed, marvellous openings have come to us, and we have been compelled to say, "Of a truth God is our Helper."

I am more than ever convinced that if the masses are to be reached it will only be by the method of adaptation. It is no good talking about what our fathers or our grandfathers did; we must suit ourselves to the conditions of to-day. As an illustration of what I mean, I will take the use of the magic lantern in Gospel work. Up to a comparatively recent date I do not think I had ever seen a lantern; I certainly had never handled a slide. I was praying over the condition of Soho. We had done the best we knew to get the people inside Wardour Hall, and had not succeeded in any great degree. As I prayed there came flashing into my mind the thought: "Use the lantern on Sunday night." I knew the voice too well to make any mistake. I asked God to reveal to me how the thing could be arranged and managed. It was all made plain to me within the space of ten minutes. The idea was carried out, and at the very first service the hall was crowded; fifty men and women came forward as seekers after salvation. Now I have 1300 Gospel and temperance slides. I have given an address on "The wages of sin is death, but the free gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord" (Rom vi. 23, R.V.), seven times in the same hall by request of the people themselves, and nearly three hundred people have been converted to God through that one address. In the course of the address some thirty pictures are thrown on the screen.

These lantern services are the most solemn have ever taken part in. When delivering my last address, I gave a picture representing the crucifixion. When it was on the screen I said, "Let us sit still and look at this marvellous scene." Three times I repeated the words "Look and live." At the end of the week I received a letter from a working man, telling me that as he walked home from the hall that Sunday night, the words "Look and live" kept ringing in his ears. Next day at his work it was "Look and live." In the public-house in the evening it was still "Look and live." When he got home that Monday night, he told me he did look, and he did live. That is but one out of many instances of real conversion I could tell you of through these lantern services.

I am a great believer in getting the people to help themselves. We adapt the idea of the social club for self-help. We have, in connection with Wardour Hall between 600 and 700 men and women in clubs that provide help in times of sickness or death. Our Christmas Club has been a great success. I found that the drink was at the bottom of nearly all our trouble in our work. I saw it was no use waiting for Acts of Parliament; we must go to work in the most aggressive way, and try to stop it. We formed our goose club, and last year 630 heads of families joined it. Taking the average standard of five persons in a family, that meant 3150 persons who were provided with four meals each at Christmas time. It represented between £200 and £300 in money, ninety per cent. of which had been saved from the publican's bill. The publicans admit that they could put up with the old religion of going to church and taking the sacrament, but the new method of goose clubs and self-help they cannot do with. In fact, they say it is not religion at all.

* Before he reached the happy haven of freedom from nervousness in public speech, Mr. Nix had a curious experience, which we must relate another day, for the encouragement of beginners.

I do not think the Church of God does its duty unless it is very active in the open air. Some of the greatest trophies won for God in connection with the West London Mission have been reached at our open-air services. We have them in the streets and also in Hyde Park every Sunday afternoon, and sometimes during the summer evenings in the park. We are always busy looking after the poor people, and finding employment for those out of work. On Bank Holidays we take crowds of them into the country, and let them enjoy the fresh air; while at the same time they take part in earnest religious services. It preserves them from the publican; and so in times of special temptation we are ever on the alert to protect our poor friends.

This narrative will suggest to the reader a man of much force of character; and that is a conspicuous element in the make up of Mr. Nix. To see an opportunity for effectual Christian service in some fresh channel, and to seize it without delay, is a primal clause in his life creed. He declares his unwavering belief that the prompting to start lantern services came to him from God direct, and was one to be instantly obeyed. So with the project that he formulated four years ago for a week's evangelising on Epsom Downs during race week. He had never seen a race or a racer, or a jockey; but the Spirit said "Go," and he went. Now, as our report elsewhere of last week at Epsom shows, Mr. Nix has been led to take a step further, and to lay the foundation of an organised mission to all the racing centres in the country. This effort he will superintend, and so far as possible take a personal share in. But his work for the West London Mission fills up the great bulk of his time, and his attachment to Mr. Price Hughes is too great for him to slip his moorings there. With a heart all on fire for souls, a head as shrewd as one can find in a week's march, and a zeal and tact that are well-nigh boundless, Mr. Nix is certainly the very embodiment of that practical religion for which he says he longed in the days of his youth.

A GOOD WORK.

Some years ago Miss Baxter, of Southall, Middlesex, started a lads' meeting called the "True Blues." Her endeavour was to get them to give up drinking, smoking, swearing, and gambling, and to lead them to Christ. In this she has been eminently successful. The work grew, and meetings for adults were held, her father getting evangelists from the Evangelisation Society for Sunday services.

When last it was my privilege to preach there I was sorry to find that Miss Baxter was stricken down with a lingering, painful disease, unable to sit or stand. Amidst her suffering the lads were not forgotten, and, being fine, her couch was wheeled out on the lawn, and the boys gathered round while she told them of Jesus and his love. As I looked upon the little scene, I wondered how many in health and strength were letting the precious moments slip idly by. As I took her thin hand in mine she said, "I do want to win the boys for Christ; some of them have recently trusted Him."

THE EPSOM CAMPAIGN.

There are gratifying evidences that the popularity of the famous races at Epsom is on the wane. An experienced observer is of opinion that the attendance on the Downs on Derby Day last week was less by nearly 200,000 than in past years, and that the "Oaks" on Friday only drew together about half the gathering of 1892. However that may be, the crowds of people who flock to Epsom during race week are still a mighty host. We suppose it forms the greatest open-air assemblage of the whole year within the British Isles. We thankfully record, therefore, that the evangelistic forces on the Downs this year have been stronger than ever before.

On Wednesday (Derby Day) our representative found three strong bands earnestly at work on the crowded course for some time before the racing began. Nearest to the grand stand was the band of Open Air Mission workers, led for so many years by that devoted pioneer in outside Gospel work, Mr. Gawin Kirkham. Further along the course was stationed a strong choir from the London City Mission, whose fine and effective singing with instrumental accompaniment, mingled with Gospel testimony, drew and kept a large crowd. Among the brethren who assisted these two bands were Mr. Charles Inglis, Mr. Charles Cook, Mr. W. P. Crombie, Mr. John Currie, and others.

The largest and most thoroughly-organised effort was that headed by Mr. Josiah Nix, of the West London Mission, with nearly a hundred capable and live helpers in speech, and song, and personal effort. For the fifth time Mr. Nix has pitched his tent in the hollow between the hill and the course. His large company of helpers were all accommodated under the canvas roof. These brethren came from different, and in some cases distant, parts of the country, each paying his own expenses, and giving his help as a pure labour of love. All the week long, from Monday to Friday, they maintained a continuous testimony to the masses of people by whom they were surrounded, and with very happy results.

Intensely cheering was the testimony borne by several of these race missioners at the Friday evening meeting of the West London Mission, in Princes' Hall, Piccadilly, under the presidency of Dr. Gale. One worker said he had never before met a company of more large-hearted, intelligent men. Some of them even rehearsed the day's work in their dreams; one was heard pleading thus in sleep—"You men! Why don't you get saved?" It was a saddening experience to stand beside the "bookmakers," and watch the boys and men freely staking their shillings, half-crowns, etc., and to note the nervous eagerness with which they crowded around at the close of a race to receive their winnings. Through all the tumult and the sin, God was remarkably at work. This worker said he managed on one occasion to slip into the room where the jockeys are weighed. The man in charge he found to be a member of a Baptist Chapel; he made a promise that to every jockey who got weighed he would give a Gospel portion left for the purpose.

Another worker testified to the cordial manner in which the preachers and distributors were received by the people. A bookmaker would come and ask for a Gospel. One night a man came and said, "I am tired and sick of drinking and gambling; can you save me?" The answer was "No, but God can," and they knelt together on the grass, and prayed to God for the man's salvation. He was accompanied to the station by two workers, and so grateful was he for the kindness shown, that he kissed them before he left.

Jim Salmon, one of the band, converted some years ago through the preaching of Mr. Price Hughes, related in a most affecting way the personal dealing he and some others had with a strolling negro performer on the course, who, it is believed, got soundly converted and is now beginning a new course of life.

The chief speaker was Mr. Nix, who had a delightful report to make, in his own happy way. He said this year had been their very best. He rejoiced in the lessening attendance at the races. The people eagerly receive the Gospel literature; nearly 50,000 tracts and cards were circulated during the four days. After giving some incidents of the work, Mr. Nix went on to tell of the realisation of a desire that he has cherished for some time—the starting of

A RACECOURSE MISSION.

On the Thursday evening a meeting of the workers had been held in the tent. He explained to them his idea that a mission should be formed with branches in every British town where races are held, so that no race meeting should come off without a testimony for Christ. Many, he said, had been impressed during the week at Epsom; if the work could be followed up at subsequent races they might be got hold of and savingly influenced. All the workers present were of one mind as to the need of such a mission, and the proposal to organise it was heartily agreed to. Rev. Hugh Price Hughes was selected as the first president; an organising secretary, treasurer, and other officers were appointed. Work will be commenced at once. Some £300 will be needed to provide the necessary apparatus, tent, etc., and for this sum Mr. Nix appeals to all who are interested in work among racing men. Towards this the workers at Epsom contributed on the spot between £30 and £40. "Pray about this matter," said Mr. Nix in closing his statement, "and, if you can help, send your donations to me at 124, Gower-street, W.C."

Mr. F. Cockrem, of the Open-air Mission, 11, Adam-street, Strand, writes:—

We met, some sixty strong. Some had gone down on Saturday evening; others followed on Monday evening, and on Tuesday morning the main body arrived. As in previous years, the kindest hospitality awaited all, thanks to the wise arrangements always so lovingly made by Miss Alexander. It is no small matter to find suitable lodgings during race week for sixty men, and to provide their food, but it is done each year by this devoted lady.

Each morning a prayer meeting, attended by all the workers, was held in the Town Mission-room, and they were seasons of great refreshing. Then we sallied forth. Some took up fixed and prearranged positions at the railway stations, at the junctions of roads, and at all the approaches to the racecourse, armed with bags full of choice and appropriate books and tracts, thus meeting large numbers of foot and carriage travellers. The remainder made for the course itself, and here each morning, opposite the grand stand, and in the very centre of the tremendous concourse, a stream of holy song and speech poured forth for more than two hours.

Then a rapid descent into the town for dinner, followed by an equally rapid ascent up the long hill again, and a series of brief services between the races. Just a hymn, a gathering of the people, an address which lacks introduction and peroration, and is all soul, another hymn, and the bell rings to clear the course. Then the preachers retire out of sight of the races till the next opportunity. This till five o'clock. Tea, a brief rest, and the evening meetings in the town, also the re-occupation of tract-distributors' posts for the returning multitude. Blessing has unmistakably resulted. I myself have heard of three conversions. Will not your readers help to defray the expenses of this work? The need is very great.

AGED CHRISTIAN BLIND.—The annual meeting of the Homes for the Aged Christian Blind was held last week in Jubilee Hall, Hanley-road, Crouch Hill, N. Mr. Joseph Benson presided. The secretary's report showed that during the past year sufficient funds had been raised to extinguish the entire debt which remained on the freehold property of the homes. The general maintenance fund, however, showed a deficiency of £400. Of the eighty-two inmates in the homes there were twenty over eighty years of age, fifty over seventy years, and one ninety-three. They represented nearly every Evangelical section of the Church of Christ, and came from twenty-eight counties of the United Kingdom. The Chairman, Revs. W. H. Allen, J. Seaver, W. Hardy Harwood, and J. Banham gave addresses.

AFRICAN MISSIONS VISITED.—3.

BY D. A. HUNTER.

WE completed our voyage to Cape Town almost a day sooner than was anticipated, and with no stormy weather all the way. Cape Town is finely situated at the foot of Table Mountain, which rises very sheer to a height of 3550ft. Its population is very cosmopolitan—British, Dutch, Malay, and mixed coloured people. From what I am told, the Malays are the most ignorant and spiritually neglected.

A SUNDAY IN CAPE TOWN.

There is much Christian work going on in Cape Town, and one feels that it is not here so much as up country that the need is greatest for Christians to come and settle. In proof of this statement, I might give a résumé of how I spent my first Sunday on land. At 9 a.m. I found myself at the holiness meeting of the Cape General Mission. At 10.45 I was asked to address a gathering of children in the same hall, but connected with the Children's Special Service Mission. There are about twelve branches of this work, with a roll of nearly 1500 children, and the attendance averaging some 1100.

At 3 p.m. there was an open-air service at the jetty, with an audience of probably 250 people. The crowd listened attentively, and the service lasted one hour. No sooner had it broken up than the Salvation Army came marching down, and took their stand on the same spot for another hour. I hastened to the Malay quarter, and entered a most interesting Sunday-school, held in a large disused coach-house. There were probably 150 children present, who were learning texts in English, and singing hymns. The Malays allow their children to come to these Christian schools while they are quite young, so there is a grand opportunity of winning them early to Jesus. On the other hand, it is a very hard thing for a Malay to become a Christian. He has to undergo the most fearful persecution, and life itself is threatened.

6.30 found me at St. Andrew's Church, where I saw a goodly number of the Black Watch, half of which regiment is quartered in Cape Town. Some of them, to whom I had the opportunity of speaking, got blessing at the Soldiers' Home in Gibraltar. Another open-air meeting was held at the jetty at 8.15, with an attentive audience of some 250 people, soldiers, sailors, young men, and coloured people, all listening to the Word of Life.

A SELF-SUPPORTING MISSION.

Through the kindness of Rev. Andrew Murray, and his brother-in-law, Rev. Mr. Neethling, I have been introduced to the founder and head of the unique mission station of Peniel, where I am at present a guest. Peniel was originally an old wine farm, dating as far back as 1795. In 1843 a church was built on the edge of the farm, and Mr. Stegmann, then only eighteen years of age, was installed as its minister. His parishioners were principally coloured people working on the surrounding farms, and the question arose, "Why not buy Peniel and settle the coloured people on it, immediately under the eye of the young missionary, and close to the church? They can still go out day by day to their work, and come back in the evening to the mission station."

A friend of missions advanced £1550 at five per cent. interest, and with this money Peniel was bought. The wine store was turned into a school, the dwelling-house repaired, and at the end of five years eighty-six families had settled on the station. If a family wished to settle, they had to build their own house, of a certain standard, on a plot of land which was granted rent free. Besides this, each family has a garden, 100ft. by 60ft., at a rental of 3s. per month.

The whole revenue of the mission is derived from the rents of the garden-plots, and from collections taken Sunday by Sunday in the church. From this source the loan with interest had been paid off by 1872, and there is now over £800 at the credit of the mission. This is a remarkable instance of what can be done in the way of a self-supporting mission. It is undenominational and unattached. Rev. Andrew Murray and another gentleman are the trustees. Mr. Stegmann draws his salary of £126 per annum, and does the work of several. He conducts four services every Sunday, and one almost each night of the week; teaches in the school twenty-five hours per week, keeps the various sets of books (which is no light work in a large establishment of this sort), and attends to the necessary correspondence.

When I tell you that Mr. Stegmann will have been here for fifty years next September; that during that time he has taken no holiday; that he is now teaching the grandchildren of those he first taught; and that his only helpers besides his wife—who is a true helpmeet—are two coloured lady teachers trained by himself, you will form some idea of the man, and cease to wonder at the success he has achieved. There are now 102 families settled on Peniel, numbering about 800 persons; no more houses are allowed to be built, as the place is really full. One of the great temptations of the coloured people is drink, made all the stronger by their environment of wine farms; so no one of them is admitted to church-membership who is not a total abstainer. I have heard some remarkable testimony as I have gone about of the results of this work on the coloured people settled under Mr. Stegmann. Their sobriety and industry as compared with the other coloured people have wrung from farmers hitherto opposed to missions a frank acknowledgment that much good has been accomplished, and their eagerness to get these mission people to work for them proves their acknowledgment to be genuine.

Faith and Criticism.*

[SECOND NOTICE.]

IN our former notice we said there was much in these essays by Congregationalists which was to be commended, and having clearly stated our strong disapproval of the first essay in particular, we feel the more able to express ourselves in this direction.

The Essay on Prayer, its theory and practice, is specially helpful. Mr. Arnold Thomas seeks to analyse the reasons for the quiet scorn for the prayer-meeting and for the indolence in the habits of private prayer which prevails in many quarters. He finds the cause in the tendency of our time towards free and widespread speculation, and in the busy, eager philanthropy whose first concern is to allay the sorrows and remove the burdens of men. "Prayer in its simplest essence is the turning of the soul towards God. It is the thinking not about God, but towards God, though the movement of the mind may scarcely define itself as a thought." The apparent inaccessibility of God, the necessity of concentrated thought, the difficulty of self-interpretation, the indifference we feel towards the best things, our unbelief and disobedient will, are all dealt with wisely and helpfully. We are glad to see that the essayist treats prayer as something more than a high spiritual exercise, and holds that the Maker of all things is surely not less able to influence the world of matter than men are, whose thoughts and will are incessantly producing changes in regions claimed by natural science.

The essay on Christian Missions is also well written and interesting. We were, perhaps, a little disappointed in not finding a completer résumé of the progress of missions within the last century. Nor is there a sufficient treatment of some of those difficult questions which are confronting the Church to-day. At the same time we admit that the space at the disposal of the essayist was so limited that it could hardly be expected that he would treat the whole of so vast a subject. He refuses to base Missions on the emotion of pity for men, however tender and generous; or upon the desire to spread the Gospel for the sake of vindicating it. He insists that the one sufficient basis for missionary enterprise is in the command of Christ given on the Ascension mount.

It is a fine conception that it is only as different races are brought to know the Gospel, each race developing its own side, that we can understand the manifold wealth of Christ's nature. "The conquests of Christ compelled a new reverence and worship in his followers, and caused them to inquire more deeply into his true name and nature." "The name of Christ must be enunciated anew, and in the larger vocabulary of a redeemed world."

We confess that we have been somewhat puzzled with the essay on the Kingdom and the Church, by Mr. F. H. Stead. We have returned to it more than once to try and grasp its conception of the distinction between the Kingdom and the Church. We are not sure that even now we understand it. His definition is not specially transparent. "The Church is the Kingdom in its phase of corporate self-consciousness, and corporate self-actualisation." That is, it is where workers for the good of others associate themselves in religious communities, and give audible witness to the facts of the spiritual world, that the Church appears. The whole conception of the Church is, in our judgment, too material, too limited to human organisation. There is but scanty appreciation of the sublime teaching of the Epistles and Apocalypse as to its heavenly character, its relationship to Christ; and the writer fails to distinguish between the Kingdom in mystery as it is at present, and that Kingdom which is to be established by the coming of the Son of Man. It is surely a mistake to speak of either Church or Kingdom in terms so entirely borrowed from human modes of thought and organisation. The heavenly is forced into earthly moulds, instead of the earthly being lifted to the level of God's conceptions and revealed purposes. The Church is surely the Bride, the Lamb's wife, and the Kingdom awaits the coming of the King.

There is a curious absence throughout the book of references to the Holy Spirit. We have only noticed two short paragraphs in which his Person and work are acknowledged. Even if it were impossible to devote an entire essay to the discussion of this great theme, there surely should have been more copious references to his gracious help in the treatment of prayer, in the promotion of Christian missions, and in the treatise on the relations between the Church and the Kingdom. We should be sorry to think that this was a fair specimen of the teaching given in Congregational pulpits.

One of the longest and most important of the essays is that on the Atonement by Mr. Horton. The object of the essay is to show that we must be content to proclaim the fact of the death of Christ, without attempting to explain it. Mr. Horton traces the history of the various theories of the Atonement from the days of Irenæus to the last theory propounded by Dr. Dale, and thinks that there is not one of them that can be deemed entirely satisfactory.

With the three landmarks that he suggests we are, so far as they go, in accord. First, that Christ did not undertake the work of salvation to overcome some reluctance or inability on the part of God, but as the manifestation of God. Second, that the Atonement could only be made through human nature. Third, that the death of the Cross is not only the declaration of the Divine love, but the ground of the Divine pardon. We are glad that Mr Horton repudiates, as a sufficient explanation of the mystery of the Passion, the idea so often promulgated in these days of the "moral theory" of the Atonement. But we have looked in vain for an unequivocal statement that in his death our Lord bore the curse and penalty due to a fallen race from the broken law of God. He says that "Christ has ransomed men from sin in such a way that whoever believes in Him, and by faith comes into a mystical participation of his death and resurrection, is saved from sin, and admitted into conscious fellowship with God." This definition fails to include the propitiation offered by our Lord for the sin of the world, and deals too exclusively with the subjective influence of Christ's atonement on the hearts of God's people. We hold it to be of the utmost importance to insist upon the objective fact, that Christ suffered for us, and gave his life a ransoms instead of many. In opposition to Mr. Horton' closing paragraph we affirm our belief, that where Christian truth has most swiftly penetrated the callousness and prejudice of heathenism, the heralds of the cross have been most definite in their teaching of the substitutionary sufferings of Christ for the penalty incurred by man.

On the whole, we turn from this book, feeling that it is an honest attempt to deal with the questions that are perplexing most Christian minds, and to deal with them in a reverent, thoughtful spirit. We confess that we are gratified to find that the younger men among the Congregationalists are not destructive merely, but are seeking to build up a foundation for coming days; and we close our notice, as we began, by expressing our sincere regret that the position of the majority of the essayists has been so seriously compromised by the iconoclasm of the opening essay on the Old Testament.

LYNCH LAW IN THE SOUTH.—2.

"Lynch Law" says The Virginia Lancet, "as known by that appellation, had its origin in 1780, in a combination of the citizens of Pittsylvania County, Virginia, entered into for the purpose of suppressing a trained band of horse-thieves and counterfeiters, whose well-concocted schemes had bidden defiance to the ordinary laws of the land, and whose success encouraged and emboldened them in their outrages upon the community. Col. Wm. Lynch drafted the constitution for this combination of citizens, and hence 'Lynch Law' has ever since been the name given to the summary infliction of punishment by private and unauthorised individuals."

Lynch law as practised in the Southern States of America, with rare exceptions, is executed only upon negroes, and then only when crime has been committed against white persons. The same crime by a white person against a negro is not even punished by the law, much less by the mob; nor does the mob concern itself to avenge crimes committed by negroes upon negroes.

Under these conditions white men commit crimes against each other with impunity. They have only to blacken their faces, as has been done, commit some crime, then accuse some negro, and not rest till he is killed by a mob. Negro life is held so cheaply in the South that there is never any investigation. The simple word of any white person is sufficient to cause white men to lynch a negro.

The four burnings narrated in the last paper are the latest and worst form of the lynching mania, which has raged for the past ten years without hindrance from the authorities. During this time over a thousand negro men, women, and children have been killed by mobs in various ways and on the slightest pretext. In Jackson, Tennessee, in the summer of 1886, a white woman died of poisoning. Her black cook was suspected, and as a box of rat poison was found in her room, she was hurried away to gaol. When the mob had worked itself up to the lynching pitch, she was dragged out of gaol, every stitch of clothing torn from her body, and she was hung in the public court-house square in sight of everybody. Jackson is one of the oldest towns in the State, and the State Supreme Court holds its sittings there; but no one was arrested for the deed —not even a protest was uttered. The husband of the poisoned woman has since died a raving maniac, and his ravings showed that he, and not the poor black cook, was the poisoner of his wife. A fifteen-year-old negro girl was hanged in Rayville, Louisiana, in the spring of 1892, on the same charge of poisoning white persons. There was no more proof or investigation of this case than the one in Jackson. A negro woman, Lou Stevens, was hanged from a railway bridge in Hollendale, Mississippi, in 1892. She was charged with being accessory to the murder of her white paramour, who had shamefully abused her.

It will thus be seen that neither age, sex, nor decency is regarded by mobs, that all pretence of law and order, where negroes are concerned, is discarded. Masks have long since been laid aside, temples of justice and the strongholds of law are invaded, and though the police and civil authorities stand by, negroes were lynched last year in broad daylight on the streets of several of our leading Southern cities. In some cases the Governor of the State stood by. Then a coroner's jury held an inquest, and though members of the lynching party are on this jury, the same verdict is always rendered: "Death at the hands of parties unknown to the jury." In the lynching at Clanton, Alabama, August 1891, the mob ranged itself under the body of the negro and had its picture taken. The faces of the men and boys (some of them not over ten years of age) are plainly seen. This photograph was sent to Judge A. W. Tourgee because he had dared to denounce mob law. On it was written in ink: "Here's your martyr. This ——— ——— ——— was hung at Clanton, Alabama, August, 1891, for murdering a little white boy for 35 cents. He is a good specimen of your 'black Christians hung by white heathen.' With the compliments of the Committee."

The following table, compiled by the Chicago Tribune, shows the South's lynching record for ten years:—

1882	 52	were murdered by mobs.
1883	 39	" " "
1884	 53	" " "
1885	 77	" " "
1886	 73	" " "
1887	 70	" " "
1888	 72	" " "
1889	 95	" " "
1890	 100	" " "
1891	 169	" " "

Of this number 269 were charged with rape; 253 with murder; 44 with robbery; 37 with incendiarism; 32 no reason given; 27 with "race prejudice"; 13 with quarrelling with white men; 10 with making threats; 7 with rioting; 5 with miscegenation; 4 with burglary. This table is an interesting study to the seeker after truth. It shows:—

(1) That only one-third of nearly a thousand murdered black persons have been even charged with the crime of outrage. This crime is only so punished when white women accuse black men, which accusation is never proven. The same crime committed by white men against black women is entirely ignored even in the law courts.

(2) That nearly as many were lynched for murder as for the above crime, which the world believes is the cause of all the lynchings. The world affects to believe that white womanhood and childhood, surrounded by their lawful protectors, are not safe in the neighbourhood of the black man, who protected and cared for them during the four years of civil war. The husbands, fathers, and brothers of these white women were away for four years, fighting to keep the negro in slavery, yet not one case of assault has ever been reported!

(3) That "robbery, incendiarism, race prejudice, quarrelling with white men, making threats, rioting, miscegenation (marrying a white person), and burglary," are capital offences punishable by death when committed by a black against a white person. Nearly as many blacks were murdered for these charges (and unproven) as for the crime of rape.

For nearly fifty of these lynchings no reason at all was given. Why should they give reasons? Each State controls its own governmental machinery. It is a government of white men, by white men, for white men. Hence there is no attempt at concealment, for which no one is held accountable. The latest case of lynching from the United States had the open encouragement of the Governor of South Carolina—the State in which it was committed; and a Senator, one of the State's lawmakers, was prominently mentioned in the reports in their newspapers. A negro named John Peterson was accused of assault on a white woman in Barnwell County. He went to the Governor's mansion, and put himself under the protection of the State executive, declaring that he could prove an alibi by white witnesses. A white man, becoming impressed with the man's sincerity, volunteered to go for the witnesses. He telegraphed the Governor that he would return with them on Monday. In the meantime the mob came to Columbia (the State capital), demanded the prisoner, and Governor Tillman gave him up to the mob, who promptly hanged him, although the woman in the case said he was not the man. But the mob said, "A crime had been committed, and someone had to hang for it," so he was hanged, and nearly a thousand bullets were fired into his body.

This happened a month ago (April 24) at Denmark, Barnwell County, South Carolina. Governor Tillman, who thus aided and abetted the mob, is reported to have said, when canvassing for re-election as Governor last year, that he would "head a mob to lynch a negro who assaulted a white woman." While making this remark he stood under the tree on which had been hanged by a mob eight negroes at one time, only a few years ago in this same Barnwell County.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

London Yearly Meeting has once more come and gone. It began on the 24th of May, and lasted till the 2nd inst; but the meeting on "Ministry and Oversight" held three deeply interesting sittings on the 22nd and 23rd May. The attendance at both was large, particularly, perhaps, the yearly meeting itself. This, doubtless, arose in part from the important and crucial subject of home mission work that had to be faced, and, if possible, settled at this time. All sections of Friends are practically unanimous that mission work, both at home and abroad, is the duty and privilege of the Christian Church, but there have been somewhat accentuated differences regarding the methods of carrying it out at home. This year, like last, the largest meeting house was crowded before the time of the meeting on Monday, the 29th May, and two large sittings were devoted to the great and burning question, in which the keenest interest was manifest throughout. Probably 1000 to 1200 Friends were present.

In November last year a conference of representatives from all the quarterly meetings had formulated some conclusions for the yearly meeting, and these became very much the basis of discussion, and were practically adopted. According to this arrangement, the new Home Mission Committee, which will be appointed next year, is to consist of eighty-six representative Friends, and to have the help and advice of the old committee for a year, so as to prevent any break in the continuity of the work. The present committee will, therefore, be released in two years, and the new committee become entirely responsible to the yearly meeting, to which it will have to present an annual report. Notwithstanding the strong conviction and deep feeling on both sides, the discussion was conducted with great moderation, and the meeting was obviously under the care and overshadowing wing of the Head of the Church. A sense of thankfulness and relief was felt generally when all was over, and the conclusion realised that the yearly meeting had not taken a step backwards, but forwards. The whole body of Friends will be in a broader sense than ever responsible for the proclamation of the Gospel to all the world, at home and abroad.

The Foreign Mission and Home Mission annual meetings, as well as that of the Friends' Temperance Union, were enthusiastic and encouraging times, indicating the hold these subjects have on the Society. The yearly meeting itself took a great step onwards in the strong minute it sent down to all the subordinate meetings on the subject of temperance. A host of other interests cluster round the annual gathering, including the Syrian and Armenian Mission meetings, Anti-opium, Anti-vivisection, Missionary Helpers' Union, Young Men's and Young Women's Christian Fellowship Unions, Friends' Quarterly Examiner reunions, special meetings for young people and for children, protestations against the lynching of the coloured race in the Southern States, educational and life insurance gatherings—all these, together with a marvellous feeling of brotherhood manifest, render London yearly meeting unique among the churches

Friends from Indiana and North Carolina, as well as from Ireland, were acceptably present, and rendered excellent help, and the devotional meetings, held from 9 to 10 o'clock every morning, were times of blessed preparation for the day's duties and responsibilities. The epistle coming out in a few days, and addressed to "Friends in Great Britain, Ireland, and elsewhere," is a very beautiful and expressive letter, which will give much satisfaction. The women's yearly meeting is held concurrently with the men's, and doubtless has helped in the development of their gifts. Altogether the vision and responsibilities of Friends attending the yearly meeting have been enlarged, and many have gone down to their own work increasingly anxious to do the Divine will, and spread the knowledge of the glory of their King and Redeemer.

"MIGHTY IN THE SCRIPTURES."

A happier title than that which heads these lines could not easily be found for a Life of Dr. Saphir*. Gifted with a singularly acute mind, so accurate and intimate was his acquaintance with Scripture, that he could bring the whole relative contents of Revelation to bear, whether by illustration or exposition, upon any theme upon which, for the time, he was discoursing. The scripturalness of his sermons was their special charm, and at once arrested the attention and gained the sympathy of all who bowed to the authority of the Word of God. His audience, though often numerous, was always select.

In the present day there are multitudes whose ears and eyes are only arrested by the sensational or spectacular. To them, the simplicity of Dr. Saphir's style and the severity of his attachment to Biblical truth, made no effective appeal. But to the few who were not concerned to hear or see men, who were only careful to be silent before God, the discourses of our lamented friend were precious beyond all price. Their value was not to be weighed or counted in any terms of ordinary argument or eloquence. They were simply inestimable because they brought the whole will of God to bear on life and duty.

When we heard that a biography of our friend, somewhat lengthy in character, was proposed, we feared the result. So uneventful a life as his could hardly, as we judged, be made interesting to the general reader. Mr. Carlyle has disappointed all our fears. By a diligence in collecting materials, and by a skill in arranging them, he has written one of the most interesting and instructive biographies it has been our lot for a long time to peruse. The introductory account of the origin of the "Pesth Mission," of which the conversion of Dr. Saphir formed a leading incident, we would on no account miss. When the Free Church of Scotland sent forth its committee to inquire concerning the best localities for reaching the Jewish nation, the members thereof were specially enjoined to avoid the Austrian dominions. Yet, in the providence of God, by an accident to one member and by the almost fatal illness of another, they were arrested at Buda-Pesth. There they were brought into contact with the Archduchess, who had been long praying for the advent of missionaries who would bring the Gospel of the grace of God home to the hearts of the people. Under such circumstances, so extraordinary—may we not say providential?—the mission to the Jews in Buda-Pesth was begun. This resulted in the conversion of Adolph Saphir and many others.

When Sir Humphrey Davy was asked to name his greatest discovery, he unhesitatingly replied, "The discovery of Michael Faraday." If missions to Israel had not secured to the Church more than one man so gifted and gracious as the subject of this memoir, their efforts would have been amply rewarded. But all who are not wilfully ignorant know well that an "open door and effectual" has long availed for reaching the Jewish heart.

Reminiscences of his sermons, extracts from his intensely interesting correspondence, and the, alas! too short, story of his Christian life, make up a volume sure to be eagerly read and greatly prized.

JEWISH REFUGEES IN PALESTINE.

In a communication on this subject, Mrs. Finn, 41, Parliament-street, S.W., says:—"The Sultan has granted the petition, signed by some 800 Russo-Jewish refugees in Palestine, on behalf of a much larger number, for the removal of the restrictions against Russo-Jewish immigrants occupying land and settling in Palestine. The Sultan has acceded to their desire, and it will now be possible for these people to become self-supporting agriculturists, if the help needed for starting can be given them. The action of the Sultan marks an epoch in the history of the Jewish people in the Holy Land. The present persecution continues. Thousands are being expelled from Russia. Many are forced to leave Roumania. We look with hope and confidence to British Christians to help us to aid those now starving in Palestine, so that they may take advantage of the privileges accorded to them by the Sultan."

GREAT ASSEMBLY HALL, MILE END.

The work carried on by Mr. Charrington in the Great Assembly Hall continues to be blessed and owned by God in the salvation of men and women. The continuance night after night of meetings, now going on for many years, does not seem to lessen the interest taken by those who seem to flow into the great wide thoroughfare of the Mile-end-road, where the hall is situated. The grand old Gospel still retains its drawing power.

In this hall Mr. George Nokes has completed another month's mission. He is known by the "dossers" of the big common lodging-house close to the Pavilion Theatre, where he has meetings every Sunday during the winter season, as "Old George," or by the more respectable portion of the community as the "Bishop of Whitechapel." He is a great favourite among all classes, and as a proof of their love for the man who is trying to do them good, about two years ago the people of Whitechapel presented him with a purse containing about £150, and at the same time gave his wife a gold watch.

Our brother talks to the crowd in his own fashion, and, although a partner in a large business, he does not hide the fact that he has risen from the ranks, and talks to the working men and women as a working man. He is a fluent speaker, full of ideas, which seem to flow naturally, and with a very happy knack of expressing them. His illustrations, which are sometimes most telling, are generally from his own personal experience, and there is no doubt go far to account for his power over his audience. He knows his Bible, and knows how to use its written truths. He is a great believer in the power of the Holy Spirit's work, and always delivers a short prayer before commencing his address, imploring his aid and guidance. He is well known as a vigorous and telling advocate against the drink, and some of his mental pictures of the effects of drunkenness are really striking.

God has much blessed his efforts at the Great Assembly Hall, and he has left with the prayers of many for his success in preaching the Gospel in America, to which country he is now on his way.

GRAY'S YARD INSTITUTIONS.

At the annual meeting, held in the new hall, 13, Duke-street, W., on Wednesday afternoon, Mr. A. G. Fraser gave an outline of the work, dealing with the preventive and the curative aspects of the operations. The Sunday-schools, Bible classes, and sewing classes go on prospering, being largely attended by the poor children of the adjoining courts, yards, and mews. The Ragged Church service has continued to attract crowds of the poorest and most miserable human beings to be found anywhere. A relief committee sit every Monday, to examine all cases brought before them. Last year over 150 were relieved in one way and another after careful inquiry.

Mr. Philip Gough looked back on many years' experience in the Ragged Church, and gave several deeply interesting cases of conversion and restoration. Many of these had fallen from good positions through drink, but there were those who had got into a sad condition through misfortune. For example, a tutor from Scotland, having high references, came to London to look for another engagement, with £100 savings. He was taken ill, and after sixteen weeks rose from the bed of suffering, weak and friendless in our great city, with just £13 left!—all that remained when the bill for lodging, doctors, and nurses was paid. How soon those few pounds went, anyone who knows the difficulties of finding employment in London will easily guess. He appeared one Monday morning at the Relief Committee, his pockets absolutely empty, starving, having had nothing to eat for two days except the piece of bread and cup of tea he had received the day before at the Casuals' tea. He was fitted with a black coat sent by a gentleman, and through the kindness of a friend a berth was found for him. He is now doing remarkably well in a good position.

Addresses commendatory of the good work being done at Gray's Yard followed, from Mr. F. A. Bevan (the chairman), Rev. G. F. Pentecost, D.D., Dr. Harry Guinness, and Dr. A. T. Schofield.

THE BISHOP OF LONDON said in a recent address:—"The evil done by the introduction of strong intoxicating liquors wherever European commerce penetrates is a disgrace to all Europe."

THE BOYS' BRIGADE.

A public meeting under the auspices of the Boys' Brigade, and for the demonstration of its principles and methods of operation, was held on Friday evening at Exeter Hall. As officially worded, the object of the Brigade is, "The advancement of Christ's Kingdom among boys, and the promotion of habits of reverence, discipline, self-respect, and all that tends towards a true Christian manliness." The Brigade is composed of 570 companies, connected with churches, missions, and Sunday Schools, in all parts of the United Kingdom, with an enrolled strength of over 1800 officers and 24,000 boys.

All the speakers at the meeting eulogised the discipline of the movement, and several of them denied that the military spirit is encouraged by the Brigade. The Chairman, the Earl of Aberdeen, in his opening address, maintained that under the externals are religious principles, and the gymnastic and drill meetings, no less than the Bible classes, are opened with prayer. He thought there was no ground for the fears that militarism is promoted by the organisation. Some, he said, would be very glad if they could learn that a great number of the boys enter the army. I cannot honestly say that this is the case; but if we must have an army, I would rather we should have one of the best sort. But that the martial and pugnacious spirit is not fostered, can be positively affirmed by those who are actively engaged in the work.

Archdeacon Sinclair spoke briefly on the manliness of Christianity. Of the Brigade, he said that it provides an interest and occupation for lads during a critical period of life—from the time they leave school till they come to a sense of responsibility. Thus the formation of bad habits is avoided, and obedience, patience, neatness, self-control, and alertness are acquired. I do not think, observed the Archdeacon, that the foolish military spirit of the country has been spread by the Tolunteer movement, which, I believe, tends rather to peace than to war. The discipline to which police constables and fire brigades submit, facilitates the performance of the duties imposed upon those classes of men. So, with regard to the Boys' Brigade, it has nothing to do with bloodshed or military glory, but in its endeavour to form a link between youth and manhood it has approved itself to the nation, and been welcomed on all hands as a beneficent movement. In the diocese of London a Church Boys' Brigade, on similar lines, has been formed in the interest of youths leaving the voluntary schools, and on both Brigades he invoked the blessing of God."

Mr. E. J. Kennedy commended the Brigade on four grounds. Because of the youth of its constituency; its character-forming value; its hopefulness when viewed from a patriotic standpoint; and the high object in view—the advancement of Christ's kingdom. The other speakers were Lord Kinnaird, vice-president of the Brigade, and Rev. W. J. Dawson, who dealt with the national importance of the movement. In the course of the evening the boys went through an attractive programme, including military and musical drill, ambulance display (first aid to the injured), and signalling exhibition.

WORK AT ALDERSHOT.

For ten years a mission has been carried on among women in Aldershot with the happiest results. Miss Tummon, who began and developed it, passed away to her rest early in the year, but her place has been taken by Miss Lane. The work has had scarcely any interruption. Many orphan girls who had fallen into sin have been rescued, and others have been prevented from falling. Homes have been found for the homeless, wanderers have been returned to loving hearts, little girls have been led out of temptation, soldiers' wives have been befriended, and either kept out of sin amid great dangers, or drawn out of it when they had fallen. Soldiers, too, have had the Gospel preached to them in a very direct and personal way.

The little home at 11, Gordon-road, is a haven of refuge, to be used for a few days until girls can be sent to some permanent place of shelter, and trained for life-work. At a cost of about £100 a-year the expenses of the home and of sending girls away, have been paid. Some twenty girls have been rescued for this small sum. Now the work and cost are increasing, and help will be thankfully received by Rev. J. P. Gledstone, 63, Upper Tulse Hill, S.W.

YOUNG MEN'S NIGHT SCHOOL.

Ever since Miss Macpherson began work in East London, a young men's night school has been her delight. In the very early days, before she had a home for destitute children, she taught, almost alone, a night school of 150 of the roughest lads. Many of these are now filling positions of usefulness and trust. One has been sixteen years a missionary in China; when on a visit home some three years ago, he was pleased to visit the present school, and was not ashamed to tell the lads that he had been converted, and had received valuable teaching, many years previously, in that school.

In the old Home at Commercial-street space was not found to gather in these young men, but when the Lord gave our sister a new home and more commodious premises, Miss Davidson, the autumn following, commenced inviting lads around to come and be taught. In September, 1888, the school was started with two members. How disheartening! someone says. No. God's works mostly spring from tiny seeds. That night the two lads were carefully and cheerfully taught. Next night a dozen appeared, and before the first winter was ended 137 names were on the roll, all in fairly regular attendance.

The branches of learning taught are reading, writing, arithmetic, grammar, drawing, and shorthand. Some of the young fellows, having passed various standards at the Board schools, are able at once to take up the higher branches, such as grammar and shorthand; but there are middle-aged men belonging to the school who scarcely knew their letters when they first attended; now they are thankful to be able to read the Scriptures, and write a good letter.

Many of the lads have taken certificates for shorthand, and some show no small talent for drawing. One outcome of the school has been music lessons given on an extra evening by one of the workers. Now a few of the lads are buying their own harmoniums, and are able to play the hymns they love so well; one leads the singing at the week-evening open-air service.

The young men attend as regularly as possible, but ofttimes many have to be absent, through pressure of their employers in making them work overtime night after night. This is a trial, but they dare not give up their work on that account, for at least fifty would be ready to step into the place of one. This makes employers very independent.

The spiritual work in the night-school is esteemed the most important. Much as Miss Davidson and her helpers love to see the lads improving in various branches of knowledge, nothing less than their souls for Christ is sought for. Half an hour is carefully reserved for a Bible-lesson, before the school closes each evening; while the teachers use every effort, by loving personal influence, to win them to the Lord. "If you were to give up the Bible-lessons, Miss," said one of the converted lads the other evening, "this hall would be crammed, but our mates are so afraid of the Bible." "We'll never give it up," was the reply. "I would rather teach six lads, and tell them of Christ, than instruct 600 merely to get on in this life." Thank God, many trophies of grace have been won. Lads who once found pleasure in all ungodliness are now earnest Christians, living for God in their workshops and in their homes, supporting aged mothers, watching over sisters, and in their spare hours engaging in open-air work and Sunday-school teaching.

Working Men's Mission, New Cut.

The anniversary of this Mission took place last week in the large hall in Collingwood-street, New Cut. The chair was taken by Mr. F. A. Bevan.

Mr. Joseph Ashton, hon. secretary, read the report of the past year's work, which was of an interesting and encouraging character. About 200 pledges had been taken as the result of the temperance meetings, and 1100 homes had been visited weekly by the tract society; 140,000 meals of good and wholesome food had been provided during the winter months.

The income during the year had been £1464, which included a legacy of £450. The working men members had contributed from their weekly wages £198. The meeting was addressed by the chairman, Rev. W. Williams, Mr. T. A. Denny, Rev B. Senior, and others.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR MOVEMENT.

WELCOME TO DR. F. E. CLARK.

An enthusiastic meeting was held in the City Temple on Monday evening, when Christian Endeavourers filled the place in order to bid a warm welcome to the founder of the movement, Rev. F. E. Clark, D.D., on his arrival in England, after a tour in the Antipodes and in the East.

Mr. R. C. Morgan, who presided, said that while the meeting was held to welcome one whom they loved for his work's sake, it was above all to give thanks to God, who had been pleased to do great things by him. The hand of God had been upon this movement in a marvellous manner, taking hold of the young people at a very critical period of their life, and teaching them the joy of service. The prayer meeting was the grand secret of the vitality of the movement. The pledge simply expressed what every saved person ought to feel bound to be and to do. After referring to the important share taken in the work by Mrs. Clark, the chairman concluded by remarking that while we had given America the Y.M.C.A., America had in turn given us the Y.P.S.C.E.

Rev. A. Rowland, LL.B., opened with a few words of earnest welcome, and passed on to speak of the principles of the Christian Endeavour Society in leading young people to out-and-out decision and open confession, in promoting brotherliness and mutual helpfulness, in aiding them to resist the temptation to worldliness, and in training them to Christian service. For himself he could say he had found his first Christian Endeavour meeting a new discovery, for never had he dreamt of young people being ready and able to take such a part in prayer and testimony. For these and similar reasons he rejoiced in the spread of the movement, and believed that God had yet great purposes to accomplish by it.

Rev. F. E. Clark, D.D., who was received with hearty and long-sustained applause, said that he felt sure the warmth of the welcome was meant not merely as a greeting to him personally, but as an expression of their love and enthusiasm for the cause he represented—the Christian Endeavour Movement. He came, he said, bearing the greetings of Christian Endeavourers in many lands, and specially in English-speaking lands. Having recalled the stirring scenes of the Y.P.S.C.E. Convention, held last year in New York, Dr. Clark went on to tell something of what he had seen in the Antipodes, where the Christian Endeavour has taken a very strong hold. He had also been greatly cheered by the progress of the movement in Japan, its beginnings in China, and its activity in India. As to Turkey in Asia, his account, though couched in guarded terms, was very sad—the Christians are, indeed, passing through fiery trials, and those in happier lands ought surely to pray much for them.

Now why had this Christian Endeavour Movement spread over the world? Because, said the speaker, it is God's work; because it lays emphasis on the spiritual side, rather than on entertainments and the social idea. It is service for Christ: it is a passion for Christ. He is first in everything, and this gives energy and life to the whole movement. Loyalty to Christ is ever foremost; and next comes loyalty to the local church the members may be associated with. It is a great fellowship of the young Christian people of every land in Christ and in service for Him.

Dr. Clark concluded by asking the active members to stand while he read the pledge—a pledge which virtually is, or ought to be, the resolve of every redeemed soul. These active members, and they proved to be a large proportion of the audience, then joined in singing a verse of the consecration hymn, "Take my life and let it be." Next the associate members were asked to rise, and their pledge of hearty helpfulness having been read, all joined in singing—

Lord Jesus, I long to be perfectly whole,
I want Thee for ever to live in my soul;
Break down every idol, cast out every foe,
Now wash me and I shall be whiter than snow.
Whiter than snow, yes, whiter than snow,
Now wash me, and I shall be whiter than snow.

Rev. A. T. Pierson, D.D., who at very short notice had consented to come and speak, gave a brief but vivid address, welcoming Dr. Clark "for his Master's sake." He felt it a joy to see so many associated for Christian Endeavour in days like these, when many seem associated rather for Christian laziness. Every Christian ought to have before him or her three words—Salvation, Sanctification, and Service. Many had been content with the first, some had sought after the second, but Christian Endeavourers aim at the whole three. He had been thinking of two things—motion and the motor, or action and the spring of activity. Christian stagnation is breaking into motion, and life implies motion. Rivers of Christian activity are flowing out over the world. Our young people are learning the delight of service. But what is the great motor? The Spirit of God. Without Him organisation, however perfect, can achieve nothing. In Nature there is matter and force. Matter alone is inert and powerless; but force kindles matter into activity. If we obey the laws of Nature, they obey us and become our servants. So with light, heat, steam, gravitation, magnetism, and electricity; all become our servants when we have mastered their unchanging laws. Thus in the profoundest reverence we may say that when we obey the law of the Holy Spirit that Divine Spirit will work in us and by us, putting his mightiness into our weakness.

ARMY SCRIPTURE-READERS.

The annual meeting of this Society was held on Friday week in St. Martin's Town Hall. Naturally the serious trouble arising out of the defalcations of the former secretary, who for many years had been implicitly trusted, occupied considerable attention at the meeting, and bulked very largely in the report presented. So far as appeared, the funds unaccounted for amounted to £1287—a large part of which was due to the Readers' Sick Fund, which, however, we understand is being guaranteed, so that the humble workers will not suffer.

Field-Marshal Sir J. L. Simmons, who presided, spoke in warm terms of the value of the work. The army scattered over the world might be the means of converting the heathen to Christianity. The dominions of Her Majesty comprised one-seventh of the population of the whole world, and if all soldiers lived righteous, holy, and pure lives, they would be, as Paul said, living epistles, written in words and actions, which would do more to convert the heathen to Christianity than all the missionaries sent out. Missionaries were doing a noble work, but if the soldiers in the army were what they ought to be in the sight of God, they would be even more effective than a few missionaries here and there.

The Dean of Norwich dealt with the work in a threefold aspect—its mode, its constituency, and its sphere. Upon the first he commended the wisdom of the committee in selecting as Readers men of Christian sympathies, who loved Christ above all denominations, and were thus enabled to minister to men of all creeds. As to the constituency, the army was now composed principally of young men, and he showed that they had left behind them the dear old home, with all its associations and its safeguards, and were exposed to sore temptations amidst conditions which were not very helpful to virtue, but rather aids to vice. This was the material with which the Society had to deal. Let such agencies be withdrawn, and the 32,000 men who returned yearly to civil life might be the missionaries of drunkenness, impurity, bad language, of everything, in fact, which made God frown and good men weep. But with such agencies at work amongst them while they were in the army, there was the strong probability that they would return leavened with moral life, and strengthened to influence a nation to which they had not ceased to belong.

Amongst the succeeding speakers were Capt. Lowe, Mr. Morley (a Reader), and Rev. Dr. Edghill.

Ministering Children's League.

A meeting of welcome from the London M.C.L. Branches to Earl and Countess of Meath took place on June 3 at Kensington Town Hall. The Bishop of Marlborough was in the chair. The Bishop of Bedford moved the resolution of welcome, seconded by Canon Erskine Clarke. Rev. C. J. Ridgeway, vicar of Christ Church, Lancaster Gate, in whose parish, seven years ago, was started the first branch of the League, read a beautifully illuminated testimonial, welcoming Lord and Lady Meath to England on their return from organising the M.C.L. in India. All these speakers gave excellent and stirring addresses to the 600 to 700 children of the League who were present. Lord and Lady Meath described their recent tour and work for the M.C.L. in India and Egypt. The office of the League is at 83, Lancaster Gate, W.

ST. GILES' CHRISTIAN MISSION.

A MEETING in connection with the work among discharged prisoners, homes for boys, and refuges and homes for destitute women, carried on by this Mission under the superintendence of Mr. William Wheatley, was held at the Mansion House on Monday afternoon. The Lord Mayor, being imperatively called elsewhere, was unable to preside, but at the opening of the proceedings bore testimony to the great value the magistrates of the city attach to the Mission operations. The results have been such as to confer enormous benefits on the city and the nation.

Mr. F. A. BEVAN read a statement to the effect that during the past thirty-two years the Mission has never needed so much as it does now the sympathy and support of all those to whom the reclamation of the fallen is dear. In many cases the authorities, directly a boy gets into trouble, turn to Mr. Wheatley asking his help. How can that help be refused? We feel most strongly that, putting aside for the moment the religious side of the question, we are bound to do what we can to save the boys. And if we succeed—and by God's help success is ours—not only do we save the boys, but we also save the public; save them from being further troubled by lads who stand undecided upon the verge of a criminal career. Five or six years ago we opened our first Boys' Home; after a time another was needed, then a third, then a fourth, and now we are under the necessity of renting further premises. The new Home will accommodaate about seventy more boys, and is near the Central Office at Brooke-street.

Though very special efforts are being made for the reclamation of boys, yet the work amongst the men and women is by no means neglected. Morning by morning during the year, every prisoner discharged from our London local prisons is invited to a free breakfast in our rooms near the prison gates, plainly warned against a life of wrong-doing, and pointed earnestly and prayerfully to the only Source of strength. The work amongst women has been much blessed. During the past year many a poor wretched girl, who has sought our help in her time of need, has left our women's home to go into the situation we have found her, quite a changed creature in every way, having been benefited both bodily and spiritually.

Alderman RENALS, who filled the vacant chair, maintained in vigorous terms that the good being done by this Mission is most remarkable, and of the highest value to society at large.

Mr. JAMES MONRO, C.B., bore, as an old Commissioner of Police, emphatic testimony that the British public owe a great deal more to this Mission than usually supposed. Hundreds who would now be preying on the community are doing honestly and well. But why, with all this good work, is there a deficit of £1,400 in the funds of the Mission? Largely because it is so quietly done, without sensation and without noise. Mr. Monro went on to emphasise various ways in which all can help in this work: by sympathy, by making the Mission known, and by liberal support. He trusted the debt would be cleared off at once, so that the work may go forward with renewed energy and vigour.

Sympathetic addresses followed by Messrs. Judd, J.P., Montague Crackanthorpe, Q.C., and T. A. Denny; while Mr. Wheatley gave a brief account of how he was led into the Mission, how he believed God is doing a great work thereby, and saving many from becoming criminals. He closed, as, indeed, all the speakers did, with a strong plea for large and liberal aid.

JOHN D. GILMORE.

DR. BLAIKIE ON JOSHUA.*

THIS is an admirable volume in a series that is somewhat mixed. No attempt is made in these pages to eliminate the supernatural or to sit in judgment on the text. On the contrary, the rashness and, we may add, credulousness of those who do, are shown with a tender, but firm, hand. The speculative reason, like the passions themselves, needs to be held in by bit and bridle, otherwise theory takes the place of fact, and the judgments arrived at are no better than distempered fancies. It is a distinguished merit of this work that it applies the scalpel of common sense to the ill-digested reasonings and baseless assumptions of the modern critical method.

The advantage accruing is immense. It is impossible to expound the Sacred Text unless it be received in its true character as the Word of God. If we have to settle as we proceed what is genuine and what is fictitious, what may be safely accepted and what must be disallowed or held in suspense, not only are the activities of the expositor interrupted, but the results, such as they are, are reduced to the level of a mere human communication. All that is Divine being squared in this process to man's limited conceptions of what is Divine, there remains a philosophy of thought in lieu of an exposition of Holy Writ.

Dr. Blaikie's work on Joshua ranks as an exposition. Untrammelled by the critical method which he holds in small respect, this writer allows the seeds of thought in the Word to germinate and display the Divine virtue they possess. The result is an exposition that is one indeed, suggestive, edifying, and spiritually enriching.

For one thing, it is in constant evidence in these pages that Dr. Blaikie feels the charm of the subject of which he treats. Tholuck has said somewhere, "that while we must know the human before we can love it, we must love the Divine before we can know it." Whether this be so or no, it is certain that a preacher's power to expound His thoughts depends on the love which they have first excited in his own heart.

We like the glow of appreciation in this work, and all the more that the ground for it is ever made luminous in the reader's eyes. We venture to make one selection, though it be like taking a single flower to specify a conservatory. Speaking of Moses under the homely but exalted title "My Servant," Dr. Blaikie says:—"One of the greatest of men has no handle to his name—he is simply Moses; he has no titles of rank or office—he is simply 'My Servant.' But true greatness is 'when unadorned adorned the most.' Moses is a real man, a man of real greatness; there is no occasion, therefore, to deck him out in tinsel and gilt; he is gold to the core. His own will was thoroughly subdued to the will of God. The people of whom God gave him charge were dear to him as a right hand or eye. To aggrandise himself, or to aggrandise his house, never entered his thoughts. Never was self more thoroughly crucified in any man's breast. Beautiful and delightful in God's eyes must have seemed this quality in Moses—his absolute disinterestedness, his sensibility to every hint of his Master's will, his consecration of all he had and was to God, and to his people for God's sake!"

Another trait in this work is clear perception. E.g., Chapter 5 is devoted to tracing the connection between the twofold charge given to Joshua and the work he had to do. The train of reasoning is of everyday value. We are apt to look on strength and courage in the light of a gift; but Joshua was required to look upon them in the light of a duty. Apart from strength and courage, he could not be obedient; and unless his authority was steeped in the Book of the Law he would fail alike in acting discreetly or in securing the end designed. For, as is shown, the work to be accomplished was not mainly to conquer the Canaanites or to divide the land for an inheritance: it was not mainly that they might be planted physically over the country; but that they might be "married to it morally"; for Canaan was no land for idolaters—"loyalty to God was the one condition of a happy settlement." How, then, could Joshua do the work if he were not himself profoundly attentive to the law of God and brave enough resolutely to carry out its instructions? The moral is thus pointed:—"And so at all times in dealing with human beings we can obtain no adequate and satisfying success unless their hearts are turned to God. Your children may be great scholars, be successful merchants, or distinguished authors, or brilliant artists, or even statesmen; what does it come to if they are dead to God, and have no living fellowship with Jesus Christ? Your congregation may be large and influential, and wealthy and liberal; what if they are worldly, proud, and contentious? We must aim at far deeper effects, effects not to be found without the Spirit of God. The more we labour in this spirit, the more shall our way be made prosperous, the better shall be our success."

On the whole, we can commend the work of Professor Blaikie as an able and spiritually incisive exposition. The supernatural does not shock him, being the only reasonable explanation of the phenomena that can be found. Nor is there any attempt in these pages to degrade the teachings of the Old Testament by the assumption of a Law of Development which assigns to them a rudimentary value and a temporary place. Deeps there are, and must necessarily be, in the Scriptures, whether of the Old Testament or the New, which no expositor's plummet can sound. It is not wise either to ignore these, or to seek to fill them in. Faith does not contradict reason, but faith goes farther than reason can go. We are glad to say of this expository edifice that faith is its coping-stone. Faith crowns the work. For example, the fact of relative justice is here fully acknowledged. Deeply mysterious as the principle is, as shown in Achan's punishment and elsewhere, it underlies, as this writer points out, Divine Government both in judgment and grace. Reason may not comprehend everything, but certainly reason is never more wise than in seeking "not to be wise above what is written."

DUBLIN PRISON GATE MISSION.

THIS Mission continues to do a noble work among the females discharged from the Irish prisons. During the past year the total number of women committed to jail in Ireland was nearly a thousand in excess of those for the previous year; the largest number of committals being of persons between twenty-one and thirty years of age. Of 40,783 commitments in Ireland during 1891, no fewer than 19,075 were for drunkenness; it is, therefore, anticipated that with coming legislative restrictions upon the sale of drink, the work of the Mission will be lessened.

Unfortunately the unsatisfactory condition of the funds made it necessary for a more careful selection to be made in the cases for admission; on the other hand, the debt has been removed. During the twelve months the laundry women earned £1614 3s. 11d., and the button industry brought in nearly a hundred pounds. Thirty-four women during the year have been found good situations, and the general conduct of those in the Home has been remarkably good, many having given cheering signs that the work done is being followed by spiritual blessing. The Mission, with its laundries and sewing classes, and week-day and Sunday services and meetings, and its admirable dormitory, in which an average of forty-one slept each night, well deserves the support of our readers.

THE B. AND F. BIBLE SOCIETY.

DEAR SIR,—In November last one kind friend offered to give the Bible Society £50, £100, and £500, if, respectively, 49, 24, and 9 similar amounts were given it by others before July 1, 1893. That date is now near at hand, and so far the sums received in response to the challenge have been 13 of £50 each, 7 of £100, and 4 of £500.

In February, 1893, another friend brought us a cheque for £1000, part of the portion he had saved for a beloved daughter who had been taken to the heavenly home. He wished it to be devoted to some development of Bible work for girls and women which he could follow in his prayers. He hoped that his act might might lead others to do likewise, and thereby the new work might be extended and perpetuated. The committee resolved to make this gift a nucleus for a special fund for sustaining and enlarging their grants for Biblewomen in the East. By these grants, which are made to some 27 missionary and Bible organisations, about 370 additional Biblewomen are now carrying the Saviour's own words to their untaught and secluded Eastern sisters in India, China, Egypt, Palestine, etc.

Since it became known this year that special gifts would be welcome towards the cost of preparing and sending out large editions of the Scriptures in the language of Uganda, nearly £440 has been sent to this Society for that purpose. More than 30,000 New Testaments, or books of the New Testament, are being prepared for shipment to Zanzibar on June 11, en route for Uganda. That will help the C.M.S. But there are other versions, through which we help other missionary societies, towards which special gifts would be equally welcome. For instance, we have recently shipped nearly £500 worth of Bibles for Madagascar. They will be sold there, but local expenses will absorb the lion's share of the proceeds. These help the S.P.G., L.M.S., Friends, and Norwegian Missions.—Yours truly, JOHN SHARP, Sec.

POST CARDS.

WALTHAM ABBEY.

With much thanksgiving to God a "Forward movement" was yesterday (June 2) made at the Waltham Abbey Y.W.C.A. God has been much owning and blessing the work lately. During the past two months seventy-five members and hon. associates have joined, and the branch is going forward in many ways. Friday, June 2, was the dedication and opening of newsrooms for the extension of the work. C. L. B.

Y.M.C.A., BATH.

The winter's work at the Bath Y.M.C.A. has been full of encouragement. The Sunday evening services have been well sustained, the attendance being larger than in previous seasons. Several cases of conversion are reported as the result of this work. Open-air meetings are held twice weekly. On Sunday evenings a service is held near the park, when large numbers listen to the proclamation of the Gospel message. A. H. W.

THE GOSPEL IN CAMP.

Nearly a thousand men of the South Wales Borderers from various parts of England and Wales will be assembled for their annual training at Brecon in the course of a week. Every year the camp is visited repeatedly and systematically by members of the Y.M.C.A. with tracts and religious papers. The improvement in the conduct of the men is simply remarkable, and about one-fourth are now abstainers. Christian periodicals, tracts (illustrated preferred), and Gospel booklets are earnestly solicited by D. Devoir Thomas, Castle-street, Brecon.

Y.M.C.A., SUNDERLAND.

For many years past the Sunderland Y.M.C.A. has organised monthly breakfasts for young men on the first Sunday in each month, preceded by a devotional meeting. Many of the leading ministers of the town have taken part in these meetings. The average attendance last year was sixty-seven. The proceedings are of a homely and bright character, with brief addresses from the members, and plenty of singing. They have proved to be the most helpful meetings the Association has held. Many young men, especially strangers, have received definite spiritual blessing. H. Johnson, Sec.

FROM ALABAMA.

We began evangelistic services in our church on May 7 and continued till May 21. We held services three times a day; they were interesting and profitable from the first. The Spirit of God applied the truth, and there were anxious souls at every service. Rev. W. M. McIntosh, Cherokee, Alabama, preached. God has highly qualified him for this work. There were about twenty-five who testified to faith in Christ during the services. We received thirty-three into the church on May 21. Other churches also benefited. David Leith, Pastor,

Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

Attalla, Ala., U.S.A., May 22.

THE LANARKSHIRE CHRISTIAN UNION,

having arranged with Rev. Wm. Hutchison, minister of the parish of Coats, Coatbridge, for a special mission in the Coatdyke district of his parish, where the population is one half Irish and Roman Catholic, their Gospel tent was pitched there on Saturday, May 27th. The campaign, which is to be joined in by the three Presbyterian churches, was opened on Sunday the 28th, by a united service, when Mr. Hutchison spoke. On the week-day evenings following, the Christians have gathered in the tent at 7 p.m. for prayer; then, separating into bands, have adjourned to the different working-men's squares to hold open-air services. As 8 o'clock approaches, the several bands march singing to a central demonstration at "the fountain," which is in the central square, after which all march into the tent. The minister of the parish and his assistant have been joined in the open-air work by Rev. A. Maxwell, of the Free Church, and his assistant, Mr. Johnstone. Much blessing is looked for from the united action.

P. A. Kennedy Mackenzie.

THE HABIT OF PRIVATE PRAYER with each of your children establishes such confidence between each little heart and its parent that, as time goes on, schoolboys cling to it and expect it, and young men thank God for it.—Mrs. MacInnes.

THE QUESTION, "Please, mother, may I read this?" cannot be heard in too many homes. How sorrowful it is that some parents pay no regard to what their children read, and the budding rose of boyhood is often fed on the drainage of a moral sewer.

THE TEACHER must rest content to be an assistant in Nature's school. He must provide the necessary material, and arrange for suitable experiments. He must be the sympathetic guide and demonstrator; but the children must do the work.—George Ricks.

THE ARABIAN MISSION.

The Arabian Mission, which was organised in America in 1889, is an undenominational effort to supply the needs of a long-neglected and almost wholly unoccupied field. During the past year or so the missionaries have visited every large seaport of the peninsula, and made journeys to Sanaä, the capital of Yemen, and other places in the interior. Although every place visited was as much open to the Gospel as other Moslem lands already occupied, and although more than one place offered special advantages or promise of success, after careful and prayerful consideration, it was decided to "locate" at Busrah.

From this city of more than 60,000 inhabitants, the shores of the Persian Gulf to the south, the navigable rivers stretching northward into Mesopotamia and eastward into Persia, the caravan routes westward into the Nejd and Central Arabia, are all within easy reach. In addition to the large Moslem population, there is a considerable English-speaking community, both resident and belonging to the many steamers trading with the port. In addition to purely evangelistic work, there is a free dispensary, and a colportage agency. The island of Bahrein, in the Persian Gulf, has just been occupied, with great encouragement. The field secretary of the mission is Rev. S. M. Zwemer, who may be addressed at Busrah. Major-General Haig, Redhill, Surrey, is a British correspondent of the work.

IMBECILE CHILDREN IN IRELAND.

Encouraged by the success of the Earlswood Asylum in England, Dr. George H. Kidd, a medical man of high repute in Dublin, started a movement which resulted in the foundation of the "Stewart Institution for Imbecile Children." Its title was adopted in recognition of a pecuniary contribution of considerable amount given by another member of the medical profession long associated with the treatment of mental disease. In 1869, the Institution began operations in a comparatively humble way near the little town of Lucan, about nine miles from Dublin. It continued there for about ten years, until the committee were enabled to remove into a fine building specially constructed at Palmerston, several miles nearer to Dublin.

Here its work has been attended with a large measure of success; many hundreds of imbecile children have passed under its care, whilst the instances in which the improvement effected enabled pupils to be returned to their friends practically self-supporting have been remarkably numerous. The means at the committee's disposal only permitted of the erection of a part of the building as originally designed, which affords accommodation for but seventy-five inmates. This is a very small number, considering that the Institution is the only establishment of the kind in Ireland, and that applications from all parts of the country are constantly received. The committee are seeking funds to complete the building, and the necessary work will entail an expenditure of at least £10,000, of which the committee have not more than one half in hand.

It is expected that the extended building will enable at least eighty additional pupils to be received with comparatively little addition to existing expenses of management. The secretary may be addressed, 40, Molesworth-street, Dublin.

LANCING HOME OF REST.

This is the third year of the above desirable Home of Rest for weary mothers with or without infants, and children of all ages. It is gratifying to find, so increasing is the number of applications each year, that the management has again had to enlarge its accommodation, till now over eighty adults and children can be entertained.

Among its happy guests during the past year have been cripples, paralytics, and blind, together with a party of some twenty aged inmates from a London poorhouse, beside very many from the most poverty-stricken and unhealthy localities of the East-end. Troops of merry children keep the quiet village and sea-shore alive with their joyous exuberance, only shaded with sorrow when the morning to return arrives.

It is gratefully recorded that the services given in the Gospel-room attached to the institution have been richly blessed both to visitors and villagers. Thus, not a few poor ones return home having reaped in spiritual things as well as temporal. The Home has enjoyed during the past week a visit from an evangelist staying in the locality, and much cause for thanksgiving has been given in witnessing some most interesting cases of conversion.

MR. HENRY COOK'S WORK.

Describing a visit to Penzance of Mr. Henry Cook's mission steamship Good News, Mr. W. A. Radley, of Plumstead, writes:—

"The visit is an annual event, timed to come off when the Yarmouth and Lowestoft fishermen are in the West. During the stay Gospel meetings were held every evening, not only on board the steamship, but also on board the schooner Herald of Mercy. The Lord was with us in power, and much blessing attended the Word spoken. At the conclusion of each meeting woollen comforters, mittens, jerseys, etc., with testaments and Gospel books, were distributed among the fishermen, who received them joyfully. The afternoons we spent about the harbour, giving away books as the fishing smacks came in, and inviting the men to the mission vessel in the evening.

"It did one's heart good, as the smacks got berthed and decks washed down, to see the boys pull alongside in the small boats to receive bags of books; and one had the consolation of knowing that if all did not come under the sound of the Gospel, at any rate the Word of God was safely deposited on each vessel. Our hearts were rejoiced at the manifest tokens of the presence of the Lord, in souls deciding for Christ. One cannot but feel grieved that such a work should be hindered through lack of funds, Mr. Cook having recently lost several of his most liberal subscribers by death."

COUNTRY TOWNS MISSION.

A much-needed work is being carried on in our towns and villages by this Mission. Your columns are constantly bearing testimony to the increasing spiritual destitution of many of our country districts, and the urgent need for the simple message of the Gospel to be carried to the people in their homes. The object of this old-established society is to help to meet this need. Its work is of a distinctly missionary character, the agents visiting daily from house to house, endeavouring to bring home to all the claims and blessings of the Gospel. Its efforts have been greatly owned of God.

The society has at the present time fifty-nine missionaries connected with it, who are scattered throughout the country, some of them working in districts where, but for their presence, it is feared many would not hear the Gospel message. The sick and aged, and others who are prevented from attending the ordinary means of grace, are especially cared for.

During the last two or three years many applications have been made to the committee for grants, both to start new and to sustain old work, and they have responded, though with hesitation, on account of the low state of the funds occasioned by the death of some who have been amongst their most generous helpers. But to sustain these grants, I regret to say, the committee have now been obliged to borrow, and unless new help is given they will not only be compelled to refuse further applications, but also to seriously consider the support given to existing stations. As treasurer of the society I shall be glad to receive any gifts in aid of the work.

CAUSE YOUR PUPILS TO THINK. A question is an incomplete statement, which is begun by the teacher and finished by the scholar. Question out of him what he knows. Question into him what he does not know.

RELIGIOUS SERVICES IN THEATRES.—At the invitation of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Hazell, friends and workers in connection with the "Special Religious Services for the People in Theatres, Halls and Mission-rooms" assembled on Saturday afternoon at 15, Russell-square, W.C., to hear an account of the work. Rev. T. C. Udall (secretary) pointed out that the poor parts of London were now poorer than they had ever been; hence the increasing importance of this work. Much useful work has been accomplished by the movement, and many of those who could not be brought under the power of the Gospel by other plans had by this agency been converted, and had united themselves to the various churches and chapels. Rev. J. B. Barraclough bore testimony to the work which had been accomplished by the movement in the East-end. Mr. G. Williams also testified to the vast amount of good which had been wrought through the present agency. Archdeacon Sinclair referred to the time when both St. Paul's Cathedral and Westminster Abbey were not so free to the public as they are at the present time, when from 5000 to 10,000 people may be found at both morning and afternoon services. That change he attributed to the impulse given by the Theatrical Mission instituted by Lord Shaftesbury. Other speakers were: Revs. F. B. Meyer, Mr. T. C. Chadwick, Captain Lowe, and Rev. George Snashall.

UNIVERSITY NOTES.

OXFORD.

Many old Oxford men will hear with regret of the illness of the Principal of Wycliffe Hall (Rev. F. J. Chavasse), necessitating a change and complete rest for several weeks.

Professor Sanday concluded his Bampton lectures on Sunday last; the interest remained undiminished to the end, and will be further enhanced by the publication in book form.

The annual meeting of the Oxford Mission to Calcutta was held in Exeter College last Sunday evening, when Rev. C. Gore, who was formerly connected with the Mission, gave an address.

Rev. E. A. Barnes Lawrence, of Blackheath, was here last week, and took several meetings for undergraduates. He expressed great satisfaction with the interest manifested, especially as shown by the numbers who attended a special evangelistic meeting. The real spiritual work now going on in the various branches of the Inter-Collegiate Christian Union is most cheering, and gives great promise. The open-air meeting on Sunday last at the Martyrs' Memorial attracted a large gathering, and the testimony given was as clear as it was gratifying.

CAMBRIDGE.

On Sunday, June 3, the University sermon in Great St. Mary's was preached by the Bishop of London.

The foundation of the first block of the new buildings of Ayerst Hall was laid on Wednesday by the Master of Corpus in the presence of a large gathering. In his speech the Principal of Ayerst Hall stated that the object had been and was to combine, upon Evangelical lines, theological training with the University course.

On Sunday evening a meeting in support of the Cambridge Mission to Delhi was held in the Divinity Schools, Dr. Stanton presiding. There was a crowded attendance of University men, including Bishop Barry (who has recently visited Delhi), the Master of Trinity, and Rev. H. C. Carlyon (senior missionary of the Delhi Missionaries). Bishop Barry testified to the reality of the work done by this mission, and eloquently appealed for more devoted helpers. Mr. Carlyon enlarged upon the needs and possibilities of the work, mentioning in an interesting and stimulating address that now Oxford and Dublin both had mission settlements in Delhi.

THE Y.M.C.A.

A party of sixty-six members of the Manchester Y.M.C.A. have reached Chicago safely.

Mr. E. A. Hannant, who for the past few years has been hon. sec. of the Hull branch, has accepted the post of general secretary at Burton-on-Trent.

The Norwich Association has just held its closing social gathering of the season. The work of the past six months has been of a most encouraging and successful character.

The tenth anniversary of the Hammersmith Association was celebrated on the 25th ult., Mr. E. Ellis occupying the chair. The speakers were Messrs. W. Hind Smith, C.C., M. Baker, and B. Hewer

Writing on the difficulties and encouragements in mission work in Bohemia, Dr. A. W. Clark states that the Y.M.C.A. is doing well at Skalitz, and is erecting a new building for mission purposes.

Mr. T. W. Backhouse, one of the trustees of the Sunderland Y.M.C.A., has intimated to Mr. J. C. Moor his intention to give £500 if the proposed plans for the extension of the Association are proceeded with.

At Aldersgate-street the P.S.A. and other religious meetings are giving great encouragement, and the Swiss and Norwegian trips are filling up very satisfactorily. There is still a little room in each for those who desire to join.

Among the speakers announced to take part in the proceedings of the Conference of British Y.M.C.A.'s at Sheffield, June 13th to 16th, are the Revs. Hugh Price Hughes, Rhondda Williams, T. J. Madden, and the Dean of Norwich.

A public inauguration of the Y.M.C.A. recently formed at Bromsgrove took place in the Corn Exchange on the 30th ult. Mr. T. White, J.P., the president, occupied the chair, supported by ministers of the town and other local friends.

At a meeting of the International Committee of Y.M.C.A.'s held at Geneva, May 29, it was agreed to publish a volume to be known as "The Golden Book" of the Associations, containing historical sketches of work for young men in the different countries of the world, as commemorative of the jubilee of Y.M.C.A.'s to be celebrated in London in 1894.

The Barbados Association has acquired a building of its own in a very central position, which for years had been a billiard and drinking saloon, but has now been transformed for the purposes of the Association and become an ornament to the town. Between 200 and 300 persons were present on each of the first two Sundays after the opening. This Association exists as the result of blessing attending efforts put forth by Admiral Grant when visiting the island of Barbades a few years since.

The City of London Association, Aldersgate-street, E.C., has a brass and reed band, numbering sixteen performers. It is being trained to take part in Gospel work, primarily in the Association, and afterwards in Christian work throughout London. The leader, a most competent teacher, is willing to teach learners without charge. Young men who can already play, and others who would like to learn, will be welcomed if they will present themselves at 186, Aldersgate-street, any Friday evening at eight o'clock. There is also an orchestral band, the leader of which greatly needs the assistance of one or two good cornet players, a clarionet player, and players on stringed instruments. These will be welcomed at 186, Aldersgate-street, on Sunday afternoons.
